Cabrillo Pacific University
College of Law
3620 AERO COURT, SAN DIEGO, CA. 92123

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

NON-CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

20 P.—22 P.

Cite by Volume and Page

of the

PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus

20 P. 24

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
[illegible]

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

20 P.—22 P.

Cite by Volume and Page
of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

20 P. 24

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1889, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 20, Nos. 1-12; Vol. 21, Nos. 1-18; Vol. 22, Nos. 1-4, 6-18.

COPYRIGHT, 1890, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 22, Nos. 20, 21, 23-28.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 20-22 P.
2-1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 20–22 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Abbott; Howes v.	20	572
Abbott; Monterey County v.	20	73
Ackerman's Estate, In re	22	141
Adams, In re	22	547
Adams v. Andross	20	26
Adams; Greenwood v.	21	1134
Adams v. Lambard	22	180
Afflerback v. McGovern	21	837
Ahern v. McGeary	21	540
Ah Fong v. Sternes	21	381
Ah You, In re	22	929
Albany Brewing Co.; Tappan v.	22	257
Albertoli v. Branham	22	404
Allen, In re	20	679
Allen v. Haley	20	90
Allen's Estate, In re	21	426
Alsip; Fenton v.	21	839
Alta Placer Min. Co.; Alta Silver Min. Co. v.	21	373
Alta Silver Min. Co. v. Alta Placer Min. Co.	21	373
Ames; Coburn v.	22	174
Anderson; People v.	22	139
Andross; Adams v.	20	26
Angell v. Hopkins	21	729
Armstrong; City of Eureka v.	22	928
Armstrong's Estate, In re	22	79
Arnold v. City of San Jose	22	877
Arnold v. City of San Jose	22	878
Arnott; Hall v.	22	200
Arras, Ex parte	20	683
Ashton v. Dashaway Ass'n	22	660
Atkinson; Wilson v.	20	66
Averett v. Sobrunes	21	739
Bagge; Oakland Paving Co. v.	21	855
Bailey v. Fox	20	868
Baker; Bank of Mendocino v.	22	1037
Baker; Batchelder v.	21	754
Baker v. Brown	22	879
Baker v. Ducker	21	764

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Baker v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co.	21	357
Baker; McLain v.	22	1084
Baker; Stover v.	21	428
Baldwin; Hoult v.	20	864
Baldwin; Taylor v.	21	124
Baldwin; Tyrrell v.	21	116
Ball; Morgan v.	22	331
Balletta; Castagnino v.	21	1097
Bancroft; Bibb v.	22	484
Bandmann; Schenck v.	22	654
Bank of British North America v. Cahn	21	863
Bank of California; Jennings v.	21	852
Bank of California; Newman v.	22	261
Bank of Mendocino v. Baker	22	1037
Bank of Napa; Brown v.	20	71
Bank of Napa v. Godfery	20	142
Bank of Santa Cruz County v. Bartlett	20	682
Banning v. Banning	22	210
Barker; Wakeham v.	22	1131
Barnett; Hope v.	20	245
Barney; Yolo County v.	21	833
Barnum v. Bridges	22	924
Barrett v. Market-St. C. Ry. Co.	22	859
Barry; Castro v.	21	946
Barry v. Murphy	21	724
Barstow; Oakland Paving Co. v.	21	544
Bartlett v. Odd-Fellows' Sav. Bank	21	743
Bartlett; Bank of Santa Cruz County v.	20	682
Bartman; People v.	22	592
Barton v. McDonald	22	855
Bashore; Goldman v.	22	82
Batchelder v. Baker	21	754
Bates v. Gerber	22	1115
Bates v. Gregory	22	683
Bauer; Schmidt v.	22	256
Bauer's Estate, In re	21	759
Bean v. Loryea	22	513
Beck; Jepsen v.	21	184
Bedell v. Hering	20	129
Beecher; Berniaud v.	22	1151
Beets v. Chart	21	730
Belcher v. Murphy	22	264
Belding; West v.	21	1136
Bell v. Marsh	22	170
Bellegarde v. San Francisco Bridge Co.	22	57
Belvin; Shain v.	21	747
Bendel v. Crystal Ice Co.	22	1112
Bergson; Dorland v.	21	537

	P. Vol.	Page
Bernal; Dorland v.	21	435
Berniaud v. Beecher	22	1151
Bertheau; Norddeutschen Feuer-Versicherungs Gesellschaft v.	21	975
Berton; Curdy v.	21	858
Best; Gale v.	20	550
Best v. Johnson	20	415
Bibb v. Bancroft	22	484
Bienemfeld v. Fresno Milling Co.	22	1113
Bingham; People v.	22	1039
Binninger; Heintzen v.	21	377
Biscailuz; Smith v.	21	15
Bishop; People v.	22	477
Blake; Latham v.	20	417
Blake; Overacre v.	22	979
Blake; People v.	22	1142
Blankenship; Sharp v.	21	842
Blue Tent Consolidated Hydraulic Gold Mines of California; California Powder Works v.	22	391
Board of Education; Kennedy v.	22	1042
Board of Education of the City and County of San Francisco; Raisch v.	22	890
Board of State Harbor Com'rs; Ford v.	22	278
Board of Sup'rs of the City and County of San Francisco; Kahn v.	21	849
Board of Sup'rs of Trinity County; Gibson v.	22	225
Bogart v. Crosby	22	84
Bollinger v. Manning	21	375
Bootz; Gilman v.	22	255
Borchard; Rogers v.	22	907
Borel v. Kappeler	21	841
Born v. Horstmann	22	169
Born v. Horstmann	22	338
Bottyer; Rose v.	22	393
Bowen; Munson v.	22	253
Bowers; People v.	21	752
Bowles; Wristen v.	22	1136
Bowman; People v.	22	917
Boyd v. Desmond	21	755
Boyle v. Tibbey	22	1128
Bradley; Spaulding v.	22	47
Brandt v. Clark	22	863
Branham; Albertoli v.	22	404
Branham; Santa Clara County v.	20	75
Breckinridge v. Crocker	21	179
Brennan; Von Glahn v.	22	596
Bridges; Barnum v.	22	924
Briggs v. Briggs	22	334
British & F. M. Ins. Co.; Hart v.	22	302
Brock; Perkins v.	22	194
Brooks; Coburn v.	21	2

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Brooks v. Fischer	21	652
Brooks; Green v.	22	849
Brown; Baker v.	22	879
Brown v. Bank of Napa	20	71
Brown v. Casey	22	257
Brown v. Starr	21	973
Brown's Estate, In re	22	233
Brusie v. Gates	22	284
Bryan v. Tormey	21	725
Bryant v. Langford	22	219
Bryant; Wilhoit v.	20	561
Bucher; Van Cleave v.	21	954
Buell v. Dodge	21	735
Buelna; People v.	22	396
Buffum; Read v.	21	555
Bullock v. Rouse	22	919
Bunnell; Knock v.	21	961
Bunnell; Symons v.	20	859
Bunnell; Symons v.	22	193
Bunnell; Symons v.	22	550
Bunting v. Salz	22	1132
Burke v. Mascarich	22	673
Burkett v. Burkett	20	715
Burns; People v.	21	540
Burton v. Burton	21	847
Bushton; People v.	22	127
Bushton; People v.	22	549
Butterfield; Miller v.	21	543
Button; Davis v.	20	545
Byam v. Cashman	21	113
Cady v. Leonard	22	694
Cahn; Bank of British North America v.	21	863
California Cent. Ry. Co.; Wright v.	20	740
California Mut. Life Ins. Co., In re	22	869
California Powder Works v. Blue Tent Consolidated Hydraulic Gold Mines of California	22	391
Callahan v. Dunn	20	737
Cardwell v. Sacramento County	21	763
Carpenter; Stinson v.	21	304
Carpenter's Estate, In re	21	835
Carquinez Packing Co.; Gates v.	21	1
Carr v. Quigley	21	607
Carraher v. San Francisco Bridge Co.	22	480
Carroll; People v.	22	129
Carter v. Hopkins	21	549
Carter; McShane v.	22	178
Carter v. Mulrein	22	1086
Carter v. Paige	20	729

	P. Vol.	Page
Carter v. Paige	22	188
Case v. Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co.	21	843
Case v. Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co.	22	1083
Casement's Estate, In re	20	362
Casey; Brown v.	22	257
Cashman; Byam v.	21	113
Castagnino v. Balletta	21	1097
Castle; Learned v.	21	11
Castle Dome Mining & Smelting Co., In re	21	746
Castro v. Barry	21	946
Central Irrigation Dist. v. De Lappe	21	825
Central Pac. R. Co.; Fagundes v.	21	437
Central Pac. R. Co.; Harnett v.	20	154
Chalfant; Davis v.	22	972
Chalmers v. Chalmers	22	395
Chamberlain; Cooper v.	21	14
Chambers, In re	22	138
Champion v. Woods	21	534
Chart; Beets v.	21	730
Chever v. Ching Hong Poy	22	1081
Chin Bing Quong; People v.	21	951
Ching Hong Poy; Chever v.	22	1081
Chope v. City of Eureka	21	364
City and County of San Francisco v. Itsell	22	74
City and County of San Francisco; Raisch v.	22	22
City and County of San Francisco; Spring Val. Water-Works v.	22	910
City and County of San Francisco; Spring Val. Water-Works v.	22	1046
City Cab & Transfer Co.; Hill v.	21	728
City of Eureka v. Armstrong	22	928
City of Eureka; Chope v.	21	364
City of Eureka v. Croghan	22	693
City of Sacramento; Davis v.	22	1118
City of San Jose; Arnold v.	22	877
City of San Jose; Arnold v.	22	878
Clanton; Coward v.	21	359
Clanton v. Ruffner	20	676
Clark; Brandt v.	22	863
Clark; Mauldin v.	21	361
Clarke; Houghton v.	22	288
Cleland v. Walbridge	20	730
Clifford; Pool v.	20	857
Clinton; People v.	21	426
Cloke; Yuba County v.	21	740
Clough; Ingram's Estate v.	21	435
Coburn v. Ames	22	174
Coburn v. Brooks	21	2
Coburn v. Josselyn	21	4
Coe Quartz Mine Co.; Silvester v.	22	217

	P. Vol.	Page
Coggswell; Ede v.	21	767
Cohn; Pico v.	20	706
Coleman v. Commins	20	77
Coleman v. Commins	20	80
Colyear; McClure v.	22	175
Comfort; De Costa v.	22	218
Commins; Coleman v.	20	77
Commins; Coleman v.	20	80
Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach	20	28
Connolly; Santa Marina v.	21	1093
Connor; Staples v.	21	380
Coonradt v. Hill	21	1099
Cooper v. Chamberlain	21	14
County of Orange; People v.	22	851
Cousins v. Partridge	21	745
Cowan v. Phœnix Ins. Co.	20	408
Coward v. Clanton	21	359
Cralle; Romine v.	22	296
Cramer v. Tittel, two cases	21	750
Crane; Lakeside Ditch Co. v.	22	76
Crawford; West v.	21	1123
Creed; Pearson v.	20	302
Crocker; Breckinridge v.	21	179
Croghan; City of Eureka v.	22	693
Crosby; Bogart v.	22	84
Crossman v. Davis	21	963
Crystal Ice Co.; Bendel v.	22	1112
Cucamonga Fruit & Land Co.; Davidson v.	20	152
Cucamonga Fruit & Land Co. v. Moir	22	55
Cummings; McDaniel v.	22	216
Curdy v. Berton	21	858
Curtin v. Phenix Ins. Co.	21	370
Curtis; De Necochea v.	20	563
Curtis; De Necochea v.	22	198
Curtis; Finney v.	21	120
Dale v. Purvis	20	296
Dalmazzo v. Drysdale	21	553
Dalton v. Leahey	22	283
Daly; Dunn v.	21	377
Daly v. Sorocco	22	211
Danglarde v. Elias	22	69
Dashaway Ass'n; Ashton v.	22	660
Dashaway Ass'n v. Rogers	21	742
Davidson v. Cucamonga Fruit & Land Co.	20	152
Davidson; People v.	21	538
Davies-Henderson Lumber Co. v. Gottschalk	22	860
Davis v. Button	20	545
Davis v. Chalfant	22	972

	P. Vol.	Page
Davis v. City of Sacramento	22	1118
Davis; Crossman v.	21	963
Davis v. Donner	22	879
Davis; Southwick v.	21	121
Day; Phillips v.	22	976
Dear v. Varnum	22	76
Dearborn; Mills v.	22	1114
De Camp; Greenwade v.	21	379
De Costa v. Comfort	22	218
Deeney; Higgins v.	21	428
De la Montanya; Priet v.	22	171
De Lappe; Central Irrigaton Dist. v.	21	825
De Lay; Evans v.	22	408
De Lay; People v.	22	90
De Necochea v. Curtis	20	563
De Necochea v. Curtis	22	198
Dennison; Marriner v.	20	386
Denvir; O'Hanlon v.	22	407
Derevan v. MacClean	20	131
Desmond; Boyd v.	21	755
Detrick; Mooney v.	22	1111
Devine; Wixon v.	20	367
Devine; Wixson v.	22	224
Dewey v. Superior Court	22	333
Doane; People v.	20	84
Dodge; Buell v.	21	735
Doe v. Sanger	20	366
Doland v. Mooney	21	436
Dolan's Estate, In re	21	545
Donahue; Gordon v.	21	970
Donlan; Wristen v.	21	868
Donnelly v. Hufschmidt	21	546
Donner; Davis v.	22	879
Donovan v. Judson	22	682
Dorland v. Bergson	21	537
Dorland v. Bernal	21	435
Dorland v. Hanson	22	552
Doty; Haskell v.	21	10
Dougherty v. Nevada Bank	22	513
Dower; Richards v.	22	304
Dower; Richards v.	22	307
Downey; Gage v.	21	527
Downey; Gage v.	21	855
Dresbach; Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v.	20	28
Drexler v. Seal Rock Tobacco Co.	21	372
Dreyfuss v. Giles	21	840
Drinkhouse v. Spring Val. Water-Works	22	252
Drullard; Hanscom v.	21	736

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Drysdale; Dalmazzo v.	21	553
Ducker; Baker v.	21	764
Duff; Randall v.	21	610
Dunbar; Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co. v.	22	275
Duncan v. Thomas	22	297
Dunn; Callahan v.	20	737
Dunn v. Daly	21	377
Dunn v. Mackey	22	64
Dunn; People v.	22	140
Dunn; Proll v.	22	143
Dunne; People v.	21	1130
Dunster; Lord v.	21	865
Durfee v. Garvey	21	302
Dusy; Hubbard v.	22	214
Dutton; Franklin v.	21	964
Dyer; Fox v.	22	257
Ede v. Coggswell	21	767
Eichelroth; People v.	20	364
Elias; Danglarde v.	22	69
Elliott; Hunt v.	20	132
Elliott; People v.	22	207
Ellsworth; Merrill Lodge No. 299, I. O. G. T. v.	20	399
Ellsworth; Merrill Lodge No. 299, I. O. G. T. v.	20	400
English; Payne v.	21	952
Evans v. De Lay	22	408
Eversdon v. Mayhew	21	431
Fagundes v. Central Pac. R. Co.	21	437
Falk v. Strother	22	676
Falkner v. Hendy	22	401
Fanning v. Leviston	21	121
Farley v. Hopkins	21	737
Farley; Moran v.	21	549
Farley; Moran v.	21	1135
Farnum v. Hefner	21	955
Faulkner v. Hendy	21	754
Feeney v. Howard	21	984
Felton v. Millard	21	533
Felton v. Millard	22	750
Fenton v. Alsip	21	839
Fil Ki, In re	21	974
Fil Ki, In re	22	146
Fine v. Steffan	21	734
Finney v. Curtis	21	120
Firemen's Fund Ins. Co.; Baker v.	21	357
First Nat. Bank of Oakland v. Wolff	21	551
First Nat. Bank of Oakland v. Wolff	21	748
Fischer; Brooks v.	21	652
Fitch; Smithers v.	22	935

	P. Vol.	Page
Fitzpatrick; People v.	22	215
Fong Ching; People v.	20	396
Forbes; Mair v.	21	552
Ford v. Board of State Harbor Com'rs	22	278
Forney v. Forney	22	294
Forney; People v.	22	481
Foss v. Hinkell	20	393
Fowler's Estate, In re	20	81
Fowzer; Potter v.	21	118
Fox; Bailey v.	20	868
Fox v. Dyer	22	257
Frank; Harris v.	22	856
Franklin v. Dutton	21	964
Franklin; Manning v.	22	550
Freeman; People v.	22	173
Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Dunbar	22	275
Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Rowell	22	53
Fresno Milling Co.; Bienenfeld v.	22	1113
Fricker; Hanson v.	21	751
Fulmore v. Jennings	21	536
Gage v. Downey	21	527
Gage v. Downey	21	855
Gale v. Best	20	550
Gardner; Loveland v.	21	766
Gardner; North Pac. C. R. Co. v.	21	735
Gardner v. Stroever	22	483
Gardner v. Tatum	22	880
Gardner; Whiting v.	22	71
Garvey; Durfee v.	21	302
Gates; Brusie v.	22	284
Gates v. Carquinez Packing Co.	21	1
Gayetty; Lawrence v.	20	382
George; Kertchem v.	21	372
Gerber; Bates v.	22	1115
Giant-Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co.	20	419
Gibson v. Board of Sup'rs of Trinity County	22	225
Gildersleeve; King v.	21	961
Giles; Dreyfuss v.	21	840
Gilman v. Bootz	22	255
Gilmore's Estate, In re	22	655
Gleason v. Spray	22	551
Gloster v. Wade	21	6
Godfery; Bank of Napa v.	20	142
Godfrey v. Miller	22	290
Goggins; People v.	22	206
Goldberg; Lord v.	22	1126
Goldman v. Bashore	22	82
Goldtree v. Thompson	22	50

	P. Vol.	Page
Goldtree v. Thompson	20	414
Good, In re	20	860
Goodhue; People v.	22	66
Gordon v. Donahue	21	970
Gordon Hardware Co. v. San Francisco & S. R. R. Co.	22	406
Gottschalk; Davies-Henderson Lumber Co. v.	22	860
Gould; Welsh v.	21	364
Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, two cases	22	175
Grandona v. Lovdal	21	366
Graves; Hebbron v.	20	740
Graves v. Mono Lake Hydraulic Min. Co.	22	665
Graves; Salinas City Bank v.	21	732
Graves; Salinas City Bank v.	21	734
Gray v. Winder	20	47
Green v. Brooks	22	849
Green v. McMann	21	964
Green v. Superior Court of San Francisco	21	307
Green v. Superior Court of San Francisco	21	541
Greenberg v. Hoff	22	69
Greenleaf v. Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works	21	369
Greenwade v. De Camp	21	379
Greenwood v. Adams	21	1134
Gregory; Bates v.	22	683
Gregory v. Keating, two cases	22	1084
Grennan v. McGregor	20	559
Grider's Estate, In re	21	532
Grider's Estate, In re	22	908
Griffith; Wise v.	20	675
Grigsby v. Schwarz	22	1041
Gross v. Kelleher	22	293
Gruwell v. Seybolt	22	938
Haas v. Whittier	21	547
Habenicht v. Lissak	20	874
Haile v. Superior Court	20	878
Haley; Allen v.	20	90
Hall v. Arnott	22	200
Hall; Williams v.	21	965
Halsey; Kraner v.	22	1137
Hammell; Stone v.	22	203
Hammond v. Starr	21	971
Hancock; Marshall v.	22	61
Hanlon; McDonald v.	21	861
Hanna; Jones v.	22	883
Hanscom v. Drullard	21	736
Hansen; Silvarer v.	20	136
Hanson; Dorland v.	22	552
Hanson v. Fricker	21	751
Hanson v. Hanson	20	736

	P. Vol.	Page
Hanson v. Voll	21	971
Harmon v. San Francisco & S. R. R. Co.	22	407
Harnett v. Central Pac. R. Co.	20	154
Harrigan v. Mowry	22	658
Harris, In re	22	867
Harris v. Frank	22	856
Harrison; People v.	22	1143
Hart v. British & F. M. Ins. Co.	22	302
Haskell v. Doty	21	10
Haskell; Lambert v.	22	327
Hasshagen v. Hasshagen	22	294
Hausling; Hausman v.	20	570
Hausman v. Hausling	20	570
Hawley; Mitchell v.	21	833
Hayes; Settlers' Ditch Co. v.	22	1152
Hebbron v. Graves	20	740
Hefner; Farnum v.	21	955
Heilbron v. 76 Land & Water Co.	22	62
Heintzen v. Binninger	21	377
Hemme; People v.	22	1143
Hendy; Falkner v.	22	401
Hendy; Faulkner v.	21	754
Henry; Himmelman v.	21	731
Hering; Bedell v.	20	129
Hermon v. Paris	22	971
Herrlich v. McDonald	22	298
Herrlich v. McDonald	22	299
Hewes v. McLellan	22	287
Hewitt; Pehrson v.	21	950
Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc.; Malloy v.	21	525
Higgins v. Deeney	21	428
Hildreth; Leverone v.	22	72
Hildreth; Pennie v.	22	398
Hill v. City Cab & Transfer Co.	21	728
Hill; Coonradt v.	21	1099
Hill v. Miller	20	304
Hill; People v.	20	862
Himmelman v. Henry	21	731
Hinkell; Foss v.	20	393
Hitchcock; West v.	21	1136
Hoagland v. State	22	142
Hodgdon v. Southern Pac. R. Co.	21	372
Hoff; Greenberg v.	22	69
Hoffman; Sharp v.	21	846
Hoffman v. Superior Court	21	862
Holloway v. McNear	22	514
Hooper; Stearns v.	20	734
Hope v. Barnett	20	245

	P. Vol.	Page
Hopkins; Angell v.	21	729
Hopkins; Carter v.	21	549
Hopkins; Farley v.	21	737
Hopkins; Humphreys v.	20	713
Hopkins; Humphreys v.	22	892
Horstmann; Born v.	22	169
Horstmann; Born v.	22	338
Houghton v. Clarke	22	288
Hoult v. Baldwin	20	864
Howard; Feeney v.	21	984
Howes v. Abbott	20	572
Howes; Kellogg v.	22	509
Hubbard v. Dusy	22	214
Hubbock v. Ross	21	965
Hudepohl v. Liberty Hill Con. Min. & Water Co.	22	339
Hudson; Martin v.	21	1135
Hudson; Martin v.	22	292
Hufschmidt; Donnelly v.	21	546
Humboldt Sav. & L. Soc. v. Wennerhold	20	553
Humboldt Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Wennerhold	22	920
Humphreys v. Hopkins	20	713
Humphreys v. Hopkins	22	892
Hunt v. Elliott	20	132
Huntington; Washburn v.	21	305
Huson; People v.	20	369
Hutson v. Woodbridge Protection Dist.	21	435
Hyde; McGrath v.	21	948
Hyde; McGrath v.	22	293
Imus; Porter v.	21	729
Ingram's Estate v. Clough	21	435
Irving; Smith v.	22	170
Irwin; People v.	20	56
Itsell; City and County of San Francisco v.	22	74
Jacks; Withers v.	21	824
James v. McCann	20	241
Jennings v. Bank of California	21	852
Jennings; Fulmore v.	21	536
Jennings v. Le Breton	21	1127
Jepsen v. Beck	21	184
Jessup's Estate, In re	21	976
Jessup's Estate, In re	22	260
Jessup's Estate, In re	22	742
Jessup's Estate, In re	22	1028
Johnson; Best v.	20	415
Johnson v. McConnell	22	219
Johnson; Weinreich v.	20	556
Jones v. Hanna	22	883
Jones v. Nicholl	22	878

	Vol.	Page
Jones; Strohlburg v.	20	705
Joselyn; People v.	22	217
Josselyn; Coburn v.	21	4
Judson; Donovan v.	22	682
Kahn v. Board of Sup'rs of the City and County of San Francisco	21	849
Kappeler; Borel v.	21	841
Karns v. Olney	22	57
Keagle; Smith v.	20	152
Keating; Gregory v.	22	1084
Keeley; People v.	22	593
Kelleher; Gross v.	22	293
Kellogg v. Howes	22	509
Kennedy v. Board of Education	22	1042
Kennedy; Pekin Mining & Milling Co. v.	22	679
Kerigan v. Southern Pac. R. Co.	22	677
Kerkow; Sindlinger v.	22	932
Kerns; Trope v.	20	82
Kertchem v. George	21	372
King v. Gildersleeve	21	961
King v. Ponton	22	1087
Knock v. Bunnell	21	961
Kohl v. Lilienthal	20	401
Kohl v. Lilenthal	22	689
Kohler's Estate, In re	21	758
Kraner v. Halsey	22	1137
Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Crane	22	76
Lambard; Adams v.	22	180
Lambert v. Haskell	22	327
Lambert; Rodriguez v.	21	731
Lanagan; People v.	22	482
Landers; Moyle v.	20	241
Landers; Moyle v.	21	1133
Lang; Silcox v.	20	297
Langford; Bryant v.	22	219
Latham v. Blake	20	417
Lavenson v. Standard Soap Co.	22	184
Lawler; Spencer v.	21	742
Lawrence v. Gayetty	20	382
Lawrence; People v.	22	1120
Leahey; Dalton v.	22	283
Learned v. Castle	21	11
Le Breton; Jennings v.	21	1127
Lee, Ex parte	21	1136
Lee; White v.	21	363
Lee Chuck; People v.	20	719
Lee Chuck v. Quan Wo Chong Co.	22	594
Leek v. McClure	22	1151
Lehmann v. Schmidt	22	973

P.

	Vol.	Page
Lemon v. Rucker	22	471
Lenon; People v.	21	967
Lent; Moore v.	22	875
Lent; Shea v.	22	876
Leonard; Cady v.	22	694
Leong Yune Gun; People v.	20	27
Leverone v. Hildreth	22	72
Leviston; Fanning v.	21	121
Lewis, Ex parte	21	553
Liberty Hill Con. Min. & Water Co.; Hudepohl v.	22	339
Lilenthal; Kohl v.	20	401
Lilienthal; Kohl v.	22	689
Linkletter; Yerian v.	22	70
Lissak; Habenicht v.	20	874
Lloyd, In re	20	872
Lones; Morgan v.	20	248
Lones; Morgan v.	22	253
Long v. Saufley	21	757
Lord v. Dunster	21	865
Lord v. Goldberg	22	1126
Loring v. Stuart	21	651
Loryea; Bean v.	22	513
Los Angeles I. & L. Co-op. Ass'n; Smith v.	20	677
Loupe; Richardson v.	22	227
Lovdal; Grandona v.	21	366
Loveland v. Gardner	21	766
Lowenthal, In re	21	7
Lubbock v. McMann	22	1145
Luco; Miller v.	22	195
McAulay v. Truckee Ice Co.	21	434
McBlane v. McBlane	20	61
McCann; James v.	20	241
McCann; Stone v.	21	863
McCarthy v. Mutual Relief Ass'n of Petaluma	22	933
McCarthy; People v.	21	426
McCarthy; Simpson v.	20	406
MacClean; Derevan v.	20	131
McClure v. Colyear	22	175
McClure; Leek v.	22	1151
McComber v. Mills	22	55
McConnell; Johnson v.	22	219
McCormack v. North British Ins. Co.	21	14
McCormack v. Silsby	22	874
McCormick v. Sheridan	20	24
McCormick v. Sheridan, two cases	20	26
McCormick v. Sutton	20	541
McCormick v. Sutton	20	543
McDaniel v. Cummings	22	216

	P. Vol.	Page
McDermott; Moulton v.	22	296
McDonald; Barton v.	22	855
McDonald v. Hanlon	21	861
McDonald; Herrlich v.	22	298
McDonald; Herrlich v.	22	299
McDonald v. Supreme Council, Order of Chosen Friends	20	41
McDonnell; McLennan v.	20	566
McDonnell; People v.	22	190
McElrath; Stanley v.	22	673
McFadden; People v.	22	851
McGeary; Ahern v.	21	540
McGovern; Afflerback v.	21	837
McGrath v. Hyde	21	948
McGrath v. Hyde	22	293
McGregor; Grennan v.	20	559
McGrew; People v.	20	92
McIntyre v. Sherwood	22	937
McIntyre v. Trautner	21	15
McKenna; People v.	22	488
McKenney; Pacific Seventh-Day Adventist Pub. Ass'n v.	20	140
Mackey; Dunn v.	22	64
McKissick; Peregoy v.	21	967
McLain v. Baker	22	1084
McLellan; Hewes v.	22	287
McLennan v. McDonnell	20	566
McMann; Green v.	21	964
McMann; Lubbock v.	22	1145
McNabb; People v.	21	843
McNear; Holloway v.	22	514
McShane v. Carter	22	178
Magee v. North Pac. Coast R. Co.	20	709
Magee v. North Pac. C. R. Co.	21	114
Magner; O'Neil v.	22	876
Maguire; Souter v.	21	183
Mahan v. Wood	21	757
Mahoney; People v.	20	73
Mair v. Forbes	21	552
Malloy v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc.	21	525
Manchego; People v.	22	223
Manning; Bollinger v.	21	375
Manning v. Franklin	22	550
Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co.; Case v.	21	843
Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co.; Case v.	22	1083
Maples; Wallace v.	21	860
Market-St. C. Ry. Co.; Barrett v.	22	859
Marriner v. Dennison	20	386
Marsh; Bell v.	22	170
Marshall v. Hancock	22	61

P.

	Vol.	Page
Martin v. Hudson	21	1135
Martin v. Hudson	22	292
Martin v. Splivalo	21	547
Mascarich; Burke v.	22	673
Matthews; Smith v.	22	409
Matthews; Vanderslice v.	21	748
Matthews; Ward v.	22	187
Mauldin v. Clark	21	361
Mayhew; Eversdon v.	21	431
Meredith; Muir v.	22	1080
Merrill; Robinson v.	22	260
Merrill; White v.	22	1129
Merrill Lodge No. 299, I. O. G. T., v. Ellsworth	20	399
Merrill Lodge No. 299, I. O. G. T., v. Ellsworth	20	400
Middleton, Ex parte	20	684
Millard; Felton v.	21	533
Millard; Felton v.	22	750
Millard v. Supreme Council American Legion of Honor	21	825
Millard v. Supreme Council American Legion of Honor	22	864
Miller, In re	22	1113
Miller v. Butterfield	21	543
Miller; Godfrey v.	22	290
Miller; Hill v.	20	304
Miller v. Luco	22	195
Miller; People v.	22	934
Miller v. Thomas	21	11
Mills v. Dearborn	22	1114
Mills; McComber v.	22	55
Mills; Simons v.	22	25
Mitchell v. Hawley	21	833
Mize; People v.	22	80
Moir; Cucamonga Fruit & Land Co. v.	22	55
Monaghan v. Pacific Rolling-Mill Co.	22	590
Mono Lake Hydraulic Min. Co.; Graves v.	22	665
Monterey County v. Abbott	20	73
Montgomery; Sesler v.	21	185
Mooney v. Detrick	22	1111
Mooney; Doland v.	21	436
Moore v. Lent	22	875
Moore v. Moore	22	589
Moore v. Moore	22	874
Moore's Estate, In re	20	558
Moore's Estate, In re	22	653
Moran v. Farley	21	549
Moran v. Farley	21	1135
Moran v. Ross	21	547
Moran v. Ross	21	958
Morgan v. Ball	22	331

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Morgan v. Lones	20	248
Morgan v. Lones	22	253
Moriarty; Wilson v.	20	134
Mott v. Mott	22	1140
Mott v. Mott	22	1142
Moulton v. McDermott	22	296
Mowry; Harrigan v.	22	658
Moyle v. Landers	20	241
Moyle v. Landers	21	1133
Mudge v. Steinhart	20	147
Muir v. Meredith	22	1080
Mullan; Riddell v.	20	91
Mulrein; Carter v.	22	1086
Munson v. Bowen	22	253
Murphy; Barry v.	21	724
Murphy; Belcher v.	22	264
Murphy; Weyant v.	20	568
Mutual Relief Ass'n of Petaluma; McCarthy v.	22	933
Neale; San Diego Land & Town Co. v.	20	372
Neale; San Diego Land & Town Co. v.	20	380
Nevada Bank; Dougherty v.	22	513
Nevada Bank; Robinson v.	22	478
Newkirk; West Coast Lumber Co. v.	22	231
Newkirk; West Coast Lumber Co. v.	22	232
Newman v. Bank of California	22	261
Newman; O'Brien v.	20	132
Nicholl; Jones v.	22	878
Nixdorf; Tunstead v.	22	472
Norddeutschen Feuer-Versicherungs Gesellschaft v. Bertheau	21	975
North British Ins. Co.; McCormack v.	21	14
Northey; People v.	20	129
North Pac. C. R. Co. v. Gardner	21	735
North Pac. Coast R. Co.; Magee v.	20	709
North Pac. C. R. Co.; Magee v.	21	114
North Star Gold Min. Co.; Taylor v.	21	753
Nounnan v. Sutter County Land Co.	22	515
Oakland Paving Co. v. Bagge, two cases	21	855
Oakland Paving Co. v. Barstow	21	544
O'Brien v. Newman	20	132
O'Brien; People v.	20	359
Odd-Fellows' Sav. Bank; Bartlett v.	21	743
O'Hanlon v. Denvir	22	407
Ohm's Estate, In re	22	927
O'Keefe; People v.	21	539
O'Leary; People v.	22	24
Olmstead; Smith v.	22	1143
Olney; Karns v.	22	57
Olsen; People v.	22	125

P.	Vol.	Page
O'Neil v. Magner	22	876
O'Neil; People v.	20	705
Oneto v. Restano	20	743
Ontario State Bank v. Tibbits	22	66
Opperman; Taylor v.	21	869
Oreileus; People v.	21	724
Orena; Rodriguez de Cazara v.	22	74
Orient Ins. Co. v. Reed	22	484
Oullahan v. Sweeney	21	960
Overacre v. Blake	22	979
Oxarart's Estate, In re	20	367
Pacific Coast Ry. Co. v. Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County	21	609
Pacific Coast Steam-Ship Co.; Trousclair v.	22	258
Pacific Rolling-Mill Co.; Monaghan v.	22	590
Pacific Rolling-Mill Co. v. Telegraph Hill R. R. Co.	21	840
Pacific Seventh-Day Adventist Pub. Ass'n v. McKenney	20	140
Paige; Carter v.	20	729
Paige; Carter v.	22	188
Paige v. Rocky Ford Canal & Irrigation Co.	21	1102
Painter v. Painter	21	433
Paris; Hermon v.	22	971
Parks; Snodgrass v.	21	429
Partridge; Cousins v.	21	745
Payne v. English	21	952
Peabody v. Prince	21	123
Pearson v. Creed	20	302
Pedrorena, In re	22	71
Pehrson v. Hewitt	21	950
Pekin Mining & Milling Co. v. Kennedy	22	679
Pendola; Whittaker v.	20	680
Pendola; Wood v.	20	678
Pennie v. Hildreth	22	398
Pennie v. Reis	22	176
People v. Anderson	22	139
People v. Bartman	22	592
People v. Bingham	22	1039
People v. Bishop	22	477
People v. Blake	22	1142
People v. Bowers	21	752
People v. Bowman	22	917
People v. Buelna	22	396
People v. Burns	21	540
People v. Bushton	22	127
People v. Bushton	22	549
People v. Carroll	22	129
People v. Chin Bing Quong	21	951
People v. Clinton	21	426
People v. County of Orange, two cases	22	851

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Davidson	21	538
People v. De Lay	22	90
People v. Doane	20	84
People v. Dunn	22	140
People v. Dunne	21	1130
People v. Eichelroth	20	364
People v. Elliott	22	207
People v. Fitzpatrick	22	215
People v. Fong Ching	20	396
People v. Forney	22	481
People v. Freeman	22	173
People v. Goggins	22	206
People v. Goodhue	22	66
People v. Harrison	22	1143
People v. Hemme	22	1143
People v. Hill	20	862
People v. Huson	20	369
People v. Irwin	20	56
People v. Joselyn	22	217
People v. Keeley	22	593
People v. Lanagan	22	482
People v. Lawrence	22	1120
People v. Lee Chuck	20	719
People v. Lemon	21	967
People v. Leong Yune Gun	20	27
People v. McCarthy	21	426
People v. McDonnell	22	190
People v. McFadden	22	851
People v. McGrew	20	92
People v. McKenna	22	488
People v. McNabb	21	843
People v. Mahoney	20	73
People v. Manchego	22	223
People v. Miller	22	934
People v. Mize	22	80
People v. Northey	20	129
People v. O'Brien	20	359
People v. O'Keefe	21	539
People v. O'Leary	22	24
People v. Olsen	22	125
People v. O'Neil	20	705
People v. Oreileus	21	724
People v. Perry	21	423
People v. Pratt	20	731
People v. Reed	20	708
People v. Reed	22	474
People v. Rogers	22	592
People v. Rosenstirn	21	426

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Rozelle	20	36
People v. Savercool	22	856
People v. Sevine	22	969
People v. Smith	21	952
People v. Stephens	21	856
People v. Stewart	22	124
People v. Stone	22	975
People v. Swalm	22	67
People v. Tonielli	22	678
People v. Van Ness	21	554
People v. Von	20	35
Percival Milling Co.; Sperry & Co. v.	22	651
Peregoy v. McKissick	21	967
Peregoy v. Sellick	21	966
Pereira v. Smith	21	739
Perkins v. Brock	22	194
Perry; People v.	21	425
Peterson v. Weissbein	22	56
Peyre v. Peyre	21	838
Phenix Ins. Co.; Curtin v.	21	370
Phillips v. Day	22	976
Phœnix Ins. Co.; Cowan v.	20	408
Pico v. Cohn	20	706
Plumas County; Welch v.	22	254
Ponton; King v.	22	1087
Pool v. Clifford	20	857
Porter v. Imus	21	729
Potter v. Fowzer	21	118
Powell v. Sutro	21	436
Powell v. Sutro	22	308
Pratt; People v.	20	731
Presidio & F. R. Co.; Quay v.	22	925
Presidio & F. R. Co.; Tafft v.	22	485
Priet v. De la Montanya	22	171
Prince; Peabody v.	21	123
Proll v. Dunn	22	143
Purdy v. Rahl	21	971
Purvis; Dale v.	20	296
Quan Wo Chong Co.; Lee Chuck v.	22	594
Quay v. Presidio & F. R. Co.	22	925
Quigley; Carr v.	21	607
Quinn v. Quinn	22	264
Rahl; Purdy v.	21	971
Raisch v. Board of Education of The City and County of San Francisco	22	890
Raisch v. City and County of San Francisco	22	22
Randall v. Duff	21	610
Rankin v. Sisters of Mercy	22	1134
Razzo v. Varni	21	762

	P. Vol.	Page
Razzo v. Varni	22	848
Read v. Buffum	21	555
Reade v. Reade	22	284
Redmond v. Weissman	20	544
Reed; Orient Ins. Co. v.	22	484
Reed; People v.	20	708
Reed; People v.	22	474
Reese v. Thorburn	20	131
Reis; Pennie v.	22	176
Restano; Oneto v.	20	743
Reynolds; Turner v.	22	546
Reynolds v. Willard	22	262
Richards v. Dower	22	304
Richards v. Dower	22	307
Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co.	22	939
Richardson v. Loupe	22	227
Riddell v. Mullan	20	91
Riser v. Walton	21	362
Roach; Upper San Joaquin Canal Co. v.	21	304
Robertson v. Williams	22	665
Robinson v. Merrill	22	260
Robinson v. Nevada Bank	22	478
Robinson v. Robinson	21	1095
Rocky Ford Canal & Irrigation Co.; Paige v.	21	1102
Rodriguez v. Lambert	21	731
Rodriguez de Cazara v. Orena	22	74
Rogers v. Borchard	22	907
Rogers; Dashaway Ass'n v.	21	742
Rogers; People v.	22	592
Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco v. Shipman	21	830
Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco v. Shipman	21	832
Romer; Schurtz v.	22	657
Romine v. Cralle	22	296
Rosa; South Yuba Water & Min. Co. v.	22	222
Rose v. Bottyer	22	393
Rose's Estate, In re	20	712
Rose's Estate, In re	22	86
Rose's Estate, In re	22	169
Roseberry; Wright v.	22	336
Rosenstirn; People v.	21	426
Ross, Ex parte	22	1086
Ross; Hubbock v.	21	965
Ross; Moran v.	21	547
Ross; Moran v.	21	958
Rouse; Bullock v.	22	919
Rowell; Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co. v.	22	53
Roylance v. San Luis Hotel Co.	20	573
Rozelle; People v.	20	36

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Rucker; Lemon v.	22	471
Ruffner; Clanton v.	20	676
Sackett's Estate, In re	20	863
Sacramento County; Cardwell v.	21	763
Salinas City Bank v. Graves	21	732
Salinas City Bank v. Graves	21	734
Salz; Bunting v.	22	1132
San Diego Flume Co.; Giant-Powder Co. v.	20	419
San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale	20	372
San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale	20	380
San Francisco Bridge Co.; Bellegarde v.	22	57
San Francisco Bridge Co.; Carraher v.	22	480
San Francisco Musical Fund Soc.; Stohr v.	22	1125
San Francisco & S. R. R. Co.; Gordon Hardware Co. v.	22	406
San Francisco & S. R. R. Co.; Harmon v.	22	407
Sanger; Doe v.	20	366
San Luis Hotel Co.; Roylance v.	20	573
Sansome v. Superior Court	22	212
Santa Clara County v. Branham	20	75
Santa Marina v. Connolly	21	1093
Saufley; Long v.	21	757
Savercool; People v.	22	856
Schenck v. Bandmann	22	654
Schmidt v. Bauer	22	256
Schmidt; Lehmann v.	22	973
Schultz; Wenzel v.	20	404
Schurtz v. Romer	22	657
Schwarz; Grigsby v.	22	1041
Scott v. Wood	22	871
Seal Rock Tobacco Co.; Drexler v.	21	372
Sears v. Starbird	20	547
Sellick; Peregoy v.	21	966
Sepulveda v. Sepulveda	20	145
Sesler v. Montgomery	21	185
Settlers' Ditch Co. v. Hayes	22	1152
76 Land & Water Co.; Heilbron v.	22	62
Sevine; People v.	22	969
Seybolt; Gruwell v.	22	938
Shain v. Belvin	21	747
Shakespear v. Smith	20	294
Sharon v. Sharon	22	26
Sharon v. Sharon	22	131
Sharp v. Blankenship	21	842
Sharp v. Hoffman	21	846
Sharp's Estate, In re	21	182
Shea v. Lent	22	876
Sheridan; McCormick v.	20	24
Sheridan; McCormick v.	20	25

P.

	Vol.	Page
Sherwood; McIntyre v.	22	937
Shipman; Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco v.	21	830
Shipman; Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco v.	21	832
Showers v. Wadsworth	22	663
Silcox v. Lang	20	297
Silsby; McCormack v.	22	874
Silvarer v. Hansen	20	136
Silvester v. Coe Quartz Mine Co.	22	217
Simons v. Mills	22	25
Simpson v. McCarthy	20	406
Simpson v. Simpson	22	167
Sindlinger v. Kerkow	22	932
Sisters of Mercy; Rankin v.	22	1134
Skerrett's Estate, In re	22	85
Smith v. Biscailuz	21	15
Smith v. Irving	22	170
Smith v. Keagle	20	152
Smith v. Los Angeles I. & L. Co-op. Ass'n	20	677
Smith v. Matthews	22	409
Smith v. Olmstead	22	1143
Smith; People v.	21	952
Smith; Pereira v.	21	739
Smith; Shakespear v.	20	294
Smith v. Smith	21	4
Smith v. Smith	22	186
Smith v. Smith	22	549
Smithers v. Fitch	22	935
Snodgrass v. Parks	21	429
Sobrunes; Averett v.	21	739
Soher's Estate, In re	21	8
Somers v. Somers	22	967
Sorocco; Daly v.	22	211
Souter v. Maguire	21	183
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Hodgdon v.	21	372
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Kerigan v.	22	677
Southwick v. Davis	21	121
South Yuba Water & Min. Co. v. Rosa	22	222
Spaulding v. Bradley	22	47
Spencer v. Lawler	21	742
Sperry & Co. v. Percival Milling Co.	22	651
Splivalo; Martin v.	21	547
Spottiswood v. Weir	22	289
Spray; Gleason v.	22	551
Spring Val. Water-Works v. City and County of San Francisco	22	910
Spring Val. Water-Works v. City and County of San Francisco	22	1046
Spring Val. Water-Works; Drinkhouse v.	22	252
Standard Soap Co.; Lavenson v.	22	184
Stanley v. McElrath	22	673

	Vol.	Page
Staples v. Connor	21	380
Starbird; Sears v.	20	547
Starr; Brown v.	21	973
Starr; Hammond v.	21	971
State; Hoagland v.	22	142
Stearns v. Hooper	20	734
Steffan; Fine v.	21	734
Steinhart; Mudge v.	20	147
Steinman; Younglove v.	22	189
Stephens; People v.	21	856
Sternes, Ex parte	21	1132
Sternes, Ex parte	21	1136
Sternes; Ah Fong v.	21	381
Stewart; People v.	22	124
Stinson v. Carpenter	21	304
Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works; Greenleaf v.	21	369
Stockton Sav. & Loan Soc.; Swain v.	21	365
Stohr v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc.	22	1125
Stone v. Hammell	22	203
Stone v. McCann	21	863
Stone; People v.	22	975
Stone; Tyler v.	22	598
Stover v. Baker	21	428
Strand, In re	21	654
Stroever; Gardner v.	22	483
Strohlburg v. Jones	20	705
Strother; Falk v.	22	676
Stuart; Loring v.	21	651
Superior Court; Dewey v.	22	333
Superior Court; Haile v.	20	878
Superior Court; Hoffmann v.	21	862
Superior Court; Sansome v.	22	212
Superior Court; Willard v.	22	1120
Superior Court of San Francisco; Green v.	21	307
Superior Court of San Francisco; Green v.	21	541
Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County; Pacific Coast Ry. Co. v.	21	609
Supreme Council American Legion of Honor; Millard v.	21	825
Supreme Council American Legion of Honor; Millard v.	22	864
Supreme Council, Order of Chosen Friends; McDonald v.	20	41
Sutro; Powell v.	21	436
Sutro; Powell v.	22	308
Sutro; Watson v.	20	88
Sutter County Land Co.; Nounnan v.	22	515
Sutton; McCormick v.	20	541
Sutton; McCormick v.	20	543
Swain v. Stockton Sav. & Loan Soc.	21	365
Swalm; People v.	22	67
Sweeney; Oullahan v.	21	960

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Sylvester, In re	22	550
Symons v. Bunnell	20	859
Symons v. Bunnell	22	193
Symons v. Bunnell	22	550
Tafft v. Presidio & F. R. Co.	22	485
Tappan v. Albany Brewing Co.	22	257
Tate; Traverso v.	22	1082
Tatum; Gardner v.	22	880
Taylor v. Baldwin	21	124
Taylor v. North Star Gold Min. Co.	21	753
Taylor v. Opperman	21	869
Taylor v. Weston	20	62
Telegraph Hill R. R. Co.; Pacific Rolling-Mill Co. v.	21	840
Thomas, In re	22	80
Thomas; Duncan v.	22	297
Thomas; Miller v.	21	11
Thompson; Goldtree v.	20	414
Thompson; Goldtree v.	22	50
Thorburn; Reese v.	20	131
Tibbey; Boyle v.	22	1128
Tibbits; Ontario State Bank v.	22	66
Tittel; Cramer v.	21	750
Tonielli; People v.	22	678
Tormey; Bryan v.	21	725
Trautner; McIntyre v.	21	15
Travelers' Ins. Co.; Richards v.	22	939
Traverso v. Tate	22	1082
Traylor's Estate, In re	22	297
Treadwell v. Whittier	22	266
Treadwell; Wilson v.	22	304
Trope v. Kerns	20	82
Trousclair v. Pacific Coast Steam-Ship Co.	22	258
Truckee Ice Co.; McAulay v.	21	434
Tunstead v. Nixdorf	22	472
Turner v. Reynolds	22	546
Turner v. Turner	21	959
Turner v. Turner	22	72
Tyler, In re	20	674
Tyler v. Stone	22	598
Tyrrell v. Baldwin	21	116
Upper San Joaquin Canal Co. v. Roach	21	304
Van Cleave v. Bucher	21	954
Vanderslice v. Matthews	21	748
Van Ness; People v.	21	554
Varni; Razzo v.	21	762
Varni; Razzo v.	22	848
Varnum; Dear v.	22	76
Voll; Hanson v.	21	971

	Vol.	Page
Von; People v.	20	35
Von Glahn v. Brennan	22	596
Wade; Gloster v.	21	6
Wadsworth; Showers v.	22	663
Wadsworth v. Wadsworth	22	648
Wakeham v. Barker	22	1131
Walbridge; Cleland v.	20	730
Walker; Wise v.	20	81
Walker; Wise v.	22	293
Walkerley's Estate, In re	20	150
Walkerly's Estate, In re	22	888
Walkerly's Estate, In re	22	889
Wallace v. Maples	21	860
Walton; Riser v.	21	362
Ward v. Matthews	22	187
Washburn v. Huntington	21	305
Watson v. Sutro	20	88
Weinreich v. Johnson	20	556
Weir; Spottiswood v.	22	289
Weissbein; Peterson v.	22	56
Weissman; Redmond v.	20	544
Welch v. Plumas County	22	254
Welsh v. Gould	21	364
Wennerhold; Humboldt Sav. & L. Soc. v.	20	553
Wennerhold; Humboldt Sav. & Loan Soc. v.	22	920
Wenzel v. Schultz	20	404
West v. Belding	21	1136
West v. Crawford	21	1123
West v. Hitchcock	21	1136
West; Wheeler v.	20	45
West Coast Lumber Co. v. Newkirk	22	231
West Coast Lumber Co. v. Newkirk	22	232
Weston; Taylor v.	20	62
Weyant v. Murphy	20	568
Wheeler v. West	20	45
White v. Lee	21	363
White v. Merrill	22	1129
White v. Whitney	22	1138
Whiting v. Gardner	22	71
Whitney; White v.	22	1138
Whittaker v. Pendola	20	680
Whittier; Haas v.	21	547
Whittier; Treadwell v.	22	266
Wilhoit v. Bryant	20	561
Willard; Reynolds v.	22	262
Willard v. Superior Court	22	1120
Williams v. Hall	21	965
Williams; Robertson v.	22	665

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Wilson v. Atkinson	20	66
Wilson v. Moriarty	20	134
Wilson v. Treadwell	22	304
Winder; Gray v.	20	47
Wise v. Griffith	20	675
Wise v. Walker	20	81
Wise v. Walker	22	293
Withers v. Jacks	21	824
Wixon v. Devine	20	367
Wixson v. Devine	22	224
Wolfe, In re	22	974
Wolff; First Nat. Bank of Oakland v.	21	551
Wolff; First Nat. Bank of Oakland v.	21	748
Wood; Mahan v.	21	757
Wood v. Pendola	20	678
Wood; Scott v.	22	871
Woodard v. Wright	22	1118
Woodbridge Protection Dist.; Hutson v.	21	435
Woods; Champion v.	21	534
Wright v. California Cent. Ry. Co.	20	740
Wright v. Roseberry	22	336
Wright; Woodard v.	22	1118
Wristen v. Bowles	22	1136
Wristen v. Donlan	21	868
Yerian v. Linkletter	22	70
Yolo County v. Barney	21	833
Younglove v. Steinman	22	189
Yuba County v. Cloke	21	740

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

20 PACIFIC REPORTER

20

3 Cal. Unrep. 39

McCormick v. Sheridan. (No. 11,339.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1888.)

In bank. On proceedings against C. H. Parker for contempt.
For opinion in the matter of the contempt of Waterman, see ante, 24.

Per Curiam. It appearing to this court, from the statements of the respondents in open court, that C. H. Parker had nothing to do with the preparation of the petition for a rehearing herein, and that he is in nowise to blame for anything contained therein, it is ordered that the order heretofore made herein, citing respondents to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt is, as to said C. H. Parker, discharged.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 39

McCormick v. Sheridan. (No. 11,339.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 20, 1888.)

In bank. In the matter of the contempt of F. H. Waterman.
For opinion on adjudication of contempt, see ante, 24.

Per Curiam. In the matter of the contempt of F. H. Waterman, committed in the above-entitled cause, said Waterman having filed a written statement acknowledging the propriety and justice of the judgment of this court in imposing a fine of $200, with the alternative of imprisonment in default of payment of such fine, and it appearing from such statement and from the representations of the intimate friends of said Waterman that he is unable to pay such fine, and that his physical condition is such that imprisonment may endanger his health, and the said F. H. Waterman having paid the cost herein, to-wit, $10, it is now, therefore, ordered that the fine of $200 imposed upon said Waterman be, and the same is hereby, remitted.

---

77 Cal. 483

Adams v. Andross et al. (No. 12,620.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 11, 1888.)

Injunction—Action on Bond—Pending Appeal.

The supreme court of California will not grant an order restraining the prosecution of an action on a bond given on the issuing of a restraining order, pending an appeal by the obligor from the action of the court in vacating his restraining order, and denying his application for injunction.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Whittemore & Sears, for appellant. Roger Johnson and F. W. Van Reynegom, for respondents.

Sharpstein, J. Application for an order restraining the further prosecution of an action entitled P. H. Andross v. Grove Adams et al.

The facts are as follows: On November 18, 1887, William Adams commenced an action to restrain the sale of certain real estate by the sheriff of San Diego county in the action of P. H. Andross v. E. P. Gray, and on that day obtained a restraining order and an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. On the granting of said restraining order, William Adams gave a bond, with said Grove Adams and C. S. Boise as sureties, in the sum of $500, to the effect that the said William Adams would pay to said Andross et al. such damages as he might sustain if said court should finally decide that said William Adams was not entitled to said restraining order. On December 18, 1887, said restraining order was vacated, and the application for an injunction denied. On the 13th of February, 1888, said William Adams appealed from said order to this court, and executed an undertaking on appeal. Said appeal is now pending in this court. On April 20, 1888, the action of Adams v. Andross was dismissed by the court in which it was pending, and on April 26, 1888, Andross commenced an action upon the bond given on the issuing of said restraining order, and we are now asked for an order staying further prosecution of that action until the appeal pending here is finally disposed of. We are not satisfied that the power to issue such an order has been conferred upon this court, and therefore must decline to issue it.

Application denied.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

PATERSON, J. I concur. The petition shows that a motion for a new trial is pending in the superior court. If the evidence given at the trial shows that it has not been finally decided that the plaintiff in the injunction suit was not entitled to the injunction, (section 529, Code Civil Proc.,) I presume the court will grant the motion, and hold that the suit on the undertaking was prematurely brought.

---

77 Cal. 636

PEOPLE v. LEONG YUNE GUN. (No. 20,412.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 28, 1888.)

1. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—PRESENT ABILITY.
Although under Pen. Code Cal. § 240, an essential element of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder is "a present ability" to do it, yet where the evidence shows, without conflict, that whoever committed the assault for which defendant is indicted did have the present ability to inflict, and in fact did inflict, the injury, an omission to instruct as to such element is harmless.

2. NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.
Where, on application for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, it does not appear that defendant might not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered the evidence in time for trial, or that such evidence would induce a different verdict, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse the application. Following People v. Howard, 16 Pac. Rep. 394.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHY, Judge.

Wilson & Trout and Frank H. McNally, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., (Robert Ferral, of counsel,) for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit murder. From the judgment of conviction and an order denying a new trial he has appealed. The point of objection made to the instructions of the court is that they omit to inform the jury that one of the elements constituting the crime charged against the defendant must be "a present ability" to do it. Conceding, under section 240 of the Penal Code, that this element is essential to make out the crime, yet the evidence in this case without conflict shows that whoever shot at and wounded the prosecuting witness, Jare Hoy, in the head with a pistol-ball, had the present ability to inflict, and did inflict, that injury. There was no dispute whatever but what the prosecuting witness was so shot at the time charged in the information, and that the person doing the injury had the present ability to accomplish it; the dispute was as to who did it, the defendant endeavoring to show that he was not the individual. The jury had no need to consider whether or not the defendant had the present ability to commit the act complained of; such ability was conceded to exist, if he should be proved to have done the shooting. And the defendant made no request that an instruction be given covering the omission. If the omission was error, it was harmless.

The affidavits as to newly-discovered evidence show that such evidence comes clearly within the rules laid down in People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 243, 15 Pac. Rep. 86; People v. Howard, 16 Pac. Rep. 394; Hayne, New Trials & App. § 88; and a new trial was properly refused. There was no error in refusing the defendant's motion for a continuance. There was no legal showing made, and the court did not abuse its discretion in the premises.

No prejudicial error appearing, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

78 Cal. 15

Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach et al. (No. 12,468.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

1. Payment—By Check—Express Agreement.
Where payment by check is alleged, it is error to refuse to charge that, when a check is given in payment of a debt, it is only accepted on condition that the check be paid, and, if dishonored, the creditor may resort to his original claim. It is error to charge that the acceptance of a check of a third person by the creditor's voluntary act as payment and in satisfaction will establish payment, as such instruction eliminates the necessity of an express agreement to take the check in absolute payment.[1] Paterson, J., dissenting.

2. Same—Conditional.
Where the creditor at the time the check was given was requested not to present it immediately, as the drawer's account was not good, the creditor's testimony that he took it in payment must be construed to mean that he took it as conditional payment, and is no evidence that he took it in absolute payment. Paterson, J., dissenting.

3. Same—Receipts—Explanation—Ratification.
Where, of a series of receipts given by defendant's book-keeper to a third person a part ran to the third person, and the remainder ran to plaintiff, and there was evidence that the latter were given merely as memoranda to enable the third person to keep his accounts properly, and were not intended to acknowledge the receipt of anything from plaintiff, a charge that, if they were given for such purpose without defendant's consent or ratification, defendant is not liable upon them, is proper.

4. Factors and Brokers—Evidence of Relation.
Where the dispute was as to whether a third person, in dealing with plaintiff, acted as principal or a broker for defendant, and plaintiff had given evidence that, in a transaction with others, the third person acted as a broker, and that he was doing a general brokerage business, evidence that in the latter transaction the third person acted as principal is admissible.

5. Appeal—Review—Weight of Evidence.
A verdict will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. Wilson, Judge.

Wilson & Wilson and Soughborough & Newhall, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, (F. C. Lusk, of counsel,) for respondents.

Thornton, J. Appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was brought by plaintiff to recover of respondents the sum of $52,401.60 and interest for money lent and advanced to the latter by the former. The action was commenced against William Dresbach and Hugh J. Glenn, as copartners under the firm name of William Dresbach, but in consequence of the death of Glenn, and also of the first administrator of his estate, N. D. Rideout, the second administrator, was substituted as a party, and the action came to be against Dresbach, and Rideout, administrator of the estate of Glenn, deceased. It is argued that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. We have read and considered the argument of the counsel for plaintiff on this point, and have weighed the testimony, and are of the opinion that the evidence is of such a character as to forbid this court from sustaining this contention. There is evidence tending to prove that plaintiff dealt with Helmrich & Hansen as principals, and that their loans were made to them, and not to Dresbach & Glenn; and there is also evidence tending to show that Dresbach & Glenn were principals, and that Helmrich & Hansen were their brokers and intermediaries, and obtained these loans for their account. In other words, the evidence on this point is conflicting, and, under the well-settled rule of this court, it cannot interfere with the verdict on the ground urged.

---

[1] The acceptance of a check for a precedent indebtedness operates only as a conditional payment, unless the check is afterwards actually paid to the acceptor, or is expressly accepted as absolute payment. See Bank v. Bornman, (Ill.) 10 N. E. Rep. 552, and note; Woodburn v. Woodburn, (Ill.) 5 N. E. Rep. 82, and note; Good v. Singleton, (Minn.) 40 N. W. Rep. 359.

The defendants contend—First, that Dresbach & Glenn transacted the business matters involved herein with Helmrich & Hansen as principals, and not through Helmrich & Hansen as the agents of Dresbach and his partner; and, secondly, that if the business was transacted between the plaintiff with Dresbach & Glenn, through Helmrich & Hansen as their agents, the indebtedness sued for herein was paid. It appears that the indebtedness sued for herein was contracted by advances made on wheat shipped by Dresbach & Glenn on the ship Scandia. The business was carried on in this way: Dresbach would put the wheat on board the Scandia, bound to a foreign port, in parcels of several thousand sacks. For each parcel so placed on board, the mate of the vessel would give a receipt, specifying the number of sacks, and that they were received of Dresbach. The latter would hand over these receipts to Helmrich & Hansen, who would take them to the plaintiff, and on these receipts, which were retained by plaintiff as security, it would make the advances. The advances seem to have been made on each parcel of wheat, for which a receipt was issued by checks drawn payable to the order of Helmrich & Hansen. When the ship was fully laden, or it had received all the wheat to be shipped on it, Helmrich & Hansen would obtain from the plaintiff the mate's receipts, and deliver them over to the master, who would give a bill of lading in their place, and take up or retire the mate's receipts. A bill of exchange would then be drawn by Dresbach against the wheat shipped and delivered to Helmrich & Hansen along with the bill of lading and other documents. The bill of lading and other documents would be attached to the bill of exchange, and go forward with it. Helmrich & Hansen would then sell the bill of exchange, and with the proceeds derived from its sale return to the plaintiff the amount of its advances. Sometimes the bill of exchange was sold to the plaintiff. In such case it would retain the amount of its advances, and, if the amount of such proceeds was not sufficient to reimburse plaintiff, Helmrich & Hansen would pay the balance due in money. In case the proceeds exceeded the amount due for advances, the plaintiff would pay the surplus to Helmrich & Hansen.

In the case of the shipment by the Scandia, the master was ready to deliver the bill of lading on the 25th of September, 1882. On that day Hansen, who attended to the outdoor business of his firm, called on the plaintiff, and procured from it the mate's receipts on which advances had been made, took them away with him, and returned with the bill of exchange drawn as usual, and with the bill of lading and other documents. The plaintiff, for the reason that it then held as many bills on the house on which the bill on the shipment per Scandia was drawn as it was willing to take, declined to purchase this bill. Hansen then had to sell the bill, and with its proceeds return the advances. A settlement was on the day above mentioned had between the plaintiff and Hansen, and it was found that there was due for the advances per Scandia a sum of $44,000. On the same day the plaintiff sold to Helmrich & Hansen a bill or bills of exchange on Hong-Kong, for £4,000, for $19,739.30, and delivered this exchange to Hansen.

For the sums above mentioned, amounting to $63,739.30, Hansen drew in the name of his firm a check on the Pacific Bank, and delivered it to the plaintiff. This check was received about 3 P. M., or about three minutes before, at an hour too late to present it for payment at the Pacific Bank on that day, but some time on that afternoon the plaintiff sent this check to the bank for certification, which was refused. The check was on the next day deposited to credit of plaintiff with the Bank of British Columbia. Hansen informed the manager of the plaintiff that the check would not be paid, and asked for further time. Hansen requested that plaintiff take up the check, and grant further time, and the plaintiff, on this request, sent its check on the Bank of British Columbia for $63,000 to the Pacific Bank, to be passed to the credit of Helmrich & Hansen, that the check of the latter for $63,739.30 might be paid.

The Pacific Bank then paid the check of Helmrich & Hansen, and returned it to the plaintiff, who delivered it to Helmrich & Hansen. It does not appear that the latter ever paid anything on this check, but that it was in fact taken up by plaintiff. Nor was any portion of the advances made by the plaintiff on the wheat shipped per Scandia ever paid to it by any one, unless the check drawn by Hansen on the 25th of September, 1882, was received by the plaintiff in absolute payment and discharge of such advances.

In reference to this payment by check the plaintiff, by its counsel, requested the court to direct the jury as follows: "When a check is given in payment of a debt, it is only accepted on condition that the check be paid, but, if dishonored, the creditor may resort to his original claim, on the ground that there has been a failure of the condition on which the check was taken." The court refused to give the foregoing, and gave to the jury the following: "If a promissory note, bill, or check of a third person be accepted by a creditor by his own voluntary act or choice, as payment and in satisfaction of a debt, such acceptance would establish payment of such a debt." The plaintiff excepted to the refusal of the court to give the requested direction, and also excepted to the giving of the instruction just above set forth.

The court below clearly erred in refusing plaintiff's request. The check in this case was dishonored. If it was not presented to the Pacific Bank for payment, but only to be certified, it distinctly appears that it was not presented for payment, because the plaintiff was told by Hansen more than once on the day following its date that it would not be paid. It was said in Smith v. Harper, 5 Cal. 330: "When the holder of a note accepts a draft or note in payment, it has usually been held that he is not bound to give up the note before payment of the draft or check." It has been repeatedly held by this court that the acceptance of a note for a debt does not discharge the debt unless expressly agreed to be payment; that in such case, the right of action on the debt is suspended until the maturity of the note given, and suit may be brought on the original debt in place of the non-payment of the accepted note. See Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 501; Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317; Higgins v. Wortell, 18 Cal. 330; Crary v. Bowers, 20 Cal. 89; Smith v. Owens, 21 Cal. 11; Brown v. Cronise, Id. 386; Welch v. Allington, 23 Cal. 322; Mitchell v. Hockett, 25 Cal. 542; Brown v. Olmsted, 50 Cal. 162; Crawford v. Roberts, Id. 236.

The language used in the opinions is, unless it is expressly agreed that the note is accepted as payment, it is not payment, and the debt is not extinguished. As in Griffith v. Grogan, supra, it was said by FIELD, J., speaking for the court in regard to a note: "Unless received by express agreement as payment, it did not extinguish the debt." Subsequently, in the same opinion, he cites Tobey v. Barber, 5 Johns. 68, as "the leading American authority on the point," and quotes the rule of the opinion in that case as follows: "The taking of the note was no extinguishment of the debt due for the rent. It is a rule well settled and repeatedly recognized in this court that taking a note either of the debtor or of a third person for a pre-existing debt is no payment, unless it be expressly agreed to take the note as payment, and to run the risk of its being paid; or unless the creditor parts with the note, or is guilty of laches, in not presenting it for payment in due time. He is not obliged to sue upon it; he may return it when dishonored, and resort to his original demand. It only postpones the time of payment of the old debt until a default be made in the payment of the note."

That a check is only provisional or conditional, and not absolute, payment of the debt for which it is given, in the absence of an agreement to that effect, we consider clearly established law. We find the law on this question admirably well stated in Blair v. Wilson, 28 Grat. 171, 172, et seq. It is there said: "The giving of a check for an antecedent debt is not an absolute payment and extinguishment of the debt, in the absence of an agreement giving it that effect. Ordinarily it is only a means of payment, and the debt will not be extinguished unless and until the check be paid, or unless loss be sustained by the drawer in consequence of the laches of the holder, in which case the debt will be discharged in proportion to the loss sustained. If the check be not paid, and the payee is without fault, his right of action against the drawer for the debt, which has been merely suspended by the giving of the check, revives, and he may have recourse to the drawer either upon the debt or upon the check, at his option." This rule is thus stated in 2 Benj. Sales, § 1083. (See edition with notes by Corbin, Amer. Ed.) "A check is accepted as a particular form of cash payment, and, if dishonored, the vendor may resort to his original claim, on the ground that there has been a defeasance of the condition on which it was taken." It makes no difference that the check is that of a third person. The authorities to sustain this rule are cited in notes n and 19 to section 1083, above cited; note n containing the English, and note 19 the American, cases. Any more particular reference to the cases is entirely unnecessary.

The instruction above quoted, which was given, in our view, eliminates from the rule above stated any agreement between the debtor and creditor that the check was taken in absolute payment. The voluntary act of the plaintiff alone is referred to, and the jury are told that if, in their opinion, the creditor by his acts disclosed his will to accept the check "as payment, and in satisfaction of a debt, such acceptance would establish payment of such debt." There is not the least evidence that there was any express agreement between the drawers of the check and the plaintiff when it was delivered by the drawers to the latter. Nothing was said at that or any other time in regard to such acceptance of the check. In fact, what occurred at that time disproves that any such agreement was made, and nothing then occurred from which any such agreement could be implied. On the contrary, Hansen, at the time when he delivered this check, requested the plaintiff's manager not to send it to the Pacific Bank on that day, stating at the same time that he had not made his account good,—had not sold the exchange on the cargo per Scandia. Hansen testified that he said to the manager of the plaintiff, De Guigne, with whom he was transacting this business: "Now, Mr. De Guigne, it is now two minutes to 3, or 3 o'clock. Don't put the check through to-day, because I have not made my account good—sold the bill of exchange." We find no evidence of an agreement, express or implied, made between the parties to this transaction that the check was accepted as payment in full, and absolutely. As to any delay in presenting this check, it may be conceded that there is no evidence of it, and such as there was, was advised and consented to by Dresbach.

It may be further said that, when one accepts a check in absolute payment, he takes all the risk of the payment of the security so taken. Is it to be supposed that Hansen would have asked De Guigne to accept the check as absolute payment, and take the risk of its payment, when he had informed the plaintiff's manager that his balance in the bank on which he drew the check was insufficient to meet it? Or that De Guigne, under such a state of facts, would have thought of accepting the check in payment, and taken all the risks of its being paid? It is manifest that the idea of an agreement of any kind, either express or implied, that the check should be accepted in absolute payment, finds no support in the evidence, and was not even mentioned in the whole transaction. The instruction seems to have been based on some answers of De Guigne to questions put to him on cross-examination by counsel for defendants, in which he spoke of the check, and used the word "payment" in connection with it.

We insert here the questions and answers which are quoted in respondents' (defendants') brief. De Guigne is asked as to the check, and by whom it was signed, to which he answers: "Signed by Mr. Hansen, in payment of these mate's receipts partially, and partially in payment of a draft for four thousand pounds that he had bought of me on the Hong-Kong and Shang-Hai Bank. Question. When you say in payment of the mate's receipts, do you mean the payment of advances by you on the mate's receipts? Answer. Yes, sir." And again, speaking of the check, he (De Guigne) said: "Mr. Hansen told me that the check he had given me in payment for these mate's receipts could not be paid." Speaking of the bill on Hong-Kong, which the plaintiff had sold Hansen's firm, and delivered to Hansen, and the amount to be paid for it, he is asked: "Question. And you added that right into this check? Answer. In payment for it; yes, sir. Q. Then you took this check in payment of that exchange, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. As you have stated before, you took the check in payment of advances on mate's receipts and in payment of exchange; that is what you said? A. Yes, sir; I said so." With reference to the amount due for the Hong-Kong bill, and the advances on the wheat shipped per Scandia, the witness is asked: "And the two were put together. He gave you, in payment for both, this check for $63,739.30? Answer. Yes, sir."

This is the character of evidence on which the above instruction was given. We say it was given on this evidence for the reason that we find no other evidence, and no other has been called to our attention on which it could have been based.

We have seen that the rule of law is that a check is not considered absolute payment of a debt unless it is expressly agreed to be taken as such, and in case of such agreement the creditor takes the risk of the payment of the check from the time of his acceptance of it. The language of the witness on this point amounts to no more than this: that he took or accepted the check in the usual manner in which a check is taken, in payment of the advances and of the amount due on the bill of exchange; that is, as a conditional and provisional payment. Payment does not necessarily mean absolute payment.

We have seen that, where a check or note is accepted in payment of an antecedent debt, the presumption is that it is taken as conditional or provisional payment; that it is payment founded on the condition that the check or note is paid. If the check is not paid when regularly presented, or the note is not paid when it matures, there is no payment of the debt. Under the facts of the case before us, the language of the witness (De Guigne) should not be construed as signifying anything more than provisional payment. This is the ordinary and popular meaning of the word, when applied to a transaction like the one before us. It would be doing great injustice to the witness to hold that he intended, by the use of the words which appear in his testimony above quoted, to put the bank of which he was manager in the position of taking upon itself the risk of this check's being paid on presentation, or that he meant anything more than the provisional or conditional payment presumed by the law when a check is received in payment of a debt, and nothing further is said.

In Tobey v. Barber, 5 Johns. 68, a receipt was given by plaintiff to defendant, in these words: "Received of Ralph Barber $163, on account of the within lease, and in full for the second and third quarters' rent." The action was brought to recover the rent mentioned in the receipt. It appeared in evidence that the payment for which the receipt was given was, in part, a note of one Coffin, which defendant had procured to be given to plaintiff; that Coffin became insolvent, and the note was not paid. The court, after stating the rule of law, which is quoted in a former part of this opinion, proceeded to say: "There is no evidence in this case that the plaintiff agreed to run the risk of the solvency of Coffin, and to take the note as absolute payment, except it be the inference arising from the receipt itself, and that is not enough to establish such a positive agreement." Reference is then made to the case of Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. 438, (decided by the court of errors of New York,) where it was held that a receipt of a bill as cash was not sufficient evidence that the bill was taken as an absolute payment. See, also, on the point, the following cases: McMurray v. Taylor, 30 Mo. 267; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill. & J. 493; Muldon v. Whitlock, 1 Cow. 306; Putnam v. Lewis, 8 Johns. 389.

A receipt in full means in full payment, or payment in full. If such a receipt, so drawn, does not establish an agreement for an absolute payment, we cannot see how the language used by the witness De Guigne in this case can establish any such payment, or anything more than a conditional payment, when a check is accepted as payment in the usual course of business. We are of opinion that the instruction under consideration was abstract, as there was no evidence to base it on, that it was calculated to mislead the jury, and that the court erred in giving it.

We will add here that the verdict in this case was general for defendants, and it does not appear, nor can we ascertain, whether the jury rested their verdict on the fact found by them that the plaintiff's dealings were with Helmrich & Hansen as principals, or on the fact that plaintiff dealt with Dresbach and his partner as principals, through Helmrich & Hansen as agents, and that the debt sued for had been paid by the acceptance of the check above mentioned. If it had appeared that the verdict was based on the last ground, we would have ordered a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence to justify it. But as it might have been based on the ground first above stated, on which the evidence was conflicting, we have denied the new trial asked for insufficiency of the evidence.

It is urged by plaintiff that the court below erred in giving the following instruction: "A receipt is always open to explanation, and the purpose for which it is given may be shown. If you believe from the evidence that the five receipts in evidence were given by the book-keeper of defendants as mere memoranda or vouchers, to be used as such by Helmrich & Hansen, and were so given without the knowledge, authority, consent, or subsequent ratification of the defendants, then the defendants are not liable thereon."

It appears from the testimony of Mehlert that these receipts for money which were paid to Dresbach by Helmrich & Hansen were previously drawn, "Received of Helmrich & Hansen." They were given to the parties just named, when Dresbach received money of them, which was procured on the mate's receipts. Mehlert was the principal clerk and book-keeper of Dresbach, and the signing of these receipts was in the line of his duties. These receipts were given and signed, "WILLIAM DRESBACH, MEHLERT," or "by MEHLERT." At one time some of these receipts came back to Dresbach's office. They were drawn, "Received of Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris," and not, as formerly, of Helmrich & Hansen. Mehlert noticed that there was stamped on them, "Received of the Comptoir," and he kept them, and soon after he saw Helmrich, and asked him why this change was made, to which he replied: "Oh, well, I have a certain reason. It don't amount to anything. They are only memorandum. I keep them here in the office." Owing to this explanation he went on and signed them as before. He understood from Helmrich that they were memoranda to be kept in the office of his firm to enable them to keep track of their business for the convenience of keeping their accounts and books. He never asked Dresbach for authority to sign these receipts. He did not regard them as of importance. They were mere routine business. Did not think the change in the receipts made any change in the business, and therefore did not ask Dresbach for any authority to sign them when changed, but signed them as he did before. The change had been made from previously to September, 1882. There was evidence tending to show that Dresbach did not know of the change in the receipts. This change was in the five receipts referred to in the instruction.

The first part of the instruction enunciates a well-established legal rule. The counsel for plaintiff do not controvert this rule. But they say that these were not ordinary receipts; that "they were express admissions in writing of the receipt of so much money from plaintiff." That these receipts purport on their face to be such admissions there can be no doubt. Such is the character of all receipts. They are, or purport to be, admissions of the receipt of money, or property of some kind, but they are, as all admissions usually are, explainable by parol testimony. The plaintiff put these receipts in evidence to show an admission by Dresbach that he had received so much money from plaintiff. The evidence of Mehlert was to show the contrary; that they were not given as such admissions, but as memoranda to be retained by Helmrich & Hansen in their office to enable them to keep track of their business so as to keep properly their books and accounts; that they were not intended to show any change in their business; or that they were getting money from any other person than Helmrich & Hansen. The testimony of Mehlert on these points was not objected to by plaintiff. We can see no error in this instruction. The court merely said, in substance, that if the jury believed this explanation, and that the receipts had been given in the form used without the knowledge, authority, consent, or subsequent ratification of defendants, that the defendants are not liable on them. We think the court was correct in this view of the law,—that if the explanation given by Mehlert of those receipts was true, that plaintiff could not charge defendants on the admissions appearing on their face.

We see no error in allowing the questions put to Waterman and Corde. This evidence was offered to show that Helmrich & Hansen, as principals, had furnished money to Waterman & Co., and not as brokers; and was admissible to rebut the testimony of De Guigne, a witness for plaintiff, and plaintiff's manager, that Helmrich & Hansen furnished money to Waterman & Co. as brokers, and not as principals; and to rebut also, the following testimony of Helmrich, offered by plaintiff: "We [referring to the firm of Helmrich & Hansen] were doing a general brokerage business. We were not furnishing Waterman and others money at the same time as principals. We did not furnish money as principals." We think that for this purpose the questions were properly allowed.

We have in the foregoing passed on all the points discussed by counsel in their briefs.

For the errors above pointed out the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views herein expressed. Ordered accordingly.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.

PATERSON, J., (dissenting.) I am unable to agree with the majority of the court in the conclusion reached in this case. The instruction given by the court below embodies substantially, in my opinion, the principle of law enunciated in the opinion. There must be an express understanding or agreement that the note, bill, or check is given and accepted in payment and satisfaction of the debt. The mere taking or receiving of the check, and giving of a receipt by the payee, is not sufficient. The court told the jury that, if the check was "accepted by a creditor by his own voluntary act or choice as payment in satisfaction of a debt, such acceptance would establish payment of such debt." There can be no acceptance without a proposal. Acceptance is defined to be "an agreeing to terms or proposals by which a bargain is concluded and the parties bound; * * * an agreeing to the act or contract of another by some act which binds the person in law. * * * To receive describes simply the act of taking; to accept denotes the taking, * * * for the purposes for which a thing is offered." Webst. Dict. "Accept," "Receive." I cannot see that the phrase, "by his own voluntary act or choice," qualifies or restricts this clear and well-understood meaning of the word "accepted."

I do not think the court erred in refusing to give the instruction asked by plaintiff, and quoted in the opinion of the court. It in effect, if given, would have said to the jury that there could be no acceptance, except upon the condition that the check be paid.

So far as the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the instructions given to the jury is concerned, it seems to me that we cannot, without invading the province of the jury, say that it is insufficient. I do not understand that it is necessary there should have been express words used by the parties agreeing that the check should be taken in absolute payment. The circumstances, the language and conduct of the parties, all taken together, may show an express understanding between the parties that the check is taken in satisfaction of the debt. This seems to be peculiarly a case in which the facts ought to be left to a determination by the jury.

---

78 Cal. 1

PEOPLE v. VON. (No. 20,416.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD.

Where an appeal is taken in a criminal case upon the judgment roll alone, and the record shows that oral instructions, not made part of it, were given, the judgment will not be reversed for the erroneous refusal to give instructions requested, as the same propositions may have been covered by the oral instructions. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHY, Judge.

Information against Mary Von for murder. She appeals from a conviction of murder in the first degree, and a sentence of imprisonment for life.

J. T. Rogers and Wickliffe Matthews, for appellant. George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

MCFARLAND, J. The information charges defendant with the murder of one Bishop. The jury convicted her of murder in the first degree, and fixed her punishment at imprisonment for life, and she appeals from the judgment. There is no bill of exceptions or statement, and appellant brings the case here on the judgment roll alone. In addition to the charge of murder, there was put into the information (unwisely, we think, though we cannot say erroneously) another charge of having previously suffered a conviction of felony, to-wit, an assault with a deadly weapon; and the main ground taken by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is the refusal of the court to give the third instruction asked by defendant's counsel, which included the proposition (evidently correct) that the jury, in determining whether defendant was guilty of the murder of Bishop, should disregard the evidence introduced to establish her conviction of the previous felony. Whether or not the said third instruction was, as a whole, correct, is, perhaps, a doubtful question; but it is a question which, under our view of the law, it is not necessary to determine.

Section 1127 of the Penal Code provides as follows: "Either party may present to the court any written charge, and request that it be given. If the court thinks it correct and pertinent, it must be given; if not, it must be refused. Upon each charge presented, and given or refused, the court must indorse and sign its decision." And section 1207 provides that the judgment roll or record shall consist of the following: "(1) The indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer; (2) a copy of the minutes of the trial; (3) the charges given and refused, and the indorsements thereon; (4) a copy of the judgment." Now, while the judgment roll in the case at bar contains the written charges presented and indorsed "given" or "refused," it also shows that there were other oral instructions given by the court to the jury, but does not show what those instructions were. We are asked, therefore, to reverse the case because a particular written instruction presented by appellant is marked "refused," while we are informed that there were other instructions not in the record, and are not informed that the instruction refused (or that part of it which was correct) was not given in those instructions. An appellant must show error affirmatively and clearly. It might be argued that the prosecution should have shown that the "refused" instruction was given elsewhere. But how could the prosecution have done so? The defendant had entire control of the appeal, and chose to make it upon the judgment roll alone. Over the judgment roll, which appellant brings up, respondents had no control, except to see that there was no diminution. If the appellant had submitted a draft of a bill of exceptions or statement, and had put into it what was claimed to be all the instructions, then respondents would have had an opportunity to propose amendments: and, in that event, it might be well argued that respondents should have seen to it that all the instructions were in. But when a defendant in a criminal case seeks to reverse a judgment because a proper instruction "presented" by him is found in the judgment roll marked "Refused," he must either show that it was not given elsewhere, or he must have given the people an opportunity to show that it was. Otherwise it would be an easy matter to obtain new trials in cases in which no errors had actually been committed. There are objections to the refusal of the court to give one or two other instructions, but they are in the same category with said third instruction. There is in the transcript brought here, attached to the judgment roll, some manuscript purporting to be the oral charge of the court; but it is not incorporated in a bill of exceptions, or authenticated in any way provided by law. It therefore cannot be considered. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

THORNTON, J., dissents.

---

77 Cal. 84

PEOPLE v. ROZELLE. (No. 20,460.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.

1. INDICTMENT—DESCRIPTION OF OFFENSE—ACCESSORIES.
Pen. Code Cal. § 971, abrogates the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal in felony, and provides that they shall be prosecuted as principals, "and no other facts need be alleged * * * against such an accessory than are required * * * against his principal." By section 950, an information must contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language," and, by section 960, is not insufficient by reason of defect in matter of form. Held, that an information alleging that defendant did encourage and advise, and also that he did aid, assist, and procure one G. to commit a felony, but without alleging whether he was present at its commission, is sufficient, as it shows facts constituting defendant an accessory at common law, and hence a principal under the statute.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—RECITALS IN RECORD.
In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a recital in a judgment that it was corrected when defendant was present in person and by counsel will be held to be true.

3. WITNESS—ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL CASE—COMPETENCY—CROSS-EXAMINATION.
Pen. Code Cal. § 1323, provides that defendant in a criminal action cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offer himself as a witness he may be cross-examined as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. Defendant testified that he did not commit the acts charged in the information. Held, that he could be asked, on cross-examination, whether a letter shown him, which contained statements tending to contradict his denial, was in his handwriting. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

4. SAME.

Defendant having denied all knowledge of any intent to commit the injury charged, or that he advised or participated in the same, may, under the above act. be asked, on cross-examination, if he did not have a conversation with a certain person in which he made threats against the person injured.[1]

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. O. GARDINER, Judge.

Hugh J. & Wm. Crawford, and Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for appellant.
Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, J. The appellant is charged by the information with the crime of aiding and abetting his wife, Grettie Rozelle, in willfully and maliciously throwing vitriol upon the person of another, with the intent to injure the flesh and disfigure the body of such person, was tried by a jury, found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state-prison for nine years. There was a demurrer to the information on the ground that the offense charged was not set forth therein with sufficient certainty, and that it did not conform to sections 951–953, Pen. Code, which demurrer was overruled. There was also a motion in arrest of judgment on substantially the same grounds, which was denied.

The charging part of the indictment is as follows: "The said W. F. Rozelle, on the 11th day of May, A. D. 1887, at the county and state aforesaid, did unlawfully, willfully, wickedly, maliciously and feloniously encourage, advise, aid, and assist, and procure one Grettie Rozelle, his wife, to throw, place, and pour a caustic chemical, corrosive acid, and burning substance, commonly called and known as 'vitriol,' upon the person of another, to-wit, one C. R. Petrie, with the intent to injure the person and disfigure the body of said C. R. Petrie, and did, on divers dates, and at sundry and several times before said date and time, so as aforesaid, advise, encourage, and assist, and on said date did procure, said Grettie Rozelle, his wife, to throw and pour said substance, on said 11th day of May, upon the person of said Petrie, with said intent; and on said 11th day of May aforesaid she, the said Grettie Rozelle, did unlawfully, wickedly, willfully, maliciously, and feloniously place, put, pour, and throw upon the head, face, and person of C. R. Petrie a caustic, chemical, corrosive acid, and burning substance, commonly called and known as 'vitriol,' with the intent then and there to injure the flesh and disfigure the person and body of the said C. R. Petrie, in pursuance of, and by reason of, and through and on account of, the encouragement, assistance, advice, aid, and procurement of the said W. F. Rozelle."

The specific objection to the information, as disclosed in appellant's brief, is that it does not charge whether the defendant was absent or present at the time of the commission of the offense.

The information charges the defendant in such manner as would at common law, and the earlier provisions of the Penal Code, if the facts were well pleaded, have constituted him an accessory before the fact. Pen. Code, § 31, provides: "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed." The following section provides who shall be accessories. Pen. Code, § 32.

---

[1] Respecting the examination and cross-examination of the accused when he offers himself as a witness, see The Anarchists' Case, (Ill.) 12 N. E. Rep. 865, and note 6; Radford v. Com., (Ky.) 5 S. W. Rep. 343; State v. Brooks, (Mo.) Id. 257; Peck v. State, (Tenn.) 6 S. W. Rep. 389, and cases cited; Lockard v. Com., (Ky.) 8 S. W. Rep. 266, and note.

There are two classes of cases mentioned in section 31: (1) Where the person shall aid and abet in the commission of the offense; and (2) where, not being present, he shall have advised and encouraged its commission.

The information must contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Pen. Code, § 950. The distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal is abrogated, and one who would formerly have been an accessory before the fact must now be prosecuted, tried, and punished as a principal. Pen. Code, § 971. If the defendant is not charged in general terms as a principal, but it is attempted to allege the facts showing the offense to have been committed by another, and that he aided and abetted, or encouraged and advised, the perpetration of the crime, such facts must be stated as would formerly have constituted the defendant an accessory. People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 160, 164; People v. Trim, 39 Cal. 75, 79; People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129. The information in this case charges that the defendant did encourage and advise, and also that he did aid, assist, and procure one Grettie Rozelle to commit the offense, but whether being present he aided and abetted, or not being present he advised and encouraged, is not alleged.

In the case of People v. Schwartz, supra, this court said: "Where a party is proceeded against as an accessory, it is better to pursue the course attempted in this case, and charge him as such, rather than as principal; because such a course, if not absolutely necessary, is certainly more consistent with our system of pleading, which favors a statement of the facts constituting the offense, as near as may be, precisely as they occurred. But care should be taken to state the acts of the defendant as fully as they are stated in the statute. When that has been done there can be no question as to the sufficiency of the indictment on that score, as this court has repeatedly held. Now, without undertaking to say that this indictment is positively bad where it charges the acts which made the defendant an accessory, we think it is not in that respect what it ought to be. It does not fully come up to the language of the statute which defines an accessory. 'An accessory is he or she who stands by, and aids, abets, or assists; or who, not being present aiding, abetting, or assisting, hath advised and encouraged the perpetration of the crime.' Act concerning crimes, § 11. Here are two modes of action, either of which renders the actor an accessory. If the former be the true one in a given case, let the indictment follow the statute, and allege that the defendant 'stood by, aided, abetted, and assisted,' etc., and so as to the latter. If it be doubted as to which of the two modes is the true one, let both be charged, and all questions of variance between the allegations of the indictment and the testimony will then be avoided." The question was left open, however, the indictment having been held to be bad on other grounds. The question was again presented in People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129, in which the rule as laid down in People v. Schwartz was approved.

The defendant might properly have been charged directly as a principal. In other words, it might have been charged, in direct terms, that he committed the act. Pen. Code, § 971. And this is much the better and safer practice. People v. Outeveras, 48 Cal. 19. Under section 971 of the Penal Code, "all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and no other facts need be alleged in any indictment or information against such an accessory than are required in an indictment or information against his principal." It seems to be imperatively required by the section referred to that, in the prosecution of an offense such as is attempted to be charged here, the defendant must be accused and tried as a principal; and, as no other facts need be stated than are required in an indictment or information against the principal, he might properly have been charged directly with having himself committed the act. People v. Outeveras, supra; Baxter v. People, 3 Gilman, 381. But the Code expressly provides that the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, in cases of felony, is abrogated. Pen. Code, § 971. In other words, one who, at common law, would have been guilty as an accessory, is, under the statute, guilty as a principal. This being the case, an information which states facts sufficient to constitute a defendant an accessory at common law shows him to be guilty as a principal under the statute. Therefore, to allege such facts as would have been sufficient to show his guilt as an accessory at common law is to charge him "as a principal" under the statute.

It may be further said that, under the liberal provisions of the Penal Code, designed to avoid technicality and promote justice, the particularity of averment necessary at common law is no longer required. People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 208; People v. King, 27 Cal. 511. It is only necessary that the substantial facts constituting the crime shall appear in the information with sufficient certainty to enable the court to pronounce a proper judgment, and the party to defend against the charge. Pen. Code, § 959; People v. Dolan, 9 Cal. 576, 583; People v. Ah Woo, 28 Cal. 205. And this court has frequently held it to be sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute, without stating the acts necessary to constitute the offense. People v. Murray, 67 Cal. 103, 7 Pac. Rep. 178. So it is provided that no indictment is insufficient, nor can the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected, by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form, which does not tend to the prejudice of a substantial right of the defendant. Pen. Code, § 960; People v Ferris, 56 Cal. 442; People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387.

The objection urged here against the information is that it does not allege whether the defendant was present, aiding and abetting, or, not being present, advised and encouraged, the perpetration of the crime, and therefore it does not set out the acts constituting the offense with sufficient certainty to enable the defendant to defend against the charge. Viewing the information in the light of the authorities above cited, we must hold it to be sufficient. As we have seen, the defendant might have been charged as a principal. This would have given him no notice of the fact that acts showing the actual commission of the offense by another, and that he merely aided and abetted in the perpetration of the crime, would be relied upon for his conviction, and yet this court has held that, under such an information, such acts might be proved. People v. Outeveras, supra. If so, the information in the present case was more specific than the law required. It did inform him that his alleged crime consisted, not in the perpetration of the offense by his own hand, but in aiding, abetting, and procuring some one else to perpetrate it. The fact that the information did not go further, and allege whether he was present or absent from the scene of the crime, at the time of the commission of the alleged acts on his part, could not affect his substantial rights, and is a matter about which he has no cause to complain.

Besides, it may be fairly said that the information shows that some of the acts committed by him were not done at the time and place of the perpetration of the crime, as it is alleged that he did on divers dates, and at sundry and several times before said date, encourage and assist. It might with equal propriety be said to charge that he was also present at the time and procured the commission of the offense, as it is alleged that he did, on said date, procure said Grettie Rozelle to throw and pour said substance upon the person of said Petrie. We think the information was sufficiently specific and certain, and that the demurrer to it was properly overruled.

It is urged that the judgment was corrected in the absence of the defendant, and that this was error. The record itself shows directly to the contrary. As corrected, it recites that the defendant was present in person and by counsel.

There is nothing to controvert the truth of this recital, and we must be bound by it.

The defendant was examined as a witness in his own behalf, and denied, in general terms, that he aided, abetted counseled, or encouraged the commission of the offense charged. On cross-examination a letter was shown him, and he was asked whether it was in his handwriting. Objection was made that it was not a proper cross-examination. The objection was overruled. The defendant then declined to answer, on the ground that it would have a tendency to degrade his character, and no answer was required of him. It is said in the briefs that the letter was subsequently proved to be in his handwriting, and admitted in evidence; but, as the contents of the letter shown the defendant were not disclosed, we do not know from the record before us that it is the same. But, conceding the letter finally introduced to have been the one about which the defendant was questioned, we are clear that the court committed no error in overruling the objection. The defendant had denied explicitly that he had committed the offense charged. The letter introduced in evidence contained statements tending to contradict this denial, and to show that he had perpetrated the crime. If the witness had not been the defendant on trial, there could be no question as to the competency of the evidence on cross-examination, as it tended directly to contradict his evidence in chief. It is contended that because he was the defendant on trial a different rule must prevail; that the cross-examination must, under the Code, be confined to the subject-matter of the examination in chief. The Code provides:

"Sec. 1323. A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself, but, if he offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief."

The impression seems to prevail that the section quoted has the effect to confine the examination of a defendant to narrower limits than in the case of any other witness. We do not so understand it. He can only be cross-examined as to matters about which he was examined in chief. The rule is precisely the same as to any other witness. So far as other witnesses are concerned, however, the court is allowed some discretion as to the extent and scope of the cross-examination that might not be allowed in case of the defendant. But no such question arises here. It must be remembered, also, that the fact that a defendant offers himself as a witness as to a particular matter does not give the prosecution the right to make him a witness for the people, and examine him generally. People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. Rep. 695. The questions put must be in cross-examination, and can go no further. It is contended by counsel that the defendant was not asked about a letter, in his examination in chief, and therefore it was not a "matter" about which he could be cross-examined. This would be giving the statute a construction so narrow as in many cases to cut off, almost entirely, the important right of cross-examination. The matter about which the defendant was examined in chief was whether or not he had committed the acts charged in the information. The inquiry was such that he could cover the whole case with a denial. The matter to be tested by a cross-examination was the truth or falsity of this denial. Suppose the defendant had been asked, "Did you on a certain day have a conversation with A.?" and it had been proposed to prove by him, on such cross-examination, that he expressly admitted to A., in such conversation, that he did commit the act charged. Counsel might have said, "He has not been asked about a conversation in his examination in chief; therefore you cannot inquire about it on cross-examination. It is not a matter about which he has testified." It would hardly be seriously contended, we think, that such a conversation could not be asked for on cross-examination, under the circumstances of this case. Now, can it make any difference that, instead of asking him for such a conversation, a letter is handed him, containing the same or similar statements, and he is asked, "Did you write this letter?" Certainly not. The fact that, in order to avoid the effect of such evidence, he is driven to decline to answer on the ground that it will tend to degrade or criminate him, thus, it may be, injuring his case before the jury, cannot alter the rule as to the competency of the evidence. The question as to the scope allowed in the cross-examination of a defendant, under the section of the Code referred to, has been before this court in other cases. In the case of People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 431, it was said: "The fact that defendant offered himself as a witness in his own behalf did not, as to him, change or modify the rules of practice with reference to the proper limits of a cross-examination of a witness." See, also, to the same effect, People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 634; People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121; People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449; People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571; People v. Beck, 58 Cal. 212; People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. Rep. 695. The objection to the question asked was properly overruled.

Defendant was also asked if he did not have a conversation with one Westerfield, in which he (defendant) said he would fix up something that was new, for Petrie, which would disfigure him so that he would not want to see another woman. The defendant having denied all knowledge of any intent to injure Petrie, or that he had participated in or advised or encouraged the act resulting in such injury, the evidence was material and competent, for the reasons above stated.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

MCFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment; but I dissent from that part of the opinion of the court which holds that the defendant was properly asked, upon cross-examination, to prove the handwriting of a letter to which he had made no reference in his examination in chief. The letter was not a matter "about which he was examined in chief," within the meaning of section 1323 of the Penal Code. My views upon that question are fully stated in my dissenting opinion in People v. Myer, 17 Pac. Rep. 431, (filed March 28, 1888.) But in the case at bar I think that no material injury was done the defendant by the error.

---

78 Cal. 49

MCDONALD v. SUPREME COUNCIL, ORDER OF CHOSEN FRIENDS.

(No. 12,727.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.)

1. MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETY—SUSPENSION OF MEMBER—REINSTATEMENT.

The by-laws of a mutual benefit society provided that a member failing to pay an assessment in 30 days should be suspended by the society at its next meeting. By the relief laws, any member so delinquent should forfeit all rights to benefits under the relief fund laws, and should be reported suspended from the "beneficiary membership," and should be declared suspended by the society, and should stand suspended until payment of arrearages and compliance with the other laws governing reinstatements. Held, that compliance with "the other laws governing reinstatements," which required a new certificate of the medical officer, and a re-election, was not necessary where no suspension had been declared by the society.

2. SAME—PAYMENT OF ARREARAGES—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE.

The laws of the society requiring all arrearages to be paid to the secretary, and providing that the secretary shall receive all moneys due the society, the receipt of a delinquent assessment by the secretary, and his entry of it on the minutes of the next meeting, are a waiver of a forfeiture by reason of such delinquency, when there are no conditions of reinstatement other than payment of arrearages.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

Action by James F. McDonald against the Supreme Council of the Order of Chosen Friends, on a mutual benefit certificate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

A. B. Hunt, for appellant. J. E. Jarrett and W. W. Foote, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action by the assignee of the heir of a member of a mutual benefit association to recover a sum of money claimed to be due upon the death of such member. The defense is that the deceased failed to pay assessment No. 99 within the time required by the rules of the association, and that by reason of such non-payment he stood "suspended" at the time of his death. The consequences of a suspension for over 30 days and less than three months are declared to be that the member "shall stand so suspended until all arrearages and fines shall have been paid to the secretary, and all other laws governing reinstatements have been fully complied with;" the requirements of the "other laws" referred to being that a new certificate from the medical officer shall be obtained, and a re-election had by a four-fifths vote. The facts are as follows: Assessment No. 99 was levied on September 30, 1886, upon all the members, including the deceased, who was then "in good standing." This assessment became delinquent at the expiration of 30 days, and, the deceased, having failed to pay it in time, was marked "delinquent" by the secretary; but no action as to a suspension was taken by the council. Another assessment (No. 100) was levied upon all the members, including the deceased, on October 21, 1886, and became delinquent on the 20th of the following month. These two assessments were paid by the deceased to the secretary on December 14, 1886, and were by him entered on the minutes of the next meeting of the council, which was on December 18, 1886. Another assessment (No. 101) was levied on November 15, 1886, and another (No. 102) on December 18th of the same year. The death occurred on December 31, 1886, and on the next day the father of the deceased paid the amounts due on the last two assessments to the treasurer, and the secretary receipted for the money, saying that he would refer the matter to his superior officers. Afterwards all the money which had been received on the above four assessments was tendered back by the association. The "dues" appear to have been paid up to January 1, 1887, no question being raised as to them. No new medical certificate was obtained by the deceased, and he was not re-elected as provided by the provision above referred to. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the association appeals.

We have no doubt that the secretary was authorized to accept the amount of the assessments paid on December 14th, notwithstanding the delinquency. The "subordinate constitution" provides that "the secretary shall * * * receive all money due this council;" and the provision of the relief laws first above quoted is that there shall be no reinstatement until all arrearages have been paid "to the secretary." And the secretary having received the amount for which the deceased was delinquent, and entered it on the minutes of the next meeting of the council, as above stated, we think it must be held that there was an acceptance by the association. Now, if the laws governing the association had not imposed other conditions of reinstatement besides the payment of the money due,—that is to say, if such laws had not required a new medical certificate and a re-election,—we think it clear that an acceptance by the association of the sum due would be a waiver of the forfeiture, for it is well settled that a forfeiture for delay in the payment of money may be waived, and, where there is no other condition imposed by convention of the parties, that acceptance of the money is such a waiver. The appellant contends that this doctrine does not apply to memberships in associations like the present, and places much reliance upon the case of Borgraefe v. Knights of Honor, 22 Mo. App. 142. But that decision is not at all in conflict with the rule as we have stated it, for the simple reason that in that case there was no payment of the sums for which the deceased was delinquent, and consequently no acceptance of such sums by the association. The court does, indeed, say that "the doctrine of waiver, which is often appealed to to prevent forfeitures in the case of policies of insurance, has no application to the forfeitures of membership in these orders." But this must be understood as applying to the acts of waiver appearing in the case before the court, which were the continuance of the name of the deceased upon the roll of members, his appointment upon committees, sending him notices of assessments, etc. See page 139.

The constitution expressly provided that non-payment should operate as a suspension, and that there should be no reinstatement without payment of the sums due; and, in view of this provision, it may very well be that the doctrine of waiver would not apply to such a state of facts. And that is all we think the court meant to assert. For the opinion goes on to say: "Nor do we think it would have entitled the plaintiff to recover if Ada Lodge had continued to treat the deceased as a member, unless Ada Lodge had in fact advanced the delinquent assessment to the supreme lodge, * * * and there is no evidence tending to show that this was done." Page 142. But if the opinion is to be construed as deciding that the doctrine of waiver does not apply in any case to societies like the present, we are not prepared to assent to it. If that were so, the society could accept the delinquent payment, and go on accepting payments, and, upon the death of the member years afterwards, avoid all responsibility by returning the assessments. It is hardly necessary to say that this would not be allowed. We say, then, that if the laws governing the association had not imposed other conditions of reinstatement besides the payment of the sums for which the deceased was delinquent, the acceptance of said sums by the association would be a waiver of the forfeiture.

The argument for the appellant, however, is that other conditions of reinstatement were imposed, and that a new medical certificate and a re-election were essential. It cannot be doubted that, if there was a complete suspension within the meaning of the laws governing the association, a compliance with said conditions was necessary, for such is the plain provision of the laws. The real question is whether he was so suspended. And this depends upon whether the delinquency of itself (or coupled with the report thereof by the secretary) constituted the suspension, or whether a declaration or adjudication thereof by the council was necessary.

This question is not to be disposed of by the mere assertion of the secretary, or by what was put upon the assessment notice, but must be determined by the provisions of the constitution and laws of the association. In this regard there are several matters relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant which in our opinion do not touch the question. Thus the written application of the deceased for membership, and section 4 of the subordinate constitution, are irrelevant, because they relate merely to the consequences of the suspension, but do not say what shall constitute it. So the provision to be found at folios 145, 146, of the transcript, does not affect the question. That provision is that "it shall be the duty of members to ascertain the amount o their dues and assessments by personal application to the secretary, and thi council shall not excuse members, or pay, or cause to be paid, to them any benefits which they may have forfeited by non-payment, because of a failur on the part of the secretary to give them written or other notice." This provision relates to the effect of the want of notice. The phrase, "which they may have forfeited by non-payment," is merely the recital of matter descriptive of the benefits referred to. It certainly does not amount to a provision as to what shall constitute a "suspension."

The provisions which affect the question, so far as shown by the record before us, are section 6 of article 4 of the by-laws of the Vallejo council, and section 5 of article 3 of the relief laws of the supreme council. The former is that "any member failing to pay an assessment within thirty days from the date of the recorder's notice shall be suspended by the council at its first meeting thereafter." If this were the only provision, it would seem clear that some action by the council was necessary. But the other provision is as follows: "Each member shall pay the amount due to the secretary within thirty days from the date of such notice, and any member failing to pay such assessment within thirty days shall forfeit all rights and claims to benefits under the relief fund laws, and shall be reported suspended from the beneficiary membership by the secretary in his report to the supreme treasurer. At the first regular meeting of the council after an assessment has become delinquent, the secretary shall furnish to the councilor [council?] a list of all the members that have become delinquent, and shall enter their names in the minutes of the meeting, but a failure to do so shall not affect the suspension of the member. The councilor [council?] shall declare that all such members have been suspended, and they shall stand so suspended until all arrearages have been paid to the secretary, and all laws governing reinstatements have been fully complied with."

This provision is somewhat confused. There is first a clause that a member failing to pay for 30 days "shall forfeit" his rights. There is then a clause that the secretary shall report him to the treasurer as "suspended from the beneficiary membership;" then that the secretary shall furnish to the council a list of the names of the delinquents, and enter such names upon the minutes of the meeting, (a failure to do which, however, is not to affect the suspension,) and, finally, that the council shall declare the delinquent member suspended, and that he shall stand "so suspended" until certain conditions have been complied with. All this is sufficiently obscure. If the non-payment alone, or coupled with the report of the secretary, is to constitute the suspension, what is the use of a declaration or adjudication by the council? This may be pertinently asked. And it may be plausibly argued that "a condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created," (Civil Code, § 1442; Society v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248,) and consequently that doubts and ambiguities must be resolved in favor of the plaintiff; and that, reading the clauses together, the declaration by the council is essential to the completion of the process of suspension. On the other hand, it may be argued with equal plausibility that the payment of a sum of money to the nominee of a member at his death is not the only benefit to which he is entitled; that, in addition to this, the objects of the association are "to improve the condition of its membership morally, socially, and materially, by timely counsel and instructive lessons, by encouragement in business, and by assistance to obtain employment when in need;" and that, inasmuch as all parts of the provision are to be given effect, if it can reasonably be done, the clause as to forfeiture by non-payment, and report of suspension by the secretary, is to be confined to the right of pecuniary relief, (or, in the language of the provision, to the "beneficiary membership,") and that the clause, as to a declaration by the council, applies to a suspension from all the privileges of membership.

We do not find it necessary to express an opinion as to the relative merit of these somewhat nicely balanced arguments. The most favorable view for the appellant is the latter; and, for the purposes of this opinion, we shall assume that such is the proper construction of the provision. But in this view it is clear that the conditions of reinstatement prescribed by the provision, viz., a new medical certificate, and a re-election by a four-fifths vote, apply only to a suspension by the council from all the privileges of membership, and not to a suspension from the "beneficiary membership," arising from delinquency and a report by the secretary. Said conditions are placed after the clause as to a suspension by the council, and it is only when the member is "so suspended" that they apply. Leaving out these conditions, the only difficulty in the way of the plaintiff's recovery was the forfeiture for non-payment; and this, as we have seen, was waived by the acceptance of the sums due. We do not consider the cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellant as in conflict with the conclusion we have reached. It is unnecessary to examine the other positions taken by the respondent. We therefore advise that the order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 95

WHEELER et al. v. WEST et al. (No. 12,215.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.)

1. PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—AMENDMENT—OBJECTIONS.
   Allegations, in an answer to an amended complaint, that the latter changes the form of the action, are properly stricken out as irrelevant and redundant. The objection should be taken to the filing of the amendment, or by motion to strike it from the files.
2. INJUNCTION—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS OF DAMAGE.
   In a suit for an injunction, an allegation in the answer of damage by the preliminary injunction is immaterial, and should be stricken out.
3. SAME—ANSWER—SURPLUSAGE.
   In a suit to restrain mining, an allegation in the answer of one defendant that another defendant worked in the mine as his employe is surplusage, and should be stricken out.
4. SAME—LICENSE—REVOCATION—NOTICE.
   In a suit to enjoin defendant from mining in a certain claim, an answer alleging a verbal agreement by plaintiff, granting to defendant the right to the possession of the claim, and to work the same for a proportion of the yield, and that possession was delivered, no definite term being alleged, shows a license only, revocable at plaintiff's pleasure, and, plaintiff's allegation of notice to surrender not being denied, the answer is bad on demurrer.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

Action by Judson Wheeler and Abraham Breece against George, Elliott, and James West, to restrain defendants from entering upon, digging, etc., a mining claim.

The answer averred that plaintiffs entered into a verbal agreement with defendants, by virtue of which defendants acquired, and plaintiffs granted to them, the right to the possession of the mining claim, with the right to reopen and work all the old workings, and to explore, open, and work all of the ground; that defendants were to pay to plaintiffs for the possession, etc., the one-fourth of the gold yield; that plaintiffs were to furnish to defendants all necessary tools, etc.; that plaintiffs would crush at their mill, at a reasonable cost to defendants, the cemented gravel and rock or pay-dirt that defendants might mine, and deliver at the mill, when the mill was not required by plaintiffs; that defendants were to bear all other expenses; and agreed to take possession and work the ground upon the terms aforesaid; and that plaintiffs delivered possession, etc. Defendants appeal. For former appeal, see 11 Pac. Rep. 871.

Hale & Craig and John M. Fulweiler, for appellants. C. A. & F. P. Tuttle, for respondents.

WORKS, J. Action to enjoin the defendants from entering upon and digging up gold-bearing gravel and bed-rock on a mining claim of plaintiffs, and taking the gold therefrom. This is the second appeal. On the former appeal it was held that the answer of the defendants admitting the acts complained of, and attempting to justify under a verbal contract, was insufficient, for the reason that the contract relied upon was not pleaded either in hæc verba, or according to its legal effect, and the cause was reversed for error of the court below in permitting the defendants to make proof of a contract not properly pleaded. Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 126, 11 Pac. Rep. 871. Upon a return of the case to the court below, the defendants filed an amended answer to the plaintiffs' amended complaint, in which it was stated that the original complaint alleged for a cause of action that the defendants had taken possession of the mining claim under a contract by which they were to restore the same to plaintiffs at plaintiffs' option; that plaintiffs had notified defendants to surrender possession, which they had refused to do; that the prayer of said original complaint was for the possession of the property; that, without the consent of defendants, the amended complaint for injunction was filed,—thereby changing the form of action from ejectment to injunction; and that no summons was issued on the amended complaint. There was a motion to strike out the foregoing part of the answer, on the ground that the same was irrelevant and redundant. The motion was sustained, and this is assigned as error.

Counsel contend that the matter referred to was not irrelevant, for the reason that the amended complaint wholly changed the cause of action, and was such an amendment as the court should not have allowed; and cite Ramirez v. Murray, 5 Cal. 222; Wilson v. Lassen, Id. 114; Hackett v. Bank, 57 Cal. 335. The cases cited seem to support the appellants' position as to the right of the court to permit such an amendment as was made here, but we are of the opinion that the question is not properly presented for our consideration. A defendant certainly cannot answer a complaint by an allegation that it has been improperly filed. The question attempted to be raised by answer should have been presented by an objection to the filing of the amendment, if opportunity was offered, or by a motion to strike the amended pleading from the files. Ramirez v. Murray, supra. In the answer it was immaterial and surplusage, and was properly stricken out.

The answer also sets up a verbal contract authorizing defendants to enter upon and extract ore from the mining claim, and in connection therewith alleged that defendants, by the preliminary injunction, had been prevented from working the mine, and were damaged thereby in the sum of $10,000. The appellants complain that this latter allegation was also stricken out on motion. These matters might have been proper in an action on the injunction bond, but we cannot see their materiality in this action. The motion was properly sustained.

The court also struck out an allegation that the defendant James West worked in the mine as the employe of the other defendants. This action of the court was proper, for the reason that James West did not join in the answer, and the other defendants could not answer for him. An allegation in their answer, attempting to justify the act of some one else, was surplusage.

The only matter left in the answer after the above allegations were stricken out was the verbal agreement set up, and under which it was alleged the defendants lawfully took possession of the mining claim, or a part of it, and were entitled to continue in possession.

We have endeavored to separate the material allegations of the answer from a mass of irrelevant matter, and find that it sets up a verbal license from the plaintiffs which authorized the defendants to enter upon and work the mine, at the option of the plaintiffs,—a mere license, and not a lease of the real estate itself. The contract pleaded does not materially differ from the one found by the court on the first trial, and on the former appeal it was held that such contract did not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, but was a mere license, which protected them from a charge of trespass while in force, and was liable to revocation at the will of the licensors. Wheeler v. West, supra. It is not alleged that the right to work the mine was given for any definite length of time, nor is the allegation in the complaint that the defendants were notified to desist from the work and surrender possession of the mine denied. The court sustained a demurrer to the answer, and judgment was rendered against the defendants. The answer was clearly insufficient for the reasons above stated, and the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

It is true the answer contains some denials, but some of them are denials of mere conclusions, and the others do not, alone, or in connection with the affirmative matters pleaded, constitute a defense to the action.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

77 Cal. 525

GRAY et al. v. WINDER et al. (No. 12,482.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 13, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING.
   An appeal taken 13 years after entry of judgment will be dismissed; Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 939, requiring appeal to be taken within one year.
2. NEW TRIAL—MOTION—NOTICE OF DECISION.
   Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, providing that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within ten days * * * after notice of the decision of the court or referee, if the action were tried without a jury," file and serve his notice, a notice of intention to move for a new trial, filed and served 14 years after entry of judgment, is not given in time, though the moving party had no formal notice of the judgment; the record showing that he had actual knowledge of it at or about the time it was rendered.
3. JUDGMENT—RES ADJUDICATA—MINORS.
   It is immaterial that some of the plaintiffs, the moving parties, were minors; as they, having commenced and prosecuted the action to judgment, are bound thereby.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Volney E. Howard & Sons, Chalmers Scott, W. S. Van Dyke, and John R. Jones, for appellants. W. T. McNealy, E. Parker, Levi Chase, W. J. Hunsaker, W. J. Gatewood, and Oscar Trippett, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The judgment was entered August 25, 1874. The appeal was taken more than 13 years thereafter. An appeal from a final judgment must be taken within one year after the entry of the same. Code Civil Proc. § 939. The motion to dismiss must be granted.

There is also an appeal from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. If there appears in the record any sufficient ground for the denial of the motion for a new trial the order must be affirmed. The notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on the 6th of November, 1886,—a little more than 14 years after the entry of the judgment. Appellants insist that the notice was given in time, because no notice of the decision of the court had been served on them. The Code provides that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within ten days after the verdict of the jury, if the action was tried by a jury, or after notice of the decision of the court or referee, if the action were tried without a jury, file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention." Code Civil Proc. § 659.

Although it does not appear that plaintiffs were, at any time, served with a formal written notice of the decision of the court, it does appear that they had actual knowledge of it at or about the time it was made. This sufficiently appears by the transcript, from which we extract the following:

"August 24, 1874, at 8 o'clock A. M., court met pursuant to adjournment. Present, the Hon. Sepulveda, judge; T. F. Miller, deputy-sheriff, and A. S. Grant, clerk. [Title of court and cause.] Findings for defendants, and judgment to be entered in accordance, and by consent defendants allowed until Wednesday, August 26, 1874, to file judgment. On motion of plaintiffs, stay of proceedings is granted until October 19, 1874. Plaintiffs object to findings of fact and law this day filed, and ask for further findings. * * * Thereupon the court found and made additional findings, * * * as asked for by plaintiffs."

It has been held that formal notice of a decision may be waived by the party entitled to such formal notice. Thorne v. Finn, 69 Cal. 251;[1] Cottle v. Leitch, 43 Cal. 320. We understand that, when a party acts as if he had formal notice of a decision, such acts constitute a waiver of such formal notice. It is a cardinal principle of construction that "the object to be attained" must be kept constantly in view. We think the object to be attained by giving notice of a decision is as fully attained when the party entitled to notice has actual knowledge of the fact, and acts upon that knowledge, as when he has formal notice of it. When an action is tried by a jury, the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after the verdict, without any formal notice of it, give notice of his intention so to move. The only reason which we can now conceive of for not requiring the notice of intention to be given in such a case, the same as in other cases, is that where an action is tried by a jury it would barely be possible that both parties would not have actual knowledge of the result. Where an action is tried by the court or a referee, the liability of the party to be ignorant of the decision for a considerable time after it is rendered is much greater. The object of the law, we doubt not, is to give a party 10 days, after he has actual knowledge of the decision, within which to give notice of his intention to move for a new trial. Be that as it may, we think the plaintiffs in this case, by their acts, waived a formal written notice, and that their notice of intention to move for a new trial, given 14 years after such waiver, was too late.

The circumstance of some of the plaintiffs being minors is not entitled to any weight. They commenced and prosecuted the action to a final judgment, and must abide the consequences.

Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) In this case notice of intention to move for a new trial was given more than 12 years after the entry of judgment. The plaintiffs were in court when the findings and conclusions of law were presented, and objected to them, and asked for further findings, which were at once made, and the findings were filed. Judgment was ordered in accordance with the findings. This was on the 24th of August, 1874. By consent defendants were allowed until the 26th of August, 1874, to file judgment. At the same time plaintiffs asked for and obtained a stay of proceedings until October 19, 1874. The judgment was filed on the 25th of August, 1874. The plaintiffs contend that their notice of intention was in time, because they never had written notice of the decision. Though a party is entitled to such notice of the decision when the case was tried by the court, before giving notice of intention to move for a new trial, we are of opinion that the rule should not be applied, where the party in court consented to the filing of judgment when ordered within a certain time, and then waited for more than 12 years before giving notice of his intention to move the court for a new trial. He had knowledge sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the status of the cause during this long period; and whether or not the findings had been filed, the decision made, and judgment had been entered as ordered, his delay for more than 12 years amounted to such laches as is equivalent to a waiver of notice. It was, in effect, an abandonment of any intention to move for a new trial, and of all claim or right to do so. To permit such a notice to be prosecuted, under the circumstances shown by the record in this case, would be to allow an abuse of the process of the court. The case presented is novel in its features, and I concur in the judgment on the special circumstances of the case. I regard the conduct of the plaintiffs here as equivalent to a waiver of notice of the decision made in 1874.

---

[1] 10 Pac. Rep. 414.

---

77 Cal. 494

PEOPLE v. IRWIN. (No. 20,386.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 12, 1888.)

1. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF DECEASED—CONSPIRACY.
   Declarations of deceased that he was going to leave the country, as he was afraid P. would kill him; that P. and others were engaged in a conspiracy to take his life; and that he had nothing against defendant, but that the latter would be induced by P. to kill him,—are not admissible in evidence, even for the purpose of showing the existence of a conspiracy.
2. SAME—THREATS.
   The conspiracy to kill deceased not having been formed until after the burning of P.'s buildings, declarations by P., before the burning, that if his buildings were burned he should know whom to go after, coupled with threats to take the life of deceased, are not admissible against defendant.[1]
3. SAME—CONSPIRACY—DECLARATIONS AFTER THE KILLING.
   The conspiracy being to hang deceased, that his death might be a warning to others, declarations made after the murder, but before the body was hanged on a tree, are not admissible against a conspirator absent at the time.[1]
4. SAME.
   Declarations by deceased as to the disposition of his farm on leaving the country, and as to P.'s motive for commencing a lawsuit against him, being made before the conspiracy existed, are not admissible against defendant.
5. SAME.
   A remark made by defendant to P., while confined in jail, that "it would have been better to let the old s—— of a b—— leave," is not admissible; nothing further being heard, and it not appearing to whom the remark referred.
6. SAME—EVIDENCE OF CONSPIRACY.
   It is error to instruct the jury that they may consider, as tending to establish a criminal conspiracy, the falsehood, evasion, or silence of some of the alleged conspirators as to their knowledge of the death of deceased.
7. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF CONSPIRATORS TO TESTIFY.
   It is error to refuse to instruct the jury that the refusal of alleged conspirators to testify, when called as witnesses, should not be considered in determining defendant's guilt or innocence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; JAMES F. BREEN, Judge.

Indictment of Andrew Irwin for the murder of A. W. Powers.

N. C. Briggs, P. B. Tully, John L. Hudner, and M. T. Dooling, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and Montgomery & Scott, for the People.

---

[1] See, as to the admissibility in evidence in criminal cases of the admissions and declarations of co-conspirators, The Anarchists' Case, (Ill.) 12 N. E. Rep. 865, cited in opinion, and exhaustive notes; Menges v. State, (Tex.) 9 S. W. Rep. 49; Anderson v. State, (Fla.) 3 South. Rep. 884, and note; People v. Bentley, (Cal.) 18 Pac. Rep. 799, and note; People v. Parker, (Mich.) 34 N. W. Rep. 720; State v. Banks, (La.) 5 South. Rep. 18; People v. Pavlik, 3 N. Y. Supp. —.

PATERSON, J. The record herein bristles all over with errors. It is another case in which an overzealous prosecution has led the trial court into prejudicial errors, necessitating a reversal of the judgment.

It is contended that the court erred in appointing an elisor, in the absence of anything tending to show that the sheriff was disqualified to serve the venire. It is admitted that it was an irregularity, but counsel for respondent claim that no injury resulted. In view of other and more serious questions which we shall consider, it is unnecessary to determine whether the defendant was prejudiced by the appointment and services of the elisor. We repeat, however, the statement made by us in People v. Yeaton, 17 Pac. Rep. 544, that "in such matters courts should follow the statutes as closely as possible."

The declarations of the deceased, made to various persons and at different times prior to his death, to the effect that he was going to leave the country, because he was afraid Prewett would murder him; that Prewett was engaged with others in holding meetings, and conspiring to take his life; that he would have no chance to escape, as they would shoot him from the bush; that, although he had done nothing against Irwin, the latter would be induced by Prewett to kill him; that Irwin, Maynard, Hasbrouck, Chapman, Fowles, and Mylar were engaged in the conspiracy with Prewett; that Prewett persisted in making him trouble about his land, as he had for others before; that there was no truth in the statement that he, deceased, had set the fire on Prewett's place, etc.,—were not admissible under any known principle or rule of evidence. As was said by this court with respect to similar declarations: "It is impossible to conceive upon what theory the declarations were admissible. If the declaration had been made to the witness by any other person, it would not be contended that it was admissible in evidence, for evidently it would be obnoxious to the objection that it was hearsay testimony. The fact that the declaration was made by the deceased does not tend to remove the objection, for the declarations of the deceased are permitted to be proven in the single case when they are made in extremis, and have reference to the circumstances of the death, unless the declaration constitutes a part of the res gestæ, or can be classed with declarations against interest, etc. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 156. It was not admissible as a part of the res gestæ, for it did not constitute one of the circumstances surrounding the murder. The expectation of the deceased that the defendant would return, and that, too, unsupported by any evidence of the reasons for his expectation, did not even tend to prove any fact connected with the murder. The expectation may have been without any foundation; may have been merely a surmise, arising from the defendant's usual habits. His expectation or declaration that the defendant would return at the time stated would possess no more legal value as evidence to prove the fact that he did return than would the expectation of his neighbor Burns that the defendant would return at the given time." People v. Carkhuff, 24 Cal. 642.

In People v. Carlton, 57 Cal. 84, the fact that the deceased was killed by defendant was not disputed, but it was claimed by the defendant that in doing so he acted in self-defense. The widow of the deceased was called as a witness in that case, and, for the purpose of showing that the deceased was not the aggressor, was permitted to testify that on the morning of the homicide her husband, before leaving home, had said the trouble between defendant and himself would be settled in court, and that he wanted to leave his pistol at home, but was prevented by the witness, who said she did not want to stay in the house with a loaded pistol. The court there said: "This testimony was not a part of the res gestæ, and was not admissible under the authorities to which reference has been made, nor upon any theory or principle of the law with which we are acquainted. From it injury might readily have resulted to the defendant, for it might have been, and probably was, argued therefrom that deceased intended to resort to the courts rather than to force for redress, and therefore did not commence the rencounter in which he lost his life." So, in the case at bar, injury must have resulted to the defendant from these declarations, for it undoubtedly was argued that the deceased intended to leave the country to escape trouble with Prewett, the defendant, and others, "and therefore did not commence the rencounter in which he lost his life." The immediate circumstances of the killing are not in evidence, but the witness Alexander testified—and it is the only testimony as to what occurred between Prewett and deceased—that Prewett had told him he met the deceased in the canon, and killed him in self-defense. The declarations we have referred to must therefore have been given much weight by the jury.

Such declarations depend for their force upon the veracity of the deceased, or the party who has been assaulted, are highly prejudicial, (State v. Pomeroy, 25 Kan. 350,) and are regarded as being so grievously injurious that in one case it was held the judgment should be reversed, although no objection was made to the evidence when offered, (People v. Williams, 3 Abb. Dec. 600.) There is no analogy between such statements and dying declarations; for the latter, being made in view of immediate death, have all the sanction and solemnity of testimony given under oath before the court and jury. Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 253; State v. Clements, 14 Pac. Rep. 411; State v. Draper, 65 Mo. 335; Binns v. State, 57 Ind. 46.

But it is claimed by counsel for respondent that these declarations were admissible in evidence to prove conspiracy, and the court seems to have allowed them for that and no other purpose; that is to say, the main fact which they are supposed to explain is the alleged conspiracy, and not the killing. In other words, it is admitted by counsel for respondent—as we understand the matter—that, if there was no question of conspiracy in the case, a declaration by deceased that Irwin was making preparations to kill him, and would kill him unless he left the country, would be inadmissible. This must be admitted. Such a declaration is on a par with the one referred to in People v. Carlton, supra, and, as said there, "not admissible upon any theory or principle of the law with which we are acquainted." The existence of a conspiracy was a fact to be proven in the case. Without such proof the defendant could not be convicted, as it is not claimed that he was present at the killing, or knew of it until some hours after it occurred.

Now, the declaration of Prewett, Fowles, or of any other alleged conspirator, could not be admitted to prove the fact of conspiracy. Such declaration would be rejected, "lest," as Greenleaf says, "the jury should be misled to infer the fact itself of a conspiracy from the declaration of strangers." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 111. "After proof of conspiracy, the act or declaration of a conspirator against his co-conspirator, and relating to the conspiracy," is the restriction which is placed upon the evidence of co-conspirators by our Code of Civil Procedure, (section 1870,) lest the jury take the declaration of one, not proven by other evidence to be a conspirator, as proof of the conspiracy itself, and then, "after proof of conspiracy" by such declarations, use the same evidence to establish the guilt of the defendant. We are unable to discern any greater sanctity in the declarations of a deceased in this regard than that pertaining to the declarations of alleged conspirators. Declarations favorable to defendant, made by the deceased so long prior to the killing, have been held to be not admissible as a part of the res gestæ. State v. Vincent, 24 Iowa, 576. Nor is the defendant permitted to prove that a third party made threats to kill the deceased, and then left just before the killing. Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510. To admit such declarations—such hearsay testimony—in proof of the conspiracy itself would in civil matters "put every man at the mercy of rogues," (Solomon v. Kirkwood, 55 Mich. 261, 21 N. W. Rep. 336;) and, in charges of criminal conspiracy, render the innocent the helpless victims of villainous schemes, supported and proved by the prearranged and manufactured evidence of the promoters thereof.

If any further authority be needed in support of the proposition that, where two are jointly indicted, the declarations of the deceased cannot, under such circumstances, be used against either of the defendants for any purpose, it may be found in Cheek v. State, 35 Ind. 492. There Cheek and one Bailey were jointly indicted for the murder of one Harrison. A witness was asked what the deceased said to him on the road before he met the defendants, or came in sight or hearing of either of them, as to the purpose of Harrison in turning back with the witness. He replied: "Mr. Harrison spoke thus: 'Doc, I am glad you have come; there are two ruffians going up the road, and they have threatened to take my life. They have gone to my house, and I want you to go back with me.'" The court there held that the evidence was not res gestæ, and said: "We think the books may be searched without success to find a case where the statements of a murdered man, made before he came in sight or hearing of his slayer, can be given in evidence against the accused on his trial. Was this evidence detrimental to the accused? We think so. It was well calculated to make or induce the jury to believe that the killing was from premeditated malice, and not from sudden, hasty transport, or momentary passion; and might, and probably did, induce the jury to find a verdict of murder in the first degree, (the penalty of which is death,) instead of a lower degree of the offense. The case must be reversed for this error." Weyrich v. People, 89 Ill. 98, is a case illustrative, and in support of the same proposition.

The cases cited by counsel for respondent are not in point. The main act to be proved in cases of this kind is the unlawful killing of the deceased. Anything so connected with that act in point of time and character as to explain how and why it was committed is a part of the res gestæ. If Prewett had not succeeded in killing Powers, it could hardly be contended that the latter, on a trial of the defendant for an assault to murder, could testify to declarations of his own, made several hours before the affray, concerning the relations existing between Prewett and the defendant.

There were other declarations of the deceased admitted in evidence still more prejudicial than those to which we have referred. Against the objections of defendant, the witness Holt was permitted to say that Prewett had told him—long before the fire on Prewett's place, which occurred before any meetings were held, and before any conspiracy existed—"deceased had blown up houses, and, if any of his property was burned or blown up, he would know the man to go after; that it was a serious thing to take human life, but he would know the man to go for if his property were destroyed." The witness Alexander was permitted to testify to declarations made by Prewett after the death of Powers. No declarations, except those made "during the pendency of the conspiracy, and in furtherance of its objects," can be used against a co-conspirator. Declarations showing past acts, or expressing merely the opinion or desire of the conspirator making them, are not binding upon any one except himself, or those in whose presence they are made. Anarchists' Case, (Ill.) 12 N. E. Rep. 873; Samples v. People, 13 N. E. Rep. 537; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 111, 233; People v. Moore, 45 Cal. 21; Same v. English, 52 Cal. 212; People v. Aleck, 61 Cal. 138.

The evidence shows that the conspiracy, if any existed, began subsequent to the time of the fire on Prewett's land, and ended with the death of Powers. It is claimed by counsel for respondent that the conspiracy was not ended until the dead body of Powers had been hung upon the tree. It would be sufficient to say that defendant is tried here for the murder of Powers, not for mutilating his dead body; but the evidence shows beyond controversy that the only conspiracy, if any existed, to which defendant was a party, was to hang Powers for the purpose of killing him, that his death might be a warning to others, not to kill him for the purpose of hanging his dead body up as a warning. Witnesses for the prosecution testified that the agreement to hang the body up as a warning was made after the killing, and that defendant was not present when the conclusion to do so was arrived at.

Among the declarations of deceased admitted in evidence were statements that he was going to leave the country, and wanted to leave his farm in charge of a neighbor; that Prewett wanted to get an outlet to the San Benito river to head off Melindy, and had commenced a suit against him (Powers) through spite; that Prewett had accused him of putting Bradley on his (Prewett's) land, but it was not true. These declarations as to the opinion and intention of Powers (some of which were made two years prior to the time of the conspiracy) were admitted in evidence apparently upon the ground that anything admissible against Prewett was admissible against defendant, without regard to time or character. Conceding that they might have been competent evidence in a case against Prewett, it is impossible to perceive upon what principle of evidence they could be used against the defendant.

One of the witnesses, Clay, testified that, while listening at a grating in the outside wall of the jail, he overheard a portion of a conversation between Prewett and the defendant while they were confined in jail; that he overheard "Irwin tell Prewett it would have been better to let the old s—— of a b—— leave." There is nothing to show to whom he referred. The witness was unable to state or to understand anything that was said by either party to the conversation before or after the remark quoted. It was error to admit this scrap of the conversation. People v. Keith, 50 Cal. 139; People v. Ah Wee, 48 Cal. 238.

The court instructed the jury: "Testimony has been introduced tending to show that some of the alleged conspirators, including the defendant, sought to conceal the fact that they had any knowledge of the death of Dr. Powers prior to the discovery of the body on the morning following his death; that the body was placarded, and hung in the tree for the purpose, as the prosecution claims, of giving the impression that the death was caused by 150 vigilantes; that some of the alleged conspirators were guilty of falsehood, evasion, and silence when questioned concerning the death of Dr. Powers. If you believe these to be established facts by the evidence, you may consider them, or any other criminating circumstances found in the testimony, as tending in some measure to establish the fact of a criminal conspiracy as charged." This was error. No falsehood, evasion, or silence of a conspirator, occurring after the death of Powers, was admissible in evidence against the defendant, under any circumstances, (People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 118;) and, whether occurring before or after the death, such evidence, being the act or declaration of a co-conspirator, was inadmissible, as we have seen, to establish the fact of a criminal conspiracy.

The court also erred in refusing to instruct the jury that the refusal of the alleged conspirators, who had been placed on the witness stand and declined to testify, should not be considered by the jury in determining the question of guilt or innocence, and that the jury should not presume from such refusal to testify that the testimony, if given, would be against the defendant.

As the case is going back to the court below for a new trial, and the same questions may arise, it is proper to say that we see no error in its rulings upon challenges made to jurors, or upon objections made to the introduction in evidence of the card claimed to have been found on the body of deceased, or to the deposition of defendant taken by the coroner at the inquest, or to the testimony of Nash given after the case had been once closed, or to McGrury's testimony.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

77 Cal. 507

McBlane v. McBlane. (No. 11,251.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 12, 1888.)

1. Judgment—By Default—Setting Aside—Affidavits.

A motion by defendant in divorce, supported by affidavit, to set aside a decree by default, on the ground that she was not a resident of the state, and was not served personally or by publication, should be granted, where the order for publication was not made until July 16th, and the person by whom personal service is alleged to have been made in his affidavit stated that he made such service July 17th, in Philadelphia, while the affidavit, as to the mailing of the summons, showed that it was mailed only on July 16th, and the affidavits in opposition to the motion contain many improbable statements.

2. Same—Affidavit of Merits.

Such motion need not be supported by an affidavit of merits.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

D. W. Douthitt, for appellant. Tyler & Tyler, for respondent.

Paterson, J. Action for divorce. The complaint was filed July 10, 1884. Summons issued the same day. Affidavit for publication of summons was made July 15th. Order for publication of summons was made July 16th, but not filed until October 27, 1884. The default of the defendant for failure to answer was entered October 17, 1884, on an affidavit of John M. Wheeler, made that day, alleging that he delivered to the defendant personally, in the city of Philadelphia, on the 17th day of July, 1884, a copy of the complaint and summons. On October 27, 1884, one J. F. McLaughlin made affidavit that the affidavit for publication and order of publication were lost, and could not be found, and that on the 16th day of July he had deposited a copy of the summons and a copy of the complaint in the post-office at San Francisco, inclosed in an envelope directed to the defendant at her place of residence, Philadelphia, Pa., with postage prepaid thereon. Thereupon what purported to be copies of said affidavit and order for publication were filed "October 27, 1884, nunc pro tunc, July 16, 1884." The authority of the clerk for filing said copies nunc pro tunc does not appear, but probably an order was had therefor, because judgment in favor of plaintiff, dissolving the bonds of matrimony, was made and entered on the same day. On the 20th day of April, 1885, the defendant, Sarah McBlane, filed a motion in said cause to set aside the decree rendered against her, and for permission to answer the complaint, on the grounds that the defendant was not a resident of this state within six months preceding the commencement of the action, and that the defendant had never been served personally or by publication, and that the proceedings were fraudulent and irregular. The court, having heard the matter upon affidavits, denied the application of the defendant, on the ground that no affidavit of merits had been filed.

The order of the court must be reversed. The affidavit made by the defendant contains sufficient denials of the material matters set forth by the plaintiff in his complaint, and shows a good defense on the merits if its contents are true. But there is no necessity for an affidavit of merits in an action for divorce; and the court should be very liberal in granting applications to set aside defaults in divorce actions, where it appears at all probable that there was no service, either personal or by publication. Not only can no divorce be granted upon the default of the defendant, or a finding of fact made by a referee, but the law inhibits the granting of divorces upon the uncorroborated testimony or admission of the parties. The parties to the action are not the only people interested in the result thereof. The public has an interest in the result of every suit for divorce; the policy and the letter of the law concur in guarding against collusion and fraud; and it should be the aim of the court to afford the fullest possible hearing in such matters.

The affidavit of the defendant shows that the first information she had of these proceedings came to her in a copy of the decree "in the familiar handwriting of said John F. McBlane, mailed in San Francisco, and received by her in Philadelphia during the month of November last;" that no complaint or summons was ever served on her by said Wheeler, or any one else; and that she never received any copy, through the mail or otherwise. The counter-affidavits are a mosaic of statements, as a ground of opposition to the application of the defendant. It will be observed that Wheeler says he served the summons personally on the defendant in Philadelphia on the 17th day of July, just seven days after it was issued. The papers were not mailed to him until July 16th from San Francisco. Personal service out of the state can be made, if at all, (Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165,) only when a publication of the summons has been ordered. Publication in this case was not ordered until July 16th, just one day before it is alleged the summons was served in Philadelphia. The affidavit for publication was not made until July 15th. McLaughlin claimed that "at the same time he sent the copy of the summons and complaint to defendant by mail—July 16th—he also sent a copy of the complaint and summons to a friend of the plaintiff in Philadelphia for service upon the defendant personally"; but, when asked the name of the person to whom he had sent the papers, he replied that he did not remember. In one of the counter-affidavits it is claimed that the date named in the affidavit of Wheeler as to the time of service, to-wit, July 17th, ought to have been July 27th, but was printed "17" through a mistake in making a copy on the type-writer.

The improbability of many of the statements contained in these affidavits is so glaring that the conclusion is irresistible that no service was ever had upon the defendant. The whole showing is a bungling piece of patchwork, and the court below should not have hesitated for a moment to grant the application of the defendant.

Order reversed and cause remanded, with directions to allow the defendant to answer within a reasonable time.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

77 Cal. 534

TAYLOR v. WESTON et al. (No. 11,415.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1888.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE—AFFIDAVIT—ACTUAL SETTLEMENT.
Pol. Code Cal. § 3500, providing that the affidavit of an applicant for the purchase of lieu lands from the state shall state that the applicant is an actual settler, applies to all lands, no distinction being made between lands suitable for cultivation and lands not suitable; and the statement must be true, and where the affidavit as to applicant's being an actual settler is false, his proceedings are invalid.

2. SAME—ASSIGNMENT OF CERTIFICATE—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.
The assignee of a certificate of purchase issued to such applicant, who purchased for value without notice of the falseness of the affidavit, is in no better position than the applicant, as he is a purchaser of an equitable interest in the land, the legal title being in the state, and is not protected by the rule as to bona fide purchasers.

3. SAME—EFFECT OF CERTIFICATE—EXAMINATION.
In a proceeding to determine who is entitled to purchase the land, such certificate of purchase is not of itself a bar to inquiry into the rights of the person to whom it was issued.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. MCGARVEY, Judge.

Action by Taylor against Weston and Payne on a reference from the land-office to determine who is entitled to purchase certain lieu lands from the state. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

J. M. Mannon and J. W. Harding, for appellant. J. A. Cooper, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action upon a reference from the land-office to determine who is entitled to purchase certain lieu lands from the state. The plaintiff, who was an actual settler upon the land, filed his application to purchase on December 24, 1884. This application "was in due form, and stated all the facts required by law, and was duly verified." The defendant Weston's application, which was regular in form, was filed on March 1, 1884, nearly nine months previously. This application stated that Weston was an actual settler on the land; but the court found that he "never was a settler on said land, nor in the possession thereof." On March 12, 1884, a certificate of purchase was issued to Weston; and on the 15th of the same month he assigned this certificate to the defendant Payne, who paid value for the same, and who had no knowledge of the falseness of Weston's affidavit. The court below gave judgment in favor of Payne, and the plaintiff appeals. We think the judgment was wrong.

1. The fact that Weston was not a settler on the land rendered his proceedings invalid, whether the land was suitable for cultivation or not. It is true, the constitution provides that "lands belonging to this state, which are suitable for cultivation, shall be granted only to actual settlers." Article 17, § 3. But this did not prevent the legislature from annexing a similar condition to lands not suitable for cultivation. It did not "prevent or in any way affect the sale of lands which were not suitable for cultivation." Dillon v. Saloude, 68 Cal. 270, 9 Pac. Rep. 162. The state, being the owner of the land, could dispose of it upon any terms she pleased, provided they were not inconsistent with her organic law, or with the grant under which she held. And at the time Weston's application was filed the condition imposed was that the applicant should be an actual settler. This condition resulted from section 3500 of the Political Code as amended in 1880, (it was again amended in 1885,) which provided that the affidavit should state that the applicant was an actual settler on the land. No distinction was made between lands which were suitable for cultivation and lands which were not so. The requirement applied to all lands within the scope of the section; and it meant that the statement must be true. McKenzie v. Brandon, 71 Cal. 211, 12 Pac. Rep. 428; Plummer v. Woodruff, 72 Cal. 31, 11 Pac. Rep. 871, and 13 Pac. Rep. 51; Harbin v. Burghart, 18 Pac. Rep. 128. Weston's affidavit as to his being an actual settler having been false, his proceedings were invalid.

2. Payne, being the assignee of Weston, was in no better position. The court below held that Payne was protected by the rule as to innocent purchasers for value; in other words, that a certificate of purchase is negotiable, like a promissory note. And there is a statement to that effect in the opinion of DEADY, J., in Smith v. Ewing, 23 Fed. Rep. 741. But the point was not necessary to the decision, which was that the officers of the land department had no power to cancel a certificate of purchase, but that resort must be had to the courts. With deference to the views of that learned judge, we do not think that the rule as to bona fide purchasers applies.

This conclusion might perhaps be rested upon grounds of public policy. The case is not like that of a private owner who sells his land for considerations of gain alone. The state does not throw the land upon the market for sale to the highest bidder. A price is fixed for all purchasers; and this is put much below the actual value, because other considerations enter into the transaction. Among these was the requirement that the purchaser should be an actual settler upon the land. It was not thought best that the lands should be disposed of to persons who might simply desire to hold them for an increase in value. The plan was to dispose of them to persons who would reside upon them and improve them, and so increase the wealth of the community, and add to the number of good citizens. That was the policy of the state. Now, it is manifest that this policy would be defeated if persons who falsely pretend to be of the class entitled to purchase could, after deceiving the land department into giving them their preliminary papers, shut off investigation by immediately assigning such preliminary papers to some third party. The proceedings before the land-officer being ex parte in the first instance, and he being unable, from the nature of the case, to personally investigate the truth of the statements made to him, the opportunities for fraud are great; and, the temptation being strong, the result would probably be that the legislative will would be almost entirely frustrated. Hence we say that our conclusion, that the rule as to bona fide purchasers does not apply, might perhaps be rested upon grounds of public policy.

But it is not necessary to put it upon that ground. Upon the most favorable view for the respondent, his position can be no better than if he had acquired a contract of purchase made by a private party; and in such case the rule as to bona fide purchasers would not apply, because his purchase would not be of the legal title, but of an equitable interest. The general rule, subject to some exceptions and qualifications, is that the purchaser of an equitable interest is not protected as a bona fide purchaser. The authorities cited below are conclusive to this effect. In Vattier v. Hinde, 7 Pet. *271, the deed under which the party claimed was from one who had no title at all. The decision, therefore, is not in point. But in delivering the opinion, MARSHALL, C. J., said: "The rules respecting a purchaser without notice are framed for the protection of him who purchases a legal estate, and pays the purchase money without knowledge of an outstanding equity. They do not protect a person who acquires no semblance of title. They apply fully only to the purchaser of the legal estate. Even the purchaser of an equity is bound to take notice of any prior equity." This language was adopted by Story in his treatise on Equity Jurisprudence. See volume 2, (13th Ed.) § 1502, pp. 825, 826. And in another place that learned and cautious writer, speaking of the rule as to bona fide purchasers, says: "The purchaser, however, in all cases must hold a legal title, or be entitled to call for it, in order to give him the full protection for this defense; for if his title be merely equitable, then he must yield to a legal and equitable title in the adverse party." Id. vol. 1, § 64*c*, p. 64.

The recording laws doubtless somewhat enlarge the rule as stated above. Under their operation the purchase of an apparent legal title may in some cases be protected by the rule as to bona fide purchasers, although his grantor had no title at all; and the purchaser of a mortgage (which, under our system, is merely a lien) is within its operation. See Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335; Civil Code, § 1214. But the general rule as to the purchaser of a mere equity still obtains; and the assignee of an executory contract of purchase is the purchaser of a mere equity within the meaning of the rule. So far as the property is concerned, his right is merely to have specific performance of the contract, for which he must resort to a court of equity, which may refuse to lend it aid if not satisfied of the fairness of the transaction. In Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. *209, the rule as to bona fide purchasers was invoked on behalf of the holder of a contract of purchase. But the court, per BALDWIN, J., said: "There is no one subject of equity cognizance in which there is a wider difference between a deed and a contract of purchase than the one under consideration. A purchaser with notice may protect himself under a purchaser by deed without notice, but cannot do it by purchase from one who holds or claims by contract only. The cases are wholly distinct." In the subsequent case of Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 Wall. 338, which went up from California, the rule as to bona fide purchasers was invoked in relation to a contract of purchase contained in a lease. But the court, per SWAYNE, J., said: "The doctrine invoked has no application where the rights of the vendee lie in an executory contract." So, in Polk v. Gallant, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. 397, where a son took a contract of purchase from his father, and paid the price without notice of any defect in the father's title, it was held that the rule as to bona fide purchasers did not protect him. And RUFFIN, C. J., delivering the opinion, said: "Precisely on the same footing stands the purchase of the son from the father himself, which was of an equity only. It is only the honest purchaser of a legal title whom equity will not disturb. If the purchase be of the legal title, but with notice of an equity in another; or if it be only an assignment of an equity, with or without notice of a prior equity in another person,—in either case the estate must in the hands of the purchaser answer all the claims to which it would have been subject in the hands of the vendor." So in Chew v. Barnet, 11 Serg. & R. 389, it was held that a purchaser claiming through a contract of purchase was not a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the rule. And GIBSON, J., delivering the opinion, said: "When we hear, therefore, of a purchaser for a valuable consideration taking the title free from every trust or equity of which he had not notice, it is intended that he is the purchaser of a title perfect on its face; for every purchaser of an imperfect title takes it with all its imperfections on its head. It is his own fault that he confides in a title which appears defective to his own eyes; and he does so at his peril. Now, every equitable title is incomplete on its face. It is, in truth, nothing more than a title to go into chancery to have the legal estate conveyed; and therefore every purchaser of a mere equity takes it subject to every clog that may lie on it, whether he had notice of it or not." So in Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 369, it was held that the rule as to bona fide purchasers did not protect a party who took a contract which did not amount to a conveyance, but at most gave a mere equitable right. And FIELD, J., delivering the opinion, said: "The purchaser of an equitable title takes the property subject to all existing equities. He is not within the rule which protects a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the real or apparent legal title. He must take the imperfect title with all its imperfections." And this case was approved in Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 680, in which it was said that the rule as to bona fide purchasers did not protect the assignee of a sheriff's certificate of purchase. See, also, Winborn v. Gorrell, 3 Ired. Eq. 122. Williams v. Love, 2 Head, 86; Haskell v. State, 31 Ark. 98; Young v. Atkins, 4 Heisk. 531; White v. Railroad Co., 7 Heisk. 550.

In the case before us the person through whom the respondent claims had only a contract of purchase. It is undisputed that the legal title is in the state; the very object of the proceeding being to determine who is entitled to a conveyance from the state. What is called a "certificate of purchase" (although treated as evidence of title as between third parties) is, as against the state, merely evidence of a contract to convey; and the respondent must establish his right against the state, each party in this kind of proceeding being an actor. Dillon v. Saloude, 68 Cal. 269, 9 Pac. Rep. 162. Hence the rule as to the purchase of equitable interests applies; and it has been applied by courts of authority to cases in relation to the acquisition of public lands. In Root v. Shields, 1 Woolw. 364, it was applied by Mr. Justice MILLER to the assignee of a pre-emption claim. In Craig v. Leiper, 2 Yerg. 193, it was applied, in an able opinion by CATRON, J., to the grantee of the rights acquired by an entry and land-warrant under the early land laws. In Stout v. Hyatt, 13 Kan. 243, 244, it was applied to the assignee of a pre-emption claim for school lands under the territorial laws of Kansas. And in Maghee v. Robinson, 98 Ill. 466, it was applied to the assignee of a swamp-land certificate of purchase. See, also, Chrisinger's Case, 4 Dec. Dep. Int. 347. We think, therefore, that the court below erred in holding the defendant Payne to be protected by the rule as to bona fide purchasers.

It is hardly necessary to add that, in what we have said, we have no reference to cases where the legal title has passed to the person through whom the bona fide purchaser claims.

3. In a proceeding like the present the certificate of purchase is not of itself a bar to inquiry into the rights of the person to whom it was issued. Gilson v. Robinson, 68 Cal. 542, 10 Pac. Rep. 193; Gould v. Lanterman, 70 Cal. 247, 11 Pac. Rep. 709; Jacobs v. Walker, 18 Pac. Rep. 129. The defendant Payne, therefore, acquired no right to the land; and we think that the facts found show that plaintiff has the right to purchase it. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with direction to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff.

---

77 Cal. 485

WILSON v. ATKINSON. (No. 11, 899.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 12, 1888.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—VOID TAX DEED.
   Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 322, providing that where one enters upon property "under claim of title, * * * founding such claim upon a written instrument as being a conveyance of the property, * * * continuous occupation of the property included in such instrument, * * * or some part of the property under such claim for five years, the property so included is deemed to have been held adversely," entry on property under a void tax deed, and possession thereunder, is possession under color of title, and the statute of limitations is set in motion by such tax deed, and it is admissible in evidence for the purpose of defining the character and limiting the extent of the occupant's possession.
2. SAME—COLOR OF TITLE—NOTICE OF CLAIM.
   Although the tax deed under which the occupant claimed contained a recital showing that the assessment under which the tax sale was made was invalid, it contained all the other requisites of a good deed, including a sufficient description of the land claimed under it, and it was as effective as notice of the extent of defendant's possession and claim, as if the objectionable recital had been omitted.
3. SAME—GOOD FAITH OF OCCUPANT.
   The claim of title should be made in good faith, believing the deed to be a conveyance of the property, but the knowledge of the true character of the instrument by the occupant must be actual, and not such as would arise from a legal construction of the instrument.
4. SAME—COLOR OF TITLE.
   Instructions based upon the theory that such tax deed was not sufficient to give color of title, were properly refused.[1]

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

Ejectment by C. L. Wilson against E. J. Atkinson. Verdict and judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

C. A. & F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. Hale & Craig, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action of ejectment. Trial by jury. Verdict and judgment for defendant. The plaintiff proved title from the United States government, and that at the time the action was commenced the defendant was in possession of the property. The defendant, to sustain the issues on her behalf, introduced a tax deed to one Singer, bearing date September 3, 1875, and a bargain and sale deed from Singer to her. There was evidence tending to show that Singer had claimed title under the tax deed from the time of its execution, and that he had notified the plaintiff of the fact that he held the tax deed, and claimed title under it, soon after its execution. There is also evidence that Singer leased the land to other parties, to be used as pasture for stock for the years 1876 to 1882, inclusive, except the year 1879, and that all taxes were paid by him from the time of receiving the deed. The deed from Singer to the defendant bears date May 11, 1883. The land is shown to have been fenced early in 1880. The only evidence of possession before that is that the land was used for the purpose of pasturing sheep and other stock, but it tends to show that such posesssion was exclusive, the stock being herded on the land, and the stock of others kept off.

---

[1] That a void tax deed constitutes color of title on which to base adverse possession, see Whittlesey v. Hoppenyan, (Wis.) 39 N. W. Rep. 355. See, also, note, Id.; Doe v. Clayton, (Ala.) 2 South Rep. 24, and note; Hunt v. Gray, (Iowa) 41 N. W. Rep. 14.

The tax deed above referred to was held to be void when this case was here before. 68 Cal. 590, 10 Pac. Rep. 203. The plaintiff objected to the admission of this deed in evidence, on the ground that it was void, and passed no title, and was irrelevant, did not give color of title, and was not sufficient to set the statute of limitations in motion, or to show possession under it. The objection was overruled, the defendant admitting that the deed was not sufficient to prove title, but contending that it was competent as tending, in connection with the parol testimony, to show the character and extent of the possession.

There is much diversity of opinion, in the decided cases, upon the question whether a deed, void on its face, is such a written instrument as will uphold and render effective the possession of real estate that would otherwise fail to give title. It has been held by this court in a number of cases that a tax deed like this, containing the recital that the land was assessed to "unknown owners, and to all owners and claimants known and unknown," is void, and appears to be so on its face. Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522; Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 365; Wilson v. Atkinson, 68 Cal. 590, 10 Pac. Rep. 203. The Code provides: "When it appears that the occupant, or those under whom he claims, entered into the possession of the property under claim of title, exclusive of other right, founding such claim upon a written instrument, as being a conveyance of the property in question, * * * and that there has been a continued occupation and possession of the property included in such instrument, * * * or of some part of the property, under such claim, for five years, the property so included is deemed to have been held adversely." Code Civil Proc. § 322.

The deed in question was a written instrument, purporting to convey the real estate in controversy by a proper description. It is properly executed, and there is evidence tending to show that the defendant and her grantor claimed title under it as being a conveyance of the property. In some of the cases it is said that the conveyance must be good in form, contain a description of and profess to convey the property, and that, containing these requirements, it will give color of title, although in fact invalid and insufficient to pass the title, or actually void or voidable. Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123–127; 8 Pac. Rep. 818, and cases cited.

To sustain their contention that the deed, being void on its face, could not put the statute of limitations in motion, counsel for appellants cite the following authorities: Packard v. Moss, supra; Moore v. Brown, 11 How. 414, 425; Skyles v. King, 2 A. K. Marsh. 385; Walker v. Turner, 9 Wheat. 542; Shoat v. Walker, 6 Kan. 65; Cain v. Hunt, 41 Ind. 466; 26 Amer. Law Reg. 409, 416. We have given these authorities our careful attention. They are in the main based upon statutory provisions differing materially from our own, but in principle support the appellant's position. Many other cases to the same effect might have been cited. The decided cases are so conflicting as to aid us very little in attempting to arrive at a proper conclusion, but the reasoning by which the courts of the several states have supported the doctrines laid down are worthy of careful consideration.

The case of Moore v. Brown, supra, was founded upon a statute of limitations of the state of Illinois, which applied to persons "having a connected title in law or equity * * * from any public officer or other person authorized by the laws of the state to sell such land for the non-payment of taxes, and who had held possession thereunder for seven years." The deed showed upon its face that the auditor sold the land short of the time provided by law. It was held that the deed disclosed the fact that the officer was not "authorized by the laws of the state to sell the land," that the purchaser must take notice of the fact appearing on the face of his deed, and his holding could not be regarded as adverse. Chief Justice TANEY and Justices CATRON and GRIER dissented, and gave their reasons. This case reviews the case of Skyles v. King, cited by counsel. It was based upon a statute almost identical with the Illinois statute above referred to. The case of Shoat v. Walker rested upon similar grounds. The deed showed upon its face that the property was sold for taxes to the county of Lyon, and that the certificate of sale was assigned by the county treasurer to one Howard, and the tax deed executed to him. It was held that there was no law authorizing the treasurer to make such assignment, but that it must be done by the county clerk. The case did not involve the question of adverse possession, as it was conceded that there had been no actual possession, and that the land was wild and uncultivated. The decision was based upon Moore v. Brown, supra, and Lain v. Shepardson, 18 Wis. 59, in which it was held that the statute of limitations did not run under a tax deed, void on its face, where there had been no actual possession. The other cases cited by counsel do not materially aid them, and need not be specially noticed.

In the article in 26 Amer. Law Reg. 409, by Mr. Black, entitled "Color of Title," the authorities are carefully reviewed, and the conclusion reached that their weight is against the position of appellant in this case. Color of title is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title. Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 54. In the case of Veal v. Robinson, 70 Ga. 816, it was held that "color of title is anything in writing purporting to convey title to land, which defines the extent of the claim, it being immaterial how defective or imperfect the writing may be, so that it is a sign, semblance, or color of title."

In Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394, it is said: "Any instrument having a grantor and a grantee, and containing a description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands described. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title; and, because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it passes only color, or the semblance of a title. It makes no difference whether the instrument fails to pass an absolute title, because the grantor had none to convey, or had no authority, in law or in fact, to convey one, or whether such want of authority appears on the face of the instrument, or aliunde. The instrument fails to pass an absolute title, for the reason that the grantor was not possessed of some one or more of these requisites, and therefore it gives the semblance or color only of what its effect would be if they were not wanting."

The supreme court of Wisconsin says in Oconto Co. v. Jerrard, 46 Wis. 317: "When municipalities or their taxing officers assume to levy a tax or to institute a tax proceeding not authorized by statute, they are outside of their functions, and are not acting virtute officii. They are not in the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation, and are as powerless to tax as private persons. Their whole proceeding is a mere usurpation, and absolutely void throughout for all purposes. In such a case there is nothing for the statute of limitations to act upon. But when there is statutory authority within the scope of the constitution to raise money by taxation from property subject to taxation, to come into the public treasury for public use, and there is an actual attempt under color of law to exercise the authority, it is, while in fieri, prima facie a valid tax proceeding; and when the statute of limitations has run upon it, it is conclusively established as a valid exercise of the taxing power."

The statute of Wisconsin is in almost, if not quite, the exact language of our own, and the supreme court of that state has held in a number of cases that a tax deed, void upon its face, is a written instrument within its meaning. McMillan v. Wehle, 55 Wis. 685, 693, 13 N. W. Rep. 694, and cases cited. As further supporting this doctrine we cite Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599; Pugh v. Youngblood, 69 Ala. 296; Gatling v. Lane, 22 N. W. Rep. 227; Dalton v. Lucas, 63 Ill. 337; Stovall v. Fowler, 72 Ala. 77; Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 476; Wood, Lim. Act. 522–536.

In Pillow v. Roberts, supra, the court uses this language: "Statutes of limitation are founded on sound policy. They are statutes of repose, and should not be evaded by a forced construction. The possession which is protected by them must be adverse and hostile to that of the true owner. It is not necessary that he who claims their protection should have a good title, or any title but possession. A wrongful possession, obtained by a forcible ouster of the lawful owner, will amount to a disseisin, and the statute will protect the disseisor. One who enters upon a vacant possession, claiming for himself upon any pretense or color of title, is equally protected with the forcible disseisor. Statutes of limitation would be of little use if they protected those only who could otherwise show an indefeasible title to the land. Hence, color of title, even under a void and worthless deed, has always been received as evidence that the person in possession claims for himself, and of course adversely to all the world. A person in possession of land, clearing, improving and building on it, and receiving the profits to his own use, under a claim of title, is not bound to show a forcible ouster of the true owner in order to evade the presumption that his possession is not hostile or adverse to him. Color of title is received in evidence for the purpose of showing the possession to be adverse; and it is difficult to apprehend why evidence offered and competent to prove that fact should be rejected till the fact is otherwise proven."

In the case of Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 8 Pac. Rep. 818, cited by counsel for appellant, the authorities were cited and reviewed to some extent. The deed before the court in that case was not void upon its face, but was founded upon a void judgment. The court said: "At least it is not urged that the sheriff's deed is in other than the usual form. As a foundation of title, it is worthless by reason of the void judgment in which it had its inception. We are not, however, considering it as a medium for the conveyance of title. An adverse claimant of land is a wrong-doer, and as such is treated and known to the law, until, by lapse of years, his acts, before tortious, are consecrated by time, and dignified as lawful. A deed which gives color of title simply measures and fixes the limit—the extent—of a wrongful possession, and, while it continues wrongful, may be used against the wrong-doer as evidence of the extent of his wrongful possession; and when, by five years' acquiescence, the wrongful acts of possession come to be recognized as lawful, the deed which before fixed the extent of the wrong stands as a land-mark to bound the right acquired. Before it defined the limits to which an unlawful possession extended. After five years of adverse possession, the occupancy having become valid, the boundaries which before marked the wrongful possession remain as indices of the extent of the right."

The deed we are now considering, although it contained a recital showing that the assessment under which the tax sale was made was invalid, contains all the other requisites of a good and valid deed, including a sufficient description of the land claimed under it. It was just as effective, as notice of the extent of the defendant's possession and claim, as if the objectionable recital had been omitted. There are cases holding that in order to avail himself of the benefits of the statute of limitations the adverse occupant must enter and hold the land in good faith, believing his conveyance to be valid. Nieto v. Carpenter, 21 Cal. 455, 490; Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck, (Tenn.) 392; Saxton v. Hunt, 20 N. J. Law, 487; Davidson v. Coombs, (Ky.) 18 Reporter, 15; 26 Amer. Law Reg. 418. But see Wood, Lim. Act. 530, 531. This is no doubt the meaning of the provision of the Code, that he must enter into possession under claim of title, founding such claim upon a written instrument as being a conveyance of the property. McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591, 636; Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 481, 488; Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 276, 280. It could not be justly said that a party was founding his claim upon a written instrument, as being a conveyance, when he knew the instrument to be absolutely void. The Code should be construed as requiring the claim of title to be made in good faith, believing the deed to be a conveyance of the property. But the knowledge of the true character of the instrument by the occupant must be actual, and not such as would arise from the legal construction of the instrument. To give the statute any other construction would deprive it of much of its force.

There are decisions of this court holding that a deed made in violation of law, and so appearing on its face, cannot give color of title. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 280; Woodworth v. Fulton, Id. 295; Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 668. So it has been held in the earlier cases that a deed, to give color of title, must prima facie give a good title. Bernal v. Gleim, supra, 668, 676. But the earlier cases, holding that a deed void upon its face could not aid the adverse possession of the occupant, were based upon the peculiar language of the Spanish law, and are of but little weight in determining what should be the rule under the present Code provision. Besides, in one, at least, of the cases, the deed was one expressly prohibited by law. So far as the cases hold that a void deed, which does not appear on its face to be such, cannot give color of title, they are overruled by later cases. Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 8 Pac. Rep. 818.

The deed we are considering was not prohibited by law, and the officer who executed the deed was authorized to do so by the laws of this state. The only objection to it is that it shows that the legal steps necessary to authorize a sale of the property were not taken. The defect was not one which would be readily detected. Whether such a deed was in fact void has been a matter of grave question, but is now settled by the decided cases.

The parol evidence in the case sufficiently shows that the holder of the deed entered and held possession of the land under it, claiming to be the owner of the property by reason of the conveyance, and that the plaintiff had actual notice of the adverse claim and its foundation. We are clear that under the circumstances of this case the deed was properly admitted in evidence for the purpose of defining the character and limiting the extent of the defendant's possession. See dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice McKee, in Wilson v. Atkinson, 68 Cal. 592, 10 Pac. Rep. 203.

Certain instructions were asked by appellant, and refused. They proceeded upon the theory, either expressed or assumed, that the tax deed above referred to was not sufficient to give color of title, and for that reason, if for no other, were properly refused.

There are other questions presented by the appellant's brief, but they do not call for special notice.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: Sharpstein, J.; Thornton, J.; McFarland, J.

77 Cal. 544

BROWN v. BANK OF NAPA et al. (No. 11,688.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1888.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—SUIT BY ASSIGNEE IN INSOLVENCY.
The value of personalty sold by a debtor before, but of which he retains possession until after, insolvency proceedings are begun by him, can be recovered by the debtor's assignee in insolvency, against a mere volunteer, who, claiming under the vendee, has converted the property, under Civil Code Cal. § 3440, which declares a sale void as against creditors of a vendor who remains in possession, and the successors of such creditors, and against any one on whom the estate devolves in trust.

2. TRIAL—VERDICT—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS.
In such case, a finding that the debtor was the owner of the property on and for a long time previous to the date of the insolvency proceedings is not inconsistent with a finding that he sold and transferred it to said vendee on a prior date; it being intended thereby to find that, as to plaintiff, the debtor was the owner at the later date, the sale being void as to him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; R. CROUCH, Judge.

Action by Smith Brown, assignee in insolvency of William Reed, against the Bank of Napa, C. Anduran, Charles Carpy, and Andrew Sampson, for the conversion of a quantity of wine. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant the Bank of Napa appeals.

Wallace & Johnston, for appellant. G. W. Towle and Coghlan & Coombs, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The principal question here presented is whether an assignee in insolvency can maintain an action for the conversion of personal property against a vendee who has purchased such property of a vendor who had it in possession when the sale was made, which sale was not accompanied by an immediate delivery of the property sold to the vendee, and not followed by an immediate and continued change of possession. The property in controversy was a quantity of wine. This was sold by William Reed on the 15th of September, 1884, to S. M. Chapman. There was no delivery to Chapman, and the wine remained, as before the sale, in Reed's possession. This continued to be the case until May 4, 1885, when the wine was attached as the property of Reed, in an action brought against him. The interest which Chapman had acquired from Reed passed to the defendant the Bank of Napa prior to the 4th of May, 1885. How long prior does not appear, nor does it appear that the bank paid anything to Chapman on acquiring his interest. On the evening of the 4th of May, 1885, the officer (one Brown) who had seized the wine under the writ of attachment before mentioned was ordered to release it from levy, and at the same time received a written request from the defendant the Bank of Napa to act as its agent and take and hold the wine for it. The officer (Brown) kept the wine as the agent of the bank, placed a keeper in charge of it, and retained it in his possession until the bank removed it, between the 10th and 15th of May, 1885, from Reed's wine-cellar to the wine-cellar of Anduran & Carpy. On the 5th of May, 1885, Reed commenced proceedings under the statute to be declared an insolvent, and subsequently procured a discharge. Smith Brown, the plaintiff, was in June, 1885, appointed assignee of Reed, and afterwards qualified and acted as such. The action is brought by the plaintiff, assignee, as above stated.

It is argued for the Bank of Napa, appellant here, that the sale to Chapman was not void as to the plaintiff, assignee in insolvency of the vendor, Reed; that the plaintiff stood merely in the shoes of Reed; and that, as the sale was valid as to Reed, it was valid as to the assignee. We do not think that the contention is sound. The statute declares the sale is void as against his creditors, while the vendor remains in possession, and the successors in interest of such creditors, and against any persons on whom his estate devolves in trust for the benefit of others, and against purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer. We think that the assignee in insolvency is a person on whom the estate of an insolvent devolves in trust for the benefit of others. Such estate devolves upon the assignee by operation of law, under the statutes in relation to insolvents in this state, (see article 4 of the insolvent act, § 17,) for the benefit of others, viz., the creditors of the insolvent. Of the correctness of this position we do not entertain a doubt.

It was so held in Merrill v. Hurlburt, 63 Cal. 496, by department 1 of this court, and we concur in and approve the ruling. It was also held in the case just cited that the assignee was the successor in interest of the creditors. There certainly is much reason for so holding. The creditors cannot sue to recover their debts. The assignee has the right to sue for and recover everything due to the estate for the benefit of the creditors. Insolvent Act, §§ 18, 21.

We adhere to this ruling, also, in the case cited. There can be no doubt, we think, that the transfer or sale by Reed to Chapman, as to the persons mentioned in the statute, (section 3440, Civil Code,) was void. There was never the pretense of a delivery or any change of possession whatever on this sale. On the contrary, the bill of sale to Chapman shows that it was agreed between Reed and Chapman that the latter was to have the right to keep the wine in the tanks of Reed in his wine-cellar (where it was when sold) as long as he chose, provided he returned the tanks empty by July 1, 1885, where it remained until removed by the bank at the time above stated. We cannot perceive that the right of the defendant bank is any greater than that of Chapman.

The bank is not a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith. It does not appear in any way that it ever paid Chapman a cent or anything of value for the wine, or made him any loan of money on it. In this state of the case, the bank is a mere volunteer; stands in Chapman's place, clothed with his right to the wine,—none other or greater. The statute protects purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer. But such purchaser or incumbrancer must show his good faith by parting with his money, or money's worth, on acquiring the property without notice of any infirmity in the vendor's title. We are of opinion that the evidence shows that the bank had notice of the infirmity of Chapman's title, and it is, in effect, so found.

It is further argued that the assignee cannot, conceding that he can maintain replevin, maintain an action for the conversion of the wine. We see no ground on which any such position can rest. If the sale or transfer of the property is void against the assignee, and it is withheld from him, he can maintain any appropriate action to redress the wrong. The bank clearly converted the property. The right to the property by force of the law vested in the assignee. The law clothed him with the rights of an owner for the purpose of recovering it, and, like any other owner, he had a right to proceed to recover the specific property, or, where converted by another, to proceed for damages for its conversion.

We think the findings are in accordance with the requirements of the law. The contradiction urged between the findings is only apparent. They can be easily reconciled. In finding that Reed was the owner of the wine on the 5th of May, 1885, when it is also found that he sold and transferred it to Chapman on the 15th of September, 1884, the court thereby intended to find that, as to the plaintiff, Reed was the owner on the day mentioned, the sale to Chapman being void. It must be observed that the court finds that Reed was also the owner for a long time prior to May 5, 1885. The finding that Reed was the owner on the day named might be stricken out, and the findings would support the judgment. Striking out this part of the findings, they would then stand that for a long time prior to May 5, 1885, Reed was the owner of the wine, and on the 15th of September, 1884, sold and transferred it to Chapman. The case standing thus, as all parties claimed under Reed, we would not reverse, because it is not expressly found that Reed was the owner on the day when he made the transfer by bill of sale to Chapman.

We have examined all the points made and argued by counsel for the bank, and, finding nothing in them to justify a reversal, judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

77 Cal. 541

MONTEREY COUNTY v. ABBOTT. (No. 11,001.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1888.)

In bank. On rehearing. For former opinion, see 18 Pac. Rep. 113.

R. M. F. Soto, A. N. Dorn, W. M. Parker, and Hermann & Soto, for appellant. S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause was heard before department 1, and a decision given on the 3d of May, 1888, (18 Pac. Rep. 113.) Upon rehearing nothing has been called to our attention which should induce us to change the result then reached.

Judgment affirmed.

---

77 Cal. 529

PEOPLE v. MAHONEY. (No. 20,453.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 14, 1888.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—CONDUCT OF TRIAL.
   In a trial for murder, where certain clothing had been identified as that worn by deceased at the time of the killing, and referred to by witnesses on the stand, but had not been formally offered in evidence, it was not error, after the jury had retired, to allow it to be sent to them at their request; the defendant's counsel, in defendant's presence, consenting thereto.
2. SAME—APPEAL—RECORD.
   Where a transcript in appeal was filed in June, and another document was filed in September, containing what purported to be affidavits on a motion for new trial, certified by the clerk to be correct copies of affidavits used on such a motion, but with no certificate nor indorsement by the judge, and not appearing in the bill of exceptions, the affidavits constitute no part of the record on appeal.
3. SAME—TRIAL—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.
   Where a physician is asked, in a murder trial, whether, from the appearance of a wound, the deceased could have shot himself, and an objection is made that the testimony is incompetent, no foundation having been laid, and, after evidence by the physician as to his experience, the question is again asked, and the same objection is made, the question before the court is whether the witness is competent as an expert, and not whether the opinion, when given, is competent evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Taylor & Craig, for appellant. Atty. Gen. George A. Johnson, for the People.

PATERSON, J. The defendant was charged with the murder of one John H. Lannon on or about the 19th day of February, 1888, and the jury found him guilty of manslaughter.

After the jury had retired to deliberate upon their verdict, they requested, through the deputy-sheriff, that a certain coat, alleged to have been worn by the deceased at the time of the alleged killing, should be sent into the jury-room for their inspection. The transcript certified by the judge states that the coat "was the one which had been produced and examined in open court during the examination of the witnesses Carpenter and Lannon, and at said time exhibited to the jury. After the retirement of the jury, the officer in charge of the jury informed the trial judge that the jurors had expressed a desire to see said coat, said to have been worn by the deceased at the time of the homicide. The court informed the counsel in the case, in the presence of the defendant, that the jurors had requested that said coat be sent into the jury-room for their inspection. Thereupon said defendant's counsel stated that the coat had not been formally offered in evidence. In response to that suggestion the court said that if the coat was not in evidence the jurors would have to get along without the coat. Counsel for defendant thereupon, after a moment's reflection, and in presence of the defendant, in open court, consented that the coat might be submitted to the jury. Thereupon the package containing the coat, and other clothes said to have been worn by the deceased at the time of the homicide, was produced in open court, in view of counsel and defendant, and the contents examined, and the officer, without any objection whatever, was allowed to take said coat into the jury-room. At the same time defendant's counsel objected to the officer's taking the blood-stained collar, said to have been worn by the deceased, and the court directed said officer not to take such collar, and it was not taken to the jury-room." The articles sent to the jury had been examined before the jury and identified as the clothing worn by deceased at the time of his death. As stated by counsel for the defendant, when the proposition was made to send them to the jury, while they were deliberating upon their verdict, the articles "had not been formally offered in evidence." But the clothing had been exhibited to the jury, and referred to by the witnesses on the stand. The consent of counsel for defendant, in the presence of the defendant, that the articles might be sent to the jury, was a waiver of all objection, and we see no error in the action of the court or jury.

The defendant moved for a new trial on the ground, among others, of newly-discovered evidence, but the affidavits in support thereof are not in the transcript. The transcript was filed on June 25, 1888. A document was filed September 5, 1888, containing what purports to be affidavits in support of the motion for a new trial, with a certificate of the clerk thereto attached, that they are "correct copies of the affidavits of Daniel Mahoney, J. B. Goldstone, E. Benjamin, Leon Deshayes, and Thomas Price, used and read upon defendant's motion for a new trial herein," etc. There is no certificate nor indorsement by the judge to show what affidavits were used or considered, and they do not appear in the bill of exceptions. The certificate of the clerk cannot be taken as a sufficient identification. The copies filed herein are "mere loose papers, not embodied or referred to in any statement or bill of exceptions, and thus want the authentication essential to constitute any portion of the record." People v. Price, 17 Cal. 314; People v. Padilla, 42 Cal. 535.

The most serious question in the case is that which relates to the testimony of Dr. B. F. Carpenter. During his examination the following proceedings were had: "Question. From an examination of the wound and the course of the bullet, in your opinion would it have been possible for defendant to have shot himself? (Objected to by defendant's counsel as incompetent, no foundation having been laid for it. District Attorney. Then I will lay the foundation.) Q. How long have you been practicing medicine? A. Five years. I make an autopsy about every other day,—not gunshot wounds every other day, but autopsy. We have gunshot wounds quite frequently. Every time a man is shot in the city we study the course of the bullets, and the direction. I did not see clothing on his person. Q. The position this bullet went in the clothing, tell us whether or not, in your opinion, the deceased could have shot himself. (Objected to by defendant's counsel as incompetent and irrevelant, no foundation being laid for the testimony. The court overruled the objection, to which ruling the defendant by his counsel excepted.) A. No, sir; he did not."

When the question was first asked, counsel for defendant objected to it on the ground that it was incompetent, no foundation having been laid for it. The district attorney said, "Then I will lay the foundation;" and proceeded to examine the physician as to his experience in the examination of gunshot wounds. The question was then again put to him whether in his opinion the deceased could have shot himself, and was objected to by defendant's counsel on the ground that it was incompetent and irrevelant, no foundation being laid for the testimony. It appears quite clear, therefore, that the only question upon which the court was asked to pass was whether the witness had had sufficient experience in such matters to entitle him to speak as an expert,—to give his opinion,—not whether the opinion, if given, was competent evidence. The objection made was not specific if the point now urged was the one which counsel desired the court to pass upon at the trial. Furthermore, the answer of the witness to the question was: "No, sir; he did not." This was not responsive to the question, and might have been stricken out on motion. No motion to strike it out was made. We therefore conclude that the judgment ought not to be reversed on the ruling of the court. The evidence, we think, was sufficient to justify the verdict.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

77 Cal. 592

SANTA CLARA COUNTY v. BRANHAM. (No. 12,613.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES—SALARY—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Act Cal. 1883, (St. 1883, p. 299,) "to establish a uniform system of county and township governments," provided that the sheriff, in counties of the third class, should receive a certain salary, and "mileage collected by him in criminal cases, where the same is not a charge against his own county." Section 164 of the act declared the salaries and fees provided for therein should be in full compensation for all services, except that sheriffs should be allowed "all expenses necessarily incurred in conveying prisoners to and from the state-prison, and insane persons to and from the insane asylum, which shall be * * * collected from the state." Section 165 provided that "all salaried officers of the several counties of this state shall charge and collect, * * * and pay into the county treasury, * * * the fees now or hereafter allowed by law in all cases." Act March 14, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 125,) entitled "An act to allow compensation to sheriffs for conveying prisoners to the state-prisons, and insane persons to the insane asylums," allowed sheriffs actual expenses, and a certain amount per diem for those services, to be collected from the state. Held, that compensation collected for such services from the state, by a sheriff of a county of the third class, was not for his own use, but should be paid into the county treasury.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

Action by Santa Clara county against B. F. Branham, sheriff, and others. On motion, the action was dismissed as to all defendants except Branham, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Branham appeals.

S. F. Leib and T. H. Laine, for appellant. H. C. Moore and D. W. Burchard, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant, B. F. Branham, was sheriff of Santa Clara county from January 5, 1885, to December 1, 1886, and during that time received from the state the sum of $704 for transporting prisoners to the state-prisons, and insane persons to the insane asylums. The money was allowed by the state board of examiners for the time necessarily consumed by defendant in delivering the prisoners and insane persons, at the rate of five dollars per day. It was claimed for the plaintiff that it was the duty of defendant to pay the money into the county treasury, but he declined to so pay it, claiming that he was entitled to retain it for his own use. This action was then brought to recover the sum named. In the court below judgment was entered for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Public officers are entitled to receive and retain for their services only such compensation as is allowed them by statute. Whether, therefore, the plaintiff or defendant was entitled to the money in controversy must be determined by an examination of the statutes bearing on the question.

In 1883 an act was passed by the legislature "to establish a uniform system of county and township governments." St. 1883, p. 299. Under that act the sheriff in a county of the third class—and Santa Clara was of that class—was entitled to receive a salary of $9,520 per annum, and "as additional compensation, the mileage collected by him in criminal cases, where the same is not a charge against his own county." By section 164 of the act it was declared that "the salaries and fees provided for in this act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, their deputies and assistants:" provided, however, that sheriffs should be allowed certain expenses, and, among them, "all expenses necessarily incurred in conveying prisoners to and from the state-prison, and insane persons to and from the insane asylum, which shall be allowed by the board of examiners, and collected from the state." By section 165 it was declared that "all salaried officers of the several counties of this state shall charge and collect, for the use of their respective counties, and pay into the county treasury on the first Monday in each month, the fees now or hereafter allowed by law in all cases, except the percentage hereinbefore allowed such officers, and excepting also such fees as are a charge against the county." Section 166 required each of the officers authorized to receive fees under the provisions of the act to keep a fee-book, "in which must be entered at once and in detail all fees or compensation of whatever nature, kind, or description, collected or chargeable," and on the first Monday of each month to add up each column in the book, and set down the totals. And by section 167 it was provided that the payment into the county treasury must be accompanied by a statement of the aggregate shown by the fee-book, and an affidavit of the officer that the fee-book "contains a true statement in detail of all fees and compensation of every kind and nature for official services rendered by me, my deputies and assistants," etc.

On the 14th day of March, 1885, section 164 of the act of 1883 was amended by re-enacting the same, and adding thereto a provision allowing county officers of counties of certain enumerated classes additional deputies in certain cases. St. 1885, p. 125. And on the same day another act was passed entitled "An act to allow compensation to sheriffs for conveying prisoners to the state-prisons, and insane persons to the insane asylums," which reads as follows:

"Section 1. There shall be allowed by the state board of examiners to the sheriff, for delivering a prisoner to either of the state-prisons, actual expenses and $5 per diem for the time necessarily consumed in delivering such prisoner.

"Sec. 2. There shall be allowed by the state board of examiners to the sheriff, for delivering an insane person to either of the insane asylums, his actual expenses, and the same per diem as is allowed in section 1 of this act.

"Sec. 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage." St. 1885, p. 126.

The question is, was it the duty of defendant, under the provisions of the county government act, to pay the money in controversy into the county treasury, or had he a right to retain it for his own use, under the provisions of the last-named act?

In Adams v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 117, a similar question was presented. Adams was the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco at the time of and after the adoption of the Codes, and under their provisions (sections 1586, Pen. Code, and 2221, Pol. Code) was allowed and received compensation for transporting prisoners to the state-prisons and insane persons to the asylums. But an act was passed by the legislature in 1861, and was still in force, which provided that salaries should be allowed and paid to certain officers of the city and county, (among whom was the sheriff,) and should be "in full compensation for all official services required of them by law." It further provided that the officers receiving salaries should pay into the county treasury "any fees, commissions, percentages, or other compensation, of whatever nature or kind, allowed by law, for services rendered by them or their deputies, in their several official capacities." Adams claimed that the Codes allowed the compensation to him for his own use, but this court held that it was compensation allowed by law for official services, and under the act of 1861 was required to be paid over to the county treasurer.

The case is in point here. There is no material difference in the language used in the statutes which controlled that decision and in those which must control the decision here. The circumstances, too, are alike. The plaintiff in that case asserted rights under the Codes which were passed after the act of 1861, and the defendant here asserts the same rights under the act of 1885, which was passed after the county government act.

Upon the authority of the case above cited, we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

77 Cal. 548

COLEMAN v. COMMINS et al. (No. 11,515.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1888.)

1. CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.
   Plaintiff purchased a ranch of defendant, for which he paid part cash, received a deed, and executed a mortgage for the residue of the price, due on confirmation of the survey; defendant remaining in possession until that time, in lieu of interest. If the survey should be rejected, it was agreed that plaintiff might rescind the contract, and receive back what he had paid, with 1 per cent. interest. Before the confirmation, plaintiff advanced money on the debt, to secure which defendant assigned him the mortgage; the assignment stipulating that the advances should bear interest until the confirmation or rescission, at "1½ per cent. per month, payable monthly," and referring to the mortgage itself for particulars as to its terms, and that the advances, with said interest, should be credited on the mortgage debt when the transaction was consummated, or refunded upon rescission. Held, that the words "payable monthly" were controlled by the other terms of the instruments, which evidenced an intention that neither the principal nor interest of the advances should become due and payable until the consummation or rescission of the sale, and that until confirmation, the statute of limitations did not begin to run against the interest.
2. SAME—COUNTER-CLAIM.
   The survey having been confirmed, and the contract thus consummated, the plaintiff cannot recover the excess of his advances, and their interest, over the amount of the mortgage debt.
3. INTEREST—RATE—AGREEMENT BY WRITING.
   Under St. Cal. 1868, p. 553, § 2, (Civil Code, § 1918,) providing that parties may agree in writing for any rate of interest which shall be allowed until the entry of judgment, such a contract is valid, and a court cannot relieve against it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

Action by William T. Coleman against James Commins, Edward Commins, Edward Ryan, John Doe, and Richard Roe, for the recovery of a tract of land. Defendant James Commins had sold the land to plaintiff, and conveyed it to him; taking a mortgage for the unpaid purchase money. Claiming the mortgage to be paid, plaintiff sued for the possession of the land, joining the other defendants as being in possession under the mortgage; the names of the latter two defendants being fictitious, their true names being unknown to the plaintiff. Judgment of foreclosure was rendered, plaintiff's indebtedness being found to be $5,324.09. Plaintiff appeals. The defendants James and Edward Commins also appeal separately. The opinion on their appeal may be found post, 80. The statute quoted in the opinion is St. 1868, p. 553, § 2, (Civil Code, § 1918.)

Hepburn Wilkins, for appellant. Nygh, Fairweather & Durst, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. Ejectment. The land in controversy was conveyed by the defendant to the plaintiff on February 17, 1872. It is a portion of the Mexican grant, commonly known as the "Corte Madera." A survey of the ranch had been made, but was not confirmed until the 1st day of March, 1885. The purchase price to be paid by plaintiff to defendant was $16,000, $7,500 of which was paid at the time the deed passed, and plaintiff gave to defendant a mortgage for the balance, $8,500. The mortgage, which was executed by both parties, provided that the money should be payable "upon final confirmation of the survey, but that in no event should the money be due before November 1, 1872." It further provided that Commins should remain in possession until confirmation, in lieu of interest upon the $8,500 secured. On December 18, 1872, Commins received from Coleman the sum of $700, and, to secure its repayment, if the survey should not be confirmed, executed to the latter an assignment of the mortgage, "by way of mortgage." On May 12, 1873, Coleman made another advance of $250, and received from Commins an agreement that the money was taken on the same terms and conditions as those named in the assignment of the mortgage, "except that the interest on this sum shall be reckoned only from the present date." On January 5, 1874, Coleman advanced the further sum of $500, and executed an instrument similar to the one last referred to. It provided, however, that the rate of interest should "be 2 per cent. per month from and after the 5th day of January, 1874, payable monthly in gold coin, and if not paid at the end of each month shall be added to and become part of the principal, and draw the same rate of interest as the principal sum." No part of the principal sums thus advanced, or interest thereon, was ever paid by defendant. At the time of final confirmation of the survey, March 1, 1885, the principal and interest of the sums advanced by Coleman amounted to more than $8,500,—the amount named in the mortgage of plaintiff to defendant.

This action was commenced on September 11, 1885. The complaint contains the usual allegations in ejectment. The defendant filed a cross-complaint, claiming that the original mortgage had not been paid, and asking for a foreclosure and sale, and for a decree that he might be permitted to retain possession of the property until the mortgage was satisfied. The plaintiff filed an answer thereto, claiming that the principal and interest of his loans to Commins amounted to more than the money due upon his mortgage to Commins, and that this fact entitled him, under the terms of the assignment, to the possession of the land; and, as a counter-claim, that he was entitled to $1,781, the excess of the amount of principal and interest advanced to defendant over the $8,500, amount of the mortgage debt. The court held that all interest on the advances made,—$700, $500, and $250,—which had accrued more than four years prior to the commencement of the action, was barred; the amount of the principal sums named, and interest thereon, not barred, being $3,175.91. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant for the difference between that sum and $8,500,—$5,324.09,—and for a foreclosure sale, as prayed for.

We are of opinion that the court erred in its construction of the contract of assignment. It is true the phrase "payable monthly" is used in one place in the contract with reference to the payment of the interest on the $700 "advanced and paid" by Coleman; but the provisions of the contract, when all read and construed together, make it clear, we think, that the parties intended the advances made by Coleman, with the interest due thereon at the time when he could be called upon by Commins to pay the mortgage, to be taken as an offset to, or payment of, the $8,500, to the extent of the amount of said advances, and interest thereon then due. It was impossible to tell at the time of the execution of the deed and the mortgage when the survey would be confirmed, or whether it would be confirmed at all. It was provided in the mortgage that, if confirmed, the $8,500 mortgage debt would be due and payable; if rejected, that the contract might be rescinded by Coleman; and in that case Commins agreed "to refund and repay to said party of the first part, in United States gold coin, all sums of money paid to him on account of the purchase of said mortgaged lands and premises, with interest thereon in like gold coin, at the rate of one per cent. from date of payment until repayment of same." At that time, therefore, it is clear the parties intended to wait until final action of the land department before adjusting their accounts as to either principal sums or interest thereon. This intention seems to have been carried through the subsequent agreements. In the contract of assignment executed by both parties, December 18, 1872, it is provided that "whereas, the said James Commins is desirous that said William T. Coleman shall advance to him, said Commins, the sum of $700 in gold coin, part of the money secured to be paid in and by said indenture of mortgage, to which mortgage reference is hereby made for a more particular description of said lands, and the terms and conditions of the payment, and refunding of the purchase price of said land, as the case may be. Now, this indenture * * * witnesseth that, in consideration of the sum of $700 in gold coin, advanced and paid by said party of the second part to said party of the first part, * * * said party of the first part * * * does hereby assign, transfer, and set over unto said party of the second part * * * said indenture of mortgage * * * by way of mortgage to secure the repayment of said sum of $700 in U. S. gold coin, with interest thereon from the date hereof until final consummation of said purchase, or until said party of the first part hereto repay and fully refund to said party of the second part hereto, in case he rescind said purchase, as provided in said mortgage, at the rate of one and one-half per cent per month, * * * payable monthly. It is distinctly understood * * * that should the sale and purchase * * * be consummated at the time and in the manner in said indenture of mortgage expressed, that then, and in that case, the sum of $700, with interest thereon as aforesaid secured hereby, shall be applied and taken to be in part payment of the amount of money due or to grow due upon said indenture of mortgage first mentioned; but, if the party of the second part should * * * rescind the purchase of the lands, * * * said sum of $700, together with the interest thereon as aforesaid, shall be refunded and repaid by said party of the first part."

In this instrument the provision that the interest is "payable monthly" seems to be controlled by other provisions, which show that the object of the assignment was to secure to Coleman the repayment of the $700 advanced, with interest thereon from the date of the assignment until the maturity of the mortgage, in case the sale should be rescinded; and, in case it was not rescinded, to use the $700 and interest then due as an offset to the $8,500 mortgage debt. Upon a reasonable construction of the contract, we do not think it can be said that the parties contemplated that there should be a monthly demand of $10.50 interest, and, in case it should not be paid, a foreclosure or personal action to collect it. The intent of the parties must be found in a fair interpretation of all the terms of the contract, and, if any particular phrase or clause be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, what appears to be the object and intention of the parties, as gathered from a consideration of all the provisions of the contract, it should be rejected.

It is claimed by respondent that the rates of interest on the several sums advanced are exorbitant and oppressive. They certainly seem very high, but the statute in force at the time the contract was made read as follows: "Sec. 2. Parties may agree in writing for the payment of any rate of interest whatever on money due or to become due, and it shall be allowed according to the terms thereof until the entry of judgment thereon." The illegality of usury is wholly the creature of legislation, and in this state nothing has been prescribed by the legislature to relieve parties from contracts providing for exorbitant rates of interest.

The plaintiff is not entitled to anything under his counter-claim. The amounts advanced by him, together with the interest thereon, were to be applied in payment of his $8,500 mortgage debt, if the survey should be confirmed. It was only in case the survey was rejected, and the contract rescinded by him, that the several amounts advanced by him were to be returned, with interest thereon. The survey was confirmed, there was no rescission, and there is nothing in the contract, or in law or equity, which entitles the plaintiff to recoup. When the sums advanced, with interest thereon, amounted to $8,500, the debt was paid, and interest ceased.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded, with direction to the court below to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the possession of the land, and costs of the action.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

COLEMAN v. COMMINS et al. (No. 11,971.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1888.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

For statement of facts, see Coleman v. Commins, ante, 77.

Nygh, Fairweather & Durst, for appellants. Hepburn Wilkins, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. There are two appeals in this record. One is an appeal by the defendant, J. Commins, from the judgment in his favor against the plaintiff, entered in the superior court on the 19th of December, 1885; and the other is an appeal by Edward Commins from the judgment entered on the same day in favor of the plaintiff, and against Edward Commins, Edward Ryan, and Alexander Manning. We are unable to understand clearly the object of the defendant in appealing from the judgment entered in his favor, but, as it is the same judgment which was reversed in Coleman v. Commins, ante, 77, (No. 11,515, filed this day,) it is unnecessary to make any further order affecting that judgment.

The appeal herein is heard upon the judgment roll. The court finds "that the defendants, Edward Commins, Edward Ryan, and Alexander Manning, were on the 30th day of May, 1885, and ever since have been, wrongfully and unlawfully in possession of said land, and still wrongfully and unlawfully withhold the same from plaintiff; that the value of the use and occupation of said land from May 30th hitherto is $246.75." This finding is within the issues, and there is nothing in the record to impeach it.

The judgment in favor of Coleman, and against the defendants, Edward Commins, Edward Ryan, and Alexander Manning, is affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

In re FOWLER'S ESTATE. (No. 12,255.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 8, 1889.)

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING WIFE—HOMESTEAD.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1474, which provides that a homestead selected from community property shall, on the death of the husband or wife, vest absolutely in the survivor; and Id. § 1476, which provides that if the value of such homestead, at the time of its selection, exceeds $5,000, it may be divided or sold, and the excess over $5,000 distributed,—a homestead of less value than $5,000, when selected, will, as against the heirs of the husband, vest in the wife absolutely upon his death, although at that time worth much more than that amount. Following In re Burdick's Estate, 18 Pac. Rep. 805. THORNTON, J., dissents.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; C. H. GAROUTTE, Judge.

C. P. Sprague, for appellant. Eugene Aram, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The precise question involved in this case was presented and decided in Estate of Burdick, 18 Pac. Rep. 805, and on the authority of that case the order of the court below denying the widow the homestead as prayed for in her petition is reversed, with instructions to the court to grant said petition, and proceed accordingly.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

---

81 Cal. 11

WISE v. WALKER et al. (No. 11,693.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

JUDGMENT—RES ADJUDICATA—ACCOUNTING.

Defendants, first mortgagees, brought an action to foreclose, and made plaintiff, a second mortgagee, a party defendant. Pending suit, plaintiff bought the mortgagor's interest. After judgment, but before sale, a receiver was appointed, who collected the rents and profits until the sheriff's deed was given, defendants having purchased at the sale, when an account was had, and by order of court the amount of rents collected was applied in payment of a deficiency from proceeds of the sale. Defendants took possession and collected the rents pending an appeal from the judgment of foreclosure, which resulted in reversal. A new trial was had, a similar judgment rendered, and defendants again bought at sheriff's sale. On accounting before the court on the second trial, defendants had their mortgage debt credited by the amount received from the receiver, and by the amount of all the rents they had collected up to that time. Held, that plaintiff could not maintain an action against them to recover the rents so collected on the ground that he was the owner during the time defendants collected them. Having been a party to the foreclosure proceedings, and having acquiesced in the accounting, he is bound by the judgment therein. PATERSON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; OLIVER P. EVANS, Judge.

Action by John H. Wise against James D. Walker and Thomas Menzies to recover for rents and profits collected. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Edward P. Cole, for appellant. Sidney V. Smith, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. Walker and Menzies, the defendants in this action, held a first mortgage executed by one Buffandeau upon a certain parcel of land in the city of San Francisco. John H. Wise, the plaintiff here, and one Denigan held a second mortgage upon the same property. Walker and Menzies brought a foreclosure suit, and made Wise and Denigan parties defendant. While that suit was pending, and after service upon him of summons, Wise, under a bankrupt sale, bought whatever title Buffandeau had. Walker and Menzies recovered judgment, had a foreclosure of the mortgage, the property was sold under the decree therein rendered, and a sheriff's deed was executed and delivered to them. After judgment, but before the sale under the decree, a receiver was appointed, who collected the accruing rents from the property until the sheriff's deed was given, when an account of the receiver was filed, and upon the order of the court the amount shown to be due thereby was paid to Walker and Menzies on account of a deficiency of the money realized from the sale of the property to satisfy their judgment. After that time Walker and Menzies collected the rents, and continued to do so until the trial of the present action. An appeal was taken from the judgment of foreclosure, which was reversed by the appellate court. A new trial was had, which resulted in a second judgment in favor of Walker and Menzies. Under that, a sale of the property was had at which these parties again became the purchasers. On the second trial, upon an accounting before the court, Walker and Menzies had their mortgage debt credited by the amounts which they received from the receiver, and for all rents which they had collected up to the time of the trial. Wise contends that he is entitled to maintain this action against them for the amount of the rents which they have thus collected, claiming that inasmuch as he bought the mortgagor, Buffandeau's, title to the property, he, Wise, was the owner thereof during the time the defendants collected the rents.

Conceding that Wise, as the owner before foreclosure and sale, was entitled to the rents, and that the mortgaged property was merely a security out of which Walker and Menzies might make their debt; conceding, also, that the sale of the property in the first instance, and the purchase by Walker and Menzies, and the sheriff's deed to them, discharged the receiver,—nevertheless the judgment of the court below in favor of the defendants was correct. Wise was a party to the action of foreclosure so far as his rights as a second mortgagee are concerned. In order to determine for what amount the judgment should be given, it was certainly the duty of the court, sitting as a court of equity, to settle all matters of account which would affect the parties in interest to the action. Raun v. Reynolds, 15 Cal. 472. "A court of equity will not make an incomplete settlement of accounts, but will go on and adjust the whole matter, even if it involves items accruing after the commencement of the suit." Roberts v. Eldred, 73 Cal. 397, 15 Pac. Rep. 16.

Wise, as a second mortgagee, was interested in that accounting, at least to the extent that if the judgment was lessened in amount by the reducing of their mortgage debt by the rents which Walker and Menzies had received, the security which Wise held under his second mortgage would be increased in value. He did not object to receive this benefit, but sat by and took it in silence. He is bound by the accounting, to which he was a party and made no objection, and we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

PATERSON, J., dissenting.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 47

TROPE v. KERNS. (No. 11,186.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 24, 1888.)

1. EJECTMENT—WHEN ACTION LIES—CUMULATIVE REMEDY.
   Plaintiff who has obtained a valid title to land by foreclosure, and is in possession of a portion of it, can bring ejectment for the balance, and is not compelled to rely on a writ of assistance.

2. JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.
A decree in foreclosure cannot be attacked in ejectment brought to recover the land sold under the decree.

3. ESTOPPEL—BY MORTGAGE DEED—WARRANTY.
A mortgagor is estopped by the terms of his deed to deny that his estate was other than an estate in fee, and the terms of a mortgage, importing a conveyance of the fee, are equivalent to a general warranty running with the land.

4. TRIAL—VERDICT—SPECIAL FINDINGS.
Where one special finding is conclusive of the whole case, findings on other issues are unnecessary.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

R. M. F. Soto and Hermann & Soto, for appellant. S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action is in ejectment for a parcel of land lying in the city of Salinas, Monterey county. The defendant filed a plea in abatement, and an answer traversing all the allegations of the complaint. The plaintiff filed a special demurrer to that plea, which was sustained. The defendant filed a cross-complaint, to which an answer was filed. The cause was tried upon its merits, and the court gave judgment for the plaintiff, from which this appeal is prosecuted. There are no questions arising in the case to be reviewed, except those relating to the pleadings, and whether the findings are sufficient and support the judgment.

The defendant seems to contend that because his plea in abatement shows that the plaintiff was in possession of nearly all the lot sued for by a valid title under a foreclosure suit and sale and sheriff's deed, that nevertheless he ought not to recover, because he was not in possession of a part of the lot, and did not claim it, for the reason that he did not get out a writ of assistance, and gain possession under the foreclosure sale, but sought in this action to get possession by an action of ejectment. We perceive no merit in this view of the law. The remedy by writ of assistance is merely cumulative, and does not, if a failure to use it occurs, preclude the plaintiff from bringing an action of ejectment. The demurrer was properly sustained.

The defendant contends that the judgment should be reversed, because it is shown by the findings, as he alleges, that in the action of foreclosure, before the judgment was made and entered, a stipulation was entered into by his attorney, himself, and the plaintiff's attorney, by which the decree of foreclosure was not to include a portion of the land in controversy, which stipulation, by inadvertence, was not carried out, but the judgment rendered as to the whole of the land. But this is in the nature of a collateral attack upon the judgment of the district court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, in rendering the judgment, to include more land than the parties intended by stipulation should be included. This, we think, cannot be done.

It is further urged that the plaintiff should not have recovered his judgment, because the findings show that the defendant had, before the execution of the mortgage to the plaintiff, deeded a part of the land under certain covenants and agreements to one Iverson, and that when Iverson, under those covenants, removed his tank, the defendant's former title reverted to him, and was good as against his mortgage to the plaintiff, the judgment of foreclosure, the sheriff's sale, and deed thereunder. But this appellant is estopped from claiming, as we think. "The rule that a sheriff's deed delivered upon execution sale imports no warranty of title, but transfers to the purchaser only such estate as was held at the time by the defendant in execution, has no practical application to a sheriff's deed delivered upon foreclosure of a mortgage in fee; for, as we have seen already, the defendant in the latter case must continue to be estopped, by the terms of the mortgage deed itself, to deny that the estate was other or less than an estate in fee in the premises. These terms, importing a conveyance of the fee, are equivalent to a covenant of general warranty of title running with the land." Association v. Viera, 48 Cal. 580.

There is nothing, therefore, in the other findings which contradicts the ultimate facts set out in the tenth finding, "that the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of this suit was, ever since has been, and still is, the owner in fee-simple of the premises described in the complaint on file herein." That finding is conclusive against the defendant's right of possession to the land, and in favor of that of the plaintiff. Findings upon the other issues, which it is claimed by the defendant ought to have been made, were therefore unnecessary. Dyer v. Brogan, 70 Cal. 136, 11 Pac. Rep. 589.

No prejudicial error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

---

7 Cal. 560

PEOPLE v. DOANE. (No. 20,450.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 24, 1888.)

RIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where in a trial for embezzlement the defense is properly submitted by the court to the jury, their verdict will not be set aside on appeal, though the proof of defendant's guilt is weak. THORNTON, J., dissents.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

J. C. Black, for appellant. Atty. Gen. G. A. Johnson, for the People.

MCFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of the embezzlement of "one sewing-machine," of the value of $70, the property of one George W. Welch, and appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

In this case we have examined the entire record (which is in rather a confused condition) several times, and very minutely. At first we were inclined to doubt that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding either that defendant embezzled any particular sewing-machine, or that there was an embezzlement of any interest or property of Welch of the value of as much as $50 in any particular sewing-machine, so as to make the crime punishable as a felony. Welch, who was a merchant, had a lot of sewing-machines, and the defendant had been engaged for some time before the alleged embezzlement in selling them under a verbal contract or arrangement between him and Welch, which was somewhat complicated. It was admitted that defendant was to have one-half of all the machines which were sold for in cash over their original cost price. He had also authority to receive old machines in part payment of the new ones sold by him; and there was a conflict of evidence as to whether or not defendant was to own one-half of each old machine thus received,—there being nine of such old machines delivered to Welch by defendant, for which the latter had received no credit. And it was contended by defendant that he had such a joint interest in all the machines that there could be no legal embezzlement by him thereof. That question, however, was fairly put by the court to the jury.

After a thorough examination and consideration of the case, we think that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that there was an embezzlement by defendant of the sewing-machine No. 593,599; that it was of the value of $70; that it was sold by defendant to a Mrs. Kimball, without the sale being reported to Welch, and with fraudulent intent to secretly convert the proceeds thereof to defendant's own use. At least we are not satisfied that the proof on these points is so weak that we should overturn the verdict. In such cases much must be left to the discretion of the jury, who see the witnesses, and deal with the living case, while we can look only at the cold paper record. And as the trial court has the power to grant a new trial for insufficiency of evidence, the responsibility on that point must ordinarily rest with that court and the jury. We perceive no error of law which would warrant a reversal. Those parts of the instructions asked by defendant and refused, which were correct, were given elsewhere by the court. Instruction No. 1, asked by defendant, was, perhaps, intended to embody the principle set forth in that clause of section 511 of the Penal Code which provides that "it is sufficient defense that the property was appropriated openly and avowedly, and under a claim of title preferred in good faith, even though such claim is untenable." Defendant was entitled to an instruction giving that clause, or its substance, if such instruction had been asked; but the said instruction No. 1 was incorrect, and properly refused. We think there was no error in overruling the objection which defendant made to evidence of contracts about certain machines other than the one claimed to have been embezzled. This evidence was proper to explain the character of the transaction with Mrs. Kimball.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. The statute defines embezzlement "to be the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted." Pen. Code, § 503. The statute in regard to embezzlement also contains the following: "Every person intrusted with any property as bailee, tenant, or lodger, or with any power of attorney for the sale or transfer thereof, who fraudulently converts the same or the proceeds thereof to his own use, or secretes it or them with a fraudulent intent to convert to his own use, is guilty of embezzlement." Id. § 507. "Every clerk, agent, or servant of any person who fraudulently appropriates to his own use, or secretes with a fraudulent intent to appropriate to his own use, any property of another which has come into his control or care by virtue of his employment as such clerk, agent, or servant, is guilty of embezzlement." Id. § 508.

There must be, under the foregoing sections, to constitute embezzlement, either a fraudulent conversion of the property or of the proceeds of the same, or a secreting of the property or the funds with a fraudulent intent to convert it or them to his own use. If property is intrusted to another with any power of attorney to sell it or transfer it, and he converts the same or the proceeds of such property to his own use, or secretes it or them with a fraudulent intent to convert it to his own use, he is guilty of embezzlement. The same is the rule in regard to any agent in regard to any property which has come into his hands by virtue of his employment as agent.

The property in the case under consideration came into the hands of defendant by virtue of his employment as agent. The defendant, Doane, was accused by information of embezzling and converting to his own use, on the 30th of April, 1887, a sewing-machine of the value of $70, the property of George W. Welch, which before that time had been intrusted to him by Welch as his agent for the purpose of sale. On the trial defendant was convicted as charged, a new trial was moved for and denied, judgment was pronounced, and Doane prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order.

It is argued that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. On an examination of the testimony appearing in the record, made with great care, I am of opinion that this contention must be sustained. In considering this point I take the strongest case made by the testimony, or which it tends to make, against the defendant. Viewing the case in this aspect, the record shows that Welch, who was a merchant in San Jose, in connection with his business had sewing-machines for sale, and employed defendant as agent to sell these machines for him. They were of the kind known as the "White Sewing-Machine." The contract between Welch and Doane, under which the latter acted as agent for the sale of these machines, was as follows: Doane was to sell the machines, and report all sales to Welch or his book-keeper. The machines were to continue to be the property of Welch until sold and paid for. Doane had the right, on making a sale, to take old machines in part payment, which old machines were to continue to be the property of Welch until sold. Doane's payment for his services on making sales was to be one-half of the sum received for each machine over and above the cost price; when old machines were taken in payment Doane was to receive one-half of the amount realized on such sale, provided he (Doane) made sale of such old machines. If he did not sell such old machine, and it was sold by another agent, the latter received the one-half referred to; the other half in all cases going to Welch.

Doane reported a sale to Welch of a machine to one A. Sanches, and that he had received of Sanches $15 in part payment, and an old machine of the Remington pattern, taken in part payment at the price or value of $17. The money and machine so received were paid over and delivered by Doane to Welch. When Doane reported this sale he produced a contract purporting to be signed, "A. SANCHES." The contract set forth a sale of the machine of the White pattern, numbered 593,599, to Sanches, by Doane, for $65, a payment of $15 in cash, and a Remington machine valued at $17; and that the remainder of the $65 was to be paid in monthly installments of $5 each. When the payment became due under this contract, Welch notified Sanches, according to the address of the latter—Mountain View—as given by Doane. He addressed him also at Saratoga, and got no return from either notice. He afterwards found this machine at the house of a Mrs. Kimball in Santa Clara county. This machine, so found, had the same number—593,599—which Doane reported as having been sold to Sanches. There is evidence in the record, which must be held to be true, in the manner in which I am considering this case, that Doane, on the 30th of April, 1887, sold this machine to Mrs. Kimball for $70, of which sum she paid him $30 in cash, delivered to him in part payment an old Remington machine and an old Wilson machine, and was to pay him $5 in sewing. This sale to Mrs. Kimball he never reported to Welch, but it appears clearly that the Remington machine so received was delivered by Doane to Welch, as above stated, and that $15 was paid Welch by Doane at the time of the delivery of the Remington machine. I say it appears clearly that this latter machine was delivered, for the reason that it was identified by Mrs. Kimball as the machine delivered by her to Doane, and there is no evidence to the contrary. I think it must also be held that the $15 paid to Welch, as above stated, was a part of the $30 received from Mrs. Kimball. I consider it an established fact, also, that Sanches was a myth, and that no sale was ever made to him.

It further appears that Doane reported to Welch a sale of a machine as made to Mrs. Jennie Smith, on which he had received in part payment the old Wilson machine, above mentioned, which, in fact, he received from Mrs. Kimball. This last machine was delivered to Welch as coming from Mrs. Smith. In fact, there was no sale ever made by Doan to Mrs. Smith. There is testimony that Doane was paid, by Welch, compensation for his services on the reported sale to Sanches, $8.75, and on the sale to Mrs. Jennie Smith, $12.50. The payment of the sum of $21.25, in compensation for services, to Doane, is established by the evidence. There were four contracts of sale of machines reported by Doane to Welch as having been made by the former, but which I hold were never made. One of these was reported as a sale to a man named Davis, which Davis never got. After a dispute about this business of sales by Doane had arisen between him and Welch, Doane informed Welch that the machine reported as sold to Davis was at a house on the Monterey road, and Welch got it. It is clearly shown that Welch got all the old machines which Doane had taken in payment. It is not pretended that Doane had embezzled any other machine than the one the number of which is given above, and which was found at Mrs. Kimball's house, and was sold to her.

Doane admits the sale to Mrs. Kimball of a machine for $65, of which he received $30 in coin, and an old Remington and an old Wilson machine, of which he testified he paid over $15 to Welch, and delivered to him the Remington machine. The old Wilson machine he says he broke up as worthless, and sold for old iron, at a cent and a half per pound. He testifies that he sold a machine to a man who told him his name was Sanches; that the man signed the contract, which he reported and delivered to Welch, but that he had never been able to find him, though he had made strenuous efforts to do so. He insinuates that the number of the machine found in Mrs. Kimball's possession had been changed. But I regard it as proved that no sale was ever made to Sanches, and that the machine reported as sold to Sanches was sold to Mrs. Kimball. All the machines can be accounted for without a sale to Sanches. In fact, it is immaterial, in the view I take of the case, to whom the sale was made. The evidence incontrovertibly establishes, in my opinion, that, after the sale of the machine as above stated, Doane paid over to Welch a part of the proceeds of the machine, and, though he may have embezzled a part of the proceeds of the sale of the machine, he did not embezzle this machine or any other.

Welch testifies that he paid him $15, and delivered to him the Remington machine, and that he also delivered the Wilson machine. These machines were received on the sale of the machine numbered as above to Mrs. Kimball,—the only machine that there is any charge that Doane embezzled. This machine was sold on the 30th of April, and the $15 paid over to Welch by Doane on the same day. There is no evidence that he received any money on any other machine at or about this time. Therefore it must be held that this sum was paid on the sale of the machine to Mrs. Kimball. Welch, speaking of the sale of this machine, testified that he was out $35 on the transaction. The sale was made for $70, of which Welch got the Remington machine, taken from Mrs. Kimball, for $25, and the Wilson machine, taken from the same person, at $5. Welch then received of Doane on this sale $15 in money and $30 in machines, and, deducting these amounts, (they aggregate $45,) Welch received all but $25. Or, take the evidence of Welch's book-keeper. He says Doane paid in $15 and the Remington machine at $17; that Doane was allowed in compensation for the reported sales to Sanches and Mrs. Kimball $21.25. Now, putting the White machine sold at $70, and deducting therefrom the amount paid in in money and machine, $32, will leave $38 not paid in; charging Doane with $21.25 received as compensation above mentioned, will reduce the amount paid in from $32 to $10.75, which leaves (deducting $10.75 from $70) $59.25 not paid in. But really the Remington machine was taken at $25, and not $17. This is established by Mrs. Kimball's testimony, and admitted by Doane in his testimony. Then, putting the Remington at $25 will make the amount paid in $18.25; leaving only ($70, less $18.25) $51.75 of the proceeds of the machine not paid in. Take the testimony of Doane, and that shows that a part of the proceeds of this White machine was paid in, leaving a balance unaccounted for.

It must be conceded that Doane deceived his employer, that he rendered false accounts to him of the sale of this machine and of others; but the above acts do not constitute embezzlement of the machine, which was actually sold, and part of the proceeds paid over. Doane had authority to sell, and did sell, the White machine. If anything was embezzled by Doane, it was part of the proceeds of the machine sold. I do not intend by this to say that he embezzled anything, but, if he did embezzle, it was not the machine.

I see no evidence that Doane converted this White machine with intent to embezzle it. Such intent is disproved by his paying over a part of the proceeds. As Doane did not embezzle this machine, I cannot see how, under the information, he could be convicted. Conceding that he embezzled a portion of the proceeds of its sale, he cannot for this offense be convicted under the information, which was for embezzling the machine. The case is one presenting a material variance between the offense charged and the offense found,—between the information and the evidence,—on which a conviction should not have been allowed. In this view, the direction of the court below to the jury, given in the following language: "If you find from the evidence that the machine in question was so received by defendant, and that he sold it to one Mrs. Kimball for the sum of $30, and two old machines, and $5 worth of sewing for Doane, and that he reported to Welch that he had sold said machine to one A. Sanches for the sum of $15 in cash, an old machine, and a contract for the payment of a sum in installments of $5 per month, and only paid over to Welch $15 of the $30 received from Mrs. Kimball, and the machines received by her as coming from another, with the intent to defraud Welch, and did not report said sale to Kimball, the defendant is guilty of the offense of embezzlement," —was misleading, and therefore erroneous. The court tells the jury that, on the facts stated in the direction, Doane was guilty of embezzlement. This was so on the facts stated in the direction, but he was guilty only of embezzlement of part of the proceeds of the sale of the machine, but not of the machine itself. The court, by the language used in the direction, left the jury under the impression that, if the facts stated in it were true, the defendant, in its opinion, was guilty of the offense charged, viz., of the embezzlement of the machine, whereas, on such facts, he was not.

My conclusion is that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

---

77 Cal. 609

WATSON v. SUTRO et al. (No. 12,596.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—FROM INTERLOCUTORY DECREE.
   In an action to obtain a decree declaring plaintiff to be the equitable owner of an undivided interest in real property, and for a partition, an interlocutory decree was entered adjudging title in plaintiff, as claimed by him, and appointing commissioners to make partition. An appeal was taken after the statutory time had elapsed for appeals from interlocutory judgments in partition suits. Held that, if the decree adjudging the equitable interest of the plaintiff was not to be regarded as a part of the partition suit, it was not appealable at all.
2. SAME—PRACTICE—DISMISSAL—PARTIES.
   On a motion to dismiss an appeal from an order refusing a new trial, the question whether others should have been made parties in the court below is not involved. If the proceedings were properly taken on the appeal, it should not be dismissed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Lloyd & Wood, for appellant. Stanly, Stony & Hayes, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Motion to dismiss appeal from a judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The suit was to obtain a decree declaring that the plaintiff was the equitable owner of an undivided interest in certain real property, and for a partition of the property among the several co-tenants. Findings were filed, and an interlocutory decree entered thereon, adjudging, among other things, that the plaintiff was the equitable owner of five one hundred and sixtieths of the property, and that the defendant Sutro hold the legal title thereto in trust for plaintiff, and directing a conveyance accordingly; and that certain other parties held the legal title to four undivided one hundred and sixtieths in trust for Sutro; and directing a conveyance to him, and establishing the rights of the other parties of the suit; and appointing commissioners to make partition of the property in accordance with the rights of the respective parties as established by the decree. The defendant Sutro is the only party who appears to be dissatisfied with the result. He gave notice of intention to move "to set aside and vacate the decision and findings heretofore made herein, and to grant a new trial in this case;" addressing the notice to the plaintiff's attorneys, and serving it on them only. The motion made in pursuance of this notice was denied; and within 60 days thereafter, and about 7 months after the recording of the interlocutory decree, the defendant gave notice of appeal from the order denying his motion for new trial, and from so much of the decree "as determines and decides the title to and ownership of the 5-160 shares" of the plaintiff.

1. We think the motion to dismiss the appeal from the decree should be granted. If the suit is to be regarded as a partition suit, it is obvious that the appeal was not taken within the 60 days allowed by law. Code Civil Proc. § 939, subd. 3. If, however, as contended for the appellant, so much of the decree as established the equitable rights of the plaintiff was not properly a part of the partition suit, and for that reason is to be considered as a decree in an ordinary action, it would follow that the decree was not appealable at all. It is well settled that interlocutory matters are not appealable except in the cases provided by statute. See cases collected in Hayne, New Trials & App. § 188. There is nothing inconsistent with this in the case of Thompson v. White, 63 Cal. 505, second appeal, 18 Pac. Rep. 399. On the contrary, on the first appeal the court, after stating that the decision was reviewable on motion for new trial, said: "That decision is also reviewable on appeal from final judgment, when one shall be entered." And this was the view on the second appeal. It is to be regretted that this is the law. There are many actions, notably actions for an accounting, in which almost the whole controversy may be as to whether an interlocutory decree should be made; and the parties should not be compelled to wait until a final decree is rendered, and then to drag the whole case up to the appellate court, in order to present a question which could with much less expense be presented at once. The due administration of justice requires that where an interlocutory decree is proper it should be placed upon the same footing as interlocutory decrees in partition. But it is for the legislature to make the change.

2. The motion to dismiss the appeal from the order refusing a new trial should be denied. The question whether other parties should have been made parties to the motion in the court below is not involved upon a motion to dismiss the appeal. That question is simply as to whether the order was or was not properly made. And whether it was or not is a question to be considered upon the hearing of the appeal. If the proceedings on the appeal were properly taken, it should not be dismissed. And we think they were properly taken. The notice of appeal was served upon, and the transcript was certified by, the parties to the motion in the court below; and that is all that was necessary, at least in cases where the motion in the court below is denied.

We therefore advise that the appeal from the judgment be dismissed, and that the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order refusing a new trial be denied.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part herein.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order refusing a new trial is denied.

77 Cal. 575

ALLEN v. HALEY. (No. 12,699.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS TO PLEADINGS.
In an action by an attorney for professional services, an objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action will not be sustained, where there was no demurrer and no plea of statute of limitations.

2. TRIAL—VERDICT—CONTRADICTORY FINDINGS.
Findings are not contradictory when made according to the allegations of the complaint, which states that the services were rendered at the request of defendant, and in one count that he promised to pay a certain sum therefor, and in another that he promised to pay what they were reasonably worth, and that they were reasonably worth a certain sum, the same amount claimed in the first count.

3. SAME.
A finding that an allegation in the answer that in January, 1883, defendant allowed plaintiff to stay in his office in consideration of plaintiff's promise that he would make himself as useful as he could in defendant's business, and that he remained in the office until about January, 1886, but was of but little use, is not contradictory to findings in favor of plaintiff, where the time the services sued for were rendered does not appear, and the promise to pay therefor is alleged to have been made in one count on July 30, 1886, and in another before July 30, 1886.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Action by Horace Allen against Salisbury Haley, to recover for professional services. Defendant appeals.

Richard Dunnigan and S. Haley, for appellant. J. G. Howard, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action by an attorney to recover for professional services. Judgment for plaintiff, and appeal by defendant upon the findings.

1. It is said that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The only objection on this score is that the time the services were rendered does not appear. There was no demurrer, and the answer does not set up any plea of the statute of limitations. We think that the point is frivolous.

2. It is said that the findings are contradictory. The findings are by reference to the pleadings, and the complaint contains several counts. In one of these it is alleged that the services were rendered at the request of the defendant, and that he promised to pay a certain sum therefor. In another it is alleged that the services were rendered at the request of the defendant; that he promised to pay what they were reasonably worth; and that they were reasonably worth a certain sum, which is the same amount claimed in the first count. The effect of the findings is that defendant both promised to pay what the services were reasonably worth, and promised to pay a certain sum for them. There is nothing impossible in his having done this, and we see no inconsistency in the finding that he did so.

Another finding is that the allegations in paragraph 5 of the answer (with a specified exception) are true. The substance of this paragraph of the answer is that in the month of January, 1883, the defendant allowed the plaintiff to stay in his office in consideration of plaintiff's promise that "he would make himself as useful as he was able in and about the defendant's business;" that the plaintiff remained in the office from January, 1883, until about January 1, 1886, but was of very little use. Assuming that this portion of the answer stated a defense, (which we doubt,) we nevertheless do not see any inconsistency in the findings. The time when the plaintiff rendered the services does not appear. One of the defendant's promises to pay for them was "on the 30th day of July, 1886," and this was after the sojourn of the plaintiff in the defendant's office. The other promise was "before the 30th day of July, 1886," and this may have been before said period. In neither case is there any contradiction.

The other matters do not require special notice. We think that the appeal was taken for delay, and we therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed, with 10 per cent. damages.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed, with 10 per cent. damages.

---

77 Cal. 577

RIDDELL v. MULLAN et al. (No. 12,850.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

1. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—PURCHASE OF PUBLIC LANDS.
   An allegation, in an action to determine the right to purchase land from the state, that the surveyor general "referred the contest arising under the various applications to purchase said land to the superior court," with "profert of said order of reference," sufficiently avers that an order of reference was made, under Pol. Code Cal. § 3498, providing for dismissal of unapproved applications "wherein the contest has not been referred to court, or a demand made for an order of reference."
2. SAME—AMENDMENT.
   Even if a demand for an order of reference is necessary under the above act, it is error to refuse leave to amend an amended complaint by alleging such demand.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Action by George Riddell against John Mullan, J. H. Higgins, and D. B. Milliken, to determine the right to purchase from the state certain lands. Plaintiff, after describing the land, setting forth his application, etc., alleged "that, subsequent to the filing of his application to purchase said lands of the state of California, the plaintiff ascertained that the defendants hereinbefore named claimed some right or title in or to the said lands by virtue of applications heretofore made to the state for the purchase of said lands by said defendants, whereupon the said plaintiff filed with the surveyor general of the state of California his protest against the applications of the said defendants, or either of them, to purchase said land of the state, on the ground that said land is and was agricultural land, and suitable for cultivation, and that said defendants do not and never did reside on said land, nor are they, or any of them, settlers on said land, nor do any of them reside thereon; that on the 14th day of June, 1886, the surveyor general of the state of California referred to the contest arising under the various applications to purchase said land to the superior court in and for the county of San Bernardino, state of California, for adjudication and determination; that the order of the surveyor general referring said contest to said last-named court was on the 14th day of June, 1886, filed with the clerk of said superior court last-named; and the said plaintiff makes profert of said order of reference of said surveyor general." There was a general demurrer to the complaint, the objection being that it was not averred that an order of reference to the court had been made. The demurrer was sustained, and leave to amend was denied. Pol. Code Cal. § 3498, provides that all unapproved applications which have been on file over six months, wherein the approval has not been demanded, and wherein the contest has not been referred to court, or a demand made for an order of reference, as provided in section 3414, shall be null and void. Plaintiff appeals.

H. T. Hazard and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellant. Curtis & Otis, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This was an action to determine which of the parties thereto had the better right to purchase from the state the lands described in the plaintiff's application; being the S. ½ of section 15, township 1 S., range 7 W., San Bernardino meridian. A general demurrer that the amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was filed and sustained. The plaintiff asked leave to amend, but it was refused. A trial was had, and judgment rendered in favor of Mullan, one of the defendants, upon proof made under the answer which he had filed. This appeal is taken from that judgment by the plaintiff.

We think that, as against a general demurrer, the complaint sufficiently averred that an order of reference had been made. Conceding, without deciding, that the complaint should have averred that a demand for an order of reference had been made by the plaintiff, and the time when such demand was made, so as to show that he had complied with the provisions of section 3498 of the Political Code, as amended March 14, 1885, nevertheless the offer to amend in that particular, made by the plaintiff, should have been allowed. It is seldom the case that the appellate court will interfere with the action of the court below in such a matter, but in this case a wise discretion would have been exercised in granting the plaintiff's request, and no detriment would have accrued to any of the parties.

We advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

---

77 Cal. 570

PEOPLE v. MCGREW. (No. 20,422.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

FALSE IMPRISONMENT—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 236, defining "false imprisonment" to be "the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another," the imprisonment being proven, the law presumes it unlawful, and it is for the defendant to show that it was lawful.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county; AARON BELL, Judge.

Jackson Hatch, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was prosecuted upon an information for false imprisonment. He was convicted as charged, and from the judgment rendered against him, and an order refusing him a new trial, he has appealed.

Two points are made in his behalf for a reversal of the judgment and order:

1. It is claimed that the jury were not warranted in bringing in a verdict of guilty, under the evidence before them. To this contention, after a careful review of the whole record, we cannot agree.

2. It is argued that the sixth instruction given by the court at the request of counsel for the people is erroneous. This instruction is as follows: "While it is true that the prosecution must prove the imprisonment, it is also true that, the imprisonment being proven, the law presumes it unlawful until the contrary is shown. It is for the defendant to justify it by proving that it was lawful." It is contended that under section 236[1] of the Penal Code the existence of two elements are necessary in order to constitute false imprisonment:

---

[1] Pen. Code Cal. § 236: "False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another."

(1) That another's personal liberty is violated. (2) That such violation is unlawful in its character. And that it is incumbent upon the people, when a prosecution is being conducted in a case of the kind in hand, to show affirmatively both the violation of another's personal liberty and its unlawful character.

We have been cited to no case decided in this state where the point has been determined. In Arkansas, under a statute, (Dig. Ark. 1858, c. 51, art. 7, § 1,) the first clause of which is in the exact language of section 236 of the Penal Code of this state, it has been decided that, in order to establish the offense of false imprisonment, it is only necessary on behalf of the people to show the imprisonment. When that is done it devolves upon the defendant to prove that he was justified in what he did, and that the imprisonment was lawful. Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 47; Mitchell v. State, Id. 55.

Mr. Archibold, in the second volume of his work on Criminal Pleading and Practice, 293, says: "All the prosecution has to prove is the imprisonment, for that is presumed to be unlawful until the contrary is shown. It is for the defendant to justify it by proving that it was lawful."

To the same effect has the matter been determined in Texas. Kirbie v. State, 5 Tex. App. 63. See, also, 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 368.

No prejudicial error being disclosed by the record, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

77 Cal. 618

PEOPLE v. NORTHEY. (No. 20,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 25, 1889.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—APPLICATION FOR REHEARING.

Where, in a criminal case, the counsel for the accused, on appeal, ably present all the rulings of the trial court, and after decision thereon other counsel, on an application for rehearing, present new points, purely technical, they will not be considered.

Application for rehearing. For statement and former opinion, see 19 Pac. Rep. 865.

BEATTY, C. J. In his petition for a rehearing appellant relies altogether upon points that were neither urged nor suggested in the argument upon which the case was submitted for decision; and the question is presented whether we are to be governed in criminal cases by the same rule that has uniformly obtained in civil cases, viz., that the court will not consider upon petition for rehearing any point waived, either expressly or tacitly, at the argument. Comparatively few of the cases in which this rule has been applied are to be found reported, but we cite the following: Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 197; Atherton v. Supervisors, 48 Cal. 160; Dougherty v. Henarie, 49 Cal. 686. It is even more emphatically true now than it was at the date of these decisions that the proper dispatch of the business of the court requires that cases should be fully argued before submission without reservation of other points to be used on petition for rehearing; and certainly the policy and necessity of the rule are as cogent in criminal as in civil cases. It is true that in cases involving life or liberty the court should apply with less strictness a rule merely designed to expedite the dispatch of business, and doubtless the court would, in a case of peculiar or real hardship, entirely dispense with it. But when, as in this case, counsel originally charged with the defense of the petitioner has ably presented all the rulings of the trial court affecting the verdict, and after the decision of these points other counsel petitions for a rehearing upon points purely technical, and relating merely to the form of the judgment, we see no reason from departing from a rule so essential to the disposition of the business of the court.

Rehearing denied.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

77 Cal. 572

BEDELL v. HERING. (No. 12,719.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—TRANSFER—INNOCENT PURCHASER.

That a negotiable note was signed by the maker, who could not read or write English, believing the payee's representations that it was not a note, but a mere memorandum of agency, cannot avail against an innocent purchaser for value before maturity.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Suter county; PHILIP W. KEYSER, Judge.

Action on a promissory note, brought by J. C. Bedell against A. Hering. Trial to the court, and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

M. E. Sanborn, for appellant. J. T. Harrington, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. 1. This is an action upon a promissory note for $500, made by defendant, payable to the order of E. Jones, due in six months, and by the latter indorsed and delivered to plaintiff before maturity. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The appeal is from the judgment and upon the judgment roll alone. The defense relied on was that said payee, Jones, procured defendant to sign the note by falsely and fraudulently representing that it was not a note, but a mere memorandum about a certain agency.

It appears from the findings that at the time defendant signed the note the said Jones and one Moss falsely represented to him that it was not a promissory note, or any contract for the payment of money, but was merely a writing by which he signified his willingness to act as agent for the sale of a certain patent hay-fork. Defendant could not read or write the English language, except that he could sign his name. He signed the note without knowing its contents, and believed the said representations of said Jones and Moss. Plaintiff purchased the note for $400, before its maturity, and had no notice or knowledge that it was procured as aforesaid, or of anything that affected its validity as between the original parties. It is also found that "plaintiff is the indorsee of said note in due course," and that "defendant signed said note voluntarily, and without exercising the ordinary care in regard to the character of the paper signed which a prudent business man would and should exercise."

The defense set up cannot be maintained, and the judgment of the superior court was right. It is found by the court (fully enough, we think) that the defendant, in signing the note, did not exercise ordinary care. Indeed, the act of signing the paper, as shown in the findings, (and there is no evidence here,) was itself intrinsically careless. Therefore, leaving other aspects of the case out of view, it is clear that the judgment was right upon the principle that when one, by his carelessness and undue confidence, has enabled another to obtain the money of an innocent third person, he must answer for the loss which he has thus caused.

2. It is not necessary here to pass definitely upon the broader question discussed in the briefs, whether or not payment of a negotiable note in the hands of an innocent indorsee, who received it before maturity, can be avoided, under any circumstances, on the ground that it was procured by fraud. It is apparent that to apply to such an instrument the principles which establish the essentials of an ordinary contract as between the original parties—as, for instance, that there must be consent of the parties and a sufficient consideration; that where there was no intention to sign, there was, in law, no signature; that fraud vitiates a contract ab initio, etc.—would be to undermine the whole structure of commercial law, and "shake paper credit to its foundation." The former decisions of this court seem to be in the direction of holding that in such a case payment cannot be avoided for fraud in the original procurement of the note. Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 666; Hellman v. Potter, 6 Cal. 14; Rich v. Davis, 4 Cal. 22; Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 65; Rich v. Davis, 6 Cal. 141; Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 590, 4 Pac. Rep. 25, 625; Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 523; Poorman v. Mills, 39 Cal. 345; Smith v. Silsby, 55 Cal. 470.

In Shepherd v. Jones, 71 Cal. 225, 16 Pac. Rep. 711, it does not appear that the note there involved was negotiable or transferred before maturity; and there is no discussion, in the opinion, of the general question here under consideration. In Indiana a great many cases arose similar in their facts to those of the case at bar, and it was uniformly held there that the defense set up could not be maintained. The current of American authorities seems to be in the same direction.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the ground that the defense here urged cannot be made against plaintiff, who is an innocent purchaser, before maturity, of the negotiable note in suit.

78 Cal. 116

REESE v. THORBURN. (No. 12,831.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 15, 1889.)

PUBLIC LANDS—PURCHASE OF SWAMP LANDS—CONTEST—ALLEGATIONS.

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 3443 providing that a person desiring to purchase swamp and overflowed lands must make an affidavit, setting forth certain facts, and file it in the office of the surveyor general, the complaint in a contest as to the right to purchase such lands must allege that an affidavit containing the matters specified in section 3443 was made and filed, and must set out the substance of such affidavit; and it is not sufficient to allege merely that an application was made in due form of law, and filed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county; G. F. HARRIS, Judge.

Rogers & Chilstrom, for appellant. J. C. Bowmer, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment by default.

This is a contest as to the right to purchase of the state swamp and overflowed lands. It is contended that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The statute provides that a party desiring to purchase swamp and overflowed lands must make an affidavit setting forth certain matters, and file the same in the office of the surveyor general of the state. Pol. Code, § 3443. These matters are specified in the section of the Code above cited.

The complaint does not set forth that any affidavit at all was made or filed. The pleader merely states that an application was made in due form of law, and that this application was filed. This is the sum of the allegations of the complaint, taking the view most favorable to the plaintiff. The facts must be set out in the complaint so that the court can discern that the application is in due form of law, or rather that it complies with the requirements of the law. "Each of the contestants must state in his pleading all the facts upon which he relies as showing his right to become the purchaser, and the steps he has taken to avail himself of and secure his right to make the purchase." The above is the rule laid down in Cadierque v. Duran, 49 Cal. 356, and we have no doubt of its correctness. See also Millidge v. Hyde, 67 Cal. 5, 6 Pac. Rep. 852.

The plaintiff has not complied with the above rule, and his complaint, therefore, does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial, and the court below is directed to grant leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint.

Ordered accordingly.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.

DEREVAN v. MACCLEAN. (No. 12,832.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 15, 1889.)

PER CURIAM. This case is like Reese v. Thorburn, supra, (No. 12,831,) in which the opinion was this day filed; and in accordance with the judgment in that case the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and the court below is directed to grant leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint.

Ordered accordingly.

O'BRIEN v. NEWMAN. (No. 12,833.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 15, 1889.)

PER CURIAM. This case is like Reese v. Thorburn, ante, 131, (No. 12,831,) in which the opinion was this day filed; and in accordance with the conclusion reached in that case the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with a direction to the court below to grant leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint.

Ordered accordingly.

---

77 Cal. 588

HUNT v. ELLIOTT. (No. 12,723.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

1. TRIAL—VERDICT—SPECIAL FINDINGS.
   Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 625, providing that, in an action for the recovery of money only, the jury, in their discretion, may render a general or special verdict, a verdict in an action for the agreed price of erecting windmills, pumps, etc., is not erroneous for lack of special findings on the issues raised by a cross-complaint claiming damages for plaintiff's failure to perform.
2. SAME—VERDICT BY DETERMINATION OF CHANCE.
   A verdict obtained by averaging the amounts marked down by all the jurors is not assented to "by a resort to the determination of chance," within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 657, subd. 2.[1]
3. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.
   A juror's affidavit of misconduct of the jury in arriving at a verdict is overcome by the affidavits of two other jurors, of whom one is the foreman.
4. CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—LIABILITIES.
   In an action for the contract price of labor and materials, instructions that, if defendant received any benefit from the work, he is liable to the extent of what was due, and any injury he may have sustained by omissions or defects in the work may be deducted from the price; that if he was injured more than he was benefited, or was not benefited at all, by reason of such defects or omissions, the jury should find for him,—are not in conflict with an instruction that if plaintiff and defendant executed the contract plaintiff must show a substantial compliance with its terms on his part, in order to recover, and together they state the law of the case correctly.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action by John Hunt against J. S. Elliott for the contract price of certain labor and materials supplied. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Code Civil Proc. § 657, subd. 2, gives as one of the grounds for a new trial the fact that any juror assented to the verdict "by a resort to the determination of chance."

The instructions complained of were as follows: "If the jury find that the defendant received or accepted the benefit, or any benefit, of the work of the plaintiff under the contract, then the defendant is liable to the extent of what was due, and, if any injury has been sustained by the defendant by omissions or defects in the performance of the contract, it may be deducted from the contract price." "In this case, if the defendant was, by the evidence, injured, by reason of any defects or omissions in the work of the plaintiff, more than he was benefited therefrom, you should find a verdict in favor of the defendant." "Or if you find from the evidence that the work done under this contract was not done as provided therein, and that if it was done in such manner that by defects in it, or omissions on the part of the plaintiff, the work was of no use or benefit to the defendant, you should find a verdict in favor of the defendant." "If you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff and defendant executed the agreement dated September 30, 1885, introduced in evidence in this case, then you are instructed that the plaintiff must show a substantial compliance on his part with the terms of said agreement to entitle him to recover in this action."

---

[1] It is entirely proper for the jury, in actions for unliquidated damages, to add the amounts named by each, and divide the sum by 12, to obtain an average to be submitted as a proposition for a verdict; but such plan must not be adopted pursuant to an agreement to be bound by its result. Village of Ponca v. Crawford, (Neb.) 37 N. W. Rep. 609. See, also, Parshall v. Railway Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 649, and note; State v. Harper, (N. C.) 7 S. E. Rep. 730.

Bicknell & White, for appellant. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover the sum of $400, the agreed price for erecting two windmills, pumps, tanks, etc. The defendant, by his answer, denied that plaintiff had performed the conditions of his contract, and by way of cross-complaint alleged that by reason of the plaintiff's failure to construct the works as agreed he had been damaged in the sum of $400, for which he asked judgment. The defendant answered to the cross-complaint, denying all of its material allegations. The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff for the sum of $356. The defendant thereupon moved for a new trial upon the following grounds: First, misconduct of the jury in this: that one or more of the jury were induced to assent to the verdict by a resort to the determination of chance; second, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and that it is against law; third, errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the defendant. The motion was denied, and the defendant appealed.

1. The objection that the verdict should be set aside because there were no special findings on the issues raised by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto cannot be sustained. The Code provides that, "in an action for the recovery of money only, or specific real property, the jury, in their discretion, may render a general or special verdict." Code Civil Proc. § 625. This action was for the recovery of money only, and the verdict covered all the issues presented by the pleadings. There was no necessity, therefore, for special findings.

2. The point that the verdict of the jury was reached "by a resort to the determination of chance" is not well taken, for two reasons: (1) The affidavit of the juror Baer did not state facts which made the verdict a chance verdict, within the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was therefore inadmissible to impeach the verdict. (2) Baer's affidavit was met and overcome by counter-affidavits of two other jurors, one of them being the foreman. Turner v. Water Co., 25 Cal. 397; Hoare v. Hindley, 49 Cal. 274.

In the case first cited, the court, by SANDERSON, C. J., speaking of a similar alleged misconduct, and after reviewing the authorities, said: "But, independent of authority, it is manifest that there is no element of chance in such a verdict. Each juror marks a sum which, in his judgment, represents the true amount of damages. Neither of these sums is the result of chance. On the contrary, each is the result of the judgment or will of the juror by whom it was marked. Neither is the aggregate of these sums, nor the quotient, resulting from a division of the aggregate by 12, the result of chance, but, on the contrary, the result of the most accurate of the sciences. Thus, from the commencement to the end of the process, no quantity which enters into the final result is determined by a resort to chance." And in another part of the opinion it is said: "To ascertain this average the jury may properly adopt the method which was used in the present case, but they ought not to agree to be bound by the result, whatever it may be. If they do so agree, and such result is made the verdict without further consultation or assent, such verdict is vicious and irregular, and must be set aside whenever the fact is made to appear by proper and competent evidence. If, on the contrary, they do not agree to be bound by the result, but reserve to themselves the right to dissent, such a proceeding is not irregular; and if afterwards, upon consultation and discussion, they finally agree to adopt such result as their verdict, the verdict so found is good."

The counter-affidavits in this case show that all the jurors were in favor of returning a verdict for plaintiff, and that, after considering the matter, each juror marked down the amount he was willing to allow; that no one of these amounts was less than $350; that they then agreed to divide the aggregate of these amounts by 12, it being understood, however, that they were not to be bound by the result; and that after the amount was so ascertained the jurors unanimously agreed to adopt it as the sum to be returned.

3. The evidence introduced for the plaintiff was sufficient to sustain the verdict, while that introduced for the defendant was sharply in conflict with it. In such a case the rule is well settled that the judgment will not be disturbed by the appellate court, on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision.

4. The instructions given to the jury stated the law of the case correctly, and we see nothing in them to mislead or confuse the jurors. The alleged conflict is seeming rather than real. The court properly gave instructions to meet each party's theory of the case. We find no material error in the record, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

77 Cal. 596

WILSON v. MORIARTY. (No. 12,828.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

1. EQUITY—RESCISSION OF LEASE—FRAUD.

   A complaint alleging that plaintiff was ignorant, of weak understanding, unable to fix her attention upon or understand legal documents, and unable to read or write; that defendant, an extraordinarily shrewd business man, of plausible manners, having great influence over plaintiff and her husband, who was ignorant and of no business capacity, intending to defraud plaintiff, induced her husband to procure from her a lease for 5 years, for $150 per month, of premises worth at least $350, persuading the husband that the sum of $150 was a fair rent; and that defendant, knowing her incapacity, procured her to execute a lease for 10 years under the belief that it was for 5 years only,—states a cause of action for rescission.[1]

2. SAME—OFFER TO REFUND RENTS.

   An offer to refund the rents received is not necessary to entitle plaintiff to a rescission, as the value of the use of the premises exceeds the amount of such rents.

3. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—AMBIGUITY.

   Such a complaint is not liable to the objection that it is ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Action by Bridget Wilson against John Moriarty for the rescission of a lease. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals.

Anderson, Fitzgerald & Anderson and Smith, Patton & Howard, for appellant. Stephen M. White and R. H. F. Variel, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was instituted for the purpose of having a certain contract of lease rescinded. The defendant demurred to the complaint filed, upon the grounds—First, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that it was ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain in various particulars.

---

[1] As to when equity will allow rescission of contracts on the ground of mental incapacity and undue influence, see June v. Willis, 30 Fed. Rep. 11, and note; Goodrich v. Shaw, (Mich.) 40 N. W. Rep. 187, and cases cited; Weller v. Weller, (N. Y.) 19 N. E. Rep. 433.

The demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend her complaint, judgment passed for the defendant, from which an appeal was taken.

The facts stated in the complaint are, as it appears to us, different from those set up in the case of Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558, the decision in which is relied on by the respondent here. In that case there was no allegation that the plaintiff was a person of weak mind, or that the consideration for the making of the contract was inadequate. It seems to have been a case where the party deceived as to the terms of the contract he apparently assented to was simply an unlettered and illiterate person, of ordinarily sound intellect, we must suppose, who, by his own carelessness, had allowed himself to be entrapped, and where the defendant occupied no trust relation.

In the present case, "an illiterate and ignorant woman, of weak understanding, unable to read or write, and ignorant of business, and unable to fix her attention upon or to understand the effect of legal documents when read to her," declares that the defendant was a man of more than ordinary capacity, a "shrewd merchant and business man of very plausible manners and address," and during all the period of time referred to in the complaint on "terms of intimate friendship with the plaintiff and her husband, who was a person ignorant of business, illiterate, and of no business capacity;" that during all that time the defendant had and exercised a great influence over her and her husband; that, before the lease sought to be canceled was executed, the defendant had endeavored, without success, to induce the plaintiff to sell him the property mentioned in the complaint; that "thereupon the defendant conceived the intent to defraud and cheat the plaintiff out of said property under the disguise of a long lease, for a rental far below the rental value of said property, and, in pursuance of said fraudulent intent, did importune" the said husband of plaintiff "to procure for the defendant a five-years lease of said property, and finally, by such importunity," induced her husband to consent thereto,—the said husband then agreeing that he would "procure the plaintiff to give the defendant such a lease for a term of five years only, on the following terms: For a monthly rental of $150 per month; the plaintiff to put an iron front to the lower story of the building on said premises, which building was of two stories." She further alleges that the monthly rental of the premises in question, with the iron front improvement, (which was made,) was at least $350, as the defendant knew; and that he cunningly, taking advantage of the want of knowledge and the want of business capacity of her husband, and of his friendship to the defendant, and of the influence which defendant exercised over him, and knowing the ignorance of the plaintiff, and that she relied on her husband in the premises, fraudulently persuaded her husband that the sum of $150 was a fair monthly rental for the premises, and that her husband, thus deceived, consented to the execution of the five-years lease, and persuaded his wife to make it, she being under his influence, and ignorant of the true value of the premises; that the defendant then had the instrument drawn up which it is sought here to have rescinded, which, instead of being for five years, as the defendant had induced her to believe, was for 10 years, with the privilege to him of leasing the property for 10 years more, at the rate of $150 per month; that defendant fraudulently procured her to go before a notary, and execute the lease thus altered from its originally supposed terms, knowing the plaintiff's incapacity to understand it when read to her; and that she relied upon his fraudulent statement as to its contents. She further alleges that, when the instrument was read to her, she, "thinking, and having been induced to believe by the defendant, that she knew what the contents of the said instrument were, and that it was read to her as a mere form, plaintiff was unable to keep her attention fixed upon said reading, and her attention wandered from the reading of the long legal document, and the real terms thereof were unheeded by her." That no further explanation thereof having been made to her save the reading of the instrument, and the statement that it was a lease of her property, she executed and acknowledged it. After she had ascertained, upon consultation with friends, how she had been deceived with reference to the rental value of the premises, and had vainly endeavored to get the defendant to reform the lease so as to make it conform to what her husband had persuaded her to agree to, she rescinded the contract and notified the defendant thereof at once. The prayer of the complaint is that the contract, as executed, be rescinded, and for such other and further relief as equity may require.

Upon demurrer, all the facts stated in the complaint, which are offered to be proved, must be taken as if proved. It is evident, therefore, that the defendant was to have the use and occupation of the plaintiff's premises for a rent far less than its value, that the lease was executed for an inadequate consideration, and that the plaintiff, while not entirely incapacitated, was of great mental weakness, under the influence of the defendant, acting throughout with a fraudulent intent through her husband, who was his ignorant tool, and that she executed the lease sought to be canceled under such conditions. This is sufficient to bring the case in hand within the rule laid down by the appellate court in the case of Richards v. Donner, 72 Cal. 211, 13 Pac. Rep. 584. There the court declares that an imposition was practiced upon one Peck, a man of great weakness of mind, though not absolutely disqualified, through which he was induced to execute a deed, in that he was permitted to so execute it under the belief that he was reserving and securing to himself during his life the control and revenues of his property.

It was unnecessary, notwithstanding the defendant's argument to the contrary, to have offered to refund the rents received at the rate of $150 per month, even if it be conceded that the complaint shows that they were paid, for, if they were paid, the defendant must have occupied the premises for a rent greatly less than they were worth, so that he is already fully reimbursed for the payments he may have made to the plaintiff.

The complaint is couched in ordinary and plain language, such as can be readily understood, and is not obnoxious to the second ground of demurrer.

We advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

---

77 Cal. 579

SILVARER v. HANSEN et al. (No. 11,673.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 26, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.
   Where, aside from certain improper evidence admitted, the evidence of defendant's adverse possession is so strong that the finding could not well have been otherwise, the error in admitting such improper evidence is harmless.
2. EJECTMENT—ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.
   On the issue of adverse possession, the testimony of witnesses who have lived on the premises, and are familiar with the character of the fences, and who testify that the fences were sufficient to keep out stock, is admissible.
3. BOUNDARIES—ADJOINING OWNER—AGREEMENT.
   Possession and assertion of ownership under a contract to purchase are sufficient to constitute the occupant an adjoining owner for the purposes of agreed boundary lines, and to enable him to make a valid agreement for such lines.
4. SAME—RECOGNITION—DISPUTED LINES.
   Where the true boundary lines are uncertain, and can be determined only by judicial inquiry, it is not necessary that there should be any actual dispute between the parties as a basis for an agreed line.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the record of another's suit, the judgment in which was admitted in evidence, is not before the court on appeal, it will be presumed that the trial court's finding on that point was correct.

6. PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

A motion to strike out parts of a pleading, not made until the case has been tried, reversed on appeal, and ready for the second trial, comes too late.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. MCCANN, Judge.

Ejectment by William Silvarer against Lawrence Hansen and Nelson Struve. Trial to the court, and judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

Charles B. Younger, for appellant. H. S. Kittredge, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Ejectment. The defendant Struve claims to have become the owner of a portion of the land described in the complaint, by adverse possession. The defendant Hansen claims another portion of the land by virtue of a boundary line alleged to have been agreed upon by the plaintiff and himself in 1873.

1. The facts found by the court show that the defendant Struve made out a valid defense under the statute of limitations. The deeds under which he and his predecessors claimed were sufficient color of title, and these deeds, taken in connection with the evidence as to the character of the natural and artificial fences, and the actual possession of the defendant, show the extent of the possession claimed by defendant, and that he was holding in good faith under claim of right in himself, and adverse to all others. Wilson v. Atkinson, ante, 66, (filed December 12, 1888;) Smith v. Shattuck, 7 Pac. Rep. 335; Oglesby v. Hollister, 18 Pac. Rep. 146; Grimm v. Curley, 43 Cal. 253; Tryon v. Huntoon, 67 Cal. 328, 7 Pac. Rep. 741.

The court found that in 1864 Dunlap was in possession of the land claimed by defendant Struve herein, together with a tract of land adjoining the same on the west; that in 1867 W. H. Patterson, who was the owner of said adjoining tract, entered into a contract in writing to sell and convey said tract to Dunlap, and in March 1873, delivered to Dunlap a deed conveying said adjoining tract; that there has never been a fence between or dividing said tract and the parcel claimed by defendant, but that said parcel, with said adjoining tract, has always constituted a single body of land as a farm; that from the fall of 1864 to the end of October, 1873, Dunlap was in the actual possession and occupation of said body of land, including said parcel, and during all that time said land was inclosed and protected by a substantial inclosure throughout and around its whole circumference, and was resided on by said Dunlap and his family; that said land was cultivated and improved by him, and used by him, for the ordinary purposes of husbandry and pasturage; that this possession and use by Dunlap was at all times open, notorious, uninterrupted, exclusive, under a claim of title in himself, and exclusive of any other right, (except in said Patterson between the dates of the contract and the deed;) that on October 27, 1873, Dunlap conveyed to Struve the tract purchased from Patterson, and on October 31, 1873, conveyed the land to Struve which is herein claimed by him; "that thereupon said Struve took actual occupation and possession of said premises, including said parcel herein claimed under said deeds, and from October, 1873, to the time of the commencement of this suit, and ever since, he, in like manner as said Dunlap, had taken, possessed, occupied, cultivated, improved, and used the same, constituting, as before, a single body of land or farm, and inclosed and protected as before by a substantial inclosure, openly, notoriously, continuously, uninterruptedly, exclusively, under claim of title in himself, exclusive of any other right; that from 1864 to the time of the commencement of this suit the plaintiff, William Silvarer, and his grantor, Charles Silvarer, had actual notice and knowledge of the said possession, use, and occupation of said Dunlap and Struve, and of said inclosure, and of the acts of ownership exercised by them over said body of land, and at no time did either of them make any objection to the same until this suit was brought."

These findings, we think, are supported by the evidence. The court erred in admitting in evidence the deposition of Dunlap, but the error, we think, was harmless. The testimony of Dunlap, so far as it refers to Struve's claim, shows the possession of the latter. Upon the question of possession there is practically no conflict. The evidence offered by the defendant to show his possession is so strong and direct, and that of the plaintiff, which tends to contradict it, is so qualified and weak, that the decision could not well have been otherwise than in favor of Struve, if the deposition of Dunlap had been excluded. The fact that Struve did not suppose he was interfering with anybody's rights does not defeat his right to claim by adverse possession. Grimm v. Curley, supra. It is, however, a circumstance tending to establish more strongly the good faith and exclusiveness of his own claim.

We see no error in the rulings of the court admitting in evidence the testimony of the Dunlaps and of Struve as to the character of the fence. The witnesses referred to had been living on the ground, and were familiar with the fence and its operation from personal observation. They testify, not so much as a matter of opinion, but as a matter of knowledge, that the barriers constituting the fence did operate to keep the stock out.

2. The court found that in the spring of 1873, and prior thereto, defendant Hansen and Charles Silvarer were the owners, and in the actual and exclusive possession, each claiming ownership in his own right, of adjoining tracts of land; that during said period the true boundary line between the tracts was uncertain and indefinite; that while they were the owners and in the possession of said tracts (spring of 1873) Hansen proposed to Silvarer that they should establish and mark a line as a boundary between their said tracts, and construct a division fence on it; that Silvarer agreed to this, went on the ground with Hansen and others, placed stakes as upon the line, and then agreed with Hansen that the line thus designated should be the division line and boundary between said tracts; that Hansen also agreed to this, and the fence was then so erected on the line so agreed upon, and was accepted, recognized and agreed by said parties to be the partition fence, and has remained there as such to the present time; that after the erection of said fence both parties occupied and used their lands exclusively on each side, respectively, up to the line of the fence so built, and that Hansen from that time continuously to the present time has been in the actual and exclusive possession and use under said agreement of the said tract on his side up to the line of said fence; that after the erection of the fence, and prior to the year 1876, Hansen dug a ditch along the fence on his side; that the land affected by the agreement is the parcel described in the defendant Hansen's answer; that Charles conveyed to William Silvarer, May 17, 1877, the premises described in the complaint, which included the parcel of land claimed by the defendant; that plaintiff then had notice of the said agreement between Charles Silvarer and the defendant Hansen, and of the establishment and location of said agreed line, and the fence thereon, as the boundary or division line between them along the easterly side of said parcel.

We think the evidence supports these findings. The boundaries of the Corralitos and Pajaro ranches conflicted. The easterly boundary of the Corralitos, as designated in the patent, was the "center of the slough," and the westerly boundary of the Pajaro rather close to the upland. Between these two boundaries, therefore, was left a strip of slough land which is the subject of controversy between the adjoining claimants. Hansen purchased from Patterson on the Corralitos side, and went into possession of a portion of the slough land. Silvarer held adjoining lands on the Pajaro side. The Corralitos lands held by Hansen were contiguous to the lands of Silvarer. The contract from Patterson was properly admitted in evidence to show the extent and nature of his claim in June, 1868, and this contract, and his possession and acts thereunder, we think, were sufficient to constitute him, so far as Silvarer was concerned, an adjoining owner within the meaning of the authorities on questions of agreed boundary lines, and to enable him to make a valid agreement with Silvarer for a division line. Patterson's claim evidently had some substance, and it was judicially determined in his favor by the decree of partition, in 1871. Hansen received a deed from Patterson in 1876, before the commencement of this suit. Silvarer seems to have recognized Hansen as an adjoining owner. He testified that defendant asked him for a quitclaim deed of the land in suit in 1874, and he told him that his (Hansen's) land was on one ranch, and his (Silvarer's) was on another. He said: "I told him that I had no quitclaim to give. My land was on the Bolsa del Pajaro, and his land was on the Corralitos." The evidence is quite clear that the defendant Hansen fenced and ditched the land upon the strength of the agreement made with Silvarer. The boundaries of Silvarer's land were uncertain, indefinite. It is in testimony that to make a survey to include the disputed premises the surveyor would have to go by the "lay of the ground, and by fences, and possession of adjoining occupants, and by rejecting and changing and adding calls of deed." The lines of the two ranches overlapped. Neither of the parties could tell where Silvarer's lines were. The conflict was one which could be determined only by judicial investigation. It seems that they preferred to adjust it between themselves. It is not necessary in such cases that there shall be an actual dispute as a basis for an agreed boundary line. Helm v. Wilson, 18 Pac. Rep. 608.

The interest or title held by Patterson does not clearly appear, but, as stated before, the presumption is that Patterson had some valid claim. The decree entered in the suit for the partition of the Corralitos ranch gave him a title conclusive upon all other parties to the suit, and those in privity with them, and constituted a color of title as against all the world. There can be no doubt, we think, that the conveyances from Patterson to Hansen, and the judgment roll in the partition suit of Patterson v. Roach and others, were properly admitted in evidence. The suit referred to was brought by Patterson against Roach and others. We have not the record of that suit before us here. It does not appear who the other defendants were. The presumption we indulge here is always in favor of the correctness of the finding of the court below. It is for the appellant to show error.

What we have said above respecting the deposition of Dunlap is applicable to the case made by the defendant Hansen. It was improperly admitted in evidence. The testimony of Hansen tended to establish an agreement between defendant and Silvarer for a division line, but, as in Struve's case, we think the error was not prejudicial. Hansen's occupancy of the land, his building of the fence, and excavation of the ditch seem to be admitted. The evidence is overwhelmingly in support of the finding of the court, regardless of the testimony of Dunlap. The denial made by Silvarer in his testimony was rather qualified.

3. There was no error in the refusal of the court to strike out certain denials in the answers. Said answers were filed in August, 1877. The case was tried without any motion having been made to strike out any portions of the answers. Judgment was rendered in 1878, an appeal was taken, and the judgment was reversed. The remittitur was filed in the lower court on March 12, 1879, but no motion to strike out was made until just before the commencement of the second trial, on May 4, 1885. Under these circumstances the motion came too late. The delay operated as a waiver by the plaintiff of the objection.

Several assignments of error are made as to rulings of the court on evidence offered and admitted. Cross-examination is largely in the discretion of the trial court. We see no abuse of discretion here.

Judgment and order affirmed.

---

77 Cal. 601

PACIFIC SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST PUB. ASS'N v. MCKENNEY et al.

(No. 11,485.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1888.)

CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Plaintiff contracted to print a book compiled by defendant M., and defendants H. & J., who were to bind and superintend the sale of it, guarantied to pay plaintiff for the printing out of the first money realized from such sales. They realized therefrom more than the amount due for printing, but failed to pay a balance of $1,510. Afterwards plaintiff contracted to print another book for M., the latter's portion of the profits, after paying all proper expenses, to be applied in payment of the $1,510. An employe of M., without the knowledge of any of the parties, pirated certain copyrighted articles which were included in this book, and the owners of the copyright recovered judgment against plaintiff and M. for the infringement. Held, that neither M. nor H. & J. were entitled to have the amount of this judgment, when paid by M., credited on the $1,510.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action on contract, brought by the Pacific Seventh-Day Adventist Publishing Association against L. M. McKenney and the firm of Hicks & Judd. Trial to the court, and judgment for plaintiff, from which it appeals.

F. M. Husted and H. A. Powell, for appellant. Tyler & Tyler, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal by the plaintiff, a corporation, from a judgment rendered in its favor against the defendants, and the case comes here on the judgment roll. It is claimed that the judgment was not for as large a sum as plaintiff was entitled to recover. The facts found by the court are in substance as follows:

In 1880 the plaintiff was a corporation engaged in the business of printing and publishing. The defendant McKenney was engaged in compiling a book called the "Pacific Coast Directory," and the defendants Hicks and Judd were partners engaged in the business of book-binding. An arrangement had been entered into between McKenney and Hicks & Judd, by which they were to bind the directory for him, and were to attend to the distribution and sale thereof, and to collect and receive all the moneys arising therefrom. McKenney applied to plaintiff to print his directory, and plaintiff agreed to do so, provided Hicks & Judd would become responsible as guarantors for the price of the printing. Thereupon Hicks & Judd entered into a written agreement to pay plaintiff for printing the directory "out of the first money received in collections for the same." The plaintiff then printed and delivered to defendants 5,000 copies of the directory, and the price of the printing amounted to $3,264.92. Hicks & Judd disposed of the book, and received in collections for the same more than the sum due plaintiff. They paid to the plaintiff various sums, and thereby reduced the amount due to $2,020.92. This action was brought to recover the last-named sum, and after it was commenced a further payment was made, leaving then due only $1,510.

Subsequently, and while the action was still pending, McKenney compiled another directory, and engaged the plaintiff to print and bind the same. A written agreement was entered into between the parties, which provided, among other things, that the collections for the directory were to be paid to the plaintiff, and that out of the gross collections all expenses of printing, binding, paper, compiling, etc., together with all other legitimate expenses, should be paid; that of the balance on hand, after the payment of all such expenses, McKenney should receive one-third and the plaintiff two-thirds, the two-thirds, however, to be applied to McKenney's indebtedness to plaintiff, consisting of the said $1,510 and $400 due for other printing; and, if any surplus should remain after paying the two claims mentioned, then it should be divided equally between the parties. Pursuant to this agreement the directory was printed, bound, and delivered for distribution by the plaintiff.

While McKenney was engaged compiling materials for the last directory he employed an assistant to write sketches descriptive of certain towns to be mentioned therein, and the assistant, without his knowledge, pirated the sketches from a copyrighted work owned by one Disturnell. As soon as McKenney began to deliver the book to the subscribers therefor, Disturnell commenced an action in the United States circuit court for California against him and the plaintiff, praying for damages and an injunction restraining any further distribution. Thereupon McKenney eliminated the pirated sketches, and had a part of the book reprinted, and then delivered the volumes to the subscribers therefor, and made the collections. Disturnell prosecuted his action, and recovered judgment therein, against McKenney and the plaintiff, for the sum of $964.80, damages and costs. McKenney paid this judgment out of the money realized from the collections for the directory, and the balance of the profits arising from the publication of the work was credited by the plaintiff on its claim for $1,510. This balance paid the interest on the claim up to March 20, 1885, and $201.66 on the principal. The defendants contended at the trial that the $964.80 should also have been credited on the plaintiff's claim of $1,510, and that there was consequently left due thereon only the sum of $343.54. The court accepted the defendants' theory, and rendered judgment against them for the last-named sum.

Whether this theory was right or not is the only question presented for decision.

It is clear that McKenney was not entitled to the credit allowed, and that as to him the judgment was erroneous. He paid the $964.80 in satisfaction of a judgment against himself, and obviously could not ask to have the same money again credited on another claim. It is also clear, we think, that Hicks & Judd were not entitled to the credit allowed. They obligated themselves to pay plaintiff for printing the directory out of the first moneys received from collections, and the collections made by them were more than sufficient to make the payment. They were not parties to and had no connection with the agreement between plaintiff and McKenney as to the second directory. Under that agreement the plaintiff was to print and bind the directory, and out of the collections all expenses of printing, binding, paper, compiling, etc., were to be paid, together with all other legitimate expenses. Until all these expenses were paid, there was to be no division of the profits, and consequently nothing to be applied towards the liquidation of the $1,510. The liability, in payment of which the $964.80 was used, was incurred in getting out the directory, and in consequence of a wrong committed by an employe of McKenney, and not by reason of any fault or failure on the part of plaintiff. The payment of this liability was therefore a legitimate expense, which had to be met, and came fully within the terms of the agreement. This being so, Hicks & Judd had no right to the credit, and the judgment as to them was also erroneous.

We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment against the defendants on the findings for $1,308.34, with legal interest thereon since March 20, 1885.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment against the defendants on the findings for $1,308.34, with legal interest thereon since March 20, 1885.

---

77 Cal. 612

BANK OF NAPA v. GODFERY. (No. 11,697.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1888.)

1. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—UNMATURED INSTALLMENTS.

   Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 728, relating to mortgage foreclosures, provides that if the debt for which the mortgage is held is not all due, as soon as sufficient of the property has been sold to pay the amount due, with costs, the sale must cease, and that as often as more becomes due the court may order more to be sold. The complaint, in an action on a note and a mortgage, showed that only a part of the debt was due, and when the balance matured. The complaint alleged that the whole amount called for by the note was due at the commencement of the action, and general relief, and a sale of the land for the satisfaction of the whole, was asked for. Held, that a decree showing the amount due, and the sums yet to become due, was proper, and plaintiff was authorized to move the court for a sale of sufficient of the property to satisfy each of the unmatured installments as they fell due.

2. SAME—VACATING DECREE—SALE FOR OTHER INSTALLMENTS DUE.

   An "amended petition" filed by plaintiff after the decree, alleging that other installments had become due, and that no sale had been made under the decree, and asking that it be vacated, and another decree granted, was not authorized. The proper practice was to file a motion reciting the proceedings, and that other installments had matured, and asking for a sale of enough of the property to satisfy the amount due, but in this case the petition will be treated as a motion.

3. SAME—SALE.

   The language of the section quoted, "as soon as sufficient of the property has been sold to pay the amount due, with costs, the sale must cease, and afterwards," etc., "the court may, on motion, order more to be sold," is a provision for the benefit of the debtor, and does not prevent the court from making an order for the sale, because no sale had been made to satisfy the amount found to be due when the suit was commenced.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; R. CROUCH, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Napa against C. H. Godfery, to recover amount due upon a promissory note, and to foreclose a mortgage securing it. Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff.

F. E. Johnston, for appellant. G. W. Towle and E. D. Ham, for respondent.

WORKS, J. On the 19th day of March, 1885, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover on a promissory note for $1,200, bearing date February 7, 1884, payable two years after date, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of the same. The complaint is in the usual form, and alleges that the whole amount of the note is due and unpaid, except certain items of interest, which are stated. The prayer is that "the usual decree may be made for the sale of the premises by the sheriff of said county, according to the law and the practice of this court," and for the sale and application of the proceeds in the usual form. The complaint was not verified, and the answer is a general denial. The court found that there was due on the note a semi-annual installment of interest, amounting to the sum of $45.60, and interest thereon; that by the terms of the note and mortgage there would become due on the 7th day of August, 1885, a like installment of interest, and on the 7th day of February, 1886, another of said installments of interest, together with the whole of the principal of said note, would become due and payable; and fixed the attorney's fee at $50. The decree of the court was in accordance with these findings, and adjudged "that all and singular the mortgaged premises mentioned in the said complaint, and hereinafter described, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise the amount due the plaintiff for the interest now due and costs in the suit, and expenses of sale and attorney's fees, be sold according to law," etc.; "and it is further adjudged and decreed that hereafter, as more shall become due, according to the terms of said note and mortgage, and remain unpaid, the plaintiff may apply to the court for a decree that more of the mortgaged premises be sold to satisfy the same, with costs and attorney's fees."

On the 15th day of March, 1886, after the whole of said note, principal and interest, had become due, the plaintiff filed in the court below what is termed an "amended petition," reciting fully the proceedings had in the cause, and alleging that the other installments of interest and the principal of said note had become due, and the amounts thereof, and that no sale had been made under the former decree of the court; that the same remained wholly unexecuted; and that the mortgaged premises were worth less than the amount due. The prayer of this pleading is "that the former decree, so far as it relates to the sale of the whole or any part of the mortgaged premises, be vacated and set aside," and for a second decree of foreclosure. The defendant demurred to this "petition" on the ground that it did not "state facts sufficient to authorize the court to grant the relief prayed for, or any relief whatever." The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant failing to answer over, a default was entered against him, and the court entered a second "judgment and decree," reciting the amounts which had become due on the note since the former decree, and ordering the sale of the "unsold portion" of the real estate in the usual form. The former decree was not vacated as prayed for. The defendant appeals from both of the judgments, and from the order overruling the demurrer to the amended petition, and brings the case up on the judgment roll.

We have set out these proceedings thus fully, not that they may be adopted as models of correct practice, but that the questions presented and decided may be better understood.

The first point made by the appellant is that so much of the findings and decree of the court first entered, as relate to the installments of interest, and the principal not due, are outside of the issues, and the findings cannot, for that reason, support that part of the decree adjudging the time when these several amounts would become due, and authorizing the plaintiff to apply for a sale of the property remaining unsold for their satisfaction as they matured. This contention is based upon the assumption that the complaint does not allege the facts showing when these unmatured portions of the note would become due, and that, therefore, the judgment could only be for the amount of interest actually due, and for the sale of the property, or so much thereof as might be necessary to satisfy the same. Arguing from these premises, it is further contended that as there were no valid findings or decree for the future sale of the property, or any part of it, to satisfy the sums of money not yet due, there was no foundation for the subsequent proceedings by which a second decree of sale was given, and therefore defendant's demurrer to the amended petition should have been sustained.

In the original complaint it was alleged that the whole amount called for by the note sued on was due at the time of the commencement of the action, and a sale of the land for the satisfaction of the whole was asked for. But the note and mortgage were set out in full, and showed that only a part of the debt was due, and when the balance would mature. The prayer of the complaint being general, the plaintiff was entitled to any relief consistent with the facts pleaded. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 269; Hall v. Lonkey, 57 Cal. 80. The real issues in the case, as presented by the pleadings, were whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the note, and to a foreclosure of the mortgage according to their terms. The fact that plaintiff treated the whole of the amount of the note as being due did not make it so, as against the terms of the note set out in, and made a part of, the pleading, nor could the issues be thereby confined to the mere question whether the note was then due or not. The court below found the facts in accordance with the instruments which were the foundation of the action. The findings were strictly within the issues as we construe the pleadings. This being true, the question is presented, what were the rights of the plaintiff under the findings, and the judgment based upon them, authorizing a subsequent decree of sale for the unmatured portions of the note as they fell due?

The Code provides, (section 728:) "If the debt for which the mortgage, lien, or incumbrance is held is not all due, so soon as sufficient of the property has been sold to pay the amount due, with costs, the sale must cease; and afterwards, as often as more becomes due, for principal or interest, the court may, on motion, order more to be sold. But if the property cannot be sold in portions, without injury to the parties, the whole may be ordered to be sold in the first instance, and the entire debt and costs paid, there being a rebate of interest where such rebate is proper."

We are quite clear that the decree of the court showing the amount due, and the sums yet to become due, was proper. Under the section quoted, the plaintiff was authorized to move the court for a sale of sufficient of the property to satisfy each of the unmatured installments as they fell due. The "amended petition" was not authorized, if it must be treated as a complaint. There is no such pleading known to our practice in this class of cases as a "petition," but, if it had been properly named, the pleading, treated as such, was entirely out of place, being filed after the case had been disposed of by a final decree. The proper practice on the part of the plaintiff would have been to have filed in the court below a motion, reciting the proceedings in the case, and that other installments of the money due upon the note had matured, and asking for a sale of the property, or enough thereof to satisfy the amount due. We are not inclined to be technical, however, under the circumstances of this case, and therefore hold that the "petition" filed may properly be treated as such a motion as the Code authorizes, and that, as such, it was sufficient, and the demurrer to it, which sets forth no ground of demurrer known to the Code, was properly overruled.

The appellant claims that the court had no power to make the order for the sale, because no sale had been made to satisfy the amount found to be due when the suit was commenced. This position is based upon the language of the section above quoted, "as soon as sufficient of the property has been sold to pay the amount due, with costs, the sale must cease, and afterwards," etc., "the court may on motion order more to be sold." We construe this to be a provision for the benefit of the debtor, to prevent the sale of more of his property than is necessary to pay the amount due. But here, instead of selling a part of the land to satisfy the amount due, and then ceasing, he forbears and sells none at all. It would be a strange perversion of justice to hold that the forbearance of the creditor to enforce the collection of the amount due, and thereby impose upon the defendant the cost of several sales, must lose him his whole debt. We cannot give the section such a construction. It is evident to our minds that the appellant is seeking the aid of this court to avoid the payment of a just obligation, and, while we cannot commend the course taken to enforce its payment, we hold that the statute has been substantially complied with, and the proper result has been reached.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed, with 10 per cent. damages.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.

77 Cal. 605

SEPULVEDA v. SEPULVEDA. (No. 12,508.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1888.)

DEED—NATURE OF ESTATE CONVEYED.

Plaintiff was given by her husband's will a life-estate in his undivided one-fifth interest in certain land, with remainder to her children. No reference was made in the will to her community interest. By the death of two sons she acquired greater interests in the land. By a deed, in 1880, she conveyed to her son A. all her interest in a portion of the land. In a partition suit A. admitted that this deed was not intended to convey to him plaintiff's life-estate. By deed, in 1882, she conveyed to A. all her interest in the rest of the land. In 1884 she made a third deed, conveying to him all her life-estate, as well as her claim in the community property. The consideration expressed was one dollar and support during life, and the deed stated that it was intended to correct any mistake as to the interest intended to be conveyed, and that such interest was an undivided one-tenth interest and a life-interest in the remaining undivided one tenth. Held, that the provisions of the last deed must govern, and the grantee acquired the one-tenth undivided community interest and the undivided one-tenth life-interest, but not the property inherited from the children.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Chapman & Hendrick, for appellant. Bicknell & White and Howard & Robarts, for appellee.

HAYNE, C. Suit to declare a trust, and for a conveyance. José Diego Sepulveda died in April, 1869, being then the owner of an undivided one-fifth of the Rancho los Palos Verdes, and of the whole of a piece of land on Date street, in the city of Los Angeles, (both of which were community property,) and leaving him surviving the plaintiff, who was the widow, and Aurelio W. Sepulveda, who was their son, and certain other children and grandchildren. The deceased left a will by which the plaintiff was given a life-estate in all the property, with remainder in equal shares to the children, but which made no reference to the community rights of the plaintiff. This will was admitted to probate, and plaintiff qualified as executrix thereof. The administration was unclosed at the commencement of the suit. In November, 1869, one of the sons died, and the plaintiff inherited from him an additional interest in the above-mentioned property; and in December, 1872, another son died, and the plaintiff inherited from him a still further interest. In November, 1880, she "conveyed to said Aurelio W. Sepulveda all her right, title, and interest in the said Rancho Palos Verdes." This deed was introduced in evidence in a partition suit of the rancho, which was then pending, and upon it, and the admission of Aurelio that it was not intended to cut off the life-estate of the plaintiff herein, the court decreed that she had a life-estate in the property, and awarded the fee (subject to the life-estate) to the children. In March, 1882, the plaintiff made a second deed to Aurelio, by which she conveyed to him all her right, title, and interest in the property on Date street. This deed recited that it was made in consideration of one dollar, and of the care and maintenance of the plaintiff. In May, 1884, the plaintiff made a third deed to Aurelio, by which she conveyed to him "all her life-estate in, as well as her interest, claim, and estate in, the community property acquired by her and her deceased husband, José Diego Sepulveda, during their marriage, in the Rancho Palos Verdes." This deed recites that it is made in consideration of one dollar, and in further consideration "that the party of the second part shall maintain her during her life;" and contains the following clause: "This deed is made to correct any misunderstanding that might exist as to the nature of the interest heretofore conveyed by the said party of the first part to the party of the second part in said rancho; it being understood that the party of the first part intended to then, and by this conveyance does, convey an undivided one-tenth interest in said Palos Verdes, as also a life-interest in the remaining one-tenth undivided of said rancho. It is further understood that, if the party of the second part should die before the party of the first part, then the above-mentioned property shall be given back to the party of the first part."

The plaintiff attacks these deeds for want of consideration, and for fraud, alleging, in substance, that she was old, and ignorant of the laws and of her rights, and reposed confidence in her son, and made the deeds at his request, and under his advice, for the purpose of enabling him the better to attend to certain litigation and other matters; that she was ignorant of the actual contents of the deeds; and that he fraudulently took advantage of her ignorance, etc. These charges of fraud and want of consideration are completely negatived by the findings; and, as the evidence is not brought up, we must take the findings to be true.

The plaintiff contends, however, that even if the deeds are taken to be valid, yet that upon a proper construction they must be held not to intentionally cover the interests in the Rancho Palos Verdes which she inherited from her two deceased children. The first deed, being of all the right, title, and interest in the ranch, was, of course, sufficient to pass the interest which she had theretofore inherited from her said children. The argument is, however, that, so far as the ranch is concerned, the third deed amounts to an admission that it was not the intention to pass the interests mentioned. And we think this view must be sustained. The deed of 1884 first grants in terms the community interest and the life-interest. Then it specifies what these interests were, viz., one-tenth of the rancho, and a life-estate in another tenth. If the plaintiff had any community interest (the doctrine of election being lost sight of) it would be an undivided one-tenth. And if she had a life-estate it would (under her theory) be a life-estate in one-tenth of the rancho. It is clear, therefore, that the deed is confined to the interests which she was supposed to derive in one way or another from her husband. It certainly cannot be construed to apply to the interests which she derived from her children. Now, this deed expressly declares that it was made to correct any misunderstanding that might exist as to the operation of the other deed; to show what it was "intended to then * * * convey." The parties, therefore, did not intend, by their first deed, to convey anything more than the interests which the plaintiff acquired on her husband's death; or, in other words, the first deed was not intended to pass the interests which plaintiff acquired from her children. Aurelio accepted the deed of 1884, and the defendants expressly aver in their answer that it was made "for the sole purpose and with the intent of correcting and dispelling any doubt, if any existed at the time, as to what she intended to convey, and did convey, to the defendant, Aurelio W., by the deed of conveyance dated November 1, 1880." And, this being the case, he cannot be permitted to fall back on the deed of 1880, or to say that the last deed is not to govern. Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 587, 2 Pac. Rep. 418. There being, therefore, a solemn admission that the first deed did not correctly set forth the intention of the parties, a court of equity will give the necessary relief. The deed of 1884 being set out in full, its construction is a matter of law; and, so far as this branch of the case is concerned, it was not necessary to bring up the evidence. The learned counsel for the respondents have not argued that the decree in the partition suit is a bar to appellant's claim, and we deem it sufficient to say that we have considered that question, and do not think that such decree operates as a bar to the claim. The appellant is, in our opinion, entitled to a decree for a reconveyance of the interests she inherited from her deceased children, and a corresponding portion of the rents and profits. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to determine from such additional evidence as may be introduced what is the appellant's share of the rents and profits, and to render judgment upon the findings in accordance with the principles of this opinion.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to determine from such additional evidence as may be introduced what is the appellant's share of the rents and profits, and to render judgment upon the findings in accordance with the principles of the above opinion.

---

78 Cal. 34

MUDGE et al. v. STEINHART et al. (No. 11,489.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

1. ATTACHMENT—FOR FRAUD—PROPERTY OF NON-RESIDENT—VALIDITY.
   Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 537, a writ of attachment can issue only "in an action upon a contract, express or implied." Held, that where the property of a non-resident, who was not served with summons, was attached in an action founded upon his fraud and collusion with plaintiff's debtor, whereby the latter's property was put out of the reach of his creditors, the attachment was absolutely void, and gave the court no jurisdiction to render even a judgment in rem against the property attached.
2. JUDGMENT—IN ABSENCE OF ANSWER—PRAYER.
   Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 580, providing that where there is no answer the relief "cannot exceed" that prayed for in the complaint, it is improper to grant the plaintiff any relief other than that prayed for.
3. WRITS—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—MAILING.
   It is not improper to deposit a summons and complaint, in an action against a non-resident, in the post-office of the city where the plaintiff's attorney resides, instead of the city where the order of publication was made.
4. SAME—MAILING AMENDED COMPLAINT.
   An amended complaint, being the existing pleading on part of the plaintiff, is the proper pleading to deposit in the post-office under an order of publication.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; FRANCIS E. SPENCER, Judge.

Action by Enoch R. Mudge, Joseph Sawyer, Lowell Lincoln, and Charles H. Jay, partners as Mudge, Sawyer & Co.; Edmund W. Converse, Walter Stanton, Daniel A. Davis, Moses W. Richardson, partners as Converse, Stanton & Davis; Seth M. Milliken, William A. Milliken, Joseph E. Blaton, and Owen E. Gibbs, partners as Deering, Milliken & Co.; and The Importers' and Traders' National Bank of New York, against Israel Steinhart, Adolph Feist, and Abraham L. Frank, surviving partners of the firm of Feist, Frank & Co.; Felix Feist, Simon Marks, William Scholle, and Jacob Scholle, surviving partners of the firm of Scholle Bros.; Martin Herman, Alexander Herman, and Cesar Piatti, as administrator of the estate of Meyer Levy, deceased. Defendant William Scholle alone appeals.

McAllister & Bergin and Wm. H. Sharp, for appellant. Wm. Mathews, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an appeal by William Scholle, one of the defendants, from a final judgment in the above-entitled cause, subjecting certain real property, situate and being in the city and county of San Francisco, to sale, to satisfy claims of the several firms, and a corporation composing the parties plaintiff. Defendant Scholle, the appellant, was at the date of the complaint a non-resident of the state of California, and a resident of New York city, in the state of New York. The summons was served upon him by publication; and, no answer having been filed by or for him, judgment was taken by default. It appears from the judgment that certain real property of appellant in the city and county of San Francisco had been, before the service of summons, attached to satisfy the demands and costs of the plaintiffs in the action; and the extent of the judgment, as against appellant, is to decree this real property to be sold to satisfy the amount found due from him to the plaintiffs.

Various objections are urged by appellant to the validity of the judgment, among which are: (1) That the relief granted by the court is other and different from that prayed for in the complaint. (2) That as against appellant there was no proper service of summons, by publication or otherwise. (3) That the case was not one in which a writ of attachment could issue; and, as this was the only basis of jurisdiction against appellant, the judgment cannot be upheld.

As the last-named objection seems the most important, we will consider it first. The allegations of the amended complaint, the prayer for judgment, and facts as to service of summons essential to an understanding of the foregoing points, may be stated thus: The firm of Feist, Frank & Co., composed of Adolph Feist, Abraham Frank, Jacob Levy, and Israel Steinhart, were engaged in business in San Francisco, and, as such firm, purchased goods, wares, and merchandise from the several firms, etc., the plaintiffs herein, all of whom were New York merchants. Being largely indebted for goods thus purchased, the firm of Feist, Frank & Co., for the purpose of cheating and defrauding their creditors, by collusion with appellant and the other defendants herein, and without consideration, made a large number of promissory notes for various large sums of money to various persons, who conspired with them to accomplish the result in view. Numerous actions were instituted in this state against Feist, Frank & Co., among which was one by appellant and others, upon eight of said pretended and fraudulent promissory notes for the sum of $24,124.42, in which action a writ of attachment issued and was levied upon the property of Feist, Frank & Co. Judgment was obtained by appellant and his associates, and execution issued, under which property of the value of $200,000 was sold, and purchased by the appellant, in the name of one of the other defendants. Plaintiffs had obtained judgments against the firm of Feist, Frank & Co., who are insolvent, before the institution of this action.

The amended complaint herein contains full and ample charges of fraud on the part of appellant, whereby, as is averred, he obtained large sums of money from the firm of Feist, Frank & Co., and contains most of the essential allegations of a creditor's bill. An order was made by the superior judge of Santa Clara county on the 15th day of February, 1884, directing the service of summons as against appellant, by publication, and directing a copy thereof, and of the complaint, to be forthwith deposited in the post-office, directed to appellant at New York city, etc. An amended complaint had been before that time filed, a copy of which, with the copy of summons, was on the same day, viz., February 15th, deposited in the post-office at San Francisco, the place of residence of plaintiffs' attorney, directed to appellant, etc., as by the order required. The appellant, being a non-resident of the state of California, and not having been served with summons except by publication, and not having appeared in the action, we must, in order to uphold the judgment, be able to see that the appellant had property in this state which was brought within the control of the court, and subjected to its jurisdiction by process adapted to that purpose, or that the judgment was sought as a means of reaching such property.

Recurring to the complaint, we find respondents sought by their allegations and prayer to obtain a personal judgment against appellant, and to subject to the satisfaction of that judgment certain real property in Santa Clara county, averred to have been purchased with the fruits of appellant's fraudulent acts. In this respondents failed, and their judgment only decreed the sale of a lot of land in San Francisco, which had been levied upon and brought within the jurisdiction of the court, under a writ of attachment issued in the cause. The contention of appellant is that, inasmuch as the action is clearly one in tort, and not founded in contract, express or implied, the attachment was improperly issued, and that its levy created no lien which the court could enforce. In discussing the jurisdiction of the court over property of non-residents not personally served, the supreme court of the United States, in Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 319, used the following language: "Now, in this class of cases, on what does the jurisdiction of the court depend? It seems to us that the seizure of the property, or that which, in this case, is the same in effect,—the levy of the writ of attachment on it,—is the one essential requisite to jurisdiction, as it unquestionably is in proceedings purely in rem. Without this the court can proceed no further. With it, the court can proceed to subject that property to the demand of plaintiff. If the writ of attachment is the lawful writ of the court, issued in proper form under the seal of the court, and if it is, by the proper officer, levied upon property liable to the attachment,—when such a writ is returned into court, the power of the court over the res is established." This language has been quoted and approved in many of the cases which have followed it, including Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714.

The question presented for consideration is, Was the writ of attachment in this case the lawful writ of the court? An appeal lies from an order dissolving or refusing to dissolve an attachment, (Code Civil Proc. § 963;) hence irregularities, merely, in its inception, or as to its form, cannot be considered here, being subjects of direct attack by such appeal. This may be regarded as a collateral attack, which can only be sustained for causes which render the writ absolutely void, and not merely voidable. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714. With the antiquity and scope of writs of attachment as they existed in the lord mayor's court of London, we have nothing to do. In this state the writ depends for its force upon the statute, and, being merely a statutory provision, it can have no force except in the cases provided by the statute. Under section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the writ can only issue "in an action upon a contract, express or implied." Walker v. McCusker, 65 Cal. 360, 4 Pac. Rep. 206. The existence of a contract, express or implied, is an essential basis without which no writ of attachment can properly issue; and, as in this case the action was founded, not upon contract, but upon the fraud and wrongful acts of the defendant, we are of opinion the writ of attachment issued therein was absolutely void, and cannot be invoked to uphold the jurisdiction of the court. In such a case the writ cannot be said to be the lawful writ of the court. The rule, as enunciated by this court in Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635, and in the cases cited supra, may be stated thus: (1) A personal judgment of a state court against a non-resident, who has not been personally served, and who has not appeared in the action, is without validity. (2) The state, having within her territory property of a non-resident, may hold and appropriate it to satisfy the claims of her citizens against him, and her courts may inquire into his obligations to the extent necessary to control the disposition of such property; and in such a case service of summons by publication or other form authorized by the law of the state is sufficient to inform the non-resident of the object of the proceedings, provided the court obtains jurisdiction of the property by seizure, or some equivalent act in rem, or in the nature of a proceeding in rem; the object being to enforce proceedings against the property. Manifestly, as we think, the process by which jurisdiction over the property is obtained must be one known to the law; as, for instance, by direct proceedings to declare and enforce a lien upon the property, or, in a case warranting a writ of attachment, by such writ, etc. In the present case we may suppose the object of the action was to follow up and enforce a lien upon the real estate in Santa Clara county, and that to that extent the court acquired jurisdiction to act, but, failing in that, it does not follow that respondents could resort to a writ of attachment, and thus confer jurisdiction upon the court to condemn other property, and that in a case where a writ of attachment could not under any circumstances properly issue.

As to the other objections it may be said briefly that the relief granted, being other and different from that prayed for in the complaint and specified in the summons, was improper. "The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint." Code Civil Proc. § 580.

The deposit of the summons and complaint in the post-office at San Francisco, where the attorney for plaintiffs resided, and had his office, instead of the post-office at San José, where the order of publication was made, was not improper; and the amended complaint, which took the place of the original, and was the existing pleading on the part of plaintiffs, was the proper pleading to deposit under the order.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

77 Cal. 642

In re WALKERLEY'S ESTATE. (Nos. 12,629, 12,630.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1465, providing that the probate court may set apart, for the use of the widow, the property of decedent exempt from execution; and section 1466, authorizing such reasonable allowance for the support of the family as may be necessary, according to their circumstances, during the settlement of the estate, —are independent of the action of the deceased, as expressed in his will, and of creditors, heirs, and legatees, so far that when the necessity exists the court may provide for the support of the family until, in course of administration, they can receive the share of the estate to which they are entitled, subject to the proviso that, if the estate is insolvent, such provision shall not extend beyond one year.

In bank. Appeals from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Appeals from order of court setting apart to the surviving widow of William Walkerley, deceased, certain household furniture, etc., and allowing such widow a family allowance.

L. Quint, for appellant. Hall & Rogers, for respondent. C. Bartlett, for executors. Frederick E. Whitney, for absent heirs.

SEARLS, C. J. There are two appeals in this case, based upon the same record, one from an order of the court setting apart to the surviving widow of William Walkerley, deceased, certain household furniture, books, etc., being furniture exempt from execution, and the other from an order allowing such widow a family allowance of $420 per month. The two appeals will be considered together.

William Walkerley died on the 16th day of September, 1887, leaving no family except Blanch Walkerley, his widow, and a child conceived, but not yet born, at the date of the entry of the order in question, (December, 1887.) His estate was valued at about $782,000, which was incumbered to the extent of $260,000, and is solvent and fully able to pay the monthly allowance awarded to the widow, which is found to be a reasonable allowance for her maintenance according to the circumstances of the family, and that she is without other means of support, and has no income from the estate. The furniture is that left in the dwelling-house of deceased where the widow resides, which is found to be exempt from execution, and need not be enumerated. Deceased left a last will, which was admitted to probate, together with a codicil thereto. The original will bequeathed to the wife the furniture in question, to her sole use forever, the use of his residence during her widowhood, and an annuity of $2,400 per annum for life. By the codicil, executed shortly before his death, deceased, on learning that a child was to be born to him, and as is therein stated for the purpose of providing for such child, "and to make a more liberal provision for my said wife than I have made in my will," annulled the provisions in the original will relating to his wife, and in lieu thereof gave and bequeathed to her the sum of $100,000 to be paid to her when certain property is sold as by the will directed, and in the mean time to be and remain a lien upon such property, bearing interest at 5 per cent. per annum; said interest to be paid to her semi-annually. The property alluded to is not to be sold during the life of the wife, or at least for 25 years, so that, in effect, she is to receive the interest as aforesaid during her life, or for 25 years. At the date of the entry of the orders, no interest had yet, however, become due to the widow. All of the estate was the separate property of deceased. It was competent for the court, under section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the coming in of the inventory, to set apart for the use of the widow the property exempt from execution, which includes the furniture in this case, and under section 1466 of the same Code to make such reasonable allowance for the support of the family as may be necessary, according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate.

These and kindred provisions contained in the same chapter are independent of the action of the deceased as expressed in his will, and of creditors, heirs, legatees, and devisees, so far that when the necessity exists therefor the court may provide for the decent support and maintenance of the family until, in due course of administration, they can become the recipients of the share of the estate to which they are entitled as heirs or otherwise. Instead of requiring the widow and children of deceased persons, who leave estates and homes, to dwell in the open air, to subsist upon meat which they cannot obtain, and drink which they cannot reach, the law humanely provides that they may remain in the homestead, retain the furniture and utensils exempt from execution, and have a support from the estate commensurate with their circumstances and necessities, until such time as they can come into the estate, which support, in case of the insolvency of the estate, cannot be longer than one year from the granting of letters testamentary or of administration.

The argument of the appellants, that the widow is provided for under the will, will become potent when it can be shown that she has received, or may receive, the largest bestowed by that instrument. Upon such a showing the court will no doubt terminate the allowance which until that time seems to be just and necessary. This is no new doctrine. At common law, the widow was entitled to tarry for 40 days after his death in the chief house of her deceased husband without being liable for rent, and to reasonable sustenance in the mean time out of her husband's estate; and this, whether her dower be sooner assigned to her or not. In most of the states of our union there are statutes conferring upon the probate courts power to provide an allowance for the support of the family for longer or shorter periods. Some of these statutes limit a family allowance to cases of intestacy, or to cases in which no provision is made by will, or, if made, where such provision is waived by the widow. Our statute is not so limited. The conclusion we reach is that under our law the probate court may in its discretion, in all cases where the necessity therefor exists, make for the support of the family a reasonable provision during such reasonable period as, in view of all the facts, may be necessary, subject, of course, to the proviso that if the estate is insolvent it shall not extend beyond one year. That this provision should cease when the widow comes into such share of the estate as renders it no longer necessary is no argument against the power to make and continue it until that event happens, which we may well assume will be upon receipt of the first installment of interest.

The orders appealed from, and each of them, are affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

SMITH v. KEAGLE, Tax Collector. (No. 12,861.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.)

TAXATION—TAXABLE PROPERTY—MORTGAGE TO STATE.

Const. Cal. art. 13, § 4, provides that a mortgage shall, for the purpose of taxation, be treated as an interest in the property; and with certain exceptions the value of the property so affected, less the value of such security, shall be taxed to the owner. Section 1 provides that property belonging to the state shall be exempt from taxation. Held, that the owner of land on which there is a mortgage to the regents of the state university is entitled to have the amount of the mortgage deducted from the value of the property for the purposes of taxation, notwithstanding such amount, as an interest of the state, will not be otherwise taxed. Following People v. Board, 19 Pac. Rep. 257.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

It is claimed by James C. Smith, petitioner, that the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, while sitting lately as a board of equalization, exceeded its powers by ordering and causing to be deducted from the assessments made by the assessor on certain lots of land the value of certain mortgages on said lots respectively, and which mortgages were the property of the state, being held by the regents of the University of California, and by the State Deaf and Dumb Asylum. The facts set forth in the petition are admitted by the return thereto, leaving the only issue one of law,—that is, when private realty is mortgaged to the state, whether the owner of the land is entitled to have the value of such mortgage deducted from the value of the land for purposes of taxation.

Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. Ansel Smith, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of People v. Board, 19 Pac. Rep. 257, (No. 12,786, filed September 27, 1888,) the judgment of the court below herein is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer, and allow the defendant to answer.

---

78 Cal. 4

DAVIDSON v. CUCAMONGA FRUIT & LAND CO. (No. 12,849.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

PUBLIC LANDS—GRANT BY STATES—ACTUAL SETTLERS—PATENTS.

Under Const. Cal. art. 17, § 3, providing that state lands "suitable for cultivation shall be granted only to actual settlers," and Pol. Code Cal. § 3500, requiring an applicant for such lands to state in his affidavit that he is an actual settler, a certificate of purchase issued to one who is not an actual settler, though his affidavit states that he is such, confers no rights, and neither he nor his assignee can maintain an action to annul a patent to another.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Action by S. M. Davidson, executor, etc., of H. B. Thomas, deceased, against the Cucamonga Fruit & Land Company, to annul a patent to defendant, and to adjudge plaintiff's title to be valid. Plaintiff appeals.

Bicknell & White and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellant. Curtis & Otis and J. C. Lynch, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The facts of this case may be briefly stated as follows: In January, 1869, John Mullan made application to purchase from the state of California a certain tract of land in San Bernardino county, containing 660 acres. The application was approved by the surveyor general on the 21st day of August, 1869, and on the 15th day of October following Mullan paid to the county treasurer of San Bernardino county 20 per cent. of the purchase price, and interest on the balance up to January, 1870, and thereafter, in the same month, received from the register of the state land-office a certificate of purchase which was in the usual form. On the 1st day of May, 1880, Mullan not having paid the interest due on the balance of the purchase price, the register of the land-office forwarded to the district attorney of San Bernardino county a statement of all the lands in that county upon which payments had not been made; and thereafter the district attorney, having given the notice required by law, commenced an action in the superior court of the county, in the name of the people of the state, to foreclose the interest of Mullan in said land, and to annul his certificate of purchase. Afterwards such proceedings were had in the action that on the 4th day of January, 1881, judgment was given and entered foreclosing the interest of Mullan in the land and annulling his certificate. Mullan did not pay the amount due the state, nor the costs which had accrued, within 20 days after the entry of the judgment, and thereupon a certified copy of the judgment was filed in the office of the register, and a like copy in the office of the county recorder. On the 29th day of December, 1884, on motion of the assignee of Mullan, an order was made and entered by the superior court vacating the judgment above recited, and after that order was made the assignee paid to the county treasurer all the interest then unpaid on his certificate. On the 25th day of October, 1882, one Charles R. Higgins made application to purchase from the state 280 acres of the land described in Mullan's certificate, and on the 30th of December following his application was approved by the surveyor general. Thereafter, within 50 days, Higgins made the first payment, and on the 29th day of March, 1883, a certificate of purchase was issued to him for the land described in his application. On the 27th day of September, 1883, Higgins sold, assigned, and transferred to H. B. Thomas his certificate, and all his right to the land mentioned therein. On the 28th day of August, 1885, Thomas died, leaving a last will and testament, in which the plaintiff was named as executor. The will was admitted to probate, and the plaintiff was appointed and duly qualified as executor thereof. On the 15th day of November, 1885, plaintiff made full payment to the county treasurer for the land described in the certificate issued to Higgins, together with a fee for the patent, and surrendered to the register of the land-office the certificate, and demanded a patent for the land. The certificate issued to Mullan was assigned to the defendant herein, and in the month of September, 1886, the register of the land-office, without any hearing before him to determine which party was entitled to purchase the land, prepared a patent for the land described in the certificate, and sent it to the governor, together with a certificate that the laws in relation thereto had been complied with, that payment in full had been made, and that the Cucamonga Fruit Company was entitled to it. This patent was, on the 20th day of September, 1886, signed by the governor, attested by the secretary of state, sealed with the great seal of the state, countersigned by the register, and delivered to the defendant. This action was brought in February, 1887, to obtain a decree—First, that the plaintiff's title to the land described in the certificate issued to Higgins is good and valid, and that defendant has no right, title, or interest therein; second, that the patent issued to defendant is null and void; third, that the defendant be enjoined from asserting any claim to the land, or any part thereof. The court below found that the lands in controversy were agricultural lands, and that Higgins was not at the time he made his application to purchase the same, or at any time, an actual settler thereon. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendant, from which, and from an order denying him a new trial, plaintiff appealed.

The principal question to be considered here is, did the plaintiff have such an interest in the land as would enable him to maintain an action to annul the defendant's patent? It is well settled that in order to maintain the action plaintiff must connect himself with the source of title, and must show that his rights are injuriously affected by the patent. People v. Stratton, 25

Cal. 242; Durfee v. Plaisted, 38 Cal. 80; Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636. In the last-named case the court, by FIELD, J., speaking of a patent issued by the land department of the general government, said: "If, in issuing a patent, its officers took mistaken views of the law, or drew erroneous conclusions from the evidence, or acted from imperfect views of their duty, or even from corrupt motives, a court of law can afford no remedy to a party alleging that he is thereby aggrieved. He must resort to a court of equity for relief, and even there his complaint cannot be heard unless he connect himself with the original source of title, so as to be able to aver that his rights are injuriously affected by the existence of the patent; and he must possess such equities as will control the legal title in the patentee's hands. It does not lie in the mouth of a stranger to the title to complain of the act of the government with respect to it." This language is equally applicable where one is seeking to annul or set aside a patent issued by the land department of the state.

Now, the only title shown by the plaintiff was the certificate of purchase issued to Higgins. This certificate, it is true, was prima facie evidence of title, (Pol. Code, § 3514;) but prima facie evidence can be contradicted and overcome by other evidence. When Higgins made his application for the land, the constitution provided that "lands belonging to this state which are suitable for cultivation shall be granted only to actual settlers," (article 17, § 3,) and the Code at that time required the applicant to state in his affidavit "that he is an actual settler thereon," (Pol. Code, § 3500, as amended in 1880.) These provisions are imperative, and the rule is well settled that an applicant must not only state in his affidavit all the facts required to be stated therein, but the facts as stated must be true, or he can acquire no rights under his application. McKenzie v. Brandon, 71 Cal. 209, 12 Pac. Rep. 428; Harbin v. Burghart, 18 Pac. Rep. 127.

Higgins stated in his affidavit that he was an actual settler on the lands applied for, and whether he was or not was an issue presented by the pleadings. The court found, as we have seen, that his statement in this regard was not true, and the correctness of this finding is not questioned. It necessarily follows that Higgins was not entitled to receive a certificate of purchase, and that the certificate issued conferred upon him no rights. This being so, he was a stranger to the title, and neither he nor his assignee can be heard to question the defendant's rights under its patent.

It is unnecessary to consider the other questions argued by counsel, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 31

HARNETT v. CENTRAL PAC. R. Co. (No. 12,114.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.
   Where the evidence is conflicting, an order of the trial court granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal.
2. NEW TRIAL—APPLICATION—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIFICATIONS.
   On a motion for a new trial, specifications of particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to sustain the verdict are sufficient if they give the opposite party notice in plain and direct language of the matters that will be urged on the hearing.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

It is immaterial that the trial court came to an erroneous conclusion on the only point discussed by it on granting a new trial, where it appears that the order can be justified on other grounds on which the motion was based, and on which the court expressed no opinion.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county; A. J. BUCKLES, Judge.

William Harnett, by his guardian ad litem, sued the Central Pacific Railroad Company to recover for injuries received. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. From an order granting a new trial plaintiff appeals.

George A. Lamont and Matt Clarken, for appellant. W. H. L. Barnes, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Appeal from an order granting a new trial. The question of fact in the case is whether the plaintiff, a minor, was forcibly ejected from a switch-engine, and, through the negligence of defendant's employes, run over and injured, or whether he fell, or of his own volition jumped from the engine.

The evidence is very conflicting. Following the rule so often referred to and applied, therefore, the order of the court should not be disturbed.

It is claimed, however, that the specifications of particulars as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict fail to show wherein the evidence is insufficient. The specifications are in the following language: "The evidence was insufficient to show that the plaintiff was, by any servant or employe of the defendant, negligently or carelessly pushed, shoved, forced, or driven from said engine. On the contrary, the evidence established that the plaintiff, with his companions, contrary to the orders of the person in charge of the switch-engine No. 44, got upon the foot-board in front of said engine, which was a place of great peril to him, and attempted to steal a ride thereon. The evidence showed that, as soon as they were discovered, the engineer in charge of said engine slowed down the same, intending to come to a full stop, and then remove the plaintiff and his companions from the position of danger which they occupied. The evidence showed that the plaintiff and his companions jumped from said engine before it had stopped, and thereby received the injuries complained of. The evidence showed that the injuries received by the plaintiff were caused proximately by his own negligence, and willful disregard of the orders and directions of the servants and employes of the defendant, and not in consequence of any act or omission of the defendant or its servants or employes. The whole case showed no negligence, either in fact or in law, of the defendant." It would be difficult to state in more specific terms the particular points of insufficiency on which the moving party proposed to rely in its proceeding for a new trial. It gave the plaintiff notice in plain and direct language of the matters that would be urged on the hearing of the motion,—which is the object of the statute requiring such specifications,—and could not have misled him in preparing his amendments to the proposed statement. As stated by the judge, in his decision granting a new trial: "The whole case was tried upon the one theory that the injury was caused by the act of the fireman in pulling the hat and hair of plaintiff, and actually pushing him from the engine." How plaintiff came to jump or fall was the main question.

It is contended by appellant that the opinion of the court, filed with the order, shows that the new trial was granted upon the affidavits filed by defendant in support of its motion on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and upon no other ground; that reasonable diligence was not exercised by defendant in procuring evidence; that the evidence is immaterial, and is simply cumulative. It is true, the court, in an opinion which we find in the tran· script, discusses the question whether the defendant is entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and concludes that the affidavits are sufficient, and a new trial should be granted on the ground named. The court, in its opinion, does not discuss any other ground specified in the motion for a new trial, and, as the order subsequently entered granting the new trial does not specify the grounds upon which it is based, we cannot say what the views of the court were upon the grounds not discussed. It matters not whether the court has or has not come to an erroneous conclusion in discussing one of the grounds for new trial. As stated by Mr. Justice McFARLAND, in Nalley v. McDonald, 19 Pac. Rep. 418, (filed October 25, 1888:) "The order should be affirmed if it can be justified on any of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based. * * * A motion for a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court; and when, on such motion, the court below has granted a new trial, the order granting it will not be disturbed unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion." We see no such abuse in this case.

Order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; WORKS, J.; McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

I dissent: THORNTON, J.

78 Cal. 107

JAMES v. MCCANN, Judge. (No. 12,901.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 12, 188

NEW TRIAL—NOTICE OF APPLICATION—TIME OF MAKING.

In a probate proceeding, the court, of its own motion, submitted two issues of fact to a jury, impaneled for that purpose, which found on these issues, and was discharged. The court took no further action in the matter, and the case was not decided. Held, that this was not the verdict of a jury, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, which provides that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after the verdict of the jury, * * * file with the clerk a notice of his intention," etc., but was merely advisory to the judge; and a notice of intention to move for a new trial, and the presentation of the statement for settlement, were premature.

In bank. On application for writ of mandate.

Application for writ of mandate to compel the superior court of Santa Cruz county to settle a statement on motion for a new trial in a probate proceeding. The application was denied on the ground that the verdict of the jury in the proceeding was not the verdict of the jury in an action tried by a jury, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, which provides that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after the verdict of the jury, if the action were tried by a jury, or after notice of the decision of the court or referee, if the action were tried without a jury, file with the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made upon affidavits, or the minutes of the court, or the bill of exceptions, or the statement of the case."

Z. W Goldsby and H Skirm, for petitioner. J. M. Lesser, for defendant.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to settle a statement on motion for new trial in a probate proceeding. It does not appear from the petition for the writ that the action was tried by a jury, nor is there a decision by the court. The proceeding, so far as any appears to have been had, was under chapter 3, art. 5, Code Civil Proc. By the allegations of the parties certain issues of fact were raised, and the court, of its own motion, submitted two of them to a jury, which was impaneled for that purpose, and the jury found upon these issues, and was discharged. The court took no further action in the matter, and the case has not been decided. The verdict of the jury in this proceeding is not the verdict of the jury in an action tried by a jury, within the meaning of section 659, Code Civil Proc., but was merely advisory to the judge, and of no force or effect until adopted by him. In that state of the case we think the notice of intention to move for a new trial, and the presentation of the statement for settlement, were premature.

Application denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 99

MOYLE et al. v. LANDERS et al. (No. 11,906.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 11, 1889.)

APPEAL—NOTICE—ESTOPPEL TO DENY.

Service of a notice of appeal was admitted by defendants' attorney one day after the death of the principal defendant. Neither appellants nor their counsel knew that the death occurred before the service, and though the administrators who were subsequently appointed and substituted as defendants and their counsel knew it, and had many opportunities of informing appellants, they concealed the fact until after the expiration of the time within which further notice might have been given, when, the same attorney still continuing to act for the administrators, they moved to dismiss the appeal for want of service, on the ground that at the death of the client the power of his attorney to accept service ceased. Held, that the respondents by their conduct were estopped from denying due service, and the motion should be denied.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action by James W. Moyle and others to declare a trust in real estate, and to recover a money judgment against Michael Landers. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

L. E. Bulkely, for appellants. H. G. Sieberst and D. L. Smoot, for respondents.

WORKS, J This is an action to recover a money judgment, and to declare a trust in certain real estate. There was judgment on demurrer for the defendants in the court below, and the plaintiffs appeal. The defendant Michael Landers died after judgment.

One Sieberst appeared as attorney for all the defendants during the proceedings in the court below. The death of Landers occurred October 20, 1886. The notice of appeal was served on said Sieberst on the 21st of the same month. Sieberst, without disclosing the fact of Landers' death, if he knew it, acknowledged service of the notice as attorney for all of the defendants. In this court there was a suggestion of the death of the defendant Landers by the appellants, and upon their motion the respondents, Amy Landers, wife of said Michael Landers, and William J. Landers, his brother, who had been appointed administratrix and administrator of said estate, were substituted as parties in his stead. The said personal representatives now move the court to dismiss the appeal herein, as to them, on two grounds: First, on the ground that the service of the notice of appeal on Sieberst was no service as to the defendant, who was then dead; second, that the appeal-bond is insufficient.

1. It must be conceded that the question is one of jurisdiction, and that, independent of any acts or conduct on the part of said respondents, estopping them to question the jurisdiction of the court, it must be shown that notice of appeal was served as provided by law. The authority of Sieberst as attorney for Landers ceased with the death of the latter and service of the notice upon him, and his acknowledgment of such service could not bind the personal representatives subsequently appointed. Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 463. And if this were the only question presented, the appeal should be dismissed. Shartzer v. Love, 40 Cal. 93; Hayne, New Trials & App. § 210, p. 631.

There was no service of notice of any kind upon the personal representatives, or either of them, before or after the order of substitution of them as respondents, which order was made and entered September 26, 1887.

The appellants meet the motion by an affidavit of the appellant Moyle, which alleges the service of the notice of appeal on Sieberst, who indorsed thereon, "Service and receipt of a copy of the within notice of appeal, after filing, is hereby admitted, this 21st day of October, 1886. H. G. SIEBERST, Attorney for Defendants, Respondents;"—and alleges, further, that W. J. Landers and Amy Landers were respectively duly appointed and qualified as administrator and administratrix of the estate of Michael Landers; "that soon thereafter, and on or about the 27th of November 1886, at the request of W. J. Landers, administrator, he [deponent] went to his office, and he then stated that his object in wishing me to call was to talk about a settlement of this suit, so far as the administrator and administratrix were concerned. After considerable conversation, he fixed another time a few days later, saying that he wished to talk further with H. G. Sieberst and D. L. Smoot, the attorneys. At the second time he said that it had been decided to make a settlement with us, but it could not be consummated until after ten months had expired, so that no other parties could come in and make a claim on similar grounds, and requested me to keep quiet, and give myself no further trouble about the appeal. He also stated that, as administrator and administratrix, they had retained H. G. Sieberst as their attorney and counsel to appear for them to attend to this suit in the supreme court, and for no other purpose, and had paid him his fee, which was $1,000; that D. L. Smoot had also been retained by them in other matters connected with the estate; and that he advised with the said Smoot in this and in all matters pertaining to the estate. Deponent further says that said W. J. Landers asked deponent for a copy of the transcript on appeal herein, which deponent gave to him that on the 3d of June, 1887, and within seven months after the first publication of notice to creditors of the estate of Michael Landers, I served upon said W. J. Landers, administrator, a duly-verified creditors' claim against said estate, which contained, in substance, the complaint in this action, and enumerating all the several sums of money therein alleged to have been fraudulently obtained from plaintiffs by said Landers in his life-time, and the total amount and interest claimed against the estate by reason thereof, and the parcels of real estate which had been purchased in said Landers' name with the funds thus fraudulently obtained, and a statement that this suit therefor was still pending and undetermined; that at this time I asked said Landers, administrator, for an admission of service of said paper, but he said he desired to submit it to D. L. Smoot, their attorney, for his instructions; that several times after this I called on him for said admission of service, and he each time told me that said Smoot had not returned it to him. Finally, on September 14, 1887, and before the expiration of the ten months after first publication of notice to creditors of said estate, I delivered to him another exact copy of said creditors' claim, duly verified, specifying the amount claimed in the pending suit then on appeal in the supreme court, and on that date I obtained his written admission of service, in the following words and and figures, to-wit: 'I acknowledge the presentation of the within claim to me as administrator of the estate of Michael Landers, deceased, this 14th day of September, 1887, at San Francisco, Cal. WILLIAM J. LANDERS, Administrator.' Deponent further says that on July 16, 1887, and before the expiration of the ten months allowed by law for the presentation of claims against the estate of Michael Landers, he delivered to Mrs. Amy Landers, administratrix, personally, at her residence, 812 Shotwell street, in the city of San Francisco, and left with her, an exact copy of the said creditors' claim, and referred to the suit then and now pending on appeal in the supreme court above specified. Deponent further says that H. G. Sieberst, at the time of Michael Landers' death, and for a long time prior thereto, had been his intimate friend, had his office on the same floor with him, and was in the habit of meeting him daily at his office, or at his dwelling; and if said Michael Landers died on the 20th day of October, 1886, of which this deponent then had no intimation, and has now no personal knowledge, said Sieberst knew of his death when he signed the admission of service of notice of appeal for him and his co-defendants, and purposely concealed the fact from deponent. And deponent never did for a moment suspect that said Michael Landers was dead at the time he received said admission of service from Sieberst, nor that it was so claimed, until he saw it in said Sieberst's affidavit on which he based his first motion to dismiss the appeal, in December, 1887. And deponent is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief states the fact to be, that said D. L. Smoot knew as early as June, 1887, of the deceit practiced by said H. G. Sieberst in giving admission of service of notice of appeal, and that said Smoot counseled and advised with the said administrator and administratrix upon the subject, and it was agreed between them to remain quiet, and give no intimation to plaintiffs (appellants) of the time when said Michael Landers died until after the time had expired in which further notice of appeal could be made on them, that all of them aided and assisted and conspired with said Sieberst to carry out the deception and fraud thus initiated by said Sieberst, and that the said Smoot and W. J. Landers, administrator, and Amy Landers, administratrix, have been in collusion at all times on the subject; that on the 9th day of December, 1887, when the former motion was made by H. G. Sieberst to dismiss the appeal, W. J. Landers, administrator, was in the court-room, and heard the statement in an affidavit of appellant's counsel that he and Amy Landers had been substituted as respondents in this appeal by order made September 26, 1887, and that no objection had been made thereto, and in fact no one ever did make any objection to said substitution, although the said administrator and administratrix knew of it on the 28th of September, 1887. Affiant further states that he has examined the records of a probate court, and the value of the estate of Michael Landers, deceased, is appraised at $120,330.08, of which $104,880 is in real estate, nearly all of which is claimed by the complaint herein as property purchased with funds embezzled from the plaintiff, and said Amy Landers, administratrix, is the heir to one-half of said estate, and she is now in the possession and enjoyment of the same as administratrix; no distribution having been made of the property of said estate. Deponent further says that subsequent to the substitution of the administrator and administratrix as respondents herein, and in pursuance of the provisions of section 954, Code Civil Proc., the appellants caused to be executed a new undertaking on appeal herein, which was approved by the chief justice of this court, and filed with the clerk on the 24th day of October, 1888."

Counsel for appellants also makes affidavit that he left this state for the East September 29, 1886, and did not return until January 14, 1887; that before leaving he prepared the necessary notice of appeal; that within a few days after his return he examined the transcript, and saw Sieberst's acknowledgment of service of the notice as attorney for all the defendants; that he learned of Landers' death soon after his return, but did not then know, nor did he at any time learn or receive any information, that he was dead at the time the notice was served, until December 5, 1887, when he was so informed by the affidavit of Sieberst in this case; that the order of substitution was made as above stated, and notice of such proceeding was published in the newspapers of the city where said parties resided; and that no objection has ever been made to such substitution.

Mr. Smoot, one of the attorneys mentioned in appellants' affidavit, files his sworn denial of the statements contained therein, so far as they apply to him, and also denies all knowledge of any attempt or intent to deceive the appellants or their attorney in the matter of the service of said notice of appeal. All that can be said, therefore, so far as Mr. Smoot is concerned, is that he may be attempting to profit by the wrong of another.

The respondent W. J. Landers files his affidavit, substantially denying the charges made in appellants' affidavit, so far as they refer to himself, and alleges generally that he has done nothing to prevent the appellants from ascertaining the death of Landers when the alleged service of notice occurred.

So far as the appellants' affidavit charges fraudulent conduct and intent as to Sieberst and Amy Landers, it remains wholly unanswered. We must therefore treat them as so far confessed. These are grave charges, involving the professional honor and integrity of an attorney, and if untrue would undoubtedly be met by a denial. Sieberst was the attorney for Landers. After the appointment of his personal representatives he continued to act as their attorney. As shown by the affidavit, he knew, while acting as the attorney for the latter, that they had, by the order of this court, been substituted as respondents in place of Landers, and, being present in court, made no objection, and remained silent until it was too late for appellants to serve and file a new notice. Having then become the attorney for the personal representatives, he had authority to bind them. Not only so, but it is directly charged, and not denied, that his silence was for the fraudulent purpose of defeating appellants' appeal, and that the administratrix was a party to such fraud. To allow this motion to prevail, under such circumstances, would be a travesty on justice, and bring the administration of the law into just reproach.

We are met with the claim, on the part of the respondents, that this is a purely jurisdictional question; that this court can only obtain jurisdiction in the way provided by law; and that it cannot be conferred by the consent or voluntary submission of the parties; and, in support of this contention, they cite Bonds v. Hickman, 29 Cal. 462; Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 466; Shartzer v. Love, 40 Cal. 96; Reed v Allison, 61 Cal. 465.

As we have already said, the rule stated in these cases must be conceded to be the true one, but in our judgment they do not meet the case presented here. There was no question of fraud in either of the cases cited. The appellant simply failed to take the necessary steps to perfect the appeal, and in one of the cases there was a stipulation that the notice had been given, but this was contradicted by the certificate of the clerk and affidavit. We think it may very properly be questioned whether an express stipulation of the parties, waiving the steps necessary to perfect an appeal, or that such steps have been taken, made in good faith, should not be bindingupon them, and confer jurisdiction. Hayne, New Trial & App. § 210, p. 642, and cases cited.

But this is not the question before us. The question here is whether parties who have fraudulently prevented the service of the notice, by the concealment of material facts, and a failure to enter their objection to the jurisdiction of the court at the proper time, and, for the fraudulent purpose of preventing the proper service of the same, have delayed making their objection until it was too late to remedy the defect, should not now be estopped to attack the notice given, or to question the jurisdiction of the court. We are of the opinion that the respondents should not now be heard to question the jurisdiction of this court for the want of the service of a proper notice of appeal, under the circumstances of this case.

2. The respondents contend, further, that the appeal should be dismissed because the undertaking on appeal was insufficient. The appellants meet this by showing that a new undertaking has been filed in this court. This latter undertaking is also attacked on various grounds, based, however, upon the theory that this court had not obtained jurisdiction of the case. It might be conceded that if no notice of appeal had been given the undertaking would be ineffectual for any purpose; but, as we have ruled against the respondents upon the point which forms the basis of their objections to the undertaking, the latter must be held to be without foundation.

Motion denied.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

I concur in the order: PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 9

HOPE v. BARNETT et al. (No. 12,664.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

1. TRIAL—VERDICT—FINDINGS.

A finding that at the commencement of this suit a certain fence was at the side of and along a road will not be deemed inconsistent with another, that, 10 years before, said road, in the part in which the fence was placed, had been open to public travel, when it does not appear that the road had not in said 10 years been so changed that the fence which had been in it was on its side.

2. SAME—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS.
A finding that a certain fence "is not an obstruction or encroachment on any highway, and does not now, nor did it ever, constitute a nuisance on any highway," is not in conflict with a finding that, some 10 years before, the road, in the part of which said fence was placed, was open to public travel, since it refers to a different time, and the words "nor did it ever" are immaterial.

3. HIGHWAYS—DEDICATION—ACQUIESCENCE.
The fact that a road had been open to public travel, worked and used as a public road, for a period of 18 months or 2 years, does not show a dedication, unless the land-owner knew and acquiesced in the user, nor a case within Pol. Code Cal. § 2619, providing that "all roads used as such for a period of five years are highways."[1]

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Action in ejectment and for damages by Annie M. Hope against W. S. Barnett and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

S. S. Price and Thomas McNulta, for appellants. Fernald, Cope & Boyce, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action in ejectment and for damages for detention of real estate, and tearing down and removal of a fence. Answer denying all of the material allegations of the complaint, and, further, that the defendant Barnett was, at the time of the alleged ouster, overseer of the road-district in which the real estate was situate; that the premises mentioned in the complaint were a public highway; that the fence mentioned was erected by the plaintiff, and by her permitted to stand in, and was an obstruction to, a certain public highway; that said defendant, as such overseer, notified plaintiff to remove the fence; that, without claiming the right to maintain the fence, plaintiff failed and neglected to remove the same for more than 10 days after said notice was given, whereupon said defendant, as such overseer, removed the fence with as little damage and injury to the materials thereof as was possible; and that the other defendants were employed by and assisted said overseer in removing said fence, and acted solely as his agents in so doing. The defendant Barnett also pleaded, by way of counter-claim, that the real estate in controversy was a public highway, and had been for 12 years, and as such was under the exclusive control of the board of supervisors and road overseer; that he, and the other defendants acting for him, had removed said fence, and that the same had been replaced in said highway by plaintiff; and asked that the same be declared a nuisance, and abated. There was a trial by the court, and findings and judgment for the plaintiff for the possession of the land and $100, and against the defendants on their counter-claim.

1. The first point made by the appellants is that some of the findings are inconsistent with each other, and contradictory. It is claimed that because finding 2 is to the effect that the fence in question was erected "along a public road known as the 'Modoc Road,'" and finding 6 shows "that the Modoc road, from which this same fence was removed, and in that part from whence it was removed, had been open to public travel, worked and used as a public road, for a period of eighteen months," etc., they are conflicting, for the reason that one finding is that the fence is on the boundary of and the other that it is in the road. The second and sixth findings are as follows: (2) "That said premises have been for more than ten years inclosed on the north-east side thereof, and along a public road known as the 'Modoc Road,' by a good and substantial post and board fence, about four hundred rods in length, and $800 in value, and the property of plaintiff; that said premises were, on the 14th day of February, 1887, wholly inclosed by boundary fences, the said fence along said Modoc road being one, and were used as agricultural and pasture lands." (6) "The court further finds, as matter of fact, that the Modoc road from which the fence and alleged obstruction was removed by the defendants, and in that part where said fence was placed, and from whence it was removed, had been open to public travel, worked and used as a public road, for a period of eighteen months or two years, in all that part from whence said fence was removed, at a period about ten years ago or more, but the fence had stood in said road for ten years and more at the time it was removed by the defendants; and that said road where the said fence had so stood for ten years and more had not at any time been abandoned by order of the board of supervisors, or by the judgment of any court of competent jurisdiction, but had been held adversely by the plaintiff, and those under whom she claims, for a period of ten years or more; that during the years 1871–72 certain steps were taken, and attempted proceedings were had, before the board of supervisors, seeking to establish the road as a public highway under the act of February 1, 1872, but all the requirements of said act were not complied with."

---

[1] As to what constitutes a dedication of land to the public as a highway, see City of Eureka v. Croghan, (Cal.) 19 Pac. Rep. 485, and note; Rube v. Sullivan, (Neb.) 37 N. W. Rep. 666, and note; Meier v. Railway Co., (Or.) 19 Pac. Rep. 610; Town of Edinville v. Railway Co., (Iowa,) 41 N. W. Rep. —.

It will be seen that the two findings as to the situation of the fence relate to different times. The second relates to the 10 years preceding the action, and finds that during that time the same inclosed the premises in controversy along the public road. The sixth finding is that, at a period 10 years before, the Modoc road had been open to public travel, for a period of 18 months or 2 years, in that part whence said fence was removed, but the fence had stood in said road for 10 years or more. The evidence is not before us. We cannot say that, between the times to which the findings relate, the line of the road had not been so changed as to render it true that at one of the dates mentioned the fence was in the road and at the other along its border. Therefore we must hold that the findings do not conflict.

Finding 4 is also claimed to be inconsistent with the sixth, for the reason that it is to the effect "that no part of the premises constitute, nor did they ever constitute, a public road, or any part of any public highway;" and that the fence "is not an obstruction or encroachment on any public highway, and does not now, nor did it ever, constitute a nuisance in any public highway." The first clause of the fourth finding does not conflict with the sixth, because one relates to the premises in controversy, and the other to the fence; and, taking all three of the findings above mentioned together, they cannot, in the absence of the evidence, be held to conflict in any of their parts. As we have said, finding 2 is to the effect that at the time of bringing the action the fence was not in the road, but along the side of it. Finding 6 is that, 10 years before, it was in the place where the road had, previous to that time, been used and worked. Finding 4, as to the location of the fence, is confined to the time of bringing the action, supports the second finding, and does not contradict the sixth, which relates to another time. So far as the fourth finds that the fence does not constitute a nuisance in a public highway, it is in accord with the other findings; and the finding that it never did is immaterial, if we admit that it conflicts with other findings.

2. It is further urged that the sixth finding shows a dedication of the road to public use, and, as there is nothing in the other findings to show that it has ceased to be a public highway, the defendants were entitled to judgment. The sixth finding is set out above. We are unable to see anything therein showing, or tending to show, a dedication of the real estate to public use as a highway. While it was not necessary that there should have been a formal grant of the land to constitute a dedication, there must have been some act, or assent to the use of it by the public, sufficient to show an intention to dedicate the property to such use. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642, 647. Where the dedication is sought to be established by user as a highway, it must appear that such user was with the knowledge of the owner, and with his consent or without objection on his part. Sullivan v. State, 52 Ind. 309; Summers v. State, 51 Ind. 201; Harding v. Jasper, supra.

It was held by this court in Bolger v. Foss, 65 Cal. 250, 3 Pac. Rep. 871, that under section 2619 of the Political Code, as then in force, providing that "all roads used as such for a period of five years are highways," such user for the term of time prescribed constituted such road a public highway without reference to the question of consent by the owner. But the court was careful to say that this was not a right gained by prescription, but by the express terms of the Code. The finding we are considering shows neither a dedication nor an establishment of a highway by virtue of the provision of the Code referred to. It only shows a use of the road for "eighteen months or two years" before the fence was erected, and fails to show that such use was with the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff. Therefore the defendants were not entitled to judgment on the findings. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(78 Cal. 58)

MORGAN et al. v. LONES. (No. 12,913.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

   Plaintiffs' testatrix, a married woman, obtained a possessory title under deeds from prior occupants to land afterwards coming within the "Town-Site Act." Her husband, the defendant, with means of his own, whether separate or community did not appear, paid for the lots under said act, and procured a deed to testatrix. In his affidavit filed to obtain the deed, he stated that his wife was "the owner of the lots," and that he was in possession and entitled thereto as against all persons except her, in whose name he wished the deed to be made. Held, that the lots were community property; no intention of defendant to make a gift to testatrix being apparent.

2. ESTOPPEL—IN PAIS.

   The statements in defendant's affidavit that testatrix was the owner of the property, not being made to her, nor with intent to deceive her, or to induce her to take any action whatever, and no such results appearing to flow from them, do not estop him from denying that the transaction was a gift to the wife.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

Action by John T. Morgan and Hugh McCauley, executors, etc., of Mary J. Lones, deceased, against Henry A. Lones, surviving husband of said testatrix, to quiet title to land. Judgment for plaintiffs for part only of the land in controversy, and for defendant as to the residue. Plaintiffs appeal.

Caldwell & Little, for appellants. Cross & Simonds, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to quiet title to certain lots in Nevada City. The court below gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs as to a portion of the lots, and in favor of the defendant as to the remainder. The plaintiffs appeal from so much of the judgment as is in favor of the defendant. The decision turns upon the question whether the lots as to which defendant obtained judgment were the community property of the defendant and his wife, Mary J. Lones, or her separate property. The facts are as follows: The marriage took place in 1861. At that time, and up to the issuance of the United States patent to the city trustees in July, 1869, the land was public land. After the marriage the defendant entered into possession under deeds from prior occupants. In this condition of affairs a patent from the United States government to the board of trustees of the city was issued under the following provision of the act of congress of 1867, viz.: "Whenever any portion of the public lands have been or may be settled upon and occupied as a town-site, not subject to entry under the agricultural pre-emption laws, it is lawful, in case such town be incorporated, for the corporate authorities thereof, and if not incorporated, for the judge of the county court for the county in which such town is situated, to enter at the proper land-office, and at the minimum price, the land so settled and occupied, in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests; the execution of which trust as to the disposal of the lots in such town, and the proceeds of the sales thereof, to be conducted under such regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the state or territory in which the same may be situated." Rev. St. § 2387; 14 U. S. St. at Large, 541.

The mode of acquiring the title from the corporate authorities was prescribed (at the time in question) by the state legislature by the act of March 24, 1868. See Laws 1867–68, p. 487; Deer. Pol. Code, 720. Under its provisions the husband filed with the clerk of the board of city trustees an affidavit sworn to by himself, in which he stated, among other things, that his wife was "the owner of the lot," and that he, the affiant, was "in possession of, and entitled to the possession of, the same, against all other persons, to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief, excepting Mrs. Mary J. Lones, in whose name affiant wishes the deed to be made." The affidavit as to each lot is substantially the same. The required payment is stated by the findings to have been made by the husband "out of his own separate estate." What the husband said in his evidence in regard to this was: "I paid my own money for them." But, for the purposes of this appeal, it is immaterial whether the payment was made out of his separate property, or out of the community property; as it is not contended that the property was the separate property of the husband. The deed from the city trustees was made to the wife in December, 1870, and she died in 1887.

We think the property was not the separate property of the wife. In any view that can be suggested, it was not "acquired" until after the marriage. And it was acquired by purchase. The grant from the government was on generous terms, the entry by the city being "at the minimum price." Still there was a price, and it had to be paid before the beneficiaries could get their deeds. The transaction, therefore, cannot be considered as a gift from the government. And the price was not paid out of the separate property of the wife. Such being the case, unless there is some special circumstance taking the case out of the general rule, the property (if not the separate property of the husband) would at least be community property. It would not be the separate property of the wife.

The argument against this conclusion is founded upon the statement in the affidavits filed by the husband upon the application for the city deed. It is said, in the first place, that the statement in said affidavits that the wife was "the owner" operated as an estoppel against the husband. It is to be observed that this position is not that the city deed constituted an estoppel, independent of the declaration of the husband. Such a position could not be maintained; for, aside from any other reason, the act of the state legislature (as it then stood) expressly provided that "no conveyance as to any such lands, made as in this act provided, shall be deemed to conclude the rights of third persons." Section 9. And the provision that "no action shall be maintained," unless brought within two years, is a period of limitation applicable to suits brought by third persons. The position is that the declaration itself constituted an estoppel. But it was not made to the wife for the purpose of deceiving her, and it does not appear that it did deceive her, or induce her to take any action upon it; hence there was no estoppel. Reynolds v. Lounsbury, 6 Hill, 536; Moore v. Boyd, 74 Cal. 167, 15 Pac. Rep. 670; Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279. The case of Harris v. Harris, 71 Cal. 314, 12 Pac. Rep. 274, is not in conflict with this conclusion. There the land was acquired by pre-emption; and, so far as this aspect of the case is concerned, the decision was founded upon an express provision of statute that it must be shown that the pre-emptor had not "directly or indirectly made any agreement, in any way or manner, with any person whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself." Act 1841, Rev. St. U. S. § 2262. The husband had consented (either expressly or impliedly) to the use of the community funds; and the court said that, in view of such consent, to give him a right because of the use of said funds would amount to an indirect agreement, which would be "in violation of the spirit and letter of the pre-emption law." There is no such provision in the town-site act under consideration, and that is the distinction between the two cases in this regard.

But it is urged, in the second place, that the statement in the affidavits shows that there was a gift from the husband to the wife. If it had appeared that there was an intention to give on the part of the husband, the case would fall within the rule laid down in Higgins v. Higgins, 46 Cal. 263. But it is not found that there was any such intention; and, aside from the affidavits above mentioned, there is no evidence on the subject. And we do not think that the naked statement in the affidavits shows that there was such intention. It may be that the husband desired the property to stand in the name of his wife for other reasons. Or (in view of the fact that the wife also had lots for which a city deed was to issue) it may be that a single application was made in order to save the trouble of making out two sets of papers. The presumption is that property acquired by purchase during marriage is community property, and the party who claims that it is separate property must prove it to be such by clear and satisfactory evidence. Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 216; Meyer v. Kinzer, Id. 247; Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 42. The statement in the affidavits is not sufficient to overcome this presumption.

The other matters do not, in our opinion, require special notice.

We therefore advise that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

89 Cal. 638

SHAKESPEAR v. SMITH et al. (No. 11,541.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL-DISTRICTS—SCHOOL FUNDS—VALIDITY OF WARRANT.
   An order for the payment of school funds, drawn with the concurrence of two only of the three trustees of a district, one of whom is interested in it, is void.
2. SAME—NEGOTIABILITY OF WARRANT.
   Such an order is not a negotiable instrument, in the sense of the law-merchant, and a third person can acquire no greater rights under it than the original holder had.
3. PARTIES—PROPER DEFENDANTS.
   In an action to restrain payment of such an order, the holder, and the county superintendent of schools upon whom it is drawn, are proper parties defendant, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 379, permitting any person to be made a party who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; R. CROUCH, Judge.

Action by David Shakespear against W. A. C. Smith, George B. Kennedy, the Bank of Napa, and John L. Shearer. Plaintiff appeals.

Dennis Spencer, W. F. Henning, and Garret W. McEnerney, for appellant. Wallace & Johnston and Henry Hogan, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action by plaintiff as a tax-payer and resident of St. Helena school-district No. 10, county of Napa, on his own behalf, and in behalf of all other tax-payers of said school-district, for the surrender and cancellation, and to declare null and void a certain order of W. A. C. Smith and C. N. Hale, two of the trustees of said school-district, on the county superintendent of schools, in favor of George B. Kennedy or order, which said order, with the assignments and indorsements thereon, is in the words and figures following:

"ORDER UPON THE COUNTY SUPERINTENENT OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

"No. 294. ST. HELENA, January 8, 1886.

"The county superintendent of public schools of Napa county will draw a requisition on the county auditor against the special tax school fund for nine hundred thirty and 93-100ths dollars in favor of George B. Kennedy or order, on account of a contract for repairing school-house in full during the present school year in St. Helena school-district. W. A. C. SMITH,
"C. N. HALE,
"School Trustees of St. Helena District."

Indorsed: "Pay to W. A. C. Smith or order. GEO. B. KENNEDY Pay Bank of Napa or order for collection. Account of W. A. C. SMITH."

The complaint shows that plaintiff and defendants W. A. C. Smith and C. N. Hale were trustees of the school-district mentioned, and as such they, or a majority of them, contracted with the defendant George B. Kennedy to repair the school-house of their district, in consideration of which they agreed to pay $892.51 on or before September 10, 1885, or in lieu thereof to give an order to the school superintendent for a like amount; that at the instance of the trustees Kennedy performed certain extra labor upon the school-house which added to the contract price aggregated $930.93, as specified in the foregoing order. Upon the allowance of the order plaintiff voted against and defendants Smith and Hale for such allowance. On or before November 8, 1885, Kennedy sold, transferred, and assigned to Trustee Smith his interest in the contract, and the proceeds to accrue therefrom, and said Smith was interested in the claim prior to and at the date of its allowance by the board of trustees. The Bank of Napa, another of the defendants, is alleged to have an interest in the claim or order, and is therefore made a party defendant. Defendant Shearer is the superintendent of schools for Napa county, and the complaint asks that he be enjoined from drawing any requisition upon the auditor of the county for payment, etc.

A demurrer was interposed by the defendants upon the grounds (1) that the amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and (2) that Shearer and the Bank of Napa are improperly joined as defendants, and that C. N. Hale should have been made a party defendant. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for defendants, and against the plaintiff, for costs. In fact, there were separate demurrers by different defendants, but for convenience in reference we may treat them as one.

We are of opinion the demurrer should have been overruled. The order in question was drawn by the concurrence of two only of the trustees, one of whom was interested in it, and, being incompetent to act, it was void for want of the sanction of a competent majority of the board. San Diego v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 111; Andrews v. Pratt, Id. 309; Pickett v. School-Dist., 25 Wis. 552. In such cases the court will not pause to inquire whether a trustee has acted fairly or unfairly. Being interested in the subject-matter, he may not, as a trustee, deal with himself, and thus be subjected to the temptation to advance his own interests. The order in question is not a negotiable instrument in the broad sense that an innocent holder for a valuable consideration is protected. Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 256; People v. Gray, 23 Cal. 126; Martin v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 286; Keller v. Hicks, 22 Cal. 457; Dana v. City of San Francisco, 19 Cal. 486; People v. Supervisors, 11 Cal. 170.

Such an order, like county warrants, "acquires no greater validity in the hands of third parties than they originally possessed in the hands of the first holder, no matter for what consideration they have been transferred, or in what faith they may have been taken. If illegal when issued, they are illegal for all time. People v. Supervisors, supra. See, also, Civil Code, § 3095, for an enumeration of different classes of negotiable instruments. The term "negotiable" is frequently used in a broad sense, to describe any written security which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery only, so as to vest in the indorsee the legal title, and thus to enable him to maintain in his own name an action thereon. In this broad sense the instrument we are considering is a negotiable instrument, but not in the commercial and more restricted sense which applies the term only to such instruments as carry with them the legal title by indorsement or delivery, as well as when transferred before maturity, the right to recover their full face value, without reference to defenses affecting their validity. It follows that, not being a negotiable instrument in the sense of the law-merchant, the Bank of Napa is in no better position as a holder than Smith or Kennedy, under whom it holds.

There is no misjoinder of parties defendant. "Any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question involved therein." Code Civil Proc. § 379. This section of the Code adopts substantially the former rule in equity, under which not only parties interested in the cause of action, but also in the relief to be obtained, or who would be affected by granting or withholding such relief, were proper parties. Kennedy, Smith, and the Bank of Napa are directly interested according to the allegations of the complaint, and Shearer is interested in the relief sought in the question whether or not he shall be enjoined from drawing a requisition upon the auditor. It may be proper to say that, so far as appears from the complaint, Kennedy has an honest claim against the school-district, to the payment of which he and his assignees are entitled; that the only vice in the transaction consisted in its allowance by a party in interest, which raises an implication of fraud, and renders the order void. Either Kennedy or his assignee, as the case may be, may still (unless prevented by the bar of the statute of limitations) present the claim to the board of trustees, and, if properly allowed, it will become a legitimate claim, as against the district, and, if being a proper and just claim, the board shall for any cause reject it, an action to establish its validity will be in order.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrers to the amended complaint.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Thornton, J.

---

78 Cal. 113

Dale v. Purvis. (No. 12,552.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 14, 1889.)

Appeal—Review—Objections to Instructions.

On appeal, objections to instructions given by the trial court should point out in what particulars such instructions are erroneous, and an objection that "the court erred in giving the instructions, and each of them, asked by plaintiff," is too indefinite to call for a review of the instructions.

Beatty, C. J., dissents from the result.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Action by J. B. Dale against B. B. Purvis, to recover six mules taken by the latter as sheriff, by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment against one V. B. Dale in favor of one D. W. Carmichael. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The objection to instructions given by the trial court was as follows: "The court erred in giving the instructions, and each of them, asked by plaintiff."

Hatton & Fulkerth, for appellant. Turner & Maddux, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action to recover six mules. The defendant answered that he was the sheriff of Stanislaus county, and as such took and held the mules, first under attachment, and subsequently under an execution issued upon a judgment in favor of one Carmichael, and against V. B. Dale, father of plaintiff, and that at the time they were so levied upon and taken by defendant said mules were the property of said V B. Dale. The controverted question in the case was whether the sale to plaintiff, who claimed to have purchased said mules from his father, was "accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession." The case was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals, and insists that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence as to the question of delivery and continued possession. We have examined the evidence, and find it sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury. To set out or comment upon the evidence would extend this opinion to no purpose.

Appellant contends that certain of the instructions given by the court were erroneous. Counsel in their points and authorities object to the instructions, in the language of their specifications of errors of law: "The court erred in giving respondent's instruction 4." The only commendable feature of such a mode of attack is its extreme brevity; and, although brevity, in the argument of counsel, is pleasing to the court, we think, in the present instance, it has been a little overdone. We respectfully suggest to counsel that, in order to call upon us to review the action of the court below, they should point out in what respect the instruction attempted to be brought in question is erroneous. Such a requirement is absolutely necessary to the proper dispatch of the business of this court, and should in fairness to opposing counsel be insisted upon if the point is seriously urged. We have, however, examined the instructions, and find no error in them. This failure on our part may further tend to convince counsel of the necessity of greater particularity in pointing out defects relied upon We see no error in the record, and feel satisfied that a correct result was reached.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

BEATTY, C. J., (dissenting.) I dissent. In my opinion, all the evidence in the case shows without substantial conflict that the delivery to the plaintiff by his vendor of the mules in controversy was merely formal, and that it was not followed by any actual change of possession. To all outward appearance both vendor and vendee continued in precisely the same relation to the property after the sale as before. There was nothing in the status of the property after the sale to indicate a change of ownership. In this case, as in most cases of sales of personal property which is in the possession and under the control of the vendor, the parties might easily have dealt with it after the sale in such a manner as to make the change of ownership manifest. Instead of doing so, they left it in precisely the situation in which it had been before, and the transaction in my opinion, falls within the policy and the letter of the statute of frauds. Civil Code, § 3440.

---

78 Cal. 118

SILCOX et al. v. LANG et al. (No. 12,267.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 15, 1889.)

1. PLEADING—VERIFICATION BY ATTORNEY—SUFFICIENCY.
   Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 446, authorizing an attorney or other person not a party to verify a pleading when the facts are within his knowledge, an attorney's verification reciting that affiant "is the attorney for defendants, and as such attorney the facts are more fully known to him than said defendants," is insufficient.

2. APPEAL—RECORD—REFUSAL OF CHALLENGE.
The court's refusal to allow a peremptory challenge to a juror is not an "irregularity in the proceedings of the court" reviewable on affidavits, but is an "error in law occurring at the trial," and so only to be presented by bill of exceptions or statement. Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 657, 658.

3. SAME—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.
If the court's attention is not called to the fact that he has omitted to rule on a demurrer before proceeding to trial, objection is waived.

4. INJUNCTION—ACTION ON BOND—PLEADING—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.
In an action on an injunction bond, an answer averring that, before entry of judgment for defendants in the injunction suit, the parties settled all matters in controversy in that case, is so clearly bad that it may be reached by motion to strike out. It does not allege that any future damages were settled for, and the right to damages for the injunction could not arise until the temporary order was dissolved.

5. SAME—EVIDENCE.
In an action on an injunction bond, when the answer merely denies plaintiff's right to do the acts complained of in the injunction suit, denies damages, and pleads a settlement, the judgment roll in the injunction suit is properly excluded as immaterial.

6. SAME—SETTLEMENT.
When the answer sets up a settlement, but the evidence fails to show that the matter in litigation was included therein, or that more than one of several plaintiffs participated or consented, or that any one who acted was empowered to bind them, a verdict for defendants cannot stand.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Trinity county; T. E. JONES, Judge.

Action by Richard Silcox, Ah Mi, Ah Song, Ah Lin You, Fang You, Ye Bang, and Ah Hew against Max Lang and W F. Smith, on an injunction bond. Verdict and judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal.

Code Civil Proc. §§ 657, 658, so far as they enter into this case, are as follows:

"Sec. 657. The former verdict or other decision may be vacated, and a new trial granted, on the application of the party aggrieved, for any of the following causes, materially affecting the substantial rights of such party: (1) Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party, or any order of the court or abuse of discretion, by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial; * * * (7) error in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the party making the application.

"Sec. 658. When the application is made for a cause mentioned in the first, second, third, and fourth subdivisions of the last section, it must be made upon affidavits. For any other cause it may be made, at the option of the moving party, either upon the minutes of the court, or a bill of exceptions, or a statement of the case."

J. W. Turner and C E. Williams, for appellants. D. G. Reid, for respondents.

WORKS, J. This is an action on an injunction bond. The complaint alleges the bringing of the action, the giving and approving of the bond, issuing of the injunction, judgment in favor of the defendants, dissolution of the injunction, and damages. There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. The defendants answered, denying the right of the plaintiffs to do the acts which they were enjoined from doing in the former action, and denying the damages. They also answered, by way of confession and avoidance, as follows: "That on or about the ——— day of ———, 1885, and before the entry of the judgment mentioned in plaintiffs' complaint, R. Silcox, acting for himself and as the agent of the other plaintiffs herein, and J. W. Philbrook, acting as the attorney for the plaintiffs herein, on one side, and James A. Johnson and his attorney, W. J. Tinnin, on the other, settled all matters in controversy between plaintiffs herein and James A. Johnson, in the case of James A. Johnson vs. R. Silcox et al., being number 163. That said settlement was made by R. Silcox selling all his rights, title, and interest in the property and mine mentioned in plaintiffs' complaint herein, and each party or parties to said suit of James A. Johnson vs. R. Silcox et al. (No. 163) were to pay their or his own costs, and stop all proceedings in the case, and all matters in controversy between the plaintiffs herein and James A. Johnson were then and there settled in full, and a large sum of money was paid by James A. Johnson to R. Silcox, acting for himself and the other plaintiffs herein, to make such full settlement." The answer was not verified. Motion was made to strike it out for that reason. The attorney for defendants asked leave to verify the same himself, and tendered the following verification: "D. G. Reid, being duly sworn, deposes and says, in behalf of the defendants in the above-entitled action, that he has read the foregoing answer, and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to those matters which are therein stated on information or belief, and as to those matters that he believes it to be true; that he is the attorney for defendants, and as such attorney the facts are more fully known to him than said defendants, and therefore he makes this affidavit." Objection was made on the ground that the affidavit was insufficient, and stated no reason why the verification was not made by a party. The objection was overruled, and the answer permitted to be filed; to all of which the plaintiffs excepted. Thereafter a motion was made, on substantially the same grounds, to strike out the answer, which was denied. There was also a motion to strike out the affirmative answer set out above, on the ground that the same was "sham, redundant, and immaterial matter," which was also overruled. There was also a demurrer to this count of the answer, which was never ruled upon. There was a trial by a jury of eight. In impaneling the jury each of the parties challenged a juror peremptorily. The plaintiffs then announced that they were satisfied with the jury. The defendants challenged a second juror, and announced that they were also satisfied, whereupon the plaintiffs offered to challenge another juror, to which the defendants objected, on the ground that it was contrary to section 601 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that plaintiffs had waived the right to challenge such juror, and could not do so without good cause. The objection was sustained, and the right to challenge denied. Other jurors were called to supply the places of those who had been challenged, whereupon the plaintiffs renewed their challenge to the same juror, and the right to such challenge was again denied. The jury being sworn, the plaintiffs offered in evidence the judgment in the injunction case, which was objected to and excluded. The plaintiffs having rested their case, defendants proposed to offer evidence; whereupon the plaintiffs objected to "any evidence going to prove the allegations of the separate defense in the answer, upon the grounds that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the action." The objection was overruled, and the evidence heard. The jury returned a verdict for defendants and judgment was rendered accordingly. A new trial was denied, and the plaintiffs appeal from the order and judgment.

1. The objection to the filing of the answer and the motion to strike it out raises the question as to the sufficiency of the verification by the attorney. The Code provides that "where a pleading is verified it must be by the affidavit of a party, unless the parties are absent from the county where the attorney resides, or from some cause unable to verify it, or the facts are within the knowledge of his attorney or other person verifying the same." Code Civil Proc. § 446.

Here are three conditions, the existence of either of which authorizes a verification by the attorney: (a) The absence of the party from the county where the attorney resides; (b) the inability of the party from some other cause to verify; (c) that the facts are within the knowledge of the attorney.

The affidavit before us does not bring the case within either of the first two conditions. It shows no reason why the pleading might not have been verified by the parties. It attempts to state the third condition, but fails to do so. The attorney is only authorized to verify where the facts are within his knowledge. In other words, he must deny or affirm from actual knowledge of the facts, and not upon information and belief, as the party is permitted to do. The affidavit here does not show that the facts were within the knowledge of the attorney, but that the facts are more fully known to him than said defendants. This is insufficient. It attempts to fix the extent of his knowledge by a comparison with that of some one else, the extent of whose knowledge is not shown. The affiant may have known something of the least material of the facts. The party, while without knowledge of all of the facts, might have had such information and belief as would have enabled him to verify as to all of them. The practice of attorneys verifying for their clients should be discouraged, and to that end the provisions of the Code referred to should receive a strict construction. Therefore, to authorize a verification by an attorney, it must be shown by the affidavit, in direct terms, that the facts are "within his knowledge," where the right to verify is based upon this clause of the statute. The object of the verification is to insure good faith in the averments of the party. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28. This end could not be attained by the approval of such a verification as the one before us.

In New York the statute is similar in its requirements to ours, but it provides that the attorney "shall set forth in the affidavit his knowledge or the grounds of his belief on the subject, and the courts of that state have held that this clause qualifies the first, and authorizes him to verify on information and belief, as the party may do." Stannard v. Mattice, 7 How. Pr. 4; Soutter v. Mather, 14 Abb. Pr. 440. But the clause upon which such verification is approved, in the cases cited, is omitted from our statute, leaving the positive and unqualified requirement that the facts must be within his knowledge to authorize the attorney to verify the pleading. Newman v Bird, 60 Cal. 372; In re Hotchkiss, 58 Cal. 39. And as he can only verify by reason of the fact that he has personal knowledge of the facts, it follows, necessarily, that he must verify from such knowledge, and not from information and belief.

For the reasons stated the court below erred in permitting the answer to be filed, and in refusing to strike it out on appellants' motion.

2. The motion to strike out the special or affirmative answer should also have been sustained. It wholly failed to show a settlement of the matter in controversy in this action, and is limited by its terms to such controversies as then existed. The cause of action here did not arise, and could not have been prosecuted, until the final disposition of the original injunction proceeding, or, at least, until the dissolution of the temporary injunction; and there is nothing in the answer to show that controversies that might arise in the future were included in the settlement. While a demurrer to the answer would have been more appropriate as a means of testing its sufficiency, it was so clearly bad as to render the motion to strike out proper.

3. We think the court also erred in denying the appellants' challenge to the juror under the circumstances above stated. The right to challenge a certain number of jurors peremptorily is absolute under the statute. Code Civil Proc. § 601. The fact that the appellants had once passed the jury, including the juror afterwards sought to be challenged, did not cut off this right. The proper practice in the selection of a jury in a civil case is to fill the panel, and upon one of the jurors being challenged for any cause, or "without cause," to immediately call another to take his place, so that a party, in determining whether to challenge or not, may do so with a full panel before him. People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676; Taylor v. Railroad Co., 45 Cal. 323, 330.

The fact that a party may pass the panel as satisfactory to him, at a certain stage of the examination, cannot be held to cut off his right to challenge one of the jurors so passed at a later stage. Such changes may have been made by subsequent challenges as to render it desirable to him that the particular juror should not sit, and of this the party must be the sole judge. The right of challenge may be exercised at any time before the juror is sworn. See on this point Bridge Co. v. Pearl, 80 Ill. 251; Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96; Hartzell v. Com., 40 Pa. St. 462, 466; Spencer v. De France, 3 G. Greene, 216.

But the respondents contend that the question as to the correctness of this ruling is not properly presented. It is treated by the appellants as an "irregularity in the proceedings of the court" by which they were prevented from having a fair trial, and they attempt to present the facts by affidavits. The respondents contend that if the ruling was erroneous it was an "error in law occurring at the trial," and should have been presented by bill of exceptions or statement. We think the respondents are right in this contention. The impaneling of a jury is a part of the trial, within the meaning of the Code, and any ruling of the court with respect thereto, if erroneous, is an error of law occurring at the trial, and not a mere irregularity. The term "irregularity" cannot be applied to a ruling or decision made upon a question of law regularly presented for such decision during the trial. In such case the action is not irregular, but the decision rendered is erroneous. See Hayne, New Trials & App. § 100.

The term "irregularity," as here used, is of very uncertain import. We do not wish to be understood as attempting to determine, in this case, what should be considered as within the term used. But see 1 Abb. Law Dict. 644; Hayne, New Trials & App. § 28 et. seq.; Id. § 41, and cases cited. It is enough for the purposes of this case to say that the ruling here complained of was not an irregularity within the meaning of the statute, and could not be properly presented by affidavit. Therefore, although the ruling was erroneous, the cause could not be reversed on that ground.

4. The action of the court in excluding the judgment roll in the injunction case was proper, for the reason that all of the facts upon which it would have been material were admitted by the answer.

5. The objection of the plaintiff to any evidence in support of the facts set up in the affirmative count of the answer should have been sustained, for the reasons stated above for holding that the motion to strike out said count should not have been overruled.

6. It is contended that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, and we are of that opinion. It is evident that the verdict was founded upon the answer of settlement above set out, and, admitting the settlement to have been well pleaded, the evidence wholly fails to show that the matter here in litigation was included in such settlement; and as to all the plaintiffs except Silcox there is no evidence tending to show that they participated in the settlement, or consented thereto, or that any one acting in the matter had any authority to bind them.

7. The fact that the court proceeded to try the case without ruling on the demurrer to the answer is complained of, but it is not shown that plaintiffs called for any such ruling, or called the attention of the court to it in any way. They must therefore be held to have waived it. Brooks v. Douglass, 32 Cal. 212; McCarthy v. Yale, 39 Cal. 586.

Complaint is made as to certain rulings upon the evidence, but they relate to the forms of questions, and will probably not arise upon a second trial. For that reason we do not extend this opinion by considering them separately.

Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

78 Cal. 144

PEARSON v. CREED et al., (HEARST, Intervenor.) (No. 12,619.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 23, 1889.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—POSSESSION.
   In an action to quiet title to land, an issue as to plaintiff's possession of the land at the commencement of the action is immaterial.[1]
2. SAME—PAYMENT OF TAXES—ADVERSE POSSESSION.
   So are issues as to the assessment and payment of taxes by defendants, while in possession of the land, and as to adverse possession by them, where they do not claim that such possession continued for five years before action brought.
3. SAME—DECREE—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.
   Defendants, having shown no title to the land, are not prejudiced by a judgment adjudging one-half of the land to plaintiff, and one-half to an intervenor who claims under purchase from plaintiff after the commencement of the action, and they cannot object to the admission in evidence of a record copy of the deed from plaintiff to intervenor, where plaintiff would otherwise be entitled to the whole of the land.
4. TAXATION—TAX DEED—VALIDITY.
   A tax deed which recites that the land was assessed to a certain person, "and all owners and claimants," is void, and is not validated by proof that the assessment was regular and valid. WORKS, J., dissenting.
5. VENDOR AND VENDEE—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.
   The tax deed under which defendants claimed having been regularly recorded, and the action pending at the time of the intervenor's purchase, he must be held to have had notice of defendants' claim; but, such tax deed being void, such notice could not affect his rights.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. HARRIS, Judge.

Action by John W. Pearson against W. H. Creed and P. D. Wigginton, to quiet title to land. George Hearst intervened, claiming title to one-half the land in controversy by virtue of purchase from Pearson after the commencement of the action. The intervenor was allowed to introduce in evidence the record of the deed to him from plaintiff, after giving evidence that the original could not be found. Title to one-half the land was adjudged to be in plaintiff, and to the remaining half to be in the intervenor, Hearst. Defendants appeal.

Wigginton & Hawes, for appellants. Geo. A. Nourse, for respondent. Edward Lynch, for intervenor.

THORNTON, J. Action to quiet title to a tract of land in Fresno county. Judgment passed in favor of plaintiff and intervenor. The defendants, Creed and Wigginton, appeal from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. The evidence is sufficient to justify the decision of the court below. The decision is not against the law. There are findings upon all the material issues. The issue as to the possession of plaintiff at the commencement of the action was entirely immaterial. The question of title, as between plaintiff and defendants, was to be passed on, and the defendants might have been in possession without title, and the plaintiff might have had title, though out of possession. The title of the litigants here did not turn on their possession, had at the time of or prior to the commencement of the action.

As far as was necessary to the determination of the issue joined as to the assessment for taxes of the land in suit set up by defendants, the facts were sufficiently found. It is averred in a cross-complaint filed by defendants, which was answered by plaintiff, that the land was assessed to C. E. Gaxiola by the assessor between the first Mondays of March and July, for the year 1880. This was denied in the answer of plaintiff. The same matters were averred in a cross-complaint of defendants to intervenor's complaint, which was on motion stricken out, but allowed to stand as answer to intervenor's complaint. Under the statute all the averments of the answer in relation to the matter of assessment must be considered as denied by the intervenor. As said above, the facts were sufficiently found as to the issue joined as to the assessment.

---

[1] Concerning the necessity of complainant's possession of the lands in suits to quiet title, see Gage v. Curtis, (Ill.) 14 N. E. Rep. 30, and note; Ely v. Railroad Co., (Ariz.) 19 Pac. Rep. 6, and cases cited; Illingsworth v. Stanley, (Kan.) Id. 352.

The issues joined as to the levy of assessment and payment of taxes by defendants during the time they were in possession, and as to any adverse possession of defendants, were entirely immaterial. The defendants set up no possession by them, adverse or otherwise, prior to March 1, 1881, and as the complaint herein was filed on the 21st of August, 1884, their possession, conceding it to have been adverse from the 1st of March, 1881, did not continue for the period of five years before action brought, which was required to give them a title. The assessment and payment of taxes on the land while they were in possession were only necessary to make out their title by adverse possession. If the adverse possession did not continue for five years before action brought, the payment of taxes by defendants invested them with no right to the land sued for.

As a deduction from the foregoing views, it was entirely immaterial whether the court found on the issues last mentioned or not.

The defendants claim under a tax deed in which it is recited that the land in suit was assessed "to C. E. Gaxiola, and all owners and claimants." That such a deed is void on its face has been frequently held by this court. Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 524; Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 367; Brady v. Dowden, 59 Cal. 51; Bosworth v. Webster, 64 Cal. 2. Conceding that the assessment of this land was regular and valid, it cannot impart validity to the deed. "A void deed cannot be made valid by proof of a valid assessment." Grimm v. O'Connell, and Hearst v. Egglestone, supra.

We are inclined to think that a proper showing was made to let in the deed from Pearson to Hearst. But if this deed were excluded there should be no reversal. Pearson would then be entitled to recover the whole land against defendants, who show no title. It is of no moment to the defendants that the court has adjudged one-half the land to Hearst and the other half to Pearson. They were not at all prejudiced by the judgment. The case might have been as well tried without the intervention of Hearst as with it.

We will add here (though it is hardly necessary or material) that Hearst must be held to have had notice of the title of defendants, who claimed under a deed regularly recorded, and of the pendency of the action, if a proper notice of its pendency was filed. As to any title to the land, the rule is that the purchaser must look out,—caveat emptor. The law fixed notice on Hearst of the title of defendants, and of the pendency of the action, whether they appeared in the abstract of title which was presented him when he paid his money and received his deed or not. But this notice could not affect his rights, for, if he had notice, he had notice of a claim of title which was naught. We find no error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

WORKS, J. I dissent. I cannot agree to the doctrine announced in Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 524, and cases following it, that a recital in a tax deed showing that the property was wrongly assessed when it was not, as a matter of fact, renders such deed void. The recital referred to is not a necessary part of the deed, and is not required to be set out. Pol. Code, §§ 3776, 3786. The certificate of purchase is required to state, when known, the name of the person assessed. This is not a requirement that it shall state how or to whom it was assessed. If assessed to unknown owners, no recital is required. The deed is required to cite the matters recited in the certificate.

The decisions referred to are based upon the assumption that the deed must state to whom or how the property is assessed. The result of the decisions is that, although the assessment and sale were properly made, the deed must be held void, and the title defeated, solely because of a false recital in the deed, which, if true, would show the assessment to have been invalid; and this, too, where the recital is one which, by a fair construction of the sections of the Code relating to the subject, need not be set out in the deed at all, and should be treated as surplusage.

In my judgment, the cases cited in support of this doctrine were wrongly decided, and should be overruled.

(78 Cal. 149)

HILL v. MILLER. (Nos. 12,523, 12,643.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 25, 1889.)

PARTNERSHIP—FIRM PROPERTY—PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS.

When one entering a partnership puts in an invention as a part of the capital stock, a patent obtained thereon during the existence of the partnership becomes partnership property, without a written assignment of an interest from the patentee to his partner.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; JOHN W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

Action by Joseph F. Hill against Samuel H. Miller, for a settlement of partnership accounts. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Joseph H. Budd and Grove L. Johnson, for appellant. McKune & George, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Action to establish partnership in a hay-press, and to settle partnership accounts in which a judgment for plaintiff was entered and given. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he prosecutes these appeals,—one from the judgment, and the other from the order denying a new trial. The evidence is sufficient to justify the decision of the court below. The court below found that the defendant put in the hay-press as a part of the capital stock, for which a patent was afterwards issued to him. The patent was obtained for the hay-press while the copartnership was in existence, and while the plaintiff and defendant as copartners were manufacturing the hay-presses. We think the court properly held that the patent so issued under an agreement that the hay-press should go into the partnership as part of its stock belonged to the partnership. It is a matter of no consequence that there was no written assignment of a half interest in the patent by defendant to plaintiff. The plaintiff, as a partner, became in equity the owner of one-half of the patent, though the agreement was by parol. On this point see Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, which is adverse to defendant's contention, and which sustains the conclusion here reached. We find no error in the record.

The judgment in cause No. 12,523 and the order in cause No. 12,643 are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J

78 Cal. 41

PEOPLE v. O'BRIEN. (No. 20,456.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.
   In a prosecution for murder, an objection to the admission in evidence of the coat worn by the deceased at the time of the homicide, because it was not shown to be in the same condition as when taken from the body of the deceased, will not be considered, where such objection was not specifically made, but counsel for the defendant objected on another ground.
2. SAME—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.
   An instruction that the jury should gather the intent with which the homicide was committed from all the circumstances surrounding it is not erroneous, as precluding the consideration of the testimony of the defendant on the question of intent, where the jury are also instructed to weigh the testimony of all the witnesses and to judge the testimony of defendant fairly, and apply the same tests to his testimony, so far as they were applicable, that they would apply to that of other witnesses.
3. HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE.
   An instruction that the plea of self-defense cannot be sustained in behalf of a person who seeks his adversary, armed at the time with a deadly weapon, and provokes a quarrel, and during such quarrel feloniously uses a deadly weapon, and takes the life of his adversary, is not erroneous, where the jury are also instructed that a person is not deprived of the right to defend himself because he invited his opponent by words to a fight, or because he began the affray, if he afterwards, and before the fatal blow is struck, endeavors to withdraw from the combat.
4. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.
   A new trial will not be granted on account of newly-discovered evidence that the deceased was seen to raise a dagger to strike the defendant at the time of the homicide, where the defendant and another witness had testified to the same effect.
5. SAME—REFUSAL TO GIVE INSTRUCTIONS.
   Where the jury are fully and correctly instructed on certain points, the refusal of the court to give further instruction on the same points is not error.

PATERSON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

P. Reddy, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree. The judgment directs imprisonment for 10 years in the state prison at San Quentin.

The first point made by appellant is that the court erred in admitting in evidence the coat worn by the deceased at the time of his death. It is said that there was no evidence to show that it was in the same condition at the trial that it was in when taken from the body of the deceased,—no evidence that there were any cuts in the coat or vest, or that the part of the body on which the wound was inflicted was covered by the coat or vest. It has been held that clothing worn by the deceased at the time of the homicide is admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestæ. It is frequently important evidence, tending to prove the violence of the blow, and the course or direction of the bullet or knife. People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 391; People v. Knapp, 71 Cal. 1, 11 Pac. Rep. 793.

It is true, as stated by counsel for appellant, that there is nothing to show whether the coat was in the same condition as when taken from the body of the deceased, but no objection was made to the introduction of the coat in evidence upon that ground. The ground of objection was "that the best evidence is already in,—the evidence of the wound as shown by the doctor,—and that is superior to any holes in the old clothes." To entitle the defendant to the benefit of the point he now makes, we think there should have been a specific objection to the clothes on the ground that the prosecution had not shown that they were in the same condition at the trial as when they were taken from the deceased.

It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction: "And if you entertain a reasonable doubt, after consideration of all the evidence in the case, as to whether the defendant acted in self-defense, you should acquit the defendant." The instruction was properly refused. The court fully and correctly instructed the jury on the question of self-defense and reasonable doubt.

The following instruction was refused: "You are instructed that if, after consideration of all evidence in the case, you have a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant or the deceased was the aggressor, you should give the defendant the benefit of that doubt." For the same reasons, in holding that the refusal to give the first instruction quoted was not error, we think there was no error prejudicial to the defendant in refusing to give this instruction.

The court gave the following instruction: "As to the question of intention, gentlemen, you must arrive at it from all the circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged act which is charged to be criminal. Of course you will understand that we cannot look into the mind, and see what its workings are. We cannot bring a photograph of the human mind, and exhibit it to you so as to demonstrate clearly and absolutely what the workings of such minds are. Hence, from necessity, the law says you shall gather the intention with which an act is done from all the circumstances surrounding the commission." It is contended that the jury were bound under this instruction to look to the circumstances alone for evidence or proof of the intent with which the act of the defendant was committed. The latter testified that he stabbed the deceased with the intention and for the purpose of preventing the deceased from stabbing him. It is said that the defendant's testimony on the question of intent, being no part of the res gestæ, or of the "circumstances surrounding the commission of the act," therefore, under the instruction last quoted, the jury could not consider the defendant's testimony on the question of intention. We cannot agree with counsel in his view of the effect of this instruction. The jury were instructed that, in determining whether the defendant had reasonable grounds for believing that he was in danger of losing his life or receiving great bodily harm, etc, they "should consider all these facts, in connection with all the other evidence in the case, in determining whether the deceased commenced the affray, and whether the defendant acted in self-defense." The court further said: "You will weigh carefully the testimony of all the witnesses in the case, and give to their testimony such credit and weight as in your consciences you believe them entitled to." Speaking of the defendant's testimony, the jury were told not to disregard or discredit it solely because the defendant was accused of crime, but that they should judge of his testimony fairly and considerately, applying the same tests, as far as they were applicable to his testimony, that they would apply to all the other witnesses in the case.

The most serious question in the case is that which relates to the following instruction, which was given by the court: "To justify a homicide, the danger menacing the defendant must be present, or apparently so to him; and it must be imminent, or appear so to him, at the time of his acting; and the killing must be done on a well-founded belief that it was necessary for the defendant to kill the deceased at the time to save himself from death, or from great bodily injury. The appearance of danger to life or limb which will justify a man in taking the life of another, must be an honest one,—one that is well grounded, or apparently so to him, and must arise out of a reasonable cause. A case which originates in the fault of the person himself, in a quarrel which he has provoked and brought on, in a danger which he has voluntarily brought upon himself by his own misconduct, cannot be considered reasonable or sufficient in law to support a well-grounded apprehension of imminent danger to his person, and which will support the plea of self-defense. * * * And again, let me say to you, gentlemen, that no person, when he is safe and secure from danger, has a right to seek his adversary, being armed at the time with a dangerous or deadly weapon, and, after seeking his adversary, then provoke a quarrel with that adversary; and during that quarrel, thus provoked or invited by himself, to feloniously use a dangerous or deadly weapon, and take his life, and then come into court and claim that he acted in self-defense. The right to take human life, and justify it on the ground of self-defense, is based upon necessity, or apparent necessity, at the time of the killing."

It is claimed that under this instruction the defendant could not have the benefit of the plea of self-defense, however remote or trifling the fault might be, and no matter what the intention of the defendant was at the time the cause originated with him; that the jury were informed, if they found the defendant guilty of any misconduct, they should deny him the benefit of the plea of self-defense without regard to the degree or character of his misconduct. If the instruction had not been qualified by others given directly in connection with it, we should be inclined to hold with the appellant, but the court in the same instruction said: "And in that connection, gentlemen, I am asked to instruct you, and I do instruct you in the words asked, and which you will consider as part of the charge of the court, binding upon you, that a party is not deprived of the right to defend himself because he may have by words invited the other to fight. Such invitation does not warrant the party challenged to make an assault with a deadly weapon. Neither is a party deprived of the right to defend his person from a felonious assault because he began the affray, if he afterwards, and before the fatal blow was struck, in good faith endeavored to withdraw from the combat. * * * To justify a person in killing another in self-defense it must appear * * * that the person killed was the assailant, or that the slayer had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle before the mortal blow was given."

Taking the different portions of the instruction together, we think the jury must have understood the court to say that a person who arms himself with a deadly weapon for the purpose of seeking his adversary, and provoking a quarrel with him, cannot feloniously use such weapon to take the life of his adversary, and then come into court and claim that he acted in self-defense. The jury were told in very clear terms that a party is not deprived of the right to defend his person from a felonious assault because he began the affray, if he afterwards, and before the fatal blow was struck, in good faith endeavored to withdraw from the combat. We therefore cannot say that the court erred.

We have discussed the charge of the court upon the assumption that it is a part of the record herein. On the 27th day of April, 1888, there was filed in the court below a bill of exceptions, duly certified and signed by the judge, but the oral charge of the court is not incorporated into the bill. There is in the transcript a copy of what purports to be a charge to the jury given by the judge at the trial of this case, and filed by the clerk on February 8, 1888, but it is in no way authenticated. The clerk certifies "the foregoing [including this document] to be full, true, and correct copies of the various papers of record and on file in my [his] office in the above-entitled cause, and that the same constitute the transcript on appeal;" but the copy is not approved by the judge, and has not even the certificate of the official reporter as to its correctness. As was said in People v. January, 19 Pac. Rep. 258, "the clerk cannot give verity to what purports to be the instructions given or refused, by inserting them in the judgment roll."

It is claimed that the motion for a new trial ought to have been granted on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. Waiving the objection which is made by the attorney general that acts of diligence in discovering what the witnesses would testify to are not shown in the transcript, we think that the newly-discovered evidence is cumulative. The court below doubtless considered it to be such, and was of the opinion that the verdict of the jury would not be different if the testimony of the proposed witnesses could be had on a new trial. The principal fact stated in the affidavits on motion for a new trial is that the affiants therein saw Rosengrave raise a knife or dagger to strike the defendant at the time of the difficulty. But the testimony of the defendant, and of the witness White, is to the same effect, and the case, so far as the defendant's theory is concerned, was put fairly before the jury upon the hypothesis that Rosengrave had, in fact, first assaulted the defendant with a knife or dagger.

Judgment and order affirmed.

I dissent: PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 136

In re CASEMENT'S ESTATE. (No. 12,815.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 17. 1889.)

1. WILLS—CONTEST—DECISION AS TO LEGATEES—FINAL ORDER—APPEAL.
In an action to determine which of three corporations is the legatee meant in a will, an order awarding the legacy to the executors as part of the residuary fund, and determining that neither claimant is entitled thereto, is not a final distribution from which an appeal can be taken by one of the claimants.

2. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.
In such case it is not error of which the claimant can complain that the court improperly vacated an order previously made, by which the executors were discharged from their trust, and reinstated them, and awarded the fund to them, as the claimant, not being the legatee entitled thereto, could not be affected by the orders mentioned.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

Proceedings for distribution under the will of Emily Casement, deceased. From an order made therein the Old People's Home, a corporation claiming a legacy under the will, appeals.

Charles F. Hanlon, for appellant. J. M Fulweiler, for respondents.

WORKS, J. The deceased died testate, and by her will bequeathed "to the Old Ladies' Home of San Francisco $1,000." After the issuance of letters testamentary, the Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies' Home filed a complaint, claiming to be entitled to the legacy above mentioned, and asking that the same be distributed to it. An answer was filed by the Old People's Home, making the same claim, and a like answer and claim was made by the Sisters of Mercy. While these different claims were pending, there was an order made by the court that the executors be finally discharged from their trust, and that the money be paid to the clerk of the court, to be held by him until the rights of the claimants thereto be determined by the court. Subsequently the court ordered that "J. W. Fulweiler be, and he is hereby, appointed to represent the executors of the estate of Emily Casement, deceased, as the residuary legatee in the matter of the contested legacy, and that said matter be heard March 20, 1888." Thereafter the said Fulweiler, pursuant to said order, filed what is termed a complaint on the part of O. W. Hollenbeck and John Butler, alleging that they, as such executors, were the residuary legatees under said will, and were the executors of said estate, setting out the bequest contained in said will; and further alleging that there was no such institution in said San Francisco, Cal., known as the "Old Ladies' Home;" that there were three institutions in said city that, among other things, cared for old ladies, or old women, as follows: "The Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies' Home," "The Old People's Home," and the "Sisters of Mercy;" that it was not the intention of the said deceased to bequeath the said sum of $1,000 to either of said claimants; that each of them were corporations organized under the laws of the state of California prior to the year 1870, and were inhibited by the laws of said state from taking property by will; that, theretofore, said court had made its order discharging said petitioners from their trust as the executors of the last will and testament of said deceased; and praying that said order of the court, discharging said petitioners as such executors, be vacated and set aside. Each of the corporations above named filed answers to this complaint, reasserting their claims to the legacy, and denying the material allegations of the petition. The court entered an order vacating the former order of the court, discharging the executors, and proceeded to a hearing of the questions presented by the several claims of said legacy. The findings of the court are to the effect that neither of said claimants is entitled to said legacy; that the executors are the residuary legatees under said will, and, as such, entitled to the same; and the judgment of the court is rendered accordingly. The Old People's Home moved for a new trial, which was denied, and it appeals from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

The appellant contends that the court below had no power to vacate the order discharging the executors, and to reinstate them as such executors by a subsequent order. Conceding this, we do not see how the appellant was or could have been injured thereby. The only material questions presented by the several claimants were whether either, and, if so, which one, of them was entitled to the legacy in question. The reinstatement of the executors was unnecessary to the determination of these questions. The court found and adjudged that the appellant was not the legatee named in the will, and that it was not, therefore, entitled to the money. This being the case, it was wholly immaterial to it whether the legacy went to one of the other claimants, or back to the persons who were claiming to be the executors of the will, and, as such, entitled to the money as residuary legatees. Therefore, if the court erred in making the order complained of, it was harmless.

It is contended that the order of distribution, made in connection with the order discharging the executors, was conclusive, and could not be set aside on motion. This may also be conceded, for the purposes of this case, as it in no way affected the rights of the appellant, or any of the other claimants of this legacy. It simply provided that the money be paid to the clerk, and held by him until the rights of the claimants be determined.

So it is urged that the judgment of the court that the executors were entitled to the legacy as residuary legatees was void, because there were no executors. We may concede this, also, and how is the appellant injured? It was enough that the judgment was against the appellant's claim. So much of the decree as provides that the same be paid to the executors may be treated as surplusage, so far as this appeal is concerned. The same may be said of the claim made that the court erred in failing to find upon the issue that the executors were barred and estopped to claim the legacy by said decree of distribution, and by failing to file a petition for the legacy within the time required by law. If the appellant was not entitled, it cannot be heard to complain that the property was decreed to some one else in the same condition, and therefore these were immaterial issues, in view of the finding and judgment against appellant's claim.

The next contention is that parol evidence was competent to show that the testatrix meant the appellant by the ambiguous term she adopted in her will. The court may have so understood it, as such evidence was heard without objection. It is argued by counsel for appellant, with great earnestness, that such evidence was competent to explain what is claimed to be an ambiguity in the terms of the will, but there is no such question before us. All of the evidence offered by the appellant was admitted by the court below. We think it may be seriously questioned whether the court did not err, in this respect, in appellant's favor, but we express no opinion upon it.

The question whether or not a charitable corporation can take by will is very elaborately argued, but there is nothing in the record to indicate that the court below held to the contrary, or that it based its decision upon any such ground. The court below heard the evidence, and found against the appellant. As the case is presented to us, we must assume that the court found that the evidence was insufficient to entitle the appellant to the legacy. It will be seen by the statement of the case that the name of the legatee in the will is not identical with the name of either of the three claimants. The bequest was to the "Old Ladies' Home of San Francisco." The corporate name of the appellant is "The Old People's Home," and one of the other claimants, "The Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies' Home," and the other the "Sisters of Mercy."

The point is made by counsel for appellant, and elaborately argued, that there was such an ambiguity in the will as might be so explained as to show that the appellant was interested as the beneficiary under the will, and that the evidence introduced was sufficient to show that fact. As we have said, the court below must have acquiesced in the view that the evidence was competent, as the testimony of witnesses on the point was heard. There was evidence on the part of appellant and the respondent the Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies' Home, attempting to show that each of them was the person referred to in the will; and the court below having heard all the evidence, and found it to be insufficient to entitle either of them to the legacy, we cannot disturb the finding. We may suggest, however, that, as the final order of distribution did not dispose of this legacy, and no disposition has yet been made of it, that it is still subject to the claim of the parties to this action. We may say further that the respondent the Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies' Home comes more nearly within the provisions of the will than either of the other claimants, and that, under the liberal rules of construction applicable to legacies to charitable institutions, the court might properly have distributed the money to it. But, as it is not appealing, the question is not before us.

We are of opinion that there has been no final judgment or order of distribution in this case from which an appeal can be allowed. If any errors have been committed in construing the will the court below can correct them on making final distribution.

Appeal dismissed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 141

PEOPLE ex rel Attorney General v. EICHELROTH, County Physician.

(No. 12,460.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 19, 1889.)

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS—"SUITABLE GRADUATE."

The words "suitable graduate in medicine," as used in the county government act Cal. § 25, subd. 5, providing that the board of supervisors shall appoint some suitable graduate in medicine to attend the indigent sick, etc., mean a person legally licensed to practice medicine under the laws of the state, and are not confined to college graduates.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Proceedings in the nature of quo warranto against W. E. Eichelroth, county physician of Tuolumne county. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and F. P. Otis, for appellant. P. Reddy, W. H. Metson, F. W. Street, and F. D. & G. W. Nicol, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action to oust the defendant from the office of county physician of Tuolumne county, on the ground that he was not at the time of his appointment, and is not now, "a suitable graduate in medicine."

On March 8, 1887, the board of supervisors of Tuolumne county appointed the defendant physician for the county hospital and jail and indigent sick of said county for the term of one year. The act under which the appointment was made provides that "the board shall also appoint (not let to the lowest bidder) some suitable graduate in medicine to attend such indigent sick or otherwise dependent poor." County Government Act, § 25, subd. 5. The case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, and the court below rendered judgment for the defendant.

The defendant has been in the continuous practice of medicine and surgery for about 43 years, in this state, since 1852. During the 14 years last past he has been the county physician of Tuolumne county, and while engaged in the practice of medicine and sugery has attended to the indigent sick of said county. He studied medicine for one year in the university of Yena, Germany, and has been superintendent of hospitals in different parts of this country; but has never received a diploma from any medical college, and never was graduated at any college, school, or university which confers the degree of doctor of medicine. Under the act of April 3, 1876, the state medical society of this state appointed a board of examiners. The defendant went before said board of examiners, and, after being duly examined, received from said board, on the 13th day of December, 1876, a certificate and license in due form, signed by the members of the board, authorizing him to practice medicine and surgery in this state.

The case turns on the meaning of the words "some suitable graduate in medicine." Technically the word "graduate" implies a degree and regular curriculum. Webster defines the verb "graduate," "to pass to, or to receive, a degree in a college or university." But we do not think it necessary to give to the word, as used in this statute, a strict and technical definition. In the construction of a statute, the intention of the legislature is to be ascertained, not so much from the phraseology in which the intent has been expressed, as the general tenor and scope of legislation on the subject. Palache v. Insurance Co., 42 Cal. 419; End. Interp. St. § 76. The purpose of legislation on the subject before us was to prevent persons not properly qualified from practicing medicine in this state, and to prevent injury to helpless people under the protection of the county, through the incompetency of the physician in charge of the hospitals and jails. For that purpose the board of examiners, composed of competent physicians, was provided for; and said board was required to make such an examination of applicants as would show their qualification to practice medicine and surgery. The tests of qualification to practice medicine in this state are of two kinds: First, the diploma from a medical college or incorporated society; and, second, a satisfactory examination before the board. The evidence required in the first class of cases to entitle the applicant to practice is a diploma and certificate of the board; and in the second class a certificate showing that the holder thereof has been duly examined and is entitled to practice. We do not think it was the intention of the legislature to provide that while those confined in the jails or hospitals might be treated by a physician holding a diploma from some medical institute, authorized by law to confer the degree of doctor of medicine, a physician who had passed a satisfactory examination before the board of examiners of the state medical society of this state should not be qualified or allowed by law to treat such patients. The words "suitable graduate in medicine," we think, as used in the act before us, mean one legally licensed to practice medicine and surgery under the laws of this state. It cannot be said that the meaning of the words is clear, and in such cases the statute should be give such construction as will not deprive the person interested in its construction of a substantial right. People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 72.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; WORKS, J.; McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

78 Cal. 150

DOE v. SANGER et al. (No. 12,847.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 25, 1889.)

PLEADING—COMPLAINT—DEMURRER—AMBIGUITY—BAR OF LIMITATIONS.

A complaint is not demurrable for ambiguity and uncertainty because it might appear on the proofs that some part of the damages claimed was barred by limitation.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Trespass by J. S. Doe against Casper M. Sanger, Daniel Wells, Jr., W. H. Metcalf, Charles F. Bradley, and the Oro Grande Mining Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

Harris & Gregg, for appellants. R. S. Mesick, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of trespass upon certain mining property. A demurrer was filed to the amended complaint, and overruled, an answer was filed, a trial had, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff, from which this appeal is taken, and the reason urged for its reversal is, as alleged, that the demurrer ought to have been sustained.

The trespass is averred, in the amended complaint, to have taken place "on or about the 30th day of June, 1886, and prior thereto from about the 1st day of November, 1883, until said 30th day of June, 1886." The suit was brought on the 28th day of April, 1887. The grounds of the demurrer are that the complaint is ambiguous and uncertain, and that part of the damages claimed is barred by subdivision 2, § 338, Code Civil Proc.

There is no uncertainty or ambiguity as to the nature and character of the cause of action set up in the complaint. It might happen that under a pleading in the answer of the statute of limitations it would appear upon the proofs made that some portion of the damages claimed by the complaint was barred, but that would not make the allegation of the complaint doubtful as to what damages were claimed, their character, and during what time they were alleged to have been suffered.

The fact that a cause of action, as set out in the complaint, does not on its face show whether or not it is barred by the statute of limitations, would not defeat a recovery. It could only be determined on the trial of the case whether the whole or any part of the damages claimed was barred by the statute. Unless it appears upon the face of the complaint that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations, that "objection cannot be raised by demurrer." Wise v. Hogan, 19 Pac. Rep. 278, and cases cited.

No prejudicial error appearing, we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment of affirmance for the reasons stated; and upon the further ground that where it appears, as in this case it does appear, that the matter in respect to which a complaint is peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, such ambiguity is not a ground of demurrer of which defendant can avail himself.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 60

WIXON v. DEVINE. (No. 12,788.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 25, 1889.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge.

Van Clief & Wehe, for appellant. Smith & Ford and S. B. Davidson, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. 1. The judgment of the court below was entered on July 6, 1887. Notice of appeal was filed and served nearly a year thereafter, to-wit, June 29, 1888. As there was no motion for a new trial, therefore the evidence should not be considered.

2. There are no assignments of error, or specifications of insufficiency of the evidence, in the bill of exceptions.

3. The findings cover the issues, are against the appellant, and, although the record is not in a condition to require of us an examination of the evidence, it is apparent from a cursory review of it that the findings are correct.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J; MCFARLAND, J.

---

78 Cal. 109

In re OXARART'S ESTATE. (No. 12,744.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 12, 1889.)

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—ADJUDICATION OF HEIRSHIP—CONTINUANCE.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1664, provides for the adjudication of the right of a person claiming to be heir of a decedent upon a petition filed for that purpose, which adjudication shall be conclusive, and that, when no such adjudication has been made under said section, the heirship and right to distribution of any person may be determined upon proceedings for final distribution of an estate. Held, that the fact that a petition has been filed, and citation issued thereon, is no ground for a continuance, at the instance of the petitioner, of proceedings by the executor of the estate for final distribution, begun on the day citation issued on said petition.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. P. GARDINER, Judge.

Proceedings for the settlement of the estate of Gaston Oxarart, deceased, of whose will Simon F. Gless was executor. Adele Freeman filed a petition claiming to be the sole heir of testator, and asking an adjudication of her rights. The executor filed a petition for distribution under the will, and Mrs. Freeman moved for a continuance of a hearing thereof until a decision could be had upon her petition, which was denied, and she appeals.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1664, under which Mrs. Freeman filed her petition, and upon which she relies in support of her motion for a continuance, provides that any person claiming to be heir to a deceased person, whose estate is in process of administration, may, at any time after the expiration of one year from the issue of letters testamentary or of administration, file a petition to have the persons to whom distribution should be made determined. Notice thereof shall be given as therein prescribed, and the manner of proceeding shall be as in other civil actions. The judgment of the court shall determine the heirship to the deceased, and the ownership and distribution of his estate, and shall be final. "Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to exclude the right, upon final distribution of any estate, to contest the question of heirship, title, or interest in the estate so distributed, where the same shall not have been determined under the provisions of this section."

J. W. Towner, for appellant. Chapman & Hendrick, Smith & Clark, T. B. Brown, and M. V. Biscailuz, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The decedent died testate in the county of Los Angeles on the 26th day of April, 1886. By his will the deceased devised all his estate to the respondent herein, Simon F. Gless. This will was allowed and admitted to probate on the 4th day of February, 1887, and letters testamentary were on the same day issued to the devisee above named, who was by the will appointed executor thereof. On the 9th day of February, 1888, the appellent herein, Adele Freeman, filed a petition in the superior court of Los Angeles county under the provisions of section 1664, Code Civil Proc., claiming to be the only surviving child and heir of the testator, and setting forth that the will of the decedent omitted to provide for the petitioner, his only child, and that it did not appear from the will this omission was intentional. The petition seems to have complied with the requirements of section 1664. On the same day in February, 1888, the court below made an order directing service of notice to all persons interested in the estate to appear in said court, and file their appearance therein, in person or by attorney, on or before the 31st day of May, 1888, and to set forth their claims of heirship, etc., on said estate, as required by the section above referred to. The foregoing notice was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff for service on the 16th of February, 1888. On the same day, after the making of the order above mentioned, Gless filed in the same court his final account as executor of the estate of Oxarart, and a petition for the distribution thereof. Thereupon, on the same day, the court made an order fixing the 21st day of February, 1888, for the hearing of this account and petition. On the 16th of February, 1888, the petitioner herein, Adele Freeman, served on Gless notice of motion for a continuance of the hearing of the above petition for distribution until the determination by the court of the claim of heirship in the estate of Oxarart, made by her, and of the rights of all persons in the estate, in accordance with the prayer of her petition, filed as above stated. The notice stated as the ground of the motion the following: "That when a petition has been duly filed under said section 1664, and said petition and other proceedings thereupon are pending, distribution cannot be made until the court has ascertained and declared the rights of all persons as aforesaid in the manner prescribed in said section; and upon the ground that said Adele Freeman, having filed her petition claiming to be heir to the said deceased, and entitled to distribution of his estate, is entitled to have her rights and claims ascertained and determined in the mode and manner provided in said section in preference to any other mode allowed by law in cases where proceedings are not had or taken under said section, and before any order of distribution is made in said estate." When the matter of the petition for distribution was called for hearing on the 21st of February, 1888, the motion for a continuance was first heard and denied. To this ruling petitioner, Adele Freeman, excepted, and appeals from the judgment herein.

That the question of the heirship of Adele Freeman might as well have been heard and determined on the hearing of the petition for distribution of the estate is too plain to admit of doubt. That the trial of such question is regular when the application for distribution is brought on for hearing, and no previous determination of such question has been had in proceedings taken under section 1664, we think is clear. This appears from the provisions of the section. See last sentence of section 1664.

We cannot conceive that the pendency of the proceeding under section 1664 excludes the usual proceeding for the determination of the question of heirship at the hearing of the application for distribution. When, in advance of any determination of the court of the questions involved in the proceeding under section 1664, an application is made for distribution, we see no reason why the court should not hear the latter, determine all questions of heirship, and dismiss the other proceeding.

It will be observed that the application for a continuance here was not made on the ground that the applicant was not ready to proceed with the hearing of the question of her right as heir of Oxarart. She did not urge as a ground for postponement of the hearing that the witnesses she wanted to offer to establish her claim were not present, although regularly and in time summoned, or that she desired to introduce documentary evidence in existence, which she could procure, but which in the exercise of all proper diligence on her part she had been unable to procure; but entirely upon the ground that she had a short time before commenced proceedings for the trial and determination of a claim of heirship preferred by her, and which was still pending and undetermined.

From the views heretofore expressed, from which it appears that the question desired to be tried could as well be heard and determined at the hearing of the application for distribution as on the proceedings commenced under the section of the statute above mentioned, the question of postponement became one merely of discretion on the part of the court below. The exercise of this discretion by the court, unless abused, this court will not interfere with. In our judgment, the court very properly exercised its discretion in refusing to postpone the cause. If resort is to be had to the provisions of section 1664 to delay the settlement and distribution of estates, it had better never been passed. We have no doubt that the object of its enactment was to expedite such distribution, by enabling persons claiming interests in estates to have their claims determined in advance of the application for distribution, and when such application was made, and came on for hearing, the court would have no trial of such questions to make, and would at once decree to such person, ascertained to be entitled, the portion of the estate adjudged to him.

The determination of the proceedings initiated by the appellant in this court under section 1664 would have involved much delay, and would have deprived the devisee of the estate of his right on the showing made of having the question determined then and there on the application for distribution made by him.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 154

PEOPLE v. HUSON et al. (No. 7,207.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 25, 1889.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—LIABILITY OF SURETY—ESTOPPEL.
   The sureties in an official bond are estopped from denying the appointment of the principal to the office, where such appointment is recited in the bond, and due execution of the bond is admitted.
2. BONDS—OF OFFICIALS—EVIDENCE OF APPROVAL.
   The approval of a bond on which is written under the word "approved" the names of individuals, without showing that they constitute the board required to approve it, or that they approved it officially, is sufficiently shown by the testimony of the secretary of the board and by the minutes.
3. SAME—ACTION ON THE BOND—SUGGESTION OF DEFECTS.
   Under Pol. Code Cal. § 963, declaring that an official bond is not void for defects in the approval, but the state or party may by action suggest the defect, and recover the demand from the officer and sureties, failure to approve an official bond does not release the sureties, and the defect is sufficiently suggested by attaching the bond to, and making it a part of, the complaint in an action upon it.

4. SAME—ACCEPTANCE—FILING.
An official bond which is delivered to and informally approved by the board required to approve it, is accepted, and becomes obligatory without an indorsement of filing.

5. SAME—EVIDENCE OF BREACH.
In an action on an official bond for failure to pay over public moneys, receipts signed by the officer showing the collection of public moneys are prima facie evidence to charge the sureties.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; OLIVER P. EVANS, Judge.

Action by the people against Thomas R. Huson, E. J. Lewis, and T. McCarthy. Plaintiffs appeal. Pol. Code Cal. § 963, is as follows: "Whenever an official bond does not contain the substantial matter or conditions required by law, or there are any defects in the approval or filing thereof, it is not void so as to discharge such officer and his sureties; but they are equitably bound to the state or party interested, and the state or such party may, by action in any court of competent jurisdiction, suggest the defect in the bond, approval or filing, and recover the proper and equitable demand or damages from such officer, and the persons who intended to become and were included as sureties in such bond."

T. C. Coogan, W. W. Morrow, and J. B. Lamar, for appellants. W. M. Pierson, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover the sum of $1,045.10, money alleged to have been received in an official capacity, and misappropriated by defendant Huson, and is based upon what is called his official bond.

It is alleged in the complaint that Huson was appointed to the position of wharfinger by the board of state harbor commissioners on the 30th day of August, 1877, and that he entered upon the duties of his office on the 1st day of September, 1877, and continued in the office until the 30th day of December following; that the duties of a wharfinger were to collect and receive the revenue arising from dockage, wharfage, cranage, rents, and tolls on the wharves in the city and county of San Francisco, and that while Huson held and exercised the functions of his said office he collected in his official capacity a large amount of public money received from dockage, wharfage, etc., which he did not pay over, and on demand has neglected and refused to pay over to the board of state harbor commissioners. It is further alleged "that previous to entering upon the duties of his said office, the said defendant, Thomas R. Huson, took the oath of office required by law, and, together with the said defendants, T. McCarthy and E. J. Lewis, executed and delivered to plaintiffs an official bond, a copy of which is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and, together with all its indorsements, is made a part of this complaint; that said bond was on the said 30th day of August, 1877, duly approved by the board of state harbor commissioners."

The bond referred to was dated August 30, 1877, and the condition expressed in it reads as follows: "The condition of the foregoing obligation is such that, whereas, the above-bonded Thomas R. Huson has been appointed wharfinger by and for the board of state harbor commissioners of said state, now, therefore, if the said Huson shall well, truly, and faithfully perform all official duties now required of him by law, and all such additional duties as may be imposed upon him by any law enacted subsequently to the execution of this bond, and shall pay the said board of state harbor commissioners all moneys collected by him by virtue and authority of said appointment, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect." It was indorsed: "Approved. WILLIAM BLANDING. BRUCE B. LEE. A. M. BURNS."

Only the defendants, McCarthy and Lewis, answered to the complaint. They denied, among other things, "that the defendant Huson was on the 30th day of August, 1877, duly or legally or at all appointed a wharfinger by the board of state harbor commissioners, or was appointed a wharfinger until the 31st day of August, 1877," and they further denied that his bond was ever approved or accepted by the board. When the case was called for trial, "it was admitted by both parties that the bond, which is designated as 'Exhibit A,' and is a part of this complaint in this action, was duly executed, and that all the signatures and indorsements of the bond are genuine and are what they purport to be." The trial was by the court, without a jury, and judgment was given for defendants. No findings were filed, and it does not appear upon what grounds the decision was rendered. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and, the motion being denied, appealed from the order. Since the appeal was taken respondent Lewis has died, and as to him the appeal has been dismissed.

In support of the judgment, it is urged on the part of respondent McCarthy that there was no evidence in the court below that Huson was ever appointed wharfinger. The answer to this position is that the complaint alleged his appointment, and the answer denied only that he was appointed on the day named, and admitted that he was appointed on the next day. The complaint also alleged the execution and delivery of the bond, and this was not denied. The bond recited the appointment, and was admitted at the trial to have been duly executed. The sureties were therefore estopped from denying the appointment, and no proof of that fact was necessary. "The general rule is that sureties are estopped to deny the facts recited in the obligations signed by them, and this whether the recitals are true or false in fact. Having once solemnly alleged the existence of the facts, they cannot afterwards be heard to deny it." Brandt, Sur. § 29; and see People v. Jenkins, 17 Cal. 500.

It is further urged that the bond was never approved by the board, and this is rested upon the fact that it does not appear that the persons whose names are written under the word "Approved" on the back of the bond constituted the board of harbor commissioners, nor, if they did, that they approved it as such. There are two answers to this objection: First, the secretary of the board testified that the bond was approved, and that the minutes of the board showed that fact; second, the settled rule is that the failure of the proper officers to approve an official bond will not invalidate it, nor release the sureties from their liability upon it. Pol. Code, § 963; People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 286; People v. Evans, 29 Cal. 430; Mendocino Co. v. Morris, 32 Cal. 145. And under the section of the Code above cited, if a copy of the bond be attached to and made a part of the complaint, it is a sufficient suggestion of any defect in the bond, or in the approval or filing thereof. Hubert v. Mendheim, 64 Cal. 213.

It is also claimed that there was no evidence of the filing of the bond, and hence no proof of its delivery to and acceptance by the board. But, as we have seen, the pleadings admitted its delivery, and there was, at least, an informal approval of it. Under these circumstances, we think it must be held that the bond was accepted by the board, and became obligatory on its makers, even without an indorsement of filing.

There was uncontradicted evidence that Huson, while acting as wharfinger, collected public moneys, and neglected to pay them over to the board. This was a clear violation of duty, and a breach of the obligation of his bond. There were also certain receipts offered in evidence, which were signed by Huson, and showed the collection by him of public moneys. They were objected to on the ground that they were only hearsay evidence, and were excluded by the court. In our opinion they were prima facie evidence to charge the sureties on the bond, and were admissible. Placer Co. v. Dickerson, 45 Cal. 12.

Looking at the whole record, we think the court erred in denying the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, and we therefore advise that the order be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is reversed, and cause remanded.

---

78 Cal. 63

SAN DIEGO LAND & TOWN CO. v. NEALE et al. (No. 12,743.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.
   Where land owned by defendants, the value of which could not be ascertained from any current rate of price, was condemned by plaintiff, owning an adjoining tract, for the purposes of a reservoir, evidence was admissible as to the value of defendants' land as "a reservoir site," although such tract was of no value for such purpose, except when used in connection with plaintiff's tract,—the evidence also showing that plaintiff's land was of comparatively little value for a reservoir, unless it could be used in connection with defendants' tract. SEARLS, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.
2. SAME—ELEMENTS OF VALUE.
   But in such a case it was not proper to take into consideration the fact that a dam was "already in course of construction" by plaintiff for the reservoir, and the consequent increase in value of the land of defendants sought to be condemned.[1]
3. SAME.
   And where the reservoir was to be used for irrigation purposes, the fact that the land to be condemned or the adjacent land would be considerably enhanced in value, by having irrigation facilities afforded to it, could not be considered in estimating the value of defendants' land.
4. SAME—OPINION EVIDENCE.
   Witnesses having knowledge of the surroundings, and of values, though not experts, were properly allowed to testify as to the value of defendants' land.
5. TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—IRRELEVANT TESTIMONY.
   The fact that one side is permitted to introduce irrelevant evidence will not justify the introduction of irrelevant evidence by the other side.
6. NEW TRIAL—MOTION—REHEARING ON PART OF THE ISSUES.
   Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 656, defines a new trial as a "re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury or court, or by referees." Held, where all the material issues of a case have been disposed of, a motion for a new trial may be made as to a part of the issues.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. PARKER, Judge.

Luce & Henderson and Henderson & McDonald, for appellant. Hunsaker, Britt & Lamme and J. E. Deakin, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Proceeding to condemn land for the purposes of a reservoir. It appears from the findings that the use was a public use; that the value of the land to be taken was $280 per acre, amounting in all to $98,126; that the damage to the remainder of the tract amounted to $1,805; and that the value of the improvements was $300. The plaintiff moved for a new trial as to the issue concerning the value of the land sought to be taken, but as to no other issue, and appeals from the order denying the motion.

The defendants make a preliminary objection that a party cannot move for a new trial as to a part of the issues. So far as we are advised, this precise question has not been decided in this state. But upon principle, and according to the analogies of existing rules, we think that the objection is not well taken. There is nothing in the Code either expressly forbidding or expressly authorizing such a course. The implication from the language, however, seems to sanction it. The definition of a new trial is as follows: "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury or court, or by referees." Code Civil Proc. § 656. Now, as the law-makers cannot be supposed to have thought that the majority of cases involved only one issue of fact, there is at least some implication that they intended that there might be such a thing as a new trial of a single issue, whether there were other issues or not. The analogies of other provisions and previous decisions support this view. Thus, a party may appeal from a part of a judgment or order. See cases collected in note 4, § 185, Hayne, New Trials & App. So it has been held that, where a party serves his notice of intention to move for a new trial upon only one of two defendants, it is proper to grant a new trial as to the one served, but not as to the other. Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12. And it has always been the practice (except in cases of a peculiar character) for any party who is dissatisfied with the result to move for a new trial as to himself, leaving the judgment to stand as to the other parties. And in one sense such a motion is a motion for new trial as to a part of the issues. So it is settled that, upon an appeal from the judgment, the appellate court may order a new trial as to a part of the issues, leaving the decision in force as to the remainder. Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 546; Jungerman v. Bovee, 19 Cal. 364; Kinsey v. Green, 51 Cal. 379; Le Clert v. Oullahan, 52 Cal. 253; Watson v. Cornell, Id. 91; Swift v. Canavan, Id. 419; Billings v. Everett, Id. 661, Phipps v. Harlan, 53 Cal. 87. And, if this can be done, it is difficult to assign a satisfactory reason why the party could not ask the trial court for the same relief in the first instance. The cases which hold that a motion for new trial is premature if made before all the material issues are disposed of are not in conflict with our conclusion, for in the case before us all the material issues were disposed of before the motion was made. We see no inconvenience that can result from the practice. The time to move as to the remaining issues would not be extended by a motion as to a part; and the party would lose his right to attack the findings as to the remaining issues unless the time should be extended, which could only be for a short period without the consent of the parties. And, this being so, the result would simply be the elimination of a part of the controversy, which is not in itself undesirable. The question arose in Nevada upon a similar statute, and the court, after an elaborate examination of the subject, held that a motion for new trial as to a part of the issues was permissible. Lake v. Bender, 18 Nev. 361, 4 Pac. Rep. 711, and 7 Pac. Rep. 74. We are satisfied with the rule laid down in that case. It is possible that there may be cases where the issues are so inseparably blended as to render a separation impracticable. We express no opinion as to that. But it is clear that the present case is not of that character. The preliminary objection should therefore be overruled.

---

[1] Respecting the elements of damage which may be considered in awarding compensation in condemnation proceedings, see Railroad Co. v. Story, (Mo.) 10 S. W. Rep. 203; Cox v. Railroad Co., (Iowa,) 41 N. W. Rep. 475, and note; Railroad Co. v. Ross, (Kan.) ante, 197, and note.

Upon the merits, the general features of the case are as follows: The plaintiff was the owner of a portion of a valley called the "Sweetwater Valley," and of the right to divert the waters of the Sweetwater river, and before the commencement of the proceedings had commenced to build a dam upon its own land. The defendants were the owners of a tract above the dam. There was no practical site for a dam upon defendants' land, either on the part sought to be condemned or on the remainder of the tract. But it was shown that the water collected by the plaintiff's dam would back up and flood a portion of their tract, and this is the part sought to be condemned.

We are satisfied that there was error occurring at the trial sufficient to require a reversal of the order appealed from; but, as several questions have been argued which will arise upon a retrial, we have examined them with the care which their importance demands.

1. It is contended that there was error in admitting evidence of the value of defendants' property "as a reservoir site," and in instructing the jury upon that theory; and the cases of Gilmer v. Lime Point, 19 Cal. 47, and Railroad Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247, are cited. It must be admitted that these cases in some degree sustain the position. In Gilmer v. Lime Point, the court below refused to allow a witness to be asked what was the value of the property "as a site for a fortification," and, while the judgment was reversed on another ground, the appellate court said that the exclusion of the question was proper. In the other case the lots of one of the defendants bordered on the Sacramento river, and one of the reasons for reversing the judgment was that evidence had been admitted to the effect that "in connection with the Sacramento river she claimed the right to wharf out and erect landings and warehouses." The court referred to this as "wharf privileges," and said that no franchise might ever be granted. The language of the opinion seems to imply that it had in its mind the value of the privilege as something distinct from the land, and not as an element of the value of the land itself. But in so far as these cases sustain the position of the appellant we think they are in violation of sound principles, and opposed to the overwhelming current of authority.

The word "value" is used in different senses. Bouvier, in his definition, says: "This term has two different meanings. It sometimes expresses the utility of an object, and sometimes the power of purchasing goods with it. The first may be called the value in use; the latter, the value in exchange." For the purposes of the law of eminent domain, however, the term has reference to the value in exchange or market value. There are some cases which seem to hold that the value in use to the owner is to be taken if it exceeds the market value. But it will generally be found, on a careful examination, that such cases either relate to the damage accruing to the owner from the taking, and not to the value of the property itself, or overlook the distinction between the two things. The consensus of the best-considered cases is that for the purposes in hand the value to be taken is the market value. Railroad Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 255; Dupuis v. Railway Co., 115 Ill. 99, 3 N. E. Rep. 720; Railway Co. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 388, 5 S. W. Rep. 792; Low v. Railroad Co., 63 N. H. 558, 3 Atl. Rep. 739; Searle v. Railroad Co., 33 Pa. St. 57; Railroad Co. v. Murphy, 71 Cal. 122, 11 Pac. Rep. 881; and see Cooley, Const. Lim. 565; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 487, by which is undoubtedly meant, not what the owner could realize at a forced sale, but "the price that he could obtain after reasonable and ample time such as would ordinarily be taken by an owner to make sale of like property," (Railway Co. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 390, 5 S. W. Rep. 792.) The problem, then, is to ascertain what is the market value. Now, where there is an actual demand and current rate of price there can be but little difficulty. But in many instances (as in the case before us) there is no actual demand or current rate of price,—either because there have been no sales of similar property, or because the particular piece is the only thing of its kind in the neighborhood, and no one has been able to use it for the purposes for which it is suitable, and for which it may be highly profitable to use it. In such case it has been sometimes said that the property has no market value, in the strict sense of the term. Railway Co. v. Railroad Co., 112 Ill. 607; Railway Co. v. Railroad Co., 100 Ill. 33; Railroad Co. v. Chapman, 16 Pac. Rep. 695, 696. And in one sense this is true. But it is certain that a corporation could not for that reason appropriate it for nothing. From the necessity of the case the value must be arrived at from the opinions of well-informed persons, based upon the purposes for which the property is suitable. This is not taking the "value in use" to the owner as contradistinguished from the market value. What is done is merely to take into consideration the purposes for which the property is suitable as a means of ascertaining what reasonable purchasers would in all probability be willing to give for it, which in a general sense may be said to be the market value, and in such an inquiry it is manifest that the fact that the property has not previously been used for the purposes in question is irrelevant. The current of authority sustains these views.

In Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, three islands in the Mississippi river were sought to be condemned for the purpose of a boom or storing place for floating logs. For general purposes the property was of insignificant value, but it was found to have a large value for boom purposes. It had never been used for such purposes, but there was nothing to prevent other persons or companies from engaging in the enterprise if they had seen fit to do so. It was held that the value for boom purposes must govern, and the court, per FIELD, J., (who, when on the state bench, had concurred in Gilmer v. Lime Point,) said: "In determining the value of land appropriated for public purposes, the same considerations are to be regarded as in a sale of property between private parties. The inquiry in such cases must be, what is the property worth in the market, viewed not merely with reference to the uses to which it is at the time applied, but with reference to the uses to which it is plainly adapted; that is to say, what it is worth from its availability for valuable uses. Property is not to be deemed worthless because the owner allows it to go to waste, or to be regarded as valueless because he is unable to put it to any use. Others may be able to use it, and make it subserve the necessities or conveniences of life. Its capability of being made thus available gives it a market value which can be readily estimated. So many and varied are the circumstances to be taken into account in determining the value of property condemned for public purposes that it is perhaps impossible to formulate a rule to govern its appraisement in all cases. Exceptional circumstances will modify the most carefully guarded rule; but, as a general thing, we should say that the compensation to the owner is to be estimated by reference to the uses for which the property is suitable, having regard to the existing business or wants of the community, or such as may be reasonably expected in the immediate future."

The same rule has been laid down in numerous other cases.

In Harrison v. Young, 9 Ga. 364, 365, a piece of land was sought to be condemned by a bridge company. The trial court refused to admit evidence as to the value of the land "as a bridge site," and restricted the evidence "to the actual value of the land for its agricultural and productive qualities." It was held that this was error, the court, per LUMPKIN, J., saying: "Who in making investments of capital in real estate is not influenced by the consideration that it will be valuable for a town, bridge, ferry, mill, manufactory, etc.?"

In Railroad Co. v. Ryan, 64 Miss. 399, the tract condemned was a narrow strip along the Mississippi river. Evidence was admitted to show that it was peculiarly valuable as a mill-site, although no mill was then upon it. Upon appeal it was held that the evidence was properly admitted, the court saying: "Clearly it is of insignificant value for agricultural purposes, and there is neither a wharf, a factory, or a saw-mill on it, and there may never be. But if its adaptability to these purposes, or any one of them, give it a present value, the owner is entitled to that value, though in fact no one now proposes to use it for any of these purposes."

In Railroad Co. v. Catholic Bishop, 119 Ill. 530, 10 N. E. Rep. 372, the property sought to be condemned for railroad purposes was a strip in front of a cemetery. For many years it had been rented as a marble yard, and evidence was introduced that it had a special value for restaurant purposes. It was held that this value should be considered, although the bishop would not rent it for such purposes, the court saying: "Because the proprietor of land elects to use it for one purpose rather than another, we do not think that its capacity for the use to which it is not put is improperly taken into consideration in estimating its value."

In Commissioners v. Dunlevy, 91 Ill. 49, two tracts were sought to be condemned for a public park; and it was held to be proper to prove what the property would be worth if subdivided into lots and blocks.

In Sherman v. Railroad Co., 30 Minn. 229, 15 N. W. Rep. 239, the land sought to be condemned for railroad purposes, "though at the time occupied as a farm, was situated in the vicinity of the city of St. Paul, and near certain public institutions," and in view of this it was held proper to prove its value for suburban residences. And so in other cases. See Railroad Co. v. Jacobs, 110 Ill. 416; Haslam v. Railroad Co., 64 Ill. 353; Railway Co. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 394, 5 S. W. Rep. 792; Railway v. McGehee, 41 Ark. 207; Amoskeag Co. v. Worcester, 60 N. H. 526; Low v. Railroad Co., 63 N. H. 558, 3 Atl. Rep. 739; Railroad Co. v. Warren, 6 Mont. 275, 12 Pac. Rep. 641; Goodin v. Canal Co., 18 Ohio St. 181; Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., 112 Ill. 608; In re Railroad Co., 27 Hun, 120; Railroad Co. v. Chapman, 16 Pac. Rep. 695, 696.

We think, therefore, that it was proper to show the value of the property "as a reservoir site." This is not sanctioning a remote or speculative value. It is merely taking the present value for prospective purposes

2. But it is argued that the value "as a reservoir site" should not have been taken, because there was no practicable site for a dam upon the defendants' property, the only use of which for reservoir purposes being in connection with the land of the plaintiff. But while it might perhaps have been more accurate to say "a part of a reservoir site," or for "reservoir purposes," we think this trifling verbal inaccuracy need not be noticed, and that the evidence was properly admitted. While it is true that the defendants' property had no value for reservoir purposes except in connection with the land of the plaintiff, it is equally true that the plaintiff's property had comparatively little value for such purposes except in connection with the land of the defendant; the plaintiff's own evidence being that, "with the defendants' land included, the reservoir will hold about six thousand million gallons, and without the land of the defendants it will hold only about one-tenth that quantity." And, this being the case, we can see no more reason for saying that the plaintiff can take the defendants' portion, without regard to its value for reservoir purposes, than for saying that the defendants (if they had happened to commence proceedings first) could take the plaintiff's portion upon the same basis. The question of value is distinct from the question of ownership. As is well known, the former method of ascertaining the compensation for land taken for railroad purposes was an appraisement by commissioners; and under that system it was held that the commissioners should confine themselves to ascertaining the value, and had nothing to do with the question of ownership or the distribution of the fund. Railroad Co. v. Mahoney, 29 Cal. 118. Under the present system, the compensation is to be determined by a jury, or by the court if a jury be waived. Const. art. 1, § 14. But this change in the tribunal does not change the nature of the questions to be decided. The question of value is still as distinct in its nature from the question of ownership as formerly. Suppose, for illustration, that the two sides of a canyon suitable for reservoir purposes were owned, respectively, by two persons who are joined as defendants in a proceeding to condemn the land by a water company which did not own any of the property. It would not be pretended that such company could take the property at its value for grazing or agricultural purposes (which value might be nominal) merely because it was owned by different persons. Such a proposition would be ridiculous. Now, there is no difference in principle between such a case and one where the company itself owns half of the canyon, and is seeking to acquire the other half. Nor is there any difference in principle where the company owns somewhat more than half, or the more valuable portion. The logical result of the argument for the appellant is that if the company owned but a small portion of the canyon, it could acquire all the rest, without regard to the value for the only purpose for which it might have much value, merely because the other parties did not own the whole, and had not been able or did not choose to go into the business themselves. It seems clear that such is not the law.

3. We think, however, that the court erred in allowing a remote and speculative value to be taken into consideration. A witness was allowed to give his estimate of value upon the basis of the following question: "Assuming that the plaintiff's intended reservoir will hold six thousand million gallons of water, or water sufficient to irrigate twenty thousand acres of land lying below their dam, and that the annual rainfall is sufficient to supply such a reservoir, and that there is such a quantity of land susceptible of irrigation from such a reservoir, and that its value would be enhanced at least fifty per cent. by having irrigation facilities afforded to it, and also that the reservoir would be sufficient to supply the inhabitants of National City with water, and also that without the use of the defendants' land any reservoir constructed above the plaintiff's dam as described in the complaint would hold less than one-tenth of what the reservoir, using the defendants' land, will hold, and also that a suitable dam was on the 13th day of June, 1887, already in course of construction below this reservoir site, and assuming also that there was no other site equally suitable in that immediate neighborhood for such a purpose, are you able to give an opinion as to the value of the lands sought to be condemned on the 13th day of June, 1887, for the purposes of such a reservoir?" The witness answered in the affirmative, and gave his estimate of value upon the basis stated.

There are two elements in this question which we think should not have entered into the estimate, viz.:

(a) It was not proper to base the estimate of the value of the land taken upon the fact that a dam was "already in course of construction." This was, in effect, saying that the defendants should be allowed the increase in value arising from the plaintiff's improvements; or, at any rate, a jury would be likely to get that idea from it. Now, if the improvement had been affixed by the plaintiff to the land of the defendants without any color of authority, but as a mere trespasser, it might be that the defendants would be entitled to the increased value arising from such improvement, under the rule laid down in U. S. v. Land in Monterey Co., 47 Cal. 515. We express no opinion as to that. But that is not the case here, because the dam is affixed to the plaintiff's own land. The proposition is therefore that the defendants are entitled to the benefit arising from the improvement upon the adjoining land for the purposes of which their land is sought to be taken. This seems to us inadmissible as a direct element of value. It is possible that they might get some benefit from it indirectly; that is to say, the public knowledge of a proposed improvement might cause an actual demand in the market, and a subsequent advance in the current rate of price. In such case it would be impracticable for a court to analyze the price, and determine the proportion in which any particular element contributed thereto. The scales of justice do not balance quite so delicately as that. But aside from this indirect benefit, and in a case where there is no actual current rate of price, and where in consequence the court must arrive at the value from a consideration of the uses to which the property may be put, it seems monstrous to say that the benefit arising from the proposed improvement is to be taken into consideration as an element of the value of the land. It has been a question with many courts whether the benefit arising from the proposed improvement is to be charged against the owner. See Railroad Co. v. Caldwell, 31 Cal. 373, 374. But the result of the course taken at the trial would be, not only not to charge such benefit against the owner, but to credit it to his favor, which in effect is charging it against the party who makes the improvement. There are some decisions which seem to countenance this view. But we think that the learned judges who made them overlooked the distinction above adverted to between an indirect benefit arising from an actual increase in the market price, consequent upon a knowledge by the public of the proposed improvement, and cases where there is no such actual market price, and where the value must be arrived at by allowing witnesses to base their opinions as to the value upon the purposes for which the property is suitable. We think that the correct rule in this regard is that acted on in Cobb v. Boston, 112 Mass. 183; and compare Kerr v. Commissioners, 117 U. S. 387, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 805.

(b) It was not proper to allow the witness to base his estimate of value upon the circumstance that the land susceptible of irrigation from the reservoir would be enhanced in value "at least 50 per cent. by having irrigation facilities afforded to it." This can only have been put in upon the theory that the land to be condemned would share in the increase in value, or at any rate a jury would be likely to get that idea from it. But, as stated under the preceding head, the value of the land taken is to be estimated irrespective of the benefit resulting to it from the proposed improvement, and a fortiori the estimate should be irrespective of the benefit resulting to adjacent lands. If the prospective increase in value of the adjacent land is to be taken into consideration, the prospective increase in value of the lots in National City should be so too. The reservoir, according to the question, was "sufficient to supply the inhabitants of National City with water;" and good water facilities must be supposed to increase the value of city lots as well as of country land, so that if the defendants are entitled to the prospective increase in the one case they are in the other. It seems clear, however, that such an increase in value is too remote and speculative to be considered.

We have not overlooked the fact that it appears from the plaintiff's own evidence that the value of the surrounding land would be increased in value at least 50 per cent. by having irrigation facilities afforded to it. But this does not help the respondent's case in this regard; for, in the first place, the record does not show that the plaintiff put in this evidence as bearing upon the issue as to value, It may have been put in upon the question of the necessity for the taking, while in the question above quoted it is expressly put as an element of the value. And in the second place the introduction of irrelevant evidence upon one side without objection does not justify the introduction of irrelevant evidence upon the other side. Donelly v. Curran, 54 Cal. 282.

It is to be observed that the question before us relates to the value of the land taken, and not to the damage to the remaining portion, which was not included in the motion for new trial. Whether the same rules would apply to the latter case is not a question which we need consider.

4. Upon the trial, witnesses who had more or less knowledge of surroundings and of values, but who could not be said to be experts in the strict sense of the term, were allowed to testify concerning the value of the land. We think this was proper. While it is true that the witnesses were not experts in the strict sense of the term, and that their opinions as to the value cannot in strictness be said to be a fact, yet it seems to be settled that from the necessity of the case the general rules of evidence suffer an exception in this particular.

The principle upon which this rests was laid down in People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 32, 33. In that case a person who was not an expert, but who had seen the deceased at a particular time, was allowed to state what appeared to be his condition of mind. This was held to be proper, and the court, per WALLACE, C. J., (adopting the language of a North Carolina case,[1]) said: "It approaches to knowledge, and is knowledge, so far as the imperfection of human nature will permit knowledge of these things to be acquired; and the result thus acquired should be communicated to the jury, because they have not had the opportunities of personal observation, and because in no other way can they effectually have the benefit of the knowledge gained by the observations of others."

---

[1] Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. 83.

In the subsequent case of People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 7, 14 Pac. Rep. 373, it was held, upon the authority of the preceding case, that a witness who was not an expert could be allowed to state what was the condition of the defendant as to sobriety on a certain occasion. In other states the principle of these cases has been applied to questions as to the value of property both in proceedings for eminent domain and in other cases.

In Shattuck v. Railroad Co., 6 Allen, 117, persons who were familiar with the neighborhood were allowed to give their opinions as to the value of land taken in eminent domain, and this was held to be proper; the court, per CHAPMAN, J., saying: "This is permitted as an exception to the general rule, and not strictly on the ground that such persons are experts; for such an application of that term would greatly extend its signification. The persons who testify are not supposed to have science or skill superior to that of the jurors; they have merely a knowledge of the particular facts in the case which jurors have not. And, as value rests merely in opinion, this exception to the general rule that witnesses must be confined to facts, and cannot give opinions, is founded in necessity and obvious propriety."

So in Robertson v. Knapp, 35 N. Y. 92, upon a question as to the value of a farm, farmers and residents of the neighborhood were allowed to give their opinions as to the value, and the court, per LEONARD, J., said: "In general, the opinion of the witness is not evidence, but there are exceptions to the rule. The exceptions generally proceed on the principle that the question is one of science or skill, or has reference to some subject upon which the jury are supposed to have less knowledge than the witness. The case of the value of property forms one of the admitted exceptions."

A similar ruling was made in Railroad Co. v. Bunnell, 81 Pa. St. 426, in which case SHARSWOOD, J., delivering the opinion, said: "The market value of land is not a question of science and skill, upon which only an expert can give an opinion. Persons living in the neighborhood may be presumed to have a sufficient knowledge of the market value of property with the location and character of the land in question. Whether their opinion has any proper ground to rest upon, or is mere conjecture, can be brought out upon cross-examination. Such opinions have always been received."

A similar ruling was made in Railroad Co. v. Hawk, 18 Pac. Rep. 943, in which case, JOHNSTON, J., delivering the opinion of the supreme court of Kansas, said: "This is not a question of science or skill, requiring expert testimony, but it falls within one of the exceptions to the rule excluding mere opinions of ordinary witnesses. It is not necessary that the witnesses shall be engaged in buying and selling land, nor that they should have knowledge of an actual sale of that or similar land to make them competent. A farmer living in the vicinity is presumed to be familiar with, and to know the value of, farm lands, and there can be no doubt of his competency when it is shown that he knows the situation and character of the land, its productiveness and availability for use, and who further states that he knows the value of the same." And so in other cases. See Railroad Co. v. Chapman, 38 Kan. 307, 16 Pac. Rep. 695; Railroad Co. v. Paul, 28 Kan. 821; Colvill v. Railroad Co., 19 Minn. 285, (Gil. 240;) Railroad Co. v. Calkins, 90 Mo. 543, 3 S. W. Rep. 82; Vandine v. Burpee, 13 Metc. 291; Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 177; Railroad Co. v. Windsor, 51 Ind. 238.

Upon the principle of these cases we think the evidence was admissible.

In addition to the appeal from the order denying a new trial, there is in the transcript a notice of appeal from the judgment. But none of the counsel have suggested that the points made arise upon that appeal, or advanced any reason why the judgment should be reversed thereon. Following the lead of counsel, we have assumed that there is no error which can be considered upon that appeal. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed as to all the issues except the issue as to the value of the land taken; and that the judgment as to that issue and the order denying a new trial be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial of said issue, the appellant to recover its costs of appeal.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment as to all the issues except the issue as to the value of the land taken is affirmed. The judgment, as to that issue, and the order denying a new trial, are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial of said issue, the appellant to recover its costs of appeal.

MCFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment, but I dissent from so much of the opinion of Mr. Commissioner HAYNE as holds that there was no error in admitting evidence of the value of defendant's land as a "reservoir site," and in instructing the jury upon that theory. That would be, practically, to allow defendant to recover for an enhancement of the value of his land brought about by the very act of taking it. The rule stated in Gilmer v. Lime Point, 19 Cal. 47, and Railroad Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal, 247, applies here, and I see no good reason for overruling those cases.

SEARLS, C. J. I concur in the judgment, and in the views expressed by MCFARLAND, J

WORKS, J., did not participate in the decision of this cause.

---

78 Cal. 80

SAN DIEGO LAND & TOWN CO. v. NEALE et al. (No. 12,810.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1888.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—PAYMENT—RESTORATION OF PROPERTY.

Plaintiff, who sought to condemn defendants' land for the purpose of a reservoir, pending the proceedings flooded a portion of it. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1253, provides that if moneys, to which defendants in such proceedings are entitled, be not paid or deposited in court, defendants may have execution as in civil cases, and, if the money cannot be made on execution, the court on a showing must annul the proceedings, and restore possession of the property to defendants. Held, that before the issuance of an execution, and a showing that the money could not be made on it, defendants were not entitled, on motion, to an order for the restoration of the property; and this is so, although the constitution, art. 1, § 14, provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation having been first made to the owner, such section not prescribing a remedy.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. PARKER, Judge.

Henderson & McDonald and Luce & Henderson, for appellant. Hunsaker, Britt & Lamme and J. E. Deakin, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. The general features of this case are shown in Town Co. v. Neale, ante, 372, which has just been decided. It appears that the plaintiff's dam, which was begun before the commencement of the proceedings in eminent domain, was completed while the same were pending, and that the flow of the water of the river was so great as to flood the part of the defendants' land which was sought to be condemned. The plaintiff did not pay or deposit in court the amount awarded to the defendants, but proceeded with its motion for new trial. The defendants then moved for an order requiring the plaintiff to restore the possession to them, or, in other words, to draw off the water from their land. The court below granted this motion, and the plaintiff appeals.

There can be no doubt that the plaintiff had no right to flood the defendants' land before payment or deposit of the compensation. The question is as to what is the proper remedy. The provisions which bear upon this subject are sections 1254 and 1252 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 1254 contains a provision by which, after a proper deposit, the court "may, upon notice of not less than 10 days, authorize the plaintiff, if already in possession, to continue therein, and, if not, then to take possession of and use the property during the pendency of, and until the final conclusion of, the litigation, and may, if necessary, stay all actions and proceedings against the plaintiff on account thereof." This provision, it seems to us, is merely that upon certain conditions the court may anticipate its final action, so far as to authorize or legalize a possession pending the litigation. It certainly does not expressly provide that the plaintiff may be ejected from a possession taken independently of the eminent domain proceedings, or required to tear down valuable improvements which may have been made previously thereto, and we think it contains no such implication. And the learned counsel for the defendants expressly say that "the order is not based on section 1254."

The only other provision is as follows: "Sec. 1252. Payment may be made to the defendants entitled thereto, or the money may be deposited in court for the defendants, and be distributed to those entitled thereto. If the money be not so paid or deposited, the defendants may have execution as in civil cases, and, if the money cannot be made on execution, the court, upon a showing to that effect, must set aside and annul the entire proceedings, and restore possession of the property to the defendant, if possession has been taken by the plaintiff."

This section plainly requires the issuance of an execution, and a showing that the money cannot be made upon it, before the order for restoration of possession can be made. In the record before us there is no such showing. On the contrary, it was expressly admitted on the hearing of the motion that "the plaintiff was perfectly solvent, and able to pay any judgment that the defendants might recover against it." We think, therefore, that the order cannot be sustained upon any of the provisions of the Code.

The counsel say, however, that the order is based "on section 14, art. 1, of the constitution, which declares that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner." But this provision simply declares the right of the owner. It does not purport to prescribe the remedy for a violation of such right. And we think it may be safely affirmed that the owner is to be left to his ordinary remedy by action, and cannot resort to the summary one of a motion upon affidavits, unless his case comes within some provision of statute to that effect, which, as we have seen, is not the case.

The cases of In re Bryan, 65 Cal. 375, 4 Pac. Rep. 304, and Neale v. Superior Court, 18 Pac. Rep. 790, are not in conflict with the foregoing. The former case was an application for certiorari to review certain orders in a proceeding to open a road. The record in the case shows that the proposed road had not been opened, or, in other words, that possession of the property had not been taken. What the applicant sought to have done was not to be restored to possession, but to have said orders annulled; and the decision simply was that, inasmuch as the superior court could set aside the orders on motion, the writ of certiorari would not issue. In the latter case we do not understand the court to have examined into the question whether the order appealed from was erroneous, but merely to have held that it was not beyond the power of the court to make some order as to the matter.

We therefore advise that the order appealed from be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is reversed.

WORKS, J., did not participate in the decision of this cause.

---

78 Cal. 126

LAWRENCE v. GAYETTY et al. (No. 12,545.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 15, 1889.)

1. EQUITY—RESCISSION OF DEED—FRAUD—PLEADING. In an action to set aside a deed, on the ground of fraud, allegations that defendants, the grantees, made certain promises, fully set out; that plaintiff relied upon, and had a right to rely upon, such promises, and was induced thereby to and did make the conveyance; and that defendants have not performed the acts promised, and had no intention of doing so at the time they made the promises,—sufficiently set forth the material facts constituting such a fraud as under Civil Code Cal. § 1572, subd. 4, is ground for the rescission of a contract.[1]

2. SAME—EVIDENCE. Where a deed conveying an undivided interest in land is executed in consideration of the grantees' oral promises to make certain improvements on the land, and do certain other acts in the future, and their performance is not made a condition subsequent, a mere failure to perform on the part of the grantees does not constitute a failure of consideration so as to entitle the grantor to rescind under Civil Code Cal. § 1689.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MEYERS, Judge.

Action to set aside deeds, brought by W. S. Lawrence against James M. and Peter C. Gayetty and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Van Ness & Roche, for appellants. J. M. Fulweilwe and Jo Hamilton, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action to set aside two deeds by the plaintiff to the defendants, of a mining claim owned by him, on the ground of fraud and failure of consideration. The complaint avers, in substance, that the plaintiff was the owner of the mine, and was poor, and unable to furnish the necessary machinery and mills to develop the same; that the property was, at the time of the conveyance, of the value of $10,000, and has since increased to the value of $40,000; that the defendant Peter C. Gayetty falsely represented to the plaintiff that he had great influence with men of capital, and was able to interest them in the development, improvement, and working of the mine, and proposed and agreed that he would build, or cause to be built, on said property, certain quartz mills and hoisting machinery, and run cuts and tunnels, and make other improvements thereon within about one month, either by himself or by said men of capital, of the value of $10,000; said work to be prosecuted diligently, and plaintiff to have possession of the property and superintend the work, provided plaintiff would convey to said Gayetty, or some one to be named by him, the one-half of said land and mining claim, plaintiff to remain the owner of the other one-half thereof, with a like interest in said improvements; that plaintiff was induced by said false and fraudulent representations to, and did, convey to the defendant James M. Gayetty, in trust for said Peter C. Gayetty, the one-half of said property; that the consideration of $150, named in said deed, was not the true consideration, and no part thereof was ever paid, and all cost of executing the deed was paid by plaintiff; that James M. Gayetty was the son of Peter C. Gayetty, and took said conveyance with a full knowledge of all the facts; that thereafter plaintiff was induced by the urgent solicitations of said Peter C. Gayetty, and to enable him to carry out his said promises, to join with the said James M. Gayetty in executing to the defendants and the plaintiff a deed for certain portions of said mining claim, describing it; that the consideration of said last-named deed was said promises and agreements, and the further consideration, as expressed in said deed, of one-half of 100,000 shares of the capital stock of a corporation thereafter to be formed; that the same was executed on the promises of said Gayetty that said persons would go on and form a corporation for mining purposes, and issue said stock, and work and develop said mine, and erect said mill and hoisting-works, and make said improvements thereon as agreed; and plaintiff, believing said representations and promises, made said conveyance, thereby vesting the legal title to said property in the defendants; that the plaintiff from his ignorance and the entire faith, confidence, and trust he had in said Peter C. Gayetty, and believing said representations and promises made by him, executed said deed first named, and without any consideration other than the false and fraudulent promises and representations aforesaid, and, also, having like faith and confidence in his and the other defendants' representations, he joined in the execution of the last-named deed; and for the whole of said property he has not received one cent of money, nor one share of stock, nor any other consideration whatever. The complaint avers that none of said representations, promises, or agreements have been complied with; that they were falsely and fraudulently made to secure the execution of said deeds, and to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, and were known to be so made by all of the defendants; that said Peter C. Gayetty neither had nor exercised any influence with any man of capital, and never intended to pay one cent, or perform any of his said promises or agreements, or either of them; that said corporation was never formed, nor any stock issued, nor money expended on any of said proposed improvements; that plaintiff, after waiting six months, and, nothing being done or attempted to be done by the defendants, or either of them, enlisted other means, and has greatly improved said property, working and developing the same by opening shafts, running tunnels, building mills and hoisting works, and making other improvements, thereby enhancing the value of the property to more than $20,000. It is also alleged that "by reason of said falsehoods and deceits of the defendants aforesaid the consideration of said deeds has wholly failed." The prayer of the complainant is that the court "order, adjudge, and decree that the defendants, and each of them, reconvey to this plaintiff whatever of the estate in said property is in him vested, and that the legal title of all of the said defendants be restored and reinvested in the plaintiff," and for general relief.

---

[1] See, on the general subject of how fraud should be pleaded, Penny v. Jackson, (Ala.) 4 South. Rep. 720, and note; Tepoel v. Bank, (Neb.) 40 N. W. Rep. 415, and note.

There was a demurrer to the complaint by the defendant James M. Gayetty, on the ground of ambiguity, in that it did not show the number of shares of stock of the corporation mentioned therein, or the number of shares the plaintiff was to have as part consideration for said deed, and on the further ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which demurrer was overruled. The defendants answered, denying the material allegations of the complaint. There was a trial by the court, and findings in substance: (1) That plaintiff was the owner of the property. (2) That on the 7th day of October, 1884, the same was of the value of $10,000, and at the time of filing the complaint of the value of $20,000. (3) That plaintiff was poor, and unable to develop the mine; and the making of the representations and promises by Peter C. Gayetty, for himself and as agent for the other defendants, was substantially as alleged in the complaint, including the promise to form said corporation and issue to plaintiff 50,000 shares of the stock thereof. (4) "That thereafter, on said 7th day of October, 1884, the plaintiff, in consideration of the full performance of the promises and agreements of the defendants, and relying upon their said representation, as set out in findings fourth and fifth, and for no other consideration, executed and delivered the deeds mentioned in the complaint, and also signed the said articles of incorporation, to assist the defendants in carrying out their said promises and agreements." (5) The recording of the deed, and the filing of the articles of incorporation of the proposed corporation in the office of the county clerk and of the secretary of state, and the issuance of the necessary certificate of incorporation. (6) That the defendants have not performed any of the promises found to have been made, and have failed, neglected, and refused to keep or perform the same. (7) The plaintiff kept and performed all of the covenants on his part. (8) "That there has been no false representation nor fraud in fact, but there has been a complete failure of consideration for the said deeds or conveyances, and for said contract with the defendants, and without the fault of the plaintiff." The conclusion of law was that "plaintiff is entitled to a decree extinguishing his contract with the defendants, and nullifying and setting aside and canceling the said deeds to the defendants, and all of them," and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, accordingly, from which judgment the defendants appeal.

1. The appellants contend that the complaint was insufficient, and that the court erred in overruling the demurrer thereto. It will be seen that there are two causes of action, or, rather, two grounds alleged in the complaint for setting aside the deeds, viz., fraudulent representations and failure of consideration; but these causes grow out of precisely the same state of facts. The representations alleged to have been made are not as to existing facts, but consist in mere promises to perform certain acts in the future. Independent of Code provisions, the rule is that representations, to constitute sufficient ground for the relief sought in this action, must be as to an existing and material fact, or the affirmation of a matter in the future as a fact, and not a mere opinion, statement of intention, or promise to do some act in the future. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 877, 888; Neidefer v. Chastain, 71 Ind. 363; Welshbillig v. Dienhart, 65 Ind. 94, 98. Strictly speaking, a mere promise is not a representation, and the failure to make it good is a breach of contract, which gives a cause of action, but not the one pursued here. But the making of a promise, with no intention at the time of performing it, constitutes a fraud, for which a contract may be rescinded. Civil Code, § 1572; see, also, Bigelow, Frauds, 483 et seq. The mere failure to perform the covenant does not relate back to and render the same fraudulent. It is the present intent not to perform it that renders it wrongful. The complaint alleges facts sufficient to bring it within the statutory provision as to what shall constitute actual fraud. It sets out fully the promises made, and that, at the time they were made, the defendants had no intention of performing them. It is true, as counsel for appellants contend, that it is not sufficient to characterize a transaction as fraudulent, and that the facts constituting the fraud must be stated. Kinder v. Macy, 7 Cal. 206; Meeker v. Harris, 19 Cal. 279; Capuro v. Insurance Co., 39 Cal. 123. But the facts are pleaded here. The material facts necessary to show actionable fraud are: (1) The making of the promises; (2) that the plaintiff relied upon and had a right to rely upon them; (3) that he was induced thereby to, and did, make the conveyances; (4) that the defendants have not performed the acts promised, and had no intention of doing so at the time of making them. The complaint states facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to have the deeds set aside, and the property restored to him on the ground of fraud; and the demurrer thereto was properly overruled.

2. The appellants further maintain that the judgment is not supported by the findings, and that, under the facts as found, the judgment should have been for the defendants. It will be noticed that upon the question of fraud the findings are in favor of the defendants. The finding is that "there were no false representations nor fraud in fact." This effectually disposes of that branch of the complaint, and leaves the plaintiff to depend, for a recovery, upon a failure of consideration. This brings us to a consideration of the question whether the facts alleged in the complaint, and found by the court, show such a failure of consideration as will authorize the setting aside of a deed conveying real estate. It seems to us that, shorn of the question of fraud, the complaint and findings present the plain, simple question whether a conveyance of real estate, fully executed on the part of the grantor, can be set aside for a failure of consideration on the sole ground that the promises and agreements which induced its execution, and which, by the terms of the contract under which the deed is made, were not to be performed until after its execution, have not been performed. The plaintiff saw proper to accept the verbal promise of the defendants to do certain things without any agreement or understanding that the failure to do the acts as promised should be a condition, or in any way affect the validity of the deed, or entitle him to a reconveyance. Counsel for respondent say that the reasonable inference from the continued failure and refusal to comply with their promises is that the defendants did not intend to comply with them at the time they were made, but this is an argument in the face of the direct finding of the court that there was no fraud. This is a finding against the contention that they had no intention of performing their part of the contract, as the making of the promises and the failure to perform are clearly found. We are compelled to treat the case as one where the promise was made in good faith, but has not been performed.

Mr Waterman, in his work on Specific Performance, § 189, says: "With regard to the failure of the consideration as a defense, it is scarcely necessary to say that by this is not meant the non-payment of the purchase money according to the agreement,—the liability to pay, though default be made, being a consideration,—but the failure of the contract by the occurrence of something which either determines the existence of the subject-matter, or materially affects it. If the subject-matter be not essentially affected, though there may be a claim for compensation, the party injured will not be entitled to be discharged from the contract. Events which, happening before the conclusion of a contract, avoid it, either by determining the existence of the subject-matter or materially affecting it, do not, properly speaking, terminate the contract, but prevent the contract from arising." It must be borne in mind that the plaintiff did not contract to convey upon the performance of the contract on the part of the defendants; therefore his promise was not dependent upon theirs, nor was there anything appearing in the deed, or in the contract under which it was made, showing, or tending to show, that a compliance with their promises was regarded as a condition subsequent, or that a failure to perform on their part should in any way affect the title conveyed to them. The case is precisely the same in principle as if the plaintiff had conveyed and taken a note for the purchase money, and the defendants had failed to pay the same. The fact that the promise is to expend money in making certain improvements, instead of a promise to pay money to the plaintiff, can make no difference as to the right to rescind on the ground that the grantees have failed to perform the covenants on their part. Certainly it would not be seriously contended that the mere failure by the vendee to pay the purchase money could entitle the vendor to rescind the contract, and recover back the land; and yet that is the ground upon which the plaintiff in this action must recover under these findings, if at all.

Counsel for respondent rely upon section 1689 of the Civil Code. In our judgment the section referred to has no application to a case like this, where the vendor has waived actual performance on the part of the vendee, by relying upon his mere promise to perform, and, relying upon such promise to perform in the future, has executed the conveyance, thereby vesting the title to the property in his grantee. The contract on the part of the vendor is wholly executed. If the mere promise, and the failure to perform, is not sufficient to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud, as we have shown, the fact that the same acts are characterized in the pleading as a failure of consideration cannot give them additional force, and thereby bring about the same result. The case of Hartman v. Reed, 50 Cal. 485, is in point against the respondent. There the conveyance was of an undivided interest in an unconfirmed Mexican grant, and the consideration was the agreement of the vendee to prosecute to a final determination before the board of land commissioners and the courts of the United States the claim of the vendor to the said rancho, which agreement was not performed. It was said in that case: "The title to the undivided third of the rancho vested absolutely in Crosby, and his agreement did not constitute a condition, upon a breach of which the title would revest in Olvera; but a breach of the agreement only gave Olvera a cause of action for damages." Leaving out of sight the question of fraud, which, as we have seen, was found against the respondent by the court below, the case cited and the one before us are identical in principle. Such a rule may work hardship in individual cases, and this may be one of those cases, but to hold that a vendee of real estate could, for a failure to pay the purchase money, repudiate his deed, and recover the land, would render real-estate titles dangerously uncertain, and result in the most serious consequences. The judgment is not sustained by the findings.

The complaint in this case and the prayer for relief were such as to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment for damages, and, as his right to such recovery was not passed upon, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with instructions to the court below to grant a new trial, and allow the parties to amend their pleadings, if they so desire.

We concur: McFARLAND, J., SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 202

MARRINER v. DENNISON. (No. 12,848.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 29, 1889.)

1. VENDOR AND VENDEE—BREACH OF CONTRACT—COMPLAINT.
   A complaint in an action for breach of a contract to convey real property, showing the contract to be for the conveyance of lots of certain numbers in defendant's subdivision of the M tract, and alleging that it was thereby intended to convey certain real property specifically described, but not alleging any extrinsic facts by which the lots may be identified and the intention determined, is bad.
2. SAME—INSUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION—EVIDENCE TO IDENTIFY.
   The description in such contract being insufficient, and being unaided by the complaint, the memorandum of the contract is inadmissible in evidence.
3. EQUITY—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—PLEADING.
   A representation by a vendor to the vendee that he had made a prior contract to convey to another, who is insisting on its performance, if false, is sufficient to authorize a rescission of an agreement made thereon by the vendee to accept other property in lieu of that bargained for; and though other false representations that the vendor was in danger of indictment, and of being sent to state-prison for making a second sale of the property, are not such as the vendee may rightfully rely upon, and as will authorize a rescission, allegations of them in a complaint by the vendee for such rescission, which alleges other material misrepresentations, may be treated as surplusage.
4. SAME—EVIDENCE.
   Where the complaint alleges that the contract with the third person, which the vendor alleged was made before plaintiff's contract, was in fact made afterwards, evidence that it was made afterwards is material.

5. SAME—KNOWLEDGE OF DEFENDANT—EVIDENCE OF FRAUD.
Defendant's knowledge that a railroad was to be located near the land described in the original contract was a circumstance tending to show fraud, as furnishing a motive for attempting to relieve himself of the contract, though he was under no obligation to disclose the fact to plaintiff.

6. FRAUD—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.
A complaint setting out the original contract, and alleging the making of the new contract, and its procurement by fraud, should be treated as based on the fraud, and not as one for damages for breach of the original contract.

7. SAME—FAILURE TO SHOW DAMAGES—DEMURRER.
The complaint alleging that the misrepresentations were for the purpose of procuring the substitution of other property, the value of which, or facts from which the value may be inferred, are not stated, though it is stated that the property originally bargained for has largely increased in value, fails to show damage, and is bad on demurrer.

8. EQUITY—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—PLEADING.
Though the complaint were treated as one for breach of the original contract, still, plaintiff having assumed the burden of proving the making of the new contract and its procurement by fraud, damage must be alleged in order to show ground for rescission, and, if the allegations do not authorize a rescission, there can be no recovery for breach of the original contract, which was released by the new one.

9. SAME—EVIDENCE.
In such case, plaintiff having given no evidence of the value of the substituted property, evidence of such value offered by defendant is properly excluded as immaterial.

10. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.
Defendant's request to charge also that, if the substituted property at the time of the new agreement was of equal value with that described in the original contract, the jury should find for defendant, though a correct statement of the law, is properly refused as applicable to no issue under the pleadings.

11. SAME.
A charge that plaintiff might rescind the new agreement if it was obtained by the false representations is erroneous, as omitting the element of damage, which is essential to the right to a rescission.

12. EVIDENCE—BEST AND SECONDARY—PROOF OF COLLATERAL ISSUE.
The question being as to the making of the contract with the third person, and coming collaterally in issue, such contract may be proved by parol, though it was reduced to writing.

13. SAME—ABSENCE OF ORIGINALS.
Certified copies of a deed and contract are inadmissible in evidence without accounting for the originals.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action by J. U. Marriner against G. L. Dennison. Defendant appeals.

W. H. Clark, for appellant. M. C. Hester and Enoch Knight, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action by the vendee for damages for the breach of a contract to convey real estate. The memorandum of agreement to convey was as follows: "This agreement, made this day, between G. L. Dennison, of Los Angeles, and J. U. Marriner, of Vineland, Cal., is as follows: Said Dennison agrees to convey to said Marriner lots one, two, thirty-three, thirty-four, sixty, and fifty-nine in his sub. of the Magee tract; and for same six lots said Marriner agrees to convey to said Dennison the ten acres, with new house and improvements on same, built by him; and lot number fifty-two, building lots in Malden, Mass., bought of E. S. Converse; size of lot, 6,440 square feet, viz., 57½ feet by 115 deep." It is alleged in the complaint that by this agreement it was intended by the parties thereto that the defendant was to convey to plaintiff within a reasonable time certain real estate in Los Angeles county of which he then owned the equitable title, and which is specifically described; that plaintiff was ready, willing, and able to comply with the agreement on his part, and tendered a deed of conveyance to defendant, as provided therein, and demanded a deed for the property. The complaint further alleges, in substance, that defendant represented that he could not comply with the contract for the reason that prior to the execution of said agreement he had contracted to sell the land to another party; that he supposed the party had abandoned his purchase, but now he was insisting upon holding him to the contract; and that he (defendant) further represented to plaintiff that "he was in danger of indictment and criminal prosecution for selling the said lots to him after he had sold them to said other person, and that he was so fearful of being sent to the state-prison for said offense that he could not sleep at night," and then proposed to plaintiff to deed him other lots if plaintiff would release him from said contract. That plaintiff was unwilling to release him; but defendant then and at divers subsequent interviews made and repeated said representations with so much earnestness and apparent sincerity, and manifested such real fear of said criminal prosecution, that plaintiff, then believing defendant's said statement and representations to be true, consented to take said other lots in lieu of those contracted for. That the representations were false and fraudulent, and made to induce plaintiff to release him from said contract, and thereby avoid an action for damages for the breach thereof. That the sale of said lots by defendant to another party was in fact subsequent to said agreement, and for a price far in excess of the consideration to be paid by the plaintiff; and at the time he was so released he had received a large part of the purchase money, and that defendant had then become the owner of the legal title to the property. That plaintiff, upon the discovery of the facts, notified defendant that he rescinded the agreement whereby he agreed to release him from the original contract, and to take the other lots, and that he should require him to comply with his original contract; and tendered him good and sufficient deed of himself and wife for the property to be conveyed by them under said agreement, and again demanded a deed, which defendant failed and refused to give. It is alleged that the Dennison subdivision lots were, at the date of the contract, of the value of $3,500, and had, at the date of the release, become, and continued to be, of the value of $10,000. There is no allegation as to the value of the lots agreed to be taken in lieu of those originally contracted for. The amount of damages is alleged to be $7,000, and the prayer is for judgment for that sum. There was a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient, which was overruled.

The answer expressly admits the execution of the original contract, and does not deny the making of the second agreement, whereby defendant agreed to convey other lots, but denies all of the other material allegations of the complaint. In a separate count of the answer it is alleged that by a contract made and entered into on or about the 23d day of February, 1887, plaintiff and defendant mutually agreed to rescind said first agreement, and it was then mutually agreed by and between them that defendant should convey certain other lots in lieu of the lots described in said agreement, and that he had always been ready and willing to convey the same. There was a trial by jury, and verdict for plaintiff for $3,188.55. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appeals from the judgment and order denying him a new trial.

1. Three objections are made to the complaint: (a) That the contract for the conveyance of the property contains no sufficient description of the real estate; (b) that the allegations of fraud are insufficient; (c) that there is no allegation that any damage resulted from the fraudulent representations made, or facts set out from which damages can be inferred.

(a) The real estate is described in the agreement as lots 1, 2, 33, 34, 60, and 59, in his (defendant's) subdivision of the Magee tract. In what city, county, state, or country the land is situated does not appear. If the instrument were one attempting to convey title to property, its insufficiency would be apparent. But the rule as to the particularity of description required in executory contracts to convey is extremely liberal in favor of their sufficiency. The rule is that where the description, so far as it goes, is consistent, but does not appear to be complete, it may be completed by extrinsic parol evidence, provided a new description is not introduced into the body of the contract, and the complaint must contain the averments of such extrinsic matter as may be necessary to render the description complete. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 162; Lick v. O'Donnell, 3 Cal. 63; Fry, Spec. Perf. 159 et seq.; Torr v. Torr, 20 Ind. 118; Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 316; Baldwin v. Kerlin, 46 Ind. 426; Browne, St. Frauds, § 385; McConnell v. Brillhart, 17 Ill. 360. But parol evidence cannot be heard to furnish a description. The only purpose for which such evidence can be heard is to apply the description given to the subject-matter. Thus, if the description were "my" farm in Los Angeles county, an allegation in the complaint that I owned but one farm in said county, and where it was situated, would apply the description to the proper subject-matter, and render it certain. But if the description were "a" farm in Los Angeles county, it could not be rendered certain by the allegation of such extrinsic matter. Browne, St. Frauds, § 396; Baldwin v. Kerlin, 46 Ind. 426, 431. It is not sufficient to allege that by the imperfect description given in the contract the parties intended to convey certain property. Browne, St. Frauds; Baldwin v. Kerlin, supra; Ryan v. Davis, 6 Pac. Rep. 339; Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 Mich. 610, 10 N. W. Rep. 37; Bowers v. Andrews, 52 Miss. 596. Thus it is said in Browne, St. Frauds, § 371: "The contract must contain the essential terms of the contract, expressed with such a degree of certainty that it may be understood without recourse to parol evidence to show the intention of the parties." Again, in section 385: "It must, of course, appear from the memorandum what is the subject-matter of the defendant's engagement. Land, for instance, which is purported to be bargained for, must be so described that it may be identified." See, to the same effect, King v. Wood, 7 Mo. 389; Hudson v. King, 2 Heisk. 560, 572; Clark v. Chamberlin, 112 Mass. 19; Gigos v. Cochran, 54 Ind. 593; Newman v. Perrill, 73 Ind. 153; Ferris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645; Richards v. Snider, 3 Pac. Rep. 178; Ryan v. Davis, 6 Pac. Rep. 339. It is not enough, as we have said, to allege that by such incomplete description the parties intended to convey a certain tract of land. Such extrinsic facts must be alleged as will, in connection with such description, show that the particular piece of land was intended. If the facts alleged, together with the description set out, are not sufficient to identify the land, the contract must be held to be void for uncertainty.

In Ryan v. Davis it is said: "Can we say, by an examination of the description in this instrument, that it fits and comprehends the property? Or that, without being added to, it can be connected with and applied to the very property intended, by the aid of extrinsic evidence, and to the exclusion of all other property? Or, when submitted to virtually the same test as laid down by SIMRALL, C. J., supra, 'is the description so complete that it points directly to the subject-matter, or does it refer to something aliunde the instrument, which, when consulted, indicates the property.' The description in this case does not itself identify the property, nor state directly where it is; neither does it indicate any extrinsic fact which will serve to fix its identity or locality. The more particular description contained in the complaint, after the description stated as contained in the memorandum, is not the description of property directly pointed out by the description contained in the memorandum, nor made by reference to any extrinsic fact stated in the memorandum, which, when connected, indicates the property described in such more particular description. This more particular description itself indicates that parol evidence must be wholly resorted to in order to designate the premises. When the agreement itself fails to identify the property, or to furnish the means by which it may be done, by pointing to some extrinsic fact by whose aid the ambiguity may be removed, to allow parol evidence to explain what was intended, would be to allow the entire consideration of a contract in relation to lands, on the part of the person conveying the property, to be proved by parol, and render useless and nugatory the above provision of the statute of frauds."

Applying these well-established rules to the case before us, we are of the opinion that, properly aided by the allegation of extrinsic facts, the description in the contract might have been sufficient. If, for example, it had been alleged that the defendant was at the time of the contract the owner of lots 1, 2, 33, 34, 60, and 59, in his (defendant's) subdivision of the Magee tract, situate in lot 10, block O, of the San Pasqual tract, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, according to the map of said subdivision, on record in Book 12, page 29, of Miscellaneous Records in the office of the recorder of said county, and upon which map said lots are delineated; that said lots were the only lots of said numbers, of any subdivision of defendant in any tract of land known as the "Magee Tract;" that said lots were examined by the parties hereto, before making said contract, and were verbally agreed upon as the ones for which the said contract was to be executed, and were the lots and property referred to therein, and the said subdivision was the only one then owned by the defendant, or known or designated as the "Dennison Subdivision of the Magee Tract,"—we think the complaint would have been sufficient in this respect. But the complaint under consideration contains no such allegations, or any others tending to aid the imperfect description set out in the contract. It simply alleges that, by the description given, it was the intention of the parties that the tracts of land specifically described in the complaint should be conveyed. But we have shown that this is not enough. The allegation that the parties intended to convey certain property is the allegation of a mere conclusion. Such intention must appear, as we have said, from the description given, and such extrinsic facts as are alleged in aid of it. As the description, standing alone, is admittedly insufficient, and no facts in aid of it are alleged, the complaint must be held to be bad for that reason.

(b) It is further claimed that the complaint does not sufficiently allege the fraud in procuring the defendant's release from the original contract and the substitution of the new. The contention is that the representations alleged to have been made were not as to existing facts, or of such matters as were material, or that the plaintiff had a right to rely upon, and the following cases are cited: King v. Eagle Mills, 10 Allen, 548; Wilder v. De Cou, 18 Minn. 470, (Gil. 421;) Commissioners v. Younger, 29 Cal. 176. We think counsel are right as to the rule of law contended for, (see Lawrence v. Gayetty, ante, 382, opinion filed January 15, 1889,) and that most of the allegations are within the rule; but there is one allegation showing a representation as to a material and existing fact, viz., that the defendant had, prior to the contract with plaintiff, contracted with another to convey him the same property, and that he was insisting upon a compliance with the contract. The plaintiff, believing this statement to be true, might reasonably have supposed that it would be better to accept other property than to take a deed for this, which was contracted to another, and might become the subject of litigation because of such prior contract. This representation was sufficient to authorize a rescission of the second contract if the complaint were sufficient in other respects. The other representations, to the effect that the defendant was afraid of being prosecuted and sent to state-prison, and the like, were not such representations as the plaintiff had a right to act upon, and were no cause for such rescission. Treating these as surplusage, the complaint is sufficient as against this objection, there being one material false representation alleged.

(c) The further objection to the complaint is that no damages are shown. The action is peculiar. The fraud alleged is not in procuring the plaintiff to enter into the original contract, as is usually the case, but in procuring the release of the defendant from the first contract, and inducing him to enter into a second contract in lieu of the first, by which he agrees to accept a conveyance for other and different property. The damage that would be the natural result of such misrepresentations, under the allegations of the complaint, arise from the substitution of other property for that originally contracted for, as the fraud mentioned is alleged to have been committed for the purpose of bringing about such substitution. Viewing the complaint in this light, it is subject to the objection urged against it. The value of the property alleged to have been substituted is not stated, nor are there any facts alleged from which it can be inferred that it was of any less value than that originally contracted for. Therefore no damage is shown that could have been the result of the fraud charged. It is true, the complaint alleges that the property first contracted for increased largely in value, and was worth more than that which plaintiff was to convey to defendant; but the same may have been true of the property embraced in the second agreement. If so, the plaintiff was not injured by the fraud alleged. The respondent attempts to meet this by saying that the action was not for the fraud, but for damages for the breach of the original contract. Then why plead the second contract, or the fraud? The making of the second contract would have come properly from the defendant as a defense. If it was obtained by fraud, this could have been shown by the plaintiff without any pleading under the loose rule obtaining in this state that a plaintiff may prove everything necessary to meet the answer without giving any notice thereof in any way. We think the complaint should be treated as one based upon the alleged fraud. If not, the complaint was greatly weakened by an unnecessary attempt to anticipate an expected defense. Treating it as an action for the fraud, the demurrer to it should have been sustained on the ground that no damages were shown. As the plaintiff has taken upon himself unnecessarily the burden of proving that the last contract was made, and that the same was obtained by fraud, and for that reason had been rescinded by him, it was incumbent upon him, in any view that may be taken of the complaint, to show sufficient ground for such rescission, which rendered it necessary for him to allege such facts as would show that he was injured by the fraud alleged. Therefore, treating the complaint as one for damages for a breach of the original contract, the objection made to it is of equal force, and the demurrer should, in that view of it, have been sustained for the same reason. Purdy v. Bullard, 41 Cal. 444. If the facts alleged were not sufficient to authorize a rescission of the second contract, damages could not be recovered for a breach of the first, from the performance of which the defendant was thereby released.

2. The court permitted the plaintiff to prove by one Scott that he had purchased from the defendant the property in controversy subsequent to the contract with the plaintiff. The evidence was objected to as irrelevant and immaterial, and on the further ground that the written contract was the best evidence. The evidence was not irrelevant or immaterial. The complaint alleges that the contract to a third party, which the defendant represented he had made before the contract with plaintiff was executed, was, in fact, made afterwards. The evidence was material as tending to prove this allegation. It was unnecessary that the written contract should have been introduced. We understand the rule to be that, where the question is not as to the contents of a writing, but as to whether one has been made or not, and the question comes collaterally in issue, it may be proved by parol. Stanley v. Sutherland, 54 Ind. 339, 353. The objection to the evidence was properly overruled.

3. The memorandum of agreement first entered into by the parties was offered in evidence, objected to by defendant on the ground that it contained no description of the property, and the objection overruled. This was error. The instrument was insufficient, standing alone, for want of a proper description of the property, and, as the complaint contained nothing which could aid it in this respect, it was immaterial, under the pleadings.

4. The plaintiff was permitted, over defendant's objection, to introduce in evidence certified copies of a certain deed and contract, without, in any way, accounting for the absence of the originals. This was error. Brown v. Griffith, 70 Cal. 14, 11 Pac. Rep. 500.

5. The defendant offered to prove the value of the property described in the second contract, and agreed to be conveyed in lieu of that mentioned in the first contract, with a view, we suppose, of showing that the former was of equal or greater value than the latter. The court excluded the evidence, and of this the appellant complains. As we have said, it was necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove that the last property contracted for was of less value than the first, or other facts sufficient to show that he was damaged by the making of the last contract. The burden of proof being thus cast upon the plaintiff, and no evidence having been offered by him with reference to the matter, the evidence offered by defendant was wholly unnecessary, and was properly excluded as immaterial.

6. The appellant also complains of the refusal of the court to give his instruction, No. 2, by which the court was asked to instruct the jury that if the property described in the second contract was of equal value with that mentioned in the first, at the time the plaintiff agreed to take the former in lieu of the latter, the plaintiff was not damaged, and the jury should find for the defendant. The instruction contained a correct statement of the law, and under proper pleadings should have been given; but, as no issue as to the value of the property described in the last contract was presented by the pleadings, it was properly refused.

7. The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that the knowledge of the defendant, if he had any, that a railroad was to be located near the Dennison subdivision lots, was immaterial, and that he was not bound, and it was not his duty, to communicate that fact to the plaintiff, and that the fact of such failure to do so should not be considered. The first clause of this instruction was not good law. The second clause, as to the duty of the defendant to disclose his knowledge of the proposed location of the railroad, was correct. The fact that defendant had come into possession of a fact showing that the property first contracted for was likely to increase largely in value was a circumstance tending to show the fraud, as furnishing a motive for the attempt to relieve himself from his contract; therefore, it was not immaterial, and should have been considered by the jury. The instruction, being wrong in this particular, was properly refused, although the other proposition laid down may have been correct.

8. The court, over the defendant's objection, instructed the jury as follows: "The court instructs you on the part of the plaintiff that if you find from the evidence that defendant agreed to exchange the six lots described in the complaint to the plaintiff, and before the paper of January 13, 1887, was made, the lots were pointed out to plaintiff on the ground, for the property of plaintiff described in the contract of January 13, 1887; and if you further believe from the evidence that defendant, by false statements and representations, deceived and induced the plaintiff to believe, and that the plaintiff did believe, either he had no title or had sold it to another, or that through false representations detailed in the evidence before you, and believed by plaintiff, and he was so induced thereby to consent to the abandonment of the terms of the contract of January 13, 1887, and that those representations so made by defendant were knowingly false, or made by him when he did not know them to be true,—plaintiff was not bound by the engagement of March 14 or 16, 1887; and, if you so find, your verdict should be for the plaintiff for the amount at least of the difference between the value of plaintiff's property on the 9th of July, 1887, and of the value of the six lots described in the complaint as belonging to defendant, and designated in the alleged contract of January 13, 1887." This instruction was erroneous. It informed the jury, in effect, that the plaintiff might rescind the second contract, and recover for a breach of the first, on the sole ground that the former was induced by fraudulent representations. It leaves out the material element of damage or injury, which must be shown to authorize the rescission of a contract. For aught that appears by the complaint or the evidence, the plaintiff may have been benefited, rather than injured, by this second contract. If so, he has no cause of complaint or ground of action. The error in ruling upon the demurrer to the complaint is carried into this instruction.

9. For the reasons above stated the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The plaintiff had no cause of action on paper, and none was shown by the evidence. For these reasons the nonsuit should have been granted. For the same reasons the motion for a new trial was improperly overruled.

Judgment and order refusing a new trial reversed, with instructions to the court below to allow the parties to amend their pleadings.

We concur: Beatty, C. J.; McFarland, J.; Paterson, J.; Thornton, J.; Sharpstein, J.

---

78 Cal. 158

Foss et al. v. Hinkell. (No. 12,673.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 28, 1889.)

1. Public Lands—Railroad Grants—Validity.
   A patent to the S. P. R. Co., for land which at the time of its grants, under acts Cong. July 27, 1866, and March 3, 1871, was within the exterior limits of a Mexican or Spanish grant then sub judice, is void from the beginning.
2. Same—Mexican Grants—Evidence.
   Whether land was at a certain time within a grant does not depend on the last United States survey made. The boundaries must be ascertained by the expediente of the grant issued by the Mexican government, aided, if necessary, by parol evidence.
3. Same—Rights of Pre-emptor to Question Patent.
   A pre-emptor is so far in privity with the United States, under whose laws he has settled on the land, that he may attack a patent of said land.
4. Same—Defenses against Patent—Intruder.
   A pre-emptor cannot defend against one claiming under a patent to a railroad, on the ground that the land was, when the patent was issued, within the indemnity limits of another company, since as to the latter he would only be an intruder.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'Melveny, Judge.

Ejectment by Carrie L. Foss and Frank Foss against Joseph Hinkell. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals.

Will D. Gould and James H Blanchard, for appellant. Edwin Baxter and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellees.

Thornton, J. Ejectment. Judgment for plaintiffs, and appeal by defendant from judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial. The plaintiffs claimed title under a patent from the United States of the land in suit to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, dated the 4th of April, 1879, and a deed of the company of date of the 20th of June, 1887, conveying this land to them. The defendant is a duly-qualified pre-emptor, having entered into and held possession of the land in suit since the 22d of April, 1886, and ever since that day has been a bona fide pre-emption settler thereon. On the 10th day of June, 1887, he did tender and deposit his declaratory statement, in due form, for the land, in the proper United States land-office, and tendered therewith all legal fees for filing the same. The register and receiver refused to file this statement, and on the same day defendant appealed from this refusal to the commissioner of the general land-office at Washington, where the appeal is now pending. The defendant pleaded that the land in controversy was never granted to the plaintiffs' grantor, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, because at the date of the location of the route of the Southern Pacific Railroad, or about April 3, 1871, this land was within the exterior limits of the Rancho San José, a valid Spanish or Mexican grant, and was thereby reserved from appropriation by the railroad company. By reason of the foregoing facts pleaded, defendant contends that the patent to the railroad company is void.

If the land in suit here was, when the grant to the railroad company, under the acts of congress of July 27, 1866, and March 3, 1871, took effect, within the limits of the Rancho San José, and the grant of this rancho was then sub judice, the patent under which plaintiffs herein claim was void from the beginning. This conclusion is sustained by the judgments of this court in Carr v. Quigley, 57 Cal. 395, and McLaughlin v. Heid, 63 Cal. 210. The case first cited was decided January, 1881, and the last cited case on February, 1883. The supreme court of the United States has recently (on the 21st of November, 1887,) decided the same way in Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 618, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228. The case just cited contains an elaborate discussion of the point. As a summing up of the discussion on the case last cited, the court, speaking by MILLER, J., used this language: "Those Mexican claims were often described, or attempted to be described, by specific boundaries. They were often claims for a definite quantity of land within much larger out-boundaries, and they were frequently described by the name of a 'place' or 'ranche.' To the extent of the claim when the grant was for land with specific boundaries, or known by a particular name, and to the extent of the quantity claimed within out-boundaries containing a greater area, they are excluded from the grant to the railroad company. Indeed, this exclusion did not depend upon the validity of the claim asserted, or its final establishment, but upon the fact that there existed a claim of a right under a grant by the Mexican government which was yet undetermined, and to which, therefore, the phrase 'public lands' could not attach, and which the statute did not include, although it might be found within the limits prescribed on each side of the road when located."

As the record now stands, the finding on the issue whether the land sued for is within the exterior limits of the grant of the Rancho San José is insufficient. In fact, it cannot be regarded as a finding on the issue at all. The court finds on this point that on the 3d day of April, 1871, said land was within the claimed exterior limits of the Rancho San José, a valid Mexican grant, as shown by the Thompson survey, mentioned in the next finding. In the next finding it is declared that in August, 1868, Thompson, a deputy United States surveyor, duly made a survey of the rancho under the instruction of the United States surveyor general for the state of California, by which survey the land in controversy was included within the exterior limits of said rancho from 1868 until said survey was rejected, in 1875; that by a former survey, made by the United States deputy surveyor Hancock, said land was excluded from the exterior limits of said rancho, which survey, with slight modifications not affecting this point, was finally approved, and the rancho was afterwards patented on the 20th day of January, 1875. The fact required to be found is whether the land in controversy was included within the exterior limits of the Rancho San José, as originally granted by the Mexican government.

The court finds that this land was within the exterior limits of the rancho according to Thompson's survey, and not within such limits according to a prior survey of Hancock. We cannot see how this could be. The exterior limits of the rancho do not depend on any survey made of it. The land sued for may be within such exterior limits, though excluded from a survey. Though Hancock may have excluded this land from his survey, it still may be within the exterior boundaries of the rancho as granted by the Mexican government. What the exterior limits of such granted rancho were must be determined by the expediente of the grant issued by the Mexican government, including petition, diseno, and grant, the boundaries designated in which may be identified by parol evidence. See Doolan v. Carr, supra.

That the Mexican grant for the rancho above named was sub judice long after the definite location of the railroad was made, is clearly found. The grant being sub judice, as above found, on the 3d of April, 1871, if the land in suit was within the ouside boundaries of the grant appearing in the granting documents as made by the Mexican government, then it was not granted by the act of congress of the 27th of July, 1866, or of the 3d of March, 1871, to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and the patent to it was void, and nothing passed by the deed of the railroad company to the plaintiffs. See cases above cited.

It is argued that the defendant should not be allowed to attack the patent of the United States herein because he is not in privity with the United States. The settlement by the defendant as a pre-emptor on the land in suit was, when made, in compliance with the laws of the United States. And when this land, being a part of the Rancho San José as granted by the Mexican government, was excluded from it by a lawful survey, it became subject to settlement and pre-emption. Defendant was then lawfully in possession under the laws of the United States, and being then so in possession he was in privity with the United States, the grantor in the patent. He entered and remained in possession under the grantor by its permission and authority, and the United States had no power to turn him out of possession, unless by proceedings in condemnation of the land for public use, and compensation for defendant's property duly made to him.

The views just above stated are sustained by the cases decided by this court, above cited, and by the case cited, decided by the supreme court of the United States. The defendant argues, further, that the fact that the land in suit is within the indemnity limit grant of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company can be availed of by him as a defense to this action. This fact is urged as a defense if the land in suit was not within the exterior limits of the Rancho San José when the line of the Southern Pacific Road was definitely located. It must be observed that, if the land was within the exterior limits of the rancho above mentioned when the line of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad was definitely located, it was not granted to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company. See third section of the act of July 27, 1866, pp. 294, 295. If it was without the limits of the Rancho San José, but within the indemnity limits above mentioned, then it does not appear that the defendant was in possession by authority of, or by contract with, the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company. He was then in possession as a mere trespasser or intruder, and could not set up such defense against the patent of the United States under which plaintiffs claim.

For the error above pointed out, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to find, on the testimony already introduced, and such further testimony as may be introduced by either party, whether or not the land in suit was on the 3d day of April, 1871, within the exterior boundaries of the Rancho San José as granted by the Mexican government, and on such findings to enter judgment.

Ordered accordingly.

We concur: WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J. I concur. The court found that "the plaintiffs' right of recovery of the land in controversy is based on a patent from the United States to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, dated April 4, 1879, and a deed of said land from said company to the plaintiffs, dated January 20, 1887." Neither the company nor plaintiffs were ever in possession of the lands. Defendant was in the actual possession more than a year prior to plaintiffs' purchase from the company, and has ever since been in exclusive possession, claiming the land under the pre-emption laws. Ten days prior to the date of plaintiffs' purchase from the company, defendant tendered a declaratory statement and the usual fees to the officers of the United States land-office, and upon their refusal to accept the same he immediately filed an appeal to the commissioner of the United States land-office. That appeal is still pending. These facts, under the decision of the supreme court of the United States in Doolan v. Carr, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228, entitled the defendant to question the validity of the patent from the United States, and they exclude plaintiffs from the benefit of the act of congress passed March 3, 1887, for the relief of bona fide purchasers. They are not bona fide purchasers. 14 Copp, Land-Owner, 214–217.

I concur in the judgment: McFarland, J.

---

78 Cal 169

PEOPLE v. FONG CHING. (No. 20,448.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 28, 1889.)

1. BRIBERY—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVINCE OF JURY.
   On trial for bribing a witness to testify falsely, the defense being that money was paid to the witness to dissuade him from giving false testimony, a charge that it is not a recognized custom of the country to subsidize the personal integrity of citizens to prevent them from lapsing into falsehood is error, as usurping jury powers.
2. SAME—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.
   The accusation being that the bribe was offered for testimony on a murder trial that witness had seen some persons attack the one accused of murder, and that the latter had shot in among them, evidence that the alleged murderer tried to shoot the arresting officer; that he had several pistols in his possession; and that he wore a coat of mail,—is irrelevant on the trial for bribery, though the general nature of the crime charged would be relevant to show the materiality of the requested testimony.
3. SAME—CORROBORATORY EVIDENCE.
   The bribe having been offered to a policeman, who testified that he pretended to be about to accept the bribe, and asked a higher sum for the sake of getting evidence to convict of bribery, evidence that the policeman had made similar statements to others is inadmissible.
4. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER.
   Testimony that a witness had learned since defendant's arrest that his reputation before arrest was bad is inadmissible
5. WITNESS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.
   Defendant, having testified on direct examination as to his birth, parentage, education, and business, was properly asked, on cross-examination, whether he had ever been arrested before.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHY, Judge.

Fong Ching, alias Pete, was convicted of offering a bribe to a witness, and appeals. Defendant having testified, on direct examination, as to his birth, parentage, etc., was asked, on cross-examination, whether up to the date of his arrest on this charge he had ever been arrested before, and, having answered "No," was asked, "From any cause whatever?" to which he gave the same reply.

W. H. Lowenthal, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of offering to give a bribe to a witness, under section 137 of the Penal Code. He appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

There are 39 assignments of error; and, as many of them are about rulings concerning the admissibility of evidence, we have been compelled to examine carefully the whole transcript, which consists of four large books of manuscript, and, when read, it is found to consist, to a great extent, of lengthy, wearisome, and apparently pointless examinations and cross-examinations of witnesses, and other immaterial and worthless matter, utterly useless in pointing the exceptions taken. Under our view of the case, however, there is no need to notice much of this unnecssary matter.

It appears that on July 28, 1886, J. B. Martin, who was a policeman of the city of San Francisco, arrested one Lee Chuck for the alleged murder of one Yen Yuen, who was on that day shot and killed on a public street of that city, and the charge against the defendant herein, Fong Ching, (or Pete,) upon which he was convicted, is that he offered said Policeman Martin a bribe of $400 to testify falsely, upon the examination of said Lee Chuck for said alleged murder, "that he [Martin] had seen some persons attack said Lee Chuck with pistols, and that he [Lee Chuck] had shot in amongst them." On the trial of the case at bar Martin testified (in substance) that, soon after the arrest of Lee Chuck, the defendant herein (Pete) met him, (Martin,) and asked him "to be light" on Lee Chuck, and that he (Martin) gave some evasive answer, saying, "I will see," or something like that; that during the next day or two he had several private interviews with the defendant, (another policeman, named Love, being present part of the time,) at which defendant offered to give various sums of money to Martin if the latter would agree to swear falsely, as above stated; that he (Martin) pretended to listen favorably to defendant's proposals, for the purpose of leading him on, so that he might have sufficient evidence of the crime; that he demanded higher sums of money than defendant would offer; that he never received or took any money at all from defendant; and that finally defendant offered him $400 for the proposed false testimony. On the other hand, defendant testified that Martin made the first proposal about money; that defendant never gave, or offered to give, any money to Martin to induce the latter to swear falsely; that Martin represented that he could be of great service to Lee Chuck; that defendant was a warm friend of Lee Chuck, and feared that a certain strong Chinese society, which was very hostile to Lee Chuck, would use money to induce Martin to testify falsely against him, and that at the solicitation of Martin he (defendant) gave Martin various sums of money, amounting in all to $400, for his friendship, and to induce him to testify merely to the truth, and not to testify falsely against Lee Chuck. It is evident that the decision of the case turned mainly upon the amount of credence which the jury should give to either one of these conflicting stories. (It appears incidentally in the transcript that two former juries failed to agree.) Bearing upon this stage of the testimony the court below, of its own motion, gave a certain charge to the jury; and it is contended that the latter part of said charge (given below in italics) was an unauthorized intrusion into the province of the jury. The charge is as follows: "The defendant has testified as a witness in his own behalf. On the witness stand he told you that at certain times between the 28th of July and the 1st of August, 1886, he gave and delivered $400 to Mr. Martin, and that the object of giving it was to enlist and secure the friendship of Martin, and to dissuade him from giving false testimony on the prosecution of Lee Chuck, then about to be tried for murder. If you believe the defendant's version, your verdict should be, 'Not guilty.' It is not a crime in this state to encourage a witness with pecuniary gifts to be truthful, but neither is it among the recognized customs of this country to subsidize the personal integrity of our citizens in order to prevent them from lapsing into falsehood and perjury."

This language could have but one meaning and purpose. In addition to incorporating an unproved fact into the case, it was an argument against the truthfulness of defendant's testimony, and its direct tendency was to influence the jury not to believe it. It might have been a legitimate argument in the mouth of the attorney for the prosecution; and, in such event, the attorney for defendant could have answered it, as best he knew how, upon, at least, equal terms, counsel against counsel. But the weight of the opinion of the court had no place in either scale. The prosecuting officer in criminal cases is the district attorney, not the presiding judge of the court. The main duty of the latter is to see that the trial is orderly and legally conducted; to rule upon such questions of law as are presented to him, or to declare such law as is applicable to the case; and to sit impartially between the people and the defendant. But the moment he attempts to comment upon, or argue about, the weight of evidence, the credibility of witnesses, or the probability of their sworn statements, he usurps power, and violates section 19 of article 6 of the state constitution, which provides that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact." "To weigh the evidence and find the facts is, in this state, the exclusive province of the jury; and with the performance of that duty the judge cannot interfere without a palpable violation of the organic law." People v. Dick, 34 Cal. 666. The same principle is declared in numerous other decisions of this court. See cases cited in Desty, Const. Cal., under section 19, art. 6. The language objected to in the above charge is therefore clearly erroneous, and that it was material and prejudicial to appellant is apparent to lawyer or layman. It threw the weight of the court against the defendant at the very pivotal point of the contest. For this reason the judgment must be reversed.

We shall not examine at length the many other assignments of error. It is proper, however, to notice two or three of them.

1. In order to show the materiality of the proposed false testimony which, as is alleged, defendant sought to have Martin give, it was allowable, no doubt, to put in evidence the general nature of the crime with which Lee Chuck was charged; but we think that the court allowed the prosecution to go too far in that direction. The accusation against the defendant in the case at bar is that he sought corruptly to induce Martin to swear falsely that on the day Yen Yuen was killed he (Martin) "had seen some persons attack the said Lee Chuck with pistols, and that said Lee Chuck shot in amongst them." Surely but little was necessary to point the materiality of such testimony; and yet the prosecution was allowed, against defendant's objections, to introduce in evidence all the details of the arrest of Lee Chuck, and his conduct at the time,—for instance, that he tried to shoot the arresting officer; that he had several pistols in his possession; that he had on his person a coat of mail, etc. How was all this relevant to a charge against the defendant, Pete, of an attempt to bribe Martin? Clearly it was an attempt, under the guise of another purpose, to wrongfully prejudice the jury against the defendant by inflaming their minds against a third person.

2. And in the same way the court went too far in allowing the testimony of the witness Martin to be corroborated or bolstered by showing that he had made statements similar to those of his testimony to third parties,—a thing which, as a general rule, is not allowable. This evidence was admitted under the rule that a detective officer who pretends to be an accomplice in order to ferret crime may prove that, in fact, he was not an accomplice, by showing that he disclosed what he was doing to his superior officer. The rule, within its legitimate bounds, is no doubt well established; but in the case at bar it was allowed to be carried beyond its true limits. Courts should be careful not to permit a rule of evidence proper under certain circumstances, and for certain limited purposes, to be used as a means of opening the door to a mass of irrelevant matter never contemplated by the rule itself.

3. We think also that the court erred in allowing the witness Glennon to testify that he had learned since the arrest of defendant that his reputation before his arrest was bad.

4. The cross-examination of the defendant was certainly very broad, but, as he testified in chief about his birth, parentage, education, and business, we cannot say that he did not open the door wide enough to justify what followed in the cross-examination.

There are many other points made which we do not deem it necessary to notice.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 166

MERRILL LODGE NO. 299, I. O. G. T., v. ELLSWORTH et al. (No. 12,610.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 28, 1889.)

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES—RIGHTS OF SUBORDINATE LODGE.

The constitution of the grand lodge of a fraternal order provided that, in case of failure by a subordinate lodge to do certain things, it "shall be deemed an extinct lodge, and its charter shall be forfeited." Held that, where the subordinate lodge is incorporated under the state laws, its suspension by the grand lodge has no effect on its legal existence, and gives to the representatives of the grand lodge no right to the possession of property of which it is the owner, and in which the grand lodge has no right, title, or interest.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Julius Lyons and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellants. Will D. Gould and James H. Blanchard, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with certain real and personal property. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal.

The case appears to have grown out of a dispute between the members of the lodge as to its management and control. The answer admits that the plaintiff is, and was at the time in question, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of California, and avers that on April 1, 1886, "Will D. Gould, James H. Blanchard, C. C. Dunn, M.W. Childs, and others, members of said Merrill Lodge, got control of said lodge, and elected the officers thereof, the said Gould, Blanchard, and Childs being elected trustees thereof, and undertook to destroy the said order, and to control the same for their own private ends." It further avers, in substance, that the plaintiff is a "subordinate" lodge of the order; that by the constitution of the grand lodge it is declared that any subordinate lodge which fails to do certain things, "shall be deemed an extinct lodge, and its charter shall be forfeited;" that the plaintiff by its conduct brought itself within this provision, and was "suspended" by the grand lodge; and that the defendant Ellsworth "was by the grand chief templar of the grand lodge of the state of California appointed the deputy of said grand chief templar, and directed by him to take possession of the books, papers, and the other property of said Merrill Lodge, and hold the same subject to and until the further order of said grand lodge," which the said Ellsworth proceeded to do.

These averments of the answer (except as to the wrongful intent of the persons who "got control" of the corporation) appear to be true. Upon the question of the ownership of the property the court finds that "said plaintiff, in furtherance of its objects, leased a certain hall; * * * that said plaintiff is now, and has been since December 3, 1874, in possession of, and entitled to the possession of, said hall;" that plaintiff, "for the purpose for which it was incorporated has expended for carpets, furniture, fixtures, books, and necessary property for the carrying on of its work, the sum of $2,000; that said hall is a necessary and proper place in which to keep all of said property, and for the promotion of its said benevolent purposes;" and that "the defendants, or either of them, have no right, title, or interest in or to, or any right of possession of, said hall, or the furniture, books," etc.

The appellants make no criticism upon the sufficiency of this finding as a finding of ownership. Their position seems to be that the suspension by the grand lodge, and the appointment of Ellsworth as the deputy of the grand chief templar, entitled him to the possession and control of the property. The relation between the grand lodge and the corporation plaintiff is not very clear from the record before us; but, as we view the case, no question as to the rights of the plaintiff or its members, as members of the order, is involved. The question presented is one of property merely; and in relation to this two controlling facts appear from the record, viz.: that the plaintiff is a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of California, and that it is the owner of the property in question, in which the defendants have no right, title, or interest. It follows from these facts that the plaintiff is entitled to be protected against the acts of the defendants. The ownership of the property draws to itself the right of possession and control. And since the plaintiff is a corporation it can only be dissolved in the manner prescribed by the laws of California. The provision of the constitution of the grand lodge that in certain contingencies the subordinate lodge "shall be deemed an extinct lodge, and its charter shall be forfeited," and the "suspension" by the grand lodge, and the action taken by the grand chief templar, have not the slightest effect upon the legal existence of the corporation; and as long as it exists its affairs must be managed by its duly-elected officers, as provided by law. If they misconduct themselves, appropriate proceedings to remove them must be resorted to. But the propriety of their conduct will not be inquired into in a suit by the corporation to protect its property.

The showing seems to us to be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to an injunction. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 166

MERRILL LODGE NO. 299, I. O. G. T., v. ELLSWORTH. (No. 12,591.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 28, 1889.)

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

HAYNE, C. This was an action to recover certain personal property. We think that the description of the property was sufficient, and that the averments of the complaint were sufficient to give the court jurisdiction. The other points are similar to those made in No. 12,610, ante, 399, (just decided,) and upon the authority of that case we think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

81 Cal. 378

KOHL et al. v. LILENTHAL et al. (No. 11,719.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 18, 1889.)

CORPORATIONS—CONSOLIDATION—DIVISION OF STOCK.

Vexatious litigation having sprung up between two rival mining corporations, an agreement was entered into between the stockholders of both companies to form a new company, to which should be conveyed all the property of both the old companies in consideration of stock in the new company, which was to be divided pro rata among the old stockholders. Each of the old companies was to be equally represented in the directory of the new. Before the stock was divided all creditors of the old companies were fully paid. Held, that a division of the stock among the stockholders under such circumstances was not prohibited by Civil Code Cal. § 309, providing that the directors of a corporation must not "divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock. * * * There may, however, be a division and distribution of the capital stock of any corporation, which remains after the payment of all its debts, upon its dissolution," etc.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F SULLIVAN, Judge.

Mesick & Maxwell, Garber, Thornton & Bishop, and F. A. Berlin, for appellants. Stewart & Herrin and Wm. M. Pierson, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiffs claim to be the owners and holders of 63,138 shares of the stock of the Head Center Consolidated Mining Company, and bring this action to compel the defendants to transfer, deliver, and issue to them 39,115 shares of stock of the Head Center & Tranquillity Mining Company, and to restrain the defendants from representing, voting, or dealing in any way with these latter shares of stock, of which plaintiffs claim to be the owners. The plaintiffs claim to derive their title to the last-mentioned by reason of their ownership of the first-mentioned shares of stock. The plaintiffs had judgment, and from that and an order denying a new trial, the defendants have appealed. The grounds of the appeal, concisely stated, are that the judgment is unsupported by the findings and any admissions in the pleadings, and that the findings are unsupported by the evidence.

According to the evidence in the record, some time in the summer of the year 1882, two mining companies were in possession of adjoining mining claims in the Tombstone district of the territory of Arizona. One of them, called the "Tranquillity Mining Company," was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey; the other, the Head Center Consolidated Mining Company, was a California corporation. Litigation of a vexatious character had sprung up between these two companies. For the purpose of discontinuing this strife, and furthering their mutual interests, an arrangement was proposed to be effected upon the part of the stockholders of both companies, by common consent, by which the formation of a new corporation was to be had, to which should be deeded all the property of both the old companies, in consideration of the stock of the new company. After various negotiations, looking to this end, the Head Center & Tranquillity Mining Company was organized on the 1st day of December, A. D., 1882, its capital stock being fixed at $2,000,000, and the number of shares at 200,000. This step was taken upon legal advice that it was the most feasible method by which the two companies could be consolidated,—one being a New Jersey corporation, and not subject to the provisions of the Civil Code of California with reference to the consolidation of such corporations. The subscribers to the stock of the new company, and who constituted the board of directors thereof, were F A. Benjamin, T. E. Jewell, A. W. Foster, William Kohl, P. N. Lilenthal, J. M. Gitchell, and J. W. Pew, who each nominally subscribed for five shares of stock. It seems to have been agreed upon all sides by the stockholders of the two original companies that an equal voice in the management of the new company should be accorded to each set of stockholders. At the first two elections of directors, three of them were selected to represent the stockholders of each of the old companies respectively, and a seventh person was elected as being impartial. On the 18th of December, 1882, the board of directors of the new company unanimously adopted a resolution to the effect that the proposition of Messrs. Jewell and Benjamin to sell, convey, or cause to be conveyed to that company the mining claims and grounds known as the "Head Center" and "Yellow Jacket" claims in the Tombstone mining district of Cochise county, Ariz., in full payment and satisfaction of the sum of $5 and 100,000 shares of the capital stock of that corporation, and the Tranquillity mining claim of the same district, county, and territory, with its appurtenances, for the like sum of money and the like number of shares of the capital stock aforesaid, should be accepted, the president and secretary of that corporation being thereby directed to transfer, on the basis proposed, the 200,000 shares of its consolidated stock to Benjamin and Jewell, or their order, on the books of the corporation, on the reception by the company of the conveyance of the property of the two old corporations. Afterwards, on the 4th of January, 1883, the directors of the Head Center Consolidated Company passed certain resolutions, with a view to carry out the arrangement above mentioned. These resolutions recognize the existing status of affairs as heretofore mentioned, and, for the purpose of carrying out the compromise and consolidation which had been agreed upon, direct the president and secretary of the corporation to execute a conveyance of its mining ground, and to receive in consideration therefor $5 in money and 100,000 shares of the capital stock of the new corporation. On the 25th of the same month, at an annual meeting of the stockholders of the Head Center Consolidated Company, at which 160,165 shares of the 164,211 outstanding shares of the stock of the company were represented, the action of the directors in the matter of the consolidation was ratified, and on the 27th of February following the deed was executed by the officers of that corporation. On that day, also, Mr. Benjamin, to whom the secretary of the new company had been directed to issue the 100,000 shares of stock in the new corporation for the Head Center property, directed Mr. Pew, who was that secretary, to issue 99,980 shares of the stock to himself (Pew) as trustee, and the remaining portion of it in pieces of five shares each to several of the directors; and Jewell, to whom it had been ordered that the 100,000 shares of the stock for the Tranquillity property was to be issued, directed that 99,975 shares of it be issued to William Kohl, as trustee, and the rest to the remainder of the directors, which was done. The stock thus issued was deposited in the Anglo-Californian Bank, to be held subject to the joint order of Kohl and Foster, under a stock-pooling arrangement, to which the stockholders of both the original companies were parties.

There does not seem to have been any question as to the right of distribution among the stockholders of the old Tranquillity Company of their pro rata share of the new stock; but when Mr. Pew, the trustee for the Head Center stockholders, demanded that their stock be distributed to them in like manner, the request was refused on the ground that the law did not authorize such a distribution, as it vested the title and right to the stock in the old corporation, as its capital stock, by reason of the fact that the stock was a mere substitution for the mining ground which had belonged to that company, and it was not legal that the capital stock of the corporation should be divided out among the stockholders. And here, in passing, it may be remarked that no objection seems to have been made in any quarter to such a dividing out pro rata to the stockholders of the Tranquillity Company of the shares of stock which fell under the new arrangement to the Tranquillity in lieu of its mining ground, etc. And it also appears that no difference existed under the arrangement for consolidation, in the agreement and understanding, as it affected the Tranquillity or the Head Center Consolidated Company and their several stockholders. If this arrangement was, without any objection, carried out as to the one, that would seem to be a strong circumstance going to show that the same understanding must have existed on the part of the stockholders and all parties concerned, with reference to what was to be done with the stock of the other old company. Upon the other hand, the defendants claim that the oral testimony establishes no such common understanding, and that it and the documentary proof indicates very clearly that the real transaction was merely a sale of its property by the Head Center Consolidated Mining Company, in consideration of 100,000 shares of the capital stock of the Head Center & Tranquillity Company (the new company;) that the transaction as carried out was a corporate transaction, rather than one on the part of the body of the stockholders of the Head Center Company. But the evidence indicates that when the stock was issued it was not to the corporations, but to Kohl and Pew, trustees, and was to remain in a pool for a certain purpose, for a certain specified time, when it was to be divided out among the stockholders in pursuance of the original plan and agreement. This is abundantly shown, to quote from the opinion of the judge below, who heard the witnesses testify, and saw them face to face, by "the positive testimony of the plaintiffs, the negative corroboration of that testimony by defendants, borne out by the recorded acts of all parties." All of which makes it plain "that the arrangement, as planned and executed, was a consolidation of the interests of the two sets of old stockholders in the new Head Center & Tranquillity Company." This conclusion is consistent with all the testimony, oral and written, and is in perfect harmony with the conduct of all parties, which is convincing evidence of its correctness, especially in view of the further circumstances that what is claimed to have been agreed on is just what would have been the best thing for all interests to have been done, if the old corporations had both been domestic or state corporations.

If, then, as we conclude it to have been, the arrangement was "the act of the body of the Head Center stockholders," and the stock was issued to Pew as their trustee merely, is the transaction one forbidden by section 309 of the Civil Code,[1] or by the general principles of equity which govern such transactions? If the consummation of the agreement would result in fraud of complaining creditors' rights, or was opposed to the interests of the stockholders, it is plain that under the decision of the appellate court in Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300, in giving construction to a similar statute, such a division of stock among stockholders would be unlawful. But, as appears to us, this arrangement was for the benefit and interest of all parties, both the creditors to whom not a large sum was due, which was paid before this application to divide the stock was made, and to the stockholders themselves, who thereby, as it seems to us, would have occupied relatively the same position in the new company which they held in the old. The prohibition, as we take it, contained in the section, Civil Code, supra, " is directed against the trustees, and seems designed to protect creditors as such, and also to protect the stockholders against their mismanagement in distributing capital stock in the form of dividends, with a view to holding out the idea that the corporation is more prosperous than it is, for the purpose of promoting some unlawful object. If all parties in interest are secured from injury, and the purpose is a lawful one, the object of the provision would seem to be accomplished, and there would be no one entitled to complain. Such a transaction was regarded as lawful in Treadwell v. Manufacturing Co., 7 Gray, 393." Martin v. Zellerbach, supra. Here the debts are all paid before the stock is asked to be delivered. The parties asking it are those who had the stock in one of the original companies, whose property is now owned by the new company, and they do not ask for anything more than was agreed upon all hands that they should have, and which, as it seems to us, they ought to have. What was considered a fair thing, which no one seems to doubt, for the Tranquillity stockholders, should not be unfair to the Head Center stockholders, who have contributed their all in the way of property to the new corporation. Section 309, supra, in our judgment, does not inhibit a body of stockholders from "doing for a lawful purpose, and without injury to creditors," that which appears in this instance to have been for the best interests of all concerned.

---

[1] Sec. 309. The directors of corporations must not make dividends, except from the surplus profits arising from the business thereof; nor must they divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock; nor must they create debts beyond their subscribed capital stock, or reduce or increase the capital stock, except as hereinafter specially provided. * * * There may, however, be a division and distribution of the capital stock of any corporation, which remains after the payment of all its debts, upon its dissolution, or the expiration of its term of existence

As throwing some light upon this proposition the appellate court in the case of Chater v. Refinery Co., 19 Cal. 220, may be referred to as having asserted that stockholders have a right to preserve their just rights of property in consonance with contracts which they may have made, notwithstanding the intervention of corporate agencies, which claim the property for themselves. In Shorb v. Beaudry, 56 Cal. 450, after quoting from the case supra, the court says: "The truth is, the corporation, under our system, following such an agreement," (as the one here shown) "would be the mere agency of the associates, created for the mere sake of convenience in carrying out the agreement as between those who made the bargain, the different characters or forms in which or by which the bargain was made, and the order in which the several parts of it were executed, making no substantial difference in the obligation." The appellate court further said: "Substantial justice can be administered in this case by treating the parties in the light of their agreements between themselves, independently of their incorporation, and in no other way that we can discover can this be done." So in the present instance the court below seems to have done substantial justice as between all the parties to the transactions which resulted in the incorporation of the new mining company; and, perceiving no prejudicial error in the record, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

78 Cal. 221

WENZEL v. SCHULTZ et al. (No. 12,651.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 2, 1889.)

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—ACTION ON NOTE—FRAUD.

On settlement of their mining partnership, defendants, S. and his wife, gave plaintiff their note at six months for the sum found due; having objected to giving a note due one day after date, as plaintiff wished. Two days later plaintiff came back saying that he had found a mistake in the balance, and presented them another note to sign for a slightly smaller amount. Defendant could not read, and requested plaintiff to indorse the difference on the old note. His wife was busy, and asked plaintiff to leave the note till she could look over it. At last, moved by his importunities and assurances that it was just the same as the other except in amount, they signed it. It was payable one day after date. Held, that defendants had a good defense, although they had no confidential relation with plaintiff, and had an opportunity to learn the contents of the note.[1]

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Action against H. C. Schultz and Mary Schultz on their promissory note dated January 28, 1886, and due one day after date. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

---

[1] On the subject of signing an instrument without reading it, and the liabilities created thereby, see Barnes v. Insurance Co., (Iowa,) 39 N. W. Rep. 122, and note; Railway Co. v. Cox, (Iowa,) 41 N. W. Rep. —.

F. D. & G. W. Nichol, for appellant. I. M. Kalloch and F. W. Street, (P. Reddy and W. H. Metson, of counsel,) for respondents.

PATERSON, J. On January 26, 1888, plaintiff and defendant H. C. Schultz, who had prior and up to that time been engaged jointly in certain mining enterprises, met and adjusted their accounts. Plaintiff asserted that the sum of $3,920.67 was due to him, and wanted a note payable one day after date. Defendants were unwilling to give a note payable in so short a time, but, relying on his statement, executed and delivered to him their promissory note for the sum claimed, payable in six months after date. Immediately thereafter the plaintiff took his note to an attorney to see what could be done to secure the payment thereof, and was informed that nothing could be done to secure its payment, as it was not payable until six months after date. Two days later plaintiff went to the residence of defendants, and stated to them that he had made a mistake in computing the amount due from them; that the note called for $50 more than he was entitled to, and he presented to them a new note, which he said was for $3,870.67, but he said that in all other respects it was the same as the note delivered on the 26th instant. Defendant H. C. suggested that a payment of $50 be indorsed on the original note, but plaintiff insisted upon a new note. The defendant Mary,—wife of H. C.,—who was busy with her household affairs, requested the plaintiff to leave the note with her for a few hours, that she might read it before signing it. The court finds "that neither of the defendants knew whether a mistake had been made in the note of January 26th or not; that the defendant H. C. Schultz was not able to read the said new note, and that the defendant Mary Schultz had bread baking, and told the plaintiff that she had not a moment's time, and asked him to leave the note with her for a couple of hours, until she had time to read and sign it; that the plaintiff insisted upon an immediate execution of the note, and repeatedly declared to the defendants that it was just the same as the other note, excepting the difference of $50 in its principal sum, and showed defendant, Mary Schultz, the difference in the principal sum; that the defendants thereupon, by reason of their confidence in plaintiff, and their belief of the truthfulness of his assertions, signed the said new note, and delivered it to plaintiff; that, contrary to plaintiff's declaration, the said new note had been by him made payable one day after its date; * * * that the plaintiff's statements and representations to defendant were false and fraudulent, and were knowingly and purposely made by plaintiff for the purpose of misleading and deceiving defendants into the execution and delivery of the note sued upon in this action, and that said misrepresentations and statements misled the defendants into the execution and delivery thereof to plaintiff; that the defendants * * * demanded from plaintiff the surrender to them of said note, and tendered to plaintiff in lieu thereof their promissory note for the sum of $3,870.67, bearing date January 26, 1888, and made payable six months after date; * * * that the plaintiff refuses, and has ever since continued to refuse, to surrender the note executed by defendants on January 28th, and has ever since continued to reject the defendants' tender." Upon these facts judgment was entered for defendants.

The facts found by the court are supported by the evidence, and we think the judgment is right. Plaintiff had been for ten years a partner of H. C., had lived in defendant's family five years, and had gained their friendship and confidence. Defendant H. C., who was suffering from cataract of the eye, could not read the note written by plaintiff; his wife was busy; both signed the note relying on the positive and repeated assurance of plaintiff that the note was in all respects the same as the original, except as to the amount named therein.

Appellant whistles these facts down the wind, saying that "it does not appear therefrom that any relation of especial trust or confidence existed between the parties, or that defendants did not have full and equal opportunity with plaintiff to acquire knowledge of the contents of the note," etc. But the court finds, upon ample evidence, that the plaintiff intended to deceive defendants, and that they were in fact deceived by his statements as to the contents of the note. Where a party is induced to sign an instrument by false statements as to its contents, made with intent to mislead him, and to prevent him from making an examination of its provisions, it is no answer to say that a higher degree of care and diligence would have enabled him to escape its effect. Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 478; Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113; Anderson v. Field, 6 Bradw. 307; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 895; Burroughs v. Guano Co., 81 Ala. 255, 1 South. Rep. 212; Cole v. Williams, 12 Neb. 440, 11 N. W. Rep. 875; Association v. Esche, 17 Pac. Rep. 677, note 1; Civil Code, §§ 1571, 1572.

Defendants, in their answer and at the trial, tendered to plaintiff a note which in form was the same as the note plaintiff represented to them they were signing on January 28, 1888. This was more than the law required of them. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 193, 848.

The answer of defendants contains a full and complete defense. Capuro v. Insurance Co., 39 Cal. 125. At the trial no objection was made that the testimony offered by defendants was not within the issues.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; WORKS, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

78 Cal. 175

SIMPSON et al. v. MCCARTHY. (No. 12,854.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 29, 1889.)

1. ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 538, providing that an affidavit for an attachment shall show an indebtedness upon a contract, express or implied, an affidavit stating that the defendant is indebted "on an account stated, a contract for the direct payment of money," etc., is sufficient as showing that the elements of an implied contract, at least, exist, and it is not necessary to state whether the contract is express or implied. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

2. SAME—KNOWLEDGE OF AFFIANT.

Such affidavit is not defective because the affiant does not state whether his averments are based on knowledge or on information and belief.

3. SAME—AFFIDAVIT BY AGENT.

And where the affidavit is made by an agent of the creditor, such agency need not be shown, nor need it be expressly averred that he makes the affidavit on behalf of the creditor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. S. SWINNERTON, Judge.

Carter & Smith and J. H. Budd, for appellant. C. H. Clement, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an appeal from an order overruling a motion to dissolve, vacate, and set aside a writ of attachment. The grounds of the motion were: (1) That the affidavit did not conform to section 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in that it did not state whether the debt was upon an implied or an express contract; (2) that it did not appear that the affidavit was made upon knowledge or upon information and belief; (3) that it did not appear that the affidavit was made by or on behalf of the plaintiffs; (4) that the attachment was improperly issued, because the affidavit neither stated whether the contract sued on was express or implied, or stated facts from which it could be ascertained whether the contract was express or implied; (5) that it did not appear whether the undertaking was made and entered into before or after suit brought; (6) that the undertaking was in the alternative.

The portion of the affidavit called in question was in the following language: "[Title of court and cause.] State of California, County of San Joaquin—ss. J. M. White, being duly sworn, says: That he is the agent and salesman of the plaintiffs in the above action; that the defendant in the said action is indebted to them in the sum of $1,295.75, gold coin of the United States, over and above all legal set-offs and counter-claims, upon an account stated, a contract for the direct payment of money," etc. That portion of the undertaking to which objection is made reads thus: "[Title of court and cause.] Whereas, the above-named plaintiffs have commenced, or are about to commence an action," etc., dated this 7th day of February, 1888. The objections to the undertaking have not been urged here. As to the affidavit, we think there is no force in the second or third of the objections as specified grounds of the motion. The statute does not require the affiant to state whether his averments are based upon direct knowledge, or upon information and belief; and when, as here, the facts are stated positively, without qualification, it will be implied that they were within the knowledge of the affiant. Neither is it required that the person who makes affidavit in behalf of the creditor should show that he is the agent of the creditor for the collection of the debt, or by express averment that he makes it in his behalf, or that the facts are peculiarly within his knowledge, or that there is any particular reason or excuse for the omission of the creditor to make the affidavit himself; and there is nothing in the policy of the law requiring the interpolation of such provisions by construction.

The serious question involved in the appeal arises upon the first and fourth objections. It was held by this court in an early case (Hawley v. Delmas, 4 Cal. 196) that an affidavit, alleging in the bald language of the statute that the indebtedness arose upon an express or implied contract, was insufficient to sustain an attachment, and in several subsequent and some recent cases that decision has been cited with approval. Doubtless it states the law correctly, and unless this case can be distinguished, the order appealed from must be reversed. It seems to us, however, that the cases are distinguishable. The real vice of the affidavit in Hawley v. Delmas, as pointed out in the opinion of MYRICK, J., in Wilke v. Cohn, 54 Cal. 213, was that it stated nothing with certainty. It did not allege an express contract; it did not allege an implied contract; and, consequently, did not establish the essential fact that any sum of money was due from defendant to plaintiff upon a contract for the direct payment of money. Obviously this is the one essential fact, for, as regards the right to attach, it makes not a particle of difference whether the contract is express or implied, and all that was decided in the cases referred to was that so loose an allegation in the alternative could not be treated as an allegation of either alternative. Here, however, is no allegation that if one thing is not true, then another is; it is positively and directly charged that the defendant is indebted to plaintiff "upon an account stated, a contract for the direct payment of money." It may be true, as contended by counsel for appellant, that account stated can be either an express or implied contract; but, on the other hand, it is undeniable that in either case it is a contract for the direct payment of money. The allegation that there is an account stated makes it certain that at least the elements of the implied contract exist, and the mere fact that there is nothing to negative the existence of the additional element necessary to constitute it an express contract, does not, in our opinion, deprive the allegation of the requisite decree of certainty.

For these reasons I think the order appealed from should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

WORKS, J., (concurring.) It is held in Hawley v. Delmas, 4 Cal. 196, and cases following it, that an affidavit alleging, in the language of the statute, that the indebtedness is "upon a contract, express or implied," is insufficient, because, being in the alternative, it fails to show that it is upon either an express or an implied contract. An account stated may be "a contract, express or implied." Therefore an affidavit alleging that it is an account stated is identical with the one held to be bad, because it in effect avers that the indebtedness is upon either an express or an implied contract, and is directly within the cases referred to. But in my judgment the affidavit in Hawley v. Delmas was sufficient under the statute. It is totally immaterial whether the contract is express or implied, as the right of the attaching creditor is precisely the same in either case. The fact of the indebtedness upon contract is the material thing to be alleged; therefore to say that the defendant was indebted upon contract, express or implied, should, in my judgment, have been held sufficient. In the case of Klenk v. Schwalm, 19 Wis. 111, such an affidavit was held to be sufficient under a statute precisely like our own. For the reason that I do not concur in the rule laid down in the earlier cases referred to, I am of opinion that the affidavit here is sufficient; but if those cases are to be adhered to, I am unable to see how we can do otherwise than to hold the affidavit to be insufficient.

MCFARLAND, J., (dissenting.) I dissent and agree with the following opinion, written by Commissioner HAYNE:

"I think Hawley v. Delmas is in point, and that under that decision the affidavit must show whether the contract is express or implied. If the only thing necessary to be shown was that there was a contract, the alternative words in the affidavit could have been, and presumably would have been, rejected as surplusage. The statement that the indebtedness was on an account stated does not show whether the contract was express or implied, because an account stated may be an implied contract. Hendy v. March, 17 Pac. Rep. 702. Unless Hawley v. Delmas is to be overlooked, I think the order appealed from should be reversed."

---

78 Cal. 181

COWAN v. PHŒNIX INS. CO. (No. 12,608.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 29, 1889.)

1. INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—PLEADING—COMPLAINT—PROOF OF LOSS—WAIVER.
A fire insurance policy stipulated that a loss should be paid within 60 days after receipt of proofs thereof at the company's office, and that notice in writing of the nature and cause of the loss, etc., sworn to, shall be furnished within 30 days after its occurrence. Another clause provided for arbitration as to the amount of the loss in case of disagreement, which should be conclusive. A complaint for a loss thereunder alleged that after the fire, and before the commencement of the action, plaintiff furnished defendant with proofs of the loss; that she performed all the conditions required by the policy on her part, and offered to arbitrate as provided in the policy, which defendant refused to do, or to pay the loss. Held, that the complaint was bad for want of an allegation that proofs of loss were furnished 60 days before the institution of the action, and that the provisions concerning arbitration did not waive the necessity of furnishing the proofs within that time.

2. SAME—APPLICATION.
Where the policy contains a provision that the application shall be deemed a part thereof, and a warranty of the facts stated therein, and that misrepresentation or omission of facts material to the risk in said application shall avoid the policy, it is unnecessary to set out the application in a complaint thereon, or aver the performance of anything relating thereto, or the truth of the representations therein made.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON D. FREER, Judge.

Action by Mary Cowan against the Phœnix Insurance Company, to recover on an insurance policy. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, for appellant. Gray & Sexton, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Action on policy of fire insurance, on which plaintiff recovered judgment. Defendant appeals.

The complaint was demurred to on the general ground. The counsel of defendant state in their brief very clearly the particulars in which they contend that the complaint is insufficient. We copy these from the brief. They are as follows:

"The plaintiff alleges that, for a sufficient consideration, the defendant made its policy of insurance to her, a copy of which is annexed to and made a part of the complaint. That policy contains the following agreements and conditions: 'By this policy of insurance the Phœnix Fire Insurance Company of Brooklyn, in consideration of $35.75, and subject to and under the conditions hereinafter mentioned, do insure Mary McMullan against loss or damage by fire to the amount of $1,500, as per slip hereto attached.' [Here are specified the several objects which are insured, and the amounts on each;] as per application and diagram of assured on file with this company, which is hereby made a part of this policy, and a warranty by the assured. If an application, survey, plan, or description of the property herein described is taken, whether said application, survey, plan, or description be taken or signed subsequent or prior to the issue of this policy, such application, survey, plan, or description shall be considered a part of this contract, and a warranty by the assured; and any false representation by the assured of the condition, situation, or occupancy of the property, or any omission to make known every fact material to the risk, or any overvaluation, or any misrepresentation whatever, either in a written application or otherwise, or if the assured shall have, or shall hereafter make, any other insurance, whether valid or not, on the property herein described, or any part thereof, without the consent of this company written hereon, or the risk be increased by the erection or occupation of neighboring buildings, or by any means whatever, without the consent of this company indorsed hereon, then, and in every such case, this policy is void.' By the terms of the policy it is provided that the amount of loss or damage shall be estimated according to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the loss, and 'be paid sixty days after the proofs of the same required by the company shall have been made by the assured, and received at the office in Chicago.' The only allegation upon this subject is 'that afterwards, (that is, after the fire,) and before the commencement of this suit, plaintiff furnished the defendant with proof of her said loss, and of her interest in said property.'"

These statements are correct as to the allegations of the complaint.

It is argued that the complaint is defective in that it does not set forth the application of the assured, which is declared to form a part of the policy. It appears clearly from the complaint that there was an application, which was made a part of the policy. The contents of it are not stated in the complaint. But it is stated in the complaint, by appending the policy to and making it part of it, that there was an application, and that that application should be considered a warranty by the assured. This stipulation of the contract is a solemn engagement by the assured that the representations made, in the application at the time they were made, and when the policy became a contract, were true and correct. There are two classes of conditions usually inserted in policies,—the first pointing to the time of the contract; the second, to things which may occur, or which may have to be performed, at a time subsequent. In the former case the stipulation is called an "affirmative warranty," and in the latter a "promissory warranty." 1 Marsh. Ins. 578; Ann. Ins. § 145; Insurance Co. v. Cotheal, 7 Wend. 72. Affirmative warranties are sometimes called "warranties in præsenti." 1 Wood, Ins. 444. A breach of an affirmative warranty consists in the falsehood of the affirmation, when made, of a promissory warranty, which is in its nature executory, of the non-performance of the stipulation. De Hahn v. Hartley, 1 Term R. 343. A stipulation that "a watchman shall be kept on the premises nights" is a promissory warranty. 1 Wood, Ins. §§ 179, 186. So, also, that, during the risk the premises shall be used as an hotel is a promissory warranty that it shall be so used. An engagement that so many buckets of water shall be kept by the assured on any floor of a building is also a promissory warranty. 1 Wood, Ins. § 187.

Instances of promissory or executory warranties may be found in Murdock v. Insurance Co., 2 N. Y. 210, and Bobbitt v. Insurance Co., 66 N. C. 70.

In pleading performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary, under the law of this state, to state the facts showing performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part. Code Civil Proc. § 457.

In counting on a policy of insurance, we cannot see that there is any necessity of averring performance by the insured of anything warranted to be true when the policy is issued, for the reason that there is nothing to be performed. When the assured has warranted a thing to exist, or a representation to be true, at a time when a policy becomes consummated as a contract, he has done all that he can do. The warranty is agreed to by him, and there is an end of all he can do or perform. Under the section of the Code of Civil Procedure above referred to, he is only required to aver performance of the conditions on his part to be performed, and, where there is nothing in the representation or statement to be performed by the plaintiff, there is no necessity of setting forth such representation or statement. Clearly, when nothing is required to be performed by him, such an averment by him would be useless and without meaning; whereas in the case of a promissory warranty, the assured has warranted that he will do something during the existence of the risk, and therefore an averment of such stipulation and of its performance is required. As is said in 2 Wood, Ins. 1136: "It can readily be determined of what matters performance should be averred by ascertaining what, under the policy, the assured has stipulated to do, and what he must do in order to recover, and he must aver performance of all such conditions; as where he stipulates to erect a chimney, to keep a watchman, to put in a force-pump, to keep water in certain quantities and in certain places, or any other matter or thing which the insurer has contracted to do." In same connection this author, on same page, says: "But, as to all other matters which are in the nature of exceptions, or which are merely prohibitory, and provide that the assured shall not do certain things, the plaintiff need not make any special averments, as they are merely matters of defense, which, if relied upon by the insurer, must be pleaded and proved by him; and, if nothing is said in the declaration as to whether such conditions have been broken or not, the declaration will not be defective." These statements of Mr. Wood are sustained by cases cited by him, and are on principle correct.

In Bobbitt v. Insurance Co., supra, the warranty was held by the court to be a stipulation or warranty by which the assured bound himself that the cash value of the tobacco insured during the period of the risk would continue to be about $30,000. This was substantially an agreement that the insured would keep on hand tobacco during the period of the risk of the value of about the sum above named. The assured had agreed to do something, and therefore it was necessary for him to set forth in his complaint what he had agreed to do, and that he had performed it. It may be remarked of the case cited that there was as to the tobacco insured an affirmative warranty as well as a promissory warranty. The language in the application, which was a part of the policy construed by the court, was this: "The present cash value of the tobacco on hand is $30,000, and it will be increased to $50,000; the average value on hand, say $30,000." The statement that the present cash value of the property on hand is $30,000 is an affirmative warranty, speaking of the time when the policy became operative. The remaining words are substantially a promise that a quantity of tobacco shall be kept on hand of the average value of $30,000. The court in its opinion speaks of it as a description of the property insured. It was not only such a description, but it was a promise that such a description should continue to be true during the period for which the insurance was made. It was in effect a promise such as is stated above. It was in reference to this promise that the court said that it was part of the contract, should be set out in the complaint, and proved by the plaintiff.

An application is generally nothing more than a representation made by a party when he applies for insurance of his property. These statements or representations relate to the descriptive character and value of the property of which insurance is sought, and how such property is used. When the application is made a part of the policy given out and a warranty, the warranties in it are of the kind styled "affirmative" or "in præsenti." They constitute a contract that the representations made in the application are true. Of such engagements or contracts there is nothing to be done or performed by the insured, and therefore the statements need not be set forth in a complaint on the policy or any averment of the performance of them. A plaintiff is not called on to aver or prove the truth of such representations in his complaint. It was so held in the case of Herron v. Insurance Co., 28 Ill. 238, upon a demurrer to a complaint, where the same objection was made to it as in the case before us, and the ruling of the court below sustaining the demurrer was reversed.

It is said that something material, or which may be material, to plaintiff's right to recover, has been left out of the complaint. In reply to this, we say it does not appear that anything material in the application, or which may be material to plaintiff's case, has been left out. The application is not before us, and we cannot say what is in it. Therefore we cannot say that anything material is omitted from the complaint. As to the contention that there may be something material in the application which is omitted from the complaint, in addition to what is said above, we will further say that a demurrer to a complaint should not be sustained because there may be possibly something in an application affecting plaintiff's right to recover which is not averred in the complaint. Certainly we should not reverse a ruling of the court below overruling a demurrer on a perhaps. Error should clearly appear to justify such a course.

In ruling against the defendant on the point above discussed, we desire to say, further, that we cannot see how it can receive any detriment from the lack of the suggested allegation. The policy states that the application is filed with the defendant, and in his answer defendant can set it out and aver non-performance of anything required by it to be performed.

The second objection to the complaint is that it does not appear that the proof of loss was furnished to the defendant 60 days before the commencement of this action. This question was presented to this court in Doyle v. Insurance Co., 44 Cal. 264, and it was there held that a complaint with a similar allegation was fatally defective. The court said in the case cited: "By the terms of the policy it is provided as follows: 'The amount of loss or damage to be estimated according to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the loss, and to be paid sixty days after due notice and proof of the same made by the assured,' etc. It is objected that it does not appear from the allegations of the complaint that when the action was commenced this period of sixty days had elapsed. In answer to this point, the respondent relies upon the following averments in the complaint: 'That the plaintiff duly performed all the conditions on her part in the said policy of insurance to be performed; that she gave to defendant due notice and proof of the fire and loss aforesaid, and demanded payment of the said sum of $600; that no part of the same has been paid, and that the whole of said sum is now due, for which she demands judgment,' etc. The allegation that the sum 'is now due' may be laid out of the case, inasmuch as that is a conclusion of law merely. Nor does the averment that the plaintiff duly performed all the conditions on her part in the said policy of insurance to be performed, and that she had given due notice and proof of the loss, aid the complaint in this respect. Under the terms of the policy, the doing of these things would not give her an immediate right of action against the defendant for the payment of the sum demanded, for the defendant was not bound to pay until the lapse of sixty days thereafter. In a complaint filed on the very next day after the notice and proof had been given, it might have been alleged, with truth, that all these things had been done; and yet it will not be pretended that she would at that time have had a cause of action against the defendant, or that the latter was then in default because payment had not been made. The delay of the sixty days after notice, to which, under the terms of the policy, the defendant is entitled, is a substantial right secured by the stipulation of the contract, not merely to enable it to prepare to pay, but also to investigate the circumstances under which the loss occurred, with a view of determining whether or not the loss had been of such a character as involved an obligation upon its part to pay at all."

But it is said in reply to this by plaintiff that the following averments in the complaint render it sufficient, in the absence of allegations showing that the proofs of loss were furnished 60 days before the commencement of this action: "That afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, plaintiff furnished the defendant with proof of her said loss and her interest in the said property, and offered in writing to arbitrate the value of the said property so lost by the said fire, and named in said writing the person selected by her to be one of said arbitrators, and otherwise performed all the conditions of said policy on her part to be performed. But the said defendant, with the intent and purpose to cheat and defraud this plaintiff out of her said insurance, refused to arbitrate the value of the property so lost by the said fire, or to name or to appoint any person arbitrator, or to pay to plaintiff said insurance money, or to communicate with plaintiff in reference thereto, but absolutely and unqualifiedly refused to pay to plaintiff said insurance money, or any part thereof, or to treat with plaintiff in regard thereto."

The provisions of the policy in regard to proof of loss are as follows: "The amount of loss or damage to be estimated according to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the loss, and to be paid sixty days after the proofs of the same required by the company shall have been made by the assured, and received at the office in Chicago, and the loss shall have been ascertained and proved in accordance with the terms and provisions of this policy, unless the property be replaced, or the company shall have given notice of their intention to rebuild or repair the damaged premises. Persons sustaining loss or damage by fire shall forthwith give notice in writing of said loss to the company, and within thirty days thereafter render a particular and specific account of such loss, signed and sworn to by them, stating whether any and what other insurance has been made on the same property, giving copies of the written portions of all policies thereon; also the actual cash value of the property, and their interest therein; for what purpose and by whom the building insured, or containing the property insured, and the several parts thereof, were used at the time of the loss; when and how the fire originated; and shall produce a certificate under the hand and seal of a magistrate or notary public nearest to the place of the fire, not concerned in the loss as a creditor or otherwise, nor related to the assured, stating that he has examined the circumstances attending the loss, knows the character and circumstances of the assured, and verily believes that the assured has, without fraud, sustained loss on the property described to the amount which such magistrate or notary public shall certify."

This last paragraph quoted is from subdivision 9 of policy. There are other provisions in this subdivision which need not be quoted, bearing on the subject of the proofs of loss.

The respondent's counsel, referring to the language of the first paragraph just above quoted as to proofs of loss, asks: "Now, how is the loss to be ascertained and found in accordance with the terms and provisions of this policy?" He then proceeds to say that the mode prescribed by the policy for ascertainment is the arbitration clause of the policy, which is in these words. "The amount of said value and of damage to the property, whether real or personal, covered by this policy, or any part thereof, may be determined by mutual agreement between the company and the assured; or, failing to agree, the same shall then, at the written request of either party, be submitted to competent and impartial arbitrators, one to be selected by each party, the two so chosen, in case of disagreement, to select a third; and the award of any two of them in writing, under oath, shall be binding and conclusive as to the amount of such loss or damage, but shall not determine the validity of the contract, nor the liability of this company, nor any other question, except only the amount of such loss or damage."

We cannot discern that the proofs of loss or damage are dispensed with or waived by the provision. The stipulation in the policy that the amount of loss or damage may be determined by arbitration only takes effect when the parties have failed to agree, and there is no allegation in the complaint that they have failed to agree. If an arbitration is required by the policy to ascertain and determine the amount of loss or damage, still it is clear from the clause first quoted, in regard to proofs of loss, that the loss is not payable until 60 days after the proofs have been made and received at the office in Chicago.

If arbitration is resorted to for the ascertainment and proof of the amount of loss, and the award is not made until the period of 60 days above stated has elapsed, still the amount of loss is not payable until such award is made. The resort to arbitration may prolong the day of payment beyond 60 days, but cannot shorten that period. This is clear from the words used in the clause first above quoted, which provides that the loss shall not be paid until 60 days after the proofs shall have been received at the office in Chicago, and shall have been ascertained and found in accordance with the terms and provisions of the policy, i. e., by arbitration, when resort is had to it, if the contention of the plaintiff is to be sustained. We think it clear that the resort to arbitration, as said above, may prolong the day of payment beyond the 60-day period, but cannot bring it within the 60 days.

We are of opinion that the objection to the complaint just above discussed is well taken, and that the demurrer to it should have been sustained.

We deem it unnecessary to pass on the other point made by the defendant, in regard to the verdict, as there is no probability of its arising on a new trial.

For the reasons above given the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with direction to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiff to amend.

Ordered accordingly.

We concur: WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

3 Cal. Unrep. 61

GOLDTREE et al. v. THOMPSON et al. (No. 11,749.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 29, 1889.)

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—SUBSTITUTION.

A complaint by testamentary trustees for a construction of certain trusts in the will, alleging that plaintiffs, who were executors also, had administered on the estate, until by an order or decree of the probate court the funds in their hands as executors were distributed to them as trustees, without stating what disposition, if any, was directed to be made of the trust fund, does not state sufficient facts to enable the court to grant the relief sought, as the will would be superseded by the decree, which is final, a construction of which is all the trustees are entitled to, and an amendment setting out the decree in full should be made. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

On rehearing. For former opinion see 15 Pac. Rep. 359.

Graves, Turner & Graves, for appellants. J. M. Wilcoxon and W. H. Spencer, for respondents. Wm. Shipsey, guardian ad litem, for minors.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought by the trustees, under the will of Jonathan Thompson, deceased, against his heirs at law and the legatees under the will, for the purpose of having the terms of that instrument construed, so that the trustees would be freed from doubt as to what their duties were with reference to the trusts confided to them. The court below made its decree determining the method in which the trustees should act in obedience to the trusts contained in the will from which this appeal is prosecuted.

We think the cause should be considered upon appeal. notwithstanding the effort made to dismiss it. The complaint, which seeks to have the trusts contained in the will construed by the court, shows by the averments that, after after the trustees had qualified as executors of the will, they entered upon the discharge of their duties as such, "and managed the property of the said deceased in the state of California, paid all the debts of said deceased, and, after due proceedings had in the said estate, all the property thereof was by an order of said probate court, duly made and given on March 13, 1877, distributed to said Patchett, Thompson, and Grierson, as trustees under the said will," etc. It does not appear from the complaint, however, what the terms of that decree were with reference to the disposition of the trust-estate, except that it was distributed to the trustees. What the purport of the order of the court was as to carrying out the trusts contained in the will is not stated. The order or decree of final distribution, having been "duly made and given," was binding upon the parties in interest here, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal. Section 1666, Code Civil Proc.; Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 279; Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 457; In re Rowland, 74 Cal. 525, 16 Pac. Rep. 315. No appeal in the matter appears to have been taken. This being so, it is manifest that the rights of the parties must be governed by the decree. In other words, the will is superseded by the decree. It is therefore immaterial to consider what is the proper construction of the will. The only thing upon which the trustees have a right to the opinion of the court is as to their duties under the decree; and the suit is in effect to obtain a construction of the decree. But the record does not show what the decree was, and therefore the court is practically asked to construe a document which is not before it. It cannot undertake to do that; and it results that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. If the fact be that the will was made a part of the decree, that fact should be made to appear, and the whole of the decree should be given. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with permission to file an amended complaint.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with permission to file an amended complaint.

THORNTON, J., (dissenting.) I desire in brief to explain my dissent. The trustees under the will of the testator in this case, (plaintiffs herein,) under a well-known head of equity jurisdiction, ask the advice of a court of equity as to the construction of trusts in the will. The property had been distributed by the proper court, under the will, to the plaintiffs as trustees; and it is held in the prevailing opinion that the will is superseded by the decree. How this supersedure is brought about I cannot conceive. The court distributing the property had nothing to do with the construction of the trusts under the will. The question was not before it at all. That court had only to determine in whom the law vested the property under the will. As to what was the meaning or signification of the language declaring the trusts under the will, that court had nothing to say or do. There was no merger in a decree or judgment. Such merger cannot go beyond the matter in issue. If the point or question is not a matter in issue,—that is, to be determined in the action by the court in which the suit is pending, and declared by its judgment,—the judgment of the court on such point or matter determines nothing which can bind or estop either court or party. And here it clearly appears that the court did determine nothing as to the extent or limits of the trusts. It only distributed the property, as it should have done, to the plaintiffs as trustees. The plaintiffs are held to be trustees by the decree and to be trustees by the will. They are appointed by that instrument. They could not be appointed by the decree. The plaintiffs speak of themselves in the complaint as trustees under the will; and they are so. Because they are recognized in the decree as trustees under the will, they do not cease to be trustees under the will. The will still is the foundation and rule of their duties. They must look to the will as the source of their duties and obligations, and for the extent of such duties and obligations. For these reasons I cannot concur in the judgment of the court dismissing the plaintiffs from the forum, who, as trustees, come into court and ask for that which they have a right to ask,—the judgment of the court as to the complicated duties which they have to perform.

---

78 Cal. 217

BEST et al. v. JOHNSON et al. (No. 11,534.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 30, 1889.)

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—ASSIGNEE'S BOND—LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

Under insolvent act Cal. 1880, § 15, providing that any creditor aggrieved may sue on the bond of the assignee of an insolvent debtor, the creditors and debtors alone have a right of action, and the sureties on such a bond, given for the faithful discharge of the assignee's duties, are not liable for the wrongful seizure by him without legal process of property not belonging to the estate of the insolvent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; J. K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Geil & Morehouse, for appellants. Dorn & Parker, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action against the principal and sureties on a bond, made to insure the faithful performance by the principal of the duties devolving upon him as assignee of the estate of an insolvent debtor. The complaint alleges the appointment of the defendant Johnson as assignee of the estate, the execution, approval, and filing of the bond, the plaintiffs' ownership of certain described personal property, and that Johnson, while acting as such assignee, wrongfully and unlawfully and against the will of plaintiffs took the property from them, and converted it to the use and benefit of the estate, and afterwards on demand, many times made, refused to deliver to them the possession thereof. The prayer is for a judgment for the value of the property, with damages and costs. A general demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and sustained as to the sureties Dorn and Hoffman, with leave to plaintiffs to amend. Plaintiffs declined to amend, and thereupon judgment was entered that they take nothing as against the sureties.

The statute requires the assignee of an insolvent's estate to give a bond, with sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties devolving upon him; and it provides that "the bond shall not be void upon the first recovery, but may be sued upon from time to time by any creditor aggrieved, in his own name, until the whole penalty is exhausted." Insolvent Act 1880, § 15. The duties of an assignee, as declared by the act, are to take into his possession all the estate of the insolvent debtor, except property exempt by law from execution; if need be, to sue in his own name, and recover all the estate, debts, and things in action belonging or due to such debtor; to sell the property, and convert the same into money as speedily as possible on the order of the court; and to keep correct accounts of all moneys received by him, and to pay them out on the order of the court. Sections 18, 21, 25, 29, 34.

It is argued for appellants that Johnson, as assignee, had a right to take into his possession only such property as belonged to the insolvent; that he had no right to take the plaintiffs' property; and that, when he did so, and converted it to the use of the estate, he violated the conditions of his bond, and he and his sureties became liable thereon. And in support of this theory counsel cite numerous cases, and, among others, People v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 173; Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 194; Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286. All the cases cited are to the effect that if a sheriff or constable, having in his hands for service a writ of attachment or execution, seizes thereunder the property of a stranger to the writ, he becomes a trespasser, and is guilty of such official misconduct as makes him and his sureties liable on his official bond. In People v. Schuyler, the court, after stating that the defendant was a sheriff, and that the writ was delivered to and received by him as a public officer, said: "His sureties undertook 'that he should faithfully execute' the process. If he had 'in all things' performed his duty, he would have seized the goods of Fay, or returned the writ, instead of which he levied upon the goods of Bachellor, as the property of the defendant in the attachment. Upon principle and upon grounds of public policy, it seems to me that the responsibility of his sureties should be different from those they would incur if the sheriff had entered upon the premises of the relator, and removed his goods without any process whatever In the last case supposed the sheriff would act in his own right, and might be resisted as any other wrong-doer. In the one before us he was put in motion by legal authority, invoked in behalf of others, and could command the power of the county to aid him in its execution." And in Van Pelt v. Littler the court said: "The weight of authority, and, as we think, a fair construction of the statute, and the condition of the bond, are in favor of the maintenance of the action. The legislature intended that the officer and his sureties should be responsible for every abuse of his official powers, and we think there could not well be a more flagrant abuse of such powers than the seizing and selling of the property of one person under and by virtue of an execution against another. He does not act, in such a case, in a private and individual capacity, but as an officer clothed with official authority, and protected by the judgment of a court and the process which he pretends to execute. No resistance can lawfully be made by any person whose property is thus taken. The property itself may be detained, whether legally taken or not, and a summary mode is provided for the protection of the officer, to determine disputes in regard to the title. To hold that such an act is not official, at least so far as to charge the sureties, it appears to us, would be in contravention of the spirit and intention of the statute."

There is a broad and obvious distinction between the cases cited and the case in hand. In those cases the officer, when he took the property, claimed to be executing process issued from a competent court, and was apparently acting under lawful authority No one could rightfully have interfered with or resisted his seizure of the property; and, if needed, he could have called to his assistance the posse comitatus. Not so with the assignee. He had no writ or process to serve. He was not put in motion by legal authority, but was acting at his own instance, and upon his own authority. He could not have invoked the aid of a posse to assist him, but might have been resisted like any other wrong-doer. The duties of the assignee of an insolvent's estate are wholly private. He is to take charge of and manage the estate for the benefit of the creditors, and they are the only persons named in the act who can sue on the bond. Section 15. The creditors and debtor are alone interested in the amount and sufficiency of the bond. Luhrs v. Kelly, 67 Cal. 291, 7 Pac. Rep. 696. It follows that the liability of the sureties on the assignee's bond is different from the liability of the sureties on a sheriff's bond. But if it be assumed that this is not so, and that the same rule is to be applied in each case, there would nevertheless be no liability upon the sureties here; for it is clear that the liability of the assignee's sureties can be no greater than the liability of a sheriff's sureties. And the rule is that a sheriff's sureties are not liable for the wrongful seizure or detention of property or money when not made by him under process. State v. Mann, 21 Wis. 684; Turner v. Collier, 4 Heisk. 89; Governor v. Perrine, 23 Ala. 807; Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 66 and see Com. v. Cole, 46 Amer. Dec. 506, and notes. It results, therefore, that the demurrer was properly sustained, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

77 Cal. 646

LATHAM v. BLAKE et al.[1] (No. 9,912.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

EXECUTION—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO—JUDGMENTS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 542, subd. 5, providing that debts and property incapable of manual delivery may be attached by leaving with the person owing the debt a copy of the writ, and a notice that the property is attached, and section 688, providing that such property may be taken on execution the same as upon writs of attachment, a judgment, being the mere evidence of debt, and not the debt itself, cannot be levied on as such, and sold under execution. PATERSON, J., dissenting.

W. H. Fifield and Garber & Bishop, for appellant. Lewis & Dibble and Haynes & Mitchell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon rehearing, the order appealed from in this case is affirmed, for the reasons given in the opinion filed in department 1, May 14, 1888, (18 Pac. Rep. 150,) which opinion will stand as the opinion of the court in bank.

PATERSON, J. I dissent. The facts of this case are fully stated in the opinion of the department. 18 Pac. Rep. 150. It was there held, upon the authority of Dore v. Dougherty, 72 Cal. 232, 13 Pac. Rep. 621, that the sale of the judgment against Blake to Osborne, under the execution against Latham, did not "operate as an assignment so as to vest in Osborne such right or title to the judgment as to entitle him to enforce it," and, such being the fact, the order of the court below should be affirmed. In the consideration of the case other questions raised by the appellant were overlooked, it being assumed that the invalidity of the sale to Osborne was a sufficient fact upon which to affirm the order of the court below. It is now urged by appellant upon rehearing that, conceding the point made in department against the validity of the sale to Osborne,—and I have no doubt of the correctness of the decision upon that question,—the order of sale under which appellant claims was an appealable order, and, not having been appealed from, became a final and conclusive adjudication as to appellant's right to the Latham-Blake decree. I am of opinion that this contention is sound. The order of sale was a "special order, made after final judgment," and was therefore an appealable order, and no exception to it was necessary. Sections 647, 963, subd. 2, Code Civil Proc. The order is not void on its face. The evidence upon which the court made the order is not in the record of the case in which it was issued. I think the court had the right to determine in that action who was the owner of the decree, and give him the benefit of the execution thereof, without Osborne becoming a party plaintiff. Section 385, Code Civil Proc.; Mastick v. Thorp, 29 Cal. 448. If the court had no such authority, then the order made herein, and issued to respondent, is void, and ought to be reversed. Upon the face of the order it is adjudicated that "Osborne has succeeded to the ownership of the judgment." There may have been evidence of Osborne's ownership other and better than the return on the execution sale and the sheriff's certificate. It does not appear that no other evidence of his ownership was given.

[1] Affirming, on rehearing, 18 Pac. Rep. 150.

Of course, there could be no adjudication as to the ownership of the judgment against Latham, unless Latham had notice of the proceeding taken by Osborne, resulting in the order issued to him. On behalf of appellant it is claimed that, as the record is silent upon the question of notice, it will be presumed (if it be necessary to show that notice was given,—which he denies,—this being a collateral attack) that notice was given; but counsel for respondent claim that no presumption attends this order, because it is an order taken after final judgment, and Osborne was a stranger to the record. Whatever may be the rule applicable to direct attacks on judgments and orders, the general rule as to presumption of jurisdiction, applicable to proceedings in courts of general jurisdiction, involving collateral attacks, is so well known that it is unnecessary to repeat it here. See cases cited in Ex parte Sternes, 19 Pac. Rep. 277; Freem. Judgm. §§ 116, 124; Brodribb v. Tibbits, 63 Cal. 80; Luco v. Bank, 70 Cal. 339, 11 Pac. Rep. 650.

There is no direct attack here upon the order of sale. The notice of motion is "for an order directing the issuance of an order of sale in favor of Thomas B. Rowe, the assignee decreed therein, and to set aside the sale and sheriff's return therein, made upon application of G. W. Osborne." The grounds of the motion were that no one interested in the decree directed the issuance of the order of sale; that it was issued and executed against the objection of the judgment creditor, and that Osborne had no interest in the decree. The order herein appealed from does not disturb the former order of sale, but directs that an order of sale issue in favor of Rowe. The court and counsel for respondent seems to have treated the order as void on its face. If void on its face, perhaps the court might order a new sale, without any direct proceeding to set aside the void order; but I think the presumption of jurisdiction, which is applicable generally to the orders of superior courts, should be applied to the order before us herein. I see no distinction between orders made before judgment and those made after judgment, when the order does not show on its face whether the parties were in court. Hughes v. Cummings, 7 Colo. 138, 2 Pac. Rep. 289. It is true, after judgment actual notice must be given by a stranger to the record, but on a collateral attack the presumption is that actual notice was given; the presumption applies to all orders of a court of general jurisdiction. Not to presume notice here must result in a presumption that the superior court acted without jurisdiction, although there is nothing to show whether it had or had not jurisdiction, and this on a collateral attack.

Another answer to the contention of respondent on this question is his statement in the notice of motion herein that the order of sale issued to Osborne was issued and executed against the objection of the judgment creditor. This seems to be an admission that Latham was present, objecting, when the order of sale was issued to Osborne. It further appears that Latham was present at the sheriff's sale, "and claimed to be still the owner of such judgment;" that he knew of the sheriff's deed to Osborne, and Osborne's improvements under the said order of sale. These facts are not disputed. Aside from the statement in the notice of motion, above referred to, and the presumption of notice, which I think should be indulged, the record being silent, all the facts in the case point to actual notice by Latham of the order of sale, issued to Osborne,—if not notice of the application for the order, at least notice of the order itself a short time after the order was made; and, whether the remedy by appeal from such orders be exclusive or concurrent with the right to move to set the order aside, I think that the circumstances of this case are such that it would be an abuse of discretion to grant the motion. The respondent's delay to move for over two years after the sheriff's deed had been with his knowledge delivered to Osborne, and the latter's money placed to his credit in satisfaction of the judgment against him in Page v. Latham, coupled with his knowledge of Osborne's possession and improvement of the property, ought, in equity and in conscience, to operate as a waiver of the right to move.

---

78 Cal. 193

GIANT-POWDER CO. v. SAN DIEGO FLUME CO. et al. (No. 12,721.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 29, 1889.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—ABANDONMENT OF CONTRACT—CLAIM OF MATERIAL-MAN.
Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1887, provides that the claim of a material-man shall be filed within 30 days after the completion of the building, etc., but that any trivial imperfection in the construction of any building shall not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien; and in case of contracts the occupation or use of the building, etc., by the owner, shall be deemed conclusive evidence of completion. Held, that a contract made by J. to do certain work for defendant, which was not recorded before the commencement of the work, and was therefore void as between the parties by the terms of Code Civil Proc. § 1183, as amended by the Laws of 1887, declaring that no recovery shall be had on such a contract by either party thereto, was not void as between the defendant or J. and a material-man; and that a complaint by a material-man, averring that J. had suspended work on or about a certain date before the filing of plaintiff's lien, and surrendered the contract to the defendant, who had accepted such surrender and the work, and gone into occupation and use of the structure for which a lien was claimed, sufficiently showed a completion of the work at the date of the filing of the lien.

2. SAME—PERSONAL LIABILITY—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES.
Under the California practice, in an action to foreclose a material-man's lien against the owner of the structure in which the material was used, there is no misjoinder of causes because a personal liability is also sought to be enforced against the contractor to whom the material was furnished.

3. SAME—MISJOINDER OF DEFENDANTS.
Neither, in such case, is there a misjoinder of parties defendant.

McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; EDWIN PARKER, Judge.

J. F. Cowdery, for appellant. Welborn & Works, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. This is an action to enforce the lien of a material-man. The complaint was demurred to by the San Diego Flume Company on various grounds. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered against it. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It is argued here on behalf of the demurrant that, as alleged in the complaint, the claim of lien was prematurely filed, and therefore that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the San Diego Flume Company. It is alleged in the complaint that one Joseph Johndrew contracted with that defendant company to do certain work; the plaintiff furnished materials to defendant to be used in the work; that Johndrew commenced work under the contract on the 9th day of April, 1887, and continued doing such work until the 10th day of August following; that on or about said last-named day Johndrew stopped all work, and surrendered the contract and his right thereunder to the flume company, and the flume company accepted the surrender of this contract, and accepted the structure and works for which a lien is here claimed, and took possession thereof, and has ever since continued in the occupation and use of the structure and works so accepted. The contract above mentioned was not recorded until June 6, 1887. The claim of lien is averred to have been filed for record on the 5th day of September, 1887. The statute (see St. 1887, pp. 154, 155; section 1187, Code Civil Proc., as there amended) requires that the claim of a material-man shall be filed for record within 30 days after the completion of the building, improvement, or structure, but provides further on this point that "any trivial imperfection in the said work, or in the construction of any building, improvement, or structure, or of the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof, shall not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien; and in case of contracts the occupation or use of the building, improvement, or structure by the owner or his representative, or the acceptance by said owner or his agent of said building, improvement, or structure, shall be deemed conclusive evidence of completion."

We are of opinion that the allegations of the complaint bring the case within the words of the statute above quoted. It is distinctly averred that the structure made by Johndrew was accepted by the flume company. How near the structure approached completion on the 10th day of August, 1887, is not averred. It may have been so nearly completed that it might have been occupied and used by the flume company; or, if not near completion, it may have been in a condition that the maker might have accepted and conveniently used and occupied it. The above is consistent with the allegations of the complaint. Whatever might have been the actual condition of the structure on the 10th of August, 1887, we think the averments that the defendant company accepted the structure, and from the time of its acceptance continued in the use and occupation of it, bring the case within the rule prescribed by the section of the statute above quoted, unless the fact that the contract between Johndrew and the flume company was not recorded when the work was commenced by Johndrew under it excludes it therefrom. And the counsel for respondent (the flume company) contends that such is the effect of a failure to record the contract above mentioned before the work under it was commenced.

It will be observed that the statute in stating the rule relied on by the plaintiff (section 1187, supra) uses the words "and in case of contracts," and it is here urged by the learned counsel for the flume company that "it is true there was an effort to make a contract, but this effort was ineffectual, because of the failure of the parties to have the instrument which purported to be a contract filed for record before the work was commenced. This failure made the contract wholly void." The section of the statute which declares such contract wholly void declares how far it is void. Section 1183, Code Civil Proc., amended in 1887, St. 1887, p. 153. In our judgment "wholly void" has the same meaning as "void." When an instrument is void it is void from one end to the other, and in all its parts; in other words, it is wholly void. The language used is, "they shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto." The statute only declares the contract void as between the parties to it. The inability to maintain an action on the contract is confined to the parties. In this case the parties to the contract are Johndrew and the flume company,—the one, in the purview of the act of which the section referred to formed a part, the contractor; the other, the owner. As between the contractor or owner and the material-man the contract is not void. If the contractor has purchased materials, the contract between the contractor and the material-man is still good. And by the express terms of section 1183, supra, (St. 1887, pp. 152, 153,) though the contract between the owner and contractor is void, the material-man is still entitled to his lien for the value of the materials furnished. Such we understand to be the ruling of this court in Lumber Co. v. Schmitt, 74 Cal. 625, 16 Pac. Rep. 516, (see last paragraph in opinion.) The contract, though not recorded, yet remains to mark the extent of the recovery of the lienholders, and to show the relations of the owner and contractor to the work, and also remains unaffected for the purposes of the rule prescribed in section 1187 as to what shall be deemed evidence of the completion of the work referred to in it.

The recording of the contract, as far as regards the person furnishing labor or materials to the work, is immaterial. No doubt the requisition was made for the benefit of such person, but it is a benefit that he may waive. The failure to record may affect the rights of the owner and contractor, but it does not affect those of the furnisher of labor or materials. Nor do we see any reason why it should be otherwise. Such person has no control over the contract; it is not in his possession, nor is he entitled to its possession. It may be out of his power to have it recorded before the work commenced under it. The work may have commenced long before such person has been brought into any relation with the work,—days or months before he has been applied to for labor or materials. The statute imposes the duty of recording the contract on the parties to it. If any are to suffer from failure to record, the parties to the contract should and do suffer. It is just to make the parties who neglected their duty suffer, but it would be unjust to make others suffer on whom no such duty was ever imposed, who have neglected no duty, and are entirely innocent. The law-makers have not been guilty of the injustice of causing detriment to innocent persons. We think that the notice or claim of lien is alleged to have been filed within a proper time, and that the complaint is in that respect good and sufficient.

The complaint was demurred to on the further grounds that Johndrew was improperly joined as a defendant, and that two causes of action are improperly united in this,—a personal liability against Johndrew, and a cause of action for the foreclosure of a material-man's lien against the flume company. It has been the constant and uniform practice ever since we had a lien law in this state for the benefit of material-men and others, in actions for the foreclosure of such liens, to make the owner and contractor parties defendant, and to unite a personal action against the contractor for the money, with the action to establish the lien, and for its foreclosure against the owner. The practice is much to be commended, in that it prevents a multiplicity of suits, and thus saves labor and expense. If each material-man or person performing labor on a building had to bring separate actions against the contractor for the recovery of his money, it is manifest the expense of the litigation would be greatly increased. This constant and uniform procedure, continued for so long a time, is strongly persuasive that the practice is correct. Cursus curiæ est lex curiæ.

In Quale v. Moon, 48 Cal. 479, the action was by a subcontractor to enforce a lien under the lien statute then existing. The plaintiff made Moon, the owner, and Clark, the contractor, parties defendant. There were several other defendants, who, it was alleged, had furnished materials, etc., who appeared separately, and set up the facts out of which their respective liens grew, and asked to have them enforced. Among them was one Higgins, who, in his answer, set up a claim for materials furnished for the building, and for work on the same as a mechanic under a contract with Clark, (contractor,) and also a separate claim for materials furnished for the building, and work on same at the request of Moon, (owner.) Moon demurred to Higgins' answer because it united two causes of action,—one for work and material as a subcontractor at the request of Clark, and one for work and material at the request of Moon. This court held that there was no misjoinder of causes of action in the pleading, styling it "the amended cross-complaint of defendant Higgins." There seems to have been no objection to the pleading in the case cited, because it united a cause of action against the contractor with the action for the foreclosure of the lien against the owner. The case was a stronger one. The causes of action were for work and materials furnished at request of each. Still, the court held the joinder proper. Following the rule prescribed in Quale v. Moon, we conclude that there is no misjoinder of causes of action in the case before us. The cause of action for the enforcement of the lien herein grows out of the contract between the flume company (owner) and Joseph Johndrew (contractor) and the work done by the latter under the contract, in virtue of a sale of material by the plaintiff to the contractor. As regards the plaintiff, all the foregoing are parts of a transaction which give it its right of action. They may be all set forth, then, in the same complaint, under numerous decisions of this court. The cases bearing on this point will be found cited in Pfister v. Dascey, 65 Cal. 405, 4 Pac. Rep. 395.

We feel clear that there is no misjoinder of causes of action here. This conclusion is sustained by section 1194, Code Civil Proc. This section, after classifying the various liens allowed by the statute, and establishing the order of priority between them, and requiring that the proceeds of the sale of the property shall be applied to each lien or class of liens in the order of its rank, provides that "whenever, in the sale of the property subject to the lien, there is a deficiency of proceeds, judgment may be docketed for the deficiency in like manner and with like effect as in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages." This deficiency judgment must be docketed in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages "against the defendant or defendants personally liable for the debt." Section 726, Code Civil Proc. The person personally liable for the debt in the case of material-men would usually be the contractor, though sometimes the owner might be, as the purchaser himself of the materials. When the contractor is personally liable for the debt, section 1194, Code Civil Proc., just referred to, authorizes his being made a defendant along with the owner, and a determination in such action of the amount for which he is liable to each lienholder, and, in case of deficiency above pointed out, a docketing of the judgment against him for such deficiency as he may be personally liable for. As this could not be done without his being made a defendant, the law must authorize his being made a defendant. We have no doubt, from the provisions of sections 1193, 1194, and 1195, that it was the intent of the law-makers that in an action to enforce a lien under this statute, all the persons claiming liens under the statute, including the contractor and owner, should be made parties, so that there might be a complete determination of all matters in controversy between the material-men and other lienholders, the owner, and the contractor; and in this point of view the contractor is a necessary party, and, if he was not made a party, the court should order him to be made a defendant, that there might be a full and complete determination of the matters in controversy.

The above disposes of the objections urged to the complaint herein by the flume company. It follows from the foregoing that there was error in sustaining the demurrer of the defendant company to the complaint herein, and the judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with a direction to the court below to overrule the demurrer, and permit the above-named defendant to answer.

Ordered accordingly.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.: SHARPSTEIN, J.

Mr. Justice WORKS did not participate in the decision of this cause.

MCFARLAND, J. I dissent. The complaint is based upon the contract between the owners of the property and the original contractor, Johndrew. But as that contract was not recorded, it was, under section 1183, Code Civil Proc., as amended in 1887, "wholly void." In such a case labor and materials shall be deemed to have been done and furnished "at the personal instance of the owner," and a lien can be had "for the value thereof." St. 1887, p. 153. But the complaint was not drawn upon that theory; and therefore I think that the demurrer to it was properly sustained, and that the judgment should be affirmed. Moreover, in my opinion, a material-man cannot have a lien for exploded powder after, like the "unsubstantial pageant" in the Tempest, it has "melted into air, into thin air." It is true that this point is not much argued in the briefs, but it seems to be necessarily involved in the demurrer.

78 Cal. 232

McCormick v. Sutton. (No. 12,632.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 11, 1889.)

Judgment—Res Adjudicata—Subject-Matter.

Defendant located a mining claim on land claimed by plaintiff, and R. afterwards made a location on the same land. Pending an action for the land by defendant against R., in which defendant obtained judgment, plaintiff made a conveyance to R. by deed, which was lost, which plaintiff alleged gave only a right to mine the land in controversy; but plaintiff's son testified that he was acting as her agent, and had all her papers, and knew of the pendency of the suit, and that R. reconveyed to plaintiff the same land that she had conveyed to him. The reconveyance was of the ground theretofore located by R., "the deed of which was made by" plaintiff to R. Plaintiff did not testify. In ejectment, held, that a finding that plaintiff conveyed all her interest in the land to R. was justified, and that the former judgment was a bar.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; C. V. Gottschalk, Judge.

Ejectment by M. McCormick against F. Sutton. Defendant pleaded a judgment in favor of himself and one A. Gerlach, in an action brought by them against E. J. Richards and James Pereira for the restitution and recovery of the lands in question in this action. The patent to Hughes and the conveyance to Daniel McCormick were made in 1874, and the decree of distribution to plaintiff was made in 1879. Plaintiff appeals. For opinion on defendant's appeal, see post, 543.

F. D. & G. W. Nicol and E. A. Rodgers, for appellant. F. W. Street, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The court below decided that the right of possession of the land in controversy was determined against plaintiff, and in favor of defendant, by a judgment entered November 19, 1884. Said judgment was entered in an action commenced in the superior court of Tuolumne county, February 2, 1884, in which Sutton and Gerlach were plaintiffs, and Richards and Pereira were defendants. If this decision is based upon facts supported by the evidence, it is unnecessary to consider any other question discussed in the briefs.

Without stopping to discuss the question whether the patent of the United States to Hughes, president of the board of trustees of the city of Sonora, the deed of said board to Daniel McCormick, and the decree of the probate court distributing the land in controversy to Mrs. McCormick, were sufficient to vest in her the legal title to the same, we shall assume that the legal title did pass to her by those conveyances and the decree. On January 1, 1883, defendant Sutton and one Gerlach located a mining claim which included the land in controversy. Richards and Pereira made a location on 800 feet of the vein included in the Sutton and Gerlach claim, January 1, 1884. On February 2, 1884, Sutton and Gerlach commenced the action referred to above against Richards and Pereira, to recover possession of the lands included in the location of the latter, and which resulted in the judgment of November 19, 1884. While that action was pending, to-wit, August 20, 1884, Margaret McCormick, plaintiff herein, conveyed all her right, title, and interest in and to the land to Richards and Pereira. The trial in said action was had on August 28, 1884. The judgment therein remains in full force and effect. Gerlach conveyed his interest to Sutton on January 10, 1885. Richards and Pereira reconveyed to plaintiff January 1, 1886. This action was commenced March 21, 1887.

Appellant contends that plaintiff never conveyed to Richards and Pereira any part of the lands in controversy,—any part of the surface thereof,—but simply the right to mine beneath the surface; that she had no notice of the pendency of the suit of Sutton et al. vs. Richards et al.; that plaintiff is not the successor in interest of Richards and Pereira as to the right of possession; and having had no notice, actual or constructive, of the pendency of said action, she is not concluded by the judgment therein to any extent, because the deed from Richards and Pereira, reconveying to her, conveyed only what she had granted to them, viz., the right to mine beneath the surface. The court found against appellant on all of these contentions, and we cannot say that the findings are against the evidence. The deed from plaintiff to Richards and Pereira was lost, and could not be produced at the trial, although it had been returned to plaintiff. James McCormick, a son of plaintiff, stated that he was acting as his mother's agent; that Richards and Pereira deeded back the land his mother had conveyed to them; that he had all of his mother's papers in his possession, and had been attending to her general business since his father's death; that he knew of the pendency of the suit above referred to, and was present at the trial, but did not know whether he had ever spoken to his mother about it. It is true some of the statements were afterwards qualified. The deed reconveying to plaintiff described the property as "all that portion of the San Guiseppe mine, * * * and being the same ground which was heretofore located by the said parties of the first part on the 1st day of January, 1885, the deed of which was made by the said second party [M. McCormick] to said parties of the first part [Richards and Pereira] in 1885." The deed from plaintiff to Richards and Pereira was lost. Its contents could be made known only by the testimony of witnesses. In one part of his testimony—afterwards qualified—James McCormick says the same land conveyed by his mother was reconveyed. The deed of reconveyance does not describe the property as the right to mine beneath the surface, but refers to it as "the ground heretofore located," etc., and "the deed of which was made by * * * M. McCormick to * * * Richards and Pereira, in 1885."

From the evidence above detailed, and other circumstances in the case, to which we need not refer, the court below was justified in believing that James McCormick had acted as the agent of plaintiff, and that he was cognizant of the suit of Sutton et al. v. Richards et al.; that not only had she conveyed all her right, title, and interest in and to the land in controversy to Richards and Pereira during the pendency of the suit referred to, but that she had done so to aid the defendants therein; and that when they (Richards and Pereira) failed in their defense in that action, and the land was awarded to plaintiff therein, they (Richards and Pereira) attempted to reconvey to her just what they had received from her. In these conclusions the learned judge who presided at the trial is supported by the significant fact that the plaintiff in whose mind rested the best evidence of the material facts—at least as to notice—remained silent throughout the trial.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

78 Cal. 245

McCORMICK v. SUTTON. (No. 12,648.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 19, 1889.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In ejectment, the court found that a patent, under which plaintiff claimed, conveyed an absolute title, but also found that the matters in issue were formerly finally adjudicated in defendant's favor, and rendered judgment for defendant. Held, that the finding as to the effect of the patent did not injure defendant.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county: C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Ejectment by M. McCormick against F. Sutton. Defendant appeals.

F. W. Street, for appellant. F. D. & G. W. Nicol and E. A. Rodgers, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Ejectment. Judgment was entered in the court below in favor of defendant on September 26, 1887. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied on December 24, 1887, and thereafter, to-wit, on January 3, 1888, he appealed to this court from the judgment and order. McCormick v. Sutton, ante, 541, (filed February 11, 1889.) On March 26, 1888, the defendant, fancying that he was aggrieved by one of the court's conclusions of law, viz.: "That the patent of the United States to M. E. Hughes, in trust for the inhabitants of the city of Sonora, conveyed the absolute title in fee to the whole of said lot, including all the minerals thereon," appealed to this court "from that portion of the judgment entered in said superior court on the 26th day of September, 1887, in favor of plaintiff in said action, wherein said superior court adjudged that the patent of the United States, issued to M. E. Hughes, in trust for the inhabitants of the city of Sonora, conveyed the absolute title in fee to the whole of the lot in the complaint described, including all the mineral therein." In the judgment it is simply "ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the possession of the lands in the complaint described, and that judgment be and the same is hereby entered in favor of the defendant, F. Sutton, and against the plaintiff M. McCormick, for his costs in this action, taxed and allowed at $69.45." Conceding that the conclusion of the court as to the effect of the patent was erroneous, the defendant was in no way injured by it. It is no part of the judgment, and there are other conclusions of law given, and facts in support thereof, which sustain the judgment in his favor. The court found that the matters here in issue were finally adjudicated in favor of defendant and against plaintiff in a former action, and "that defendant is entitled to a judgment in his favor, and against plaintiff for his costs incurred in this action." Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

---

77 Cal. 423

REDMOND v. WEISSMAN. (No. 9,788.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 6, 1888.)

TRIAL—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for a certain amount for labor and materials, counsel agreed that the only issue was whether plaintiff contracted with defendant, and the court charged, without objection, that the only question for the jury was whether plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract, and that in that case, the verdict should be for plaintiff for the amount claimed. Held, that the amount claimed was not in issue, and a verdict "for the plaintiff," without stating any amount, was sufficient to warrant judgment for the amount claimed, though Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 626, directs that the jury shall "find the amount of the recovery."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

Action by Michael F. Redmond against Henry Weissman. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, defendant's motion for new trial denied, and he appeals.

A. N. Drown, for appellant. Edward P. Cole, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought to recover $948.60 for work and labor and materials furnished to defendant in the construction of the foundation of the Garfield monument in Golden Gate park. The first point regards the verdict of the jury herein, which is in these words: "We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find for the plaintiff." It is urged that the amount of the recovery of plaintiff is not found by the verdict; that issue was joined on the amount due; and in failing to find it the verdict does not respond to all the issues in the case, is therefore insufficient, and judgment should not be entered on it.

On examining the complaint and answer, we are not prepared to say in view of the decisions of this court in Wells v. McPike, 21 Cal. 219, and Lightner v. Menzel, 35 Cal. 460, that the position above stated in regard to the pleadings is correct.

But be that as it may, it appears that at the commencement of the trial a discussion took place between the counsel of the respective parties as to the issues to be tried in the cause, and that they concurred in the opinion that the only issue to be tried was whether plaintiff contracted with defendant or some one else. No reference was made in this discussion to any issue as to the amount claimed or due. The only issue spoken of as awaiting trial, referred to in the discussion, was the one above stated. To this issue the testimony was directed, and, when the court came to instruct the jury, its directions were in accordance with this view of the issue they were to pass on. We quote here that portion of the charge of the court which relates to this subject. It is as follows: "The only question for you to pass upon is this: Did the plaintiff and the defendant in this case make an agreement for the building of the second foundation? That is the question for you to pass upon, —whether the plaintiff and the defendant made that agreement, as testified to by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff entered upon this contract under the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant. The only question of fact for you to pass upon is, did the plaintiff and defendant enter into a certain contract for the completion of the second foundation? If you find from the evidence that the defendant agreed with the plaintiff, for the plaintiff to build the second foundation, and that the plaintiff did build the same, then your verdict must be for the plaintiff for the amount claimed in the complaint; for the defendant does not deny that the work done was of the value claimed. If, on the other hand, you believe the evidence of the defendant, that he did not make any contract with the plaintiff, then your verdict must be for the defendant. Now, gentlemen, you cannot consider the difference between the price of the first foundation and the second; you must not consider that at all. If the plaintiff is entitled to anything, he is entitled to the whole amount claimed. There is no question about the value of the work at all."

There was no exception by counsel for defendant reserved to the charge, but it was accepted by him as correctly presenting the law of the case to the jury. Under the state of the case here presented, the counsel for defendant having agreed that the only issue to be tried was that which was tried, that the court charged the jury that the only issue to be determined by them was that which they did determine, and that the counsel for defendant did not in any manner object to or except to the charge, we are of opinion that the cause should be regarded as one where the amount of money claimed was not in issue, that the only matter counsel intended to contest was the responsibility of his client, the defendant, and that, being found against him, the verdict should be for the amount claimed. There being no controversy as to the amount claimed by plaintiff, the verdict did embrace all there was in dispute in the cause, did cover all the issues, and was sufficient.

Considering the peculiar features of this case, we see no good reason for sending it back for a new trial, because the jury under the charge of the court did not follow the direction of the statute, (Code Civil Proc. § 626,) and by their verdict "find the amount of the recovery." We have considered the other points made on behalf of appellant, and find nothing which would authorize a reversal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 247

DAVIS v. BUTTON. (No. 12,564.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 19, 1889.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT.
   In an action against a railroad company for the death of plaintiff's intestate, the answer admitting that defendant owns the road, an instruction that a prima facie case is made against defendant by showing ownership, without showing affirmatively that the persons in charge were defendant's servants, is not prejudicial error.
2. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.
   An instruction that plaintiff could recover, "if any injury sustained by deceased was not the result of contributory negligence," is not reversible error, as authorizing a recovery, unless the contributory negligence wholly caused the death, where the jury were also instructed that no damages could be recovered in case of contributory negligence, even though defendant's negligence might also be a cause of the death.
3. CARRIERS—OF PASSENGERS—RELATION.
   An instruction that, if defendant was engaged in the business of transporting passengers for hire on a railroad operated by him, the law denominates him a "common carrier," is correct.

On rehearing. For statement of facts and former opinion, see 18 Pac. Rep. 133.

H. C. Rolfe, (Chas. R. Reddick, of counsel,) for appellant. Frank F. Oster, Harris & Gregg, and Byron Waters, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The opinion of this court on the first decision of the case touched all the points made by appellant except one; and, upon re-examination, we are satisfied with that opinion upon all matters therein discussed. But, with respect to the point that the court below erred in giving certain instructions to the jury, it is said in that opinion as follows: "We cannot consider the argument in support of this point. It does not appear that exceptions were taken to any portions of the instructions of the court." The petition for rehearing, however, called our attention to the fact that there was a proper exception taken to the giving of instructions numbered 1, 2, and 4, asked by plaintiff. For that reason a rehearing was granted, and it only remains for us to inquire whether the judgment should be reversed on account of those instructions.

1. There are one or two things in the first instruction excepted to which, as abstract statements of legal principles, may, perhaps, be questionable; but it is evident that the instruction could have affected the jury to the prejudice of defendant, or at all, only in this: That therein the jury were told that where a plaintiff sues for injury caused by the negligent management of a railroad, or negligent construction thereof, it makes a sufficient prima facie case against the defendant to show that he was the owner of the railroad, without proving affirmatively that the persons in charge were his servants or employes. And we do not think that defendant was injured by that statement. Surely, in such a case, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that the owner of the railroad had not leased it, or had not, in some other way, given the entire control, management, and operation of it to another person. A railroad in operation differs in some respects from ordinary property, and we cannot see that its admitted owner can be injured by the inference, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that he is operating it. In Ferguson v. Railroad Co., 63 Wis. 145, 23 N. W. Rep. 123, the court says: "Where a company owns a railroad in operation, bearing the name of the company, and which presumably the company constructed, the presumption is that the company operates it, and, in order to release itself from liability for injuries to persons upon such road caused by the negligence of the employes operating the same, the burden of proof is upon it to show that it does not operate the same." In the case at bar the answer admits that the defendant was the owner of the road.

2. The only part of the second instruction necessary to be noticed is the latter clause, which is as follows: "Provided you further believe from the testimony that any injury sustained by deceased was not the result of contributory negligence on the part of said deceased." The criticism on this language is that it told the jury that defendant could not escape a verdict against him on account of any negligence of plaintiff unless such negligence caused—that is, wholly caused—the injury; whereas, the true rule is that plaintiff, in such a case, cannot recover if his negligence contributes proximately to the injury. But we think that the instruction is not justly subject to that criticism, particularly when considered with other charges given. It is probable that the language, considered by itself, is not such as would be adopted as a perfectly accurate statement by a moot court, or by a law writer in the repose of his study, or upon any other sort of dress parade. But the judge of a trial court, engaged in actual service, with a real case before him, and with due regard to the dispatch of business, cannot be expected to see that every isolated sentence spoken or written by himself, or presented to him in the language of another, shall contain, in itself, every necessary qualification of a rule. It is sufficient if all the instructions taken together, and not being inconsistent with each other, or confusing, shall give to the jury a fair and just notion of the law upon the point discussed. Instruction No. 6, given at the request of defendant, shows plainly enough that the negligence of plaintiff, if any, need not have been the sole cause of the injury; (and it may be remarked that the attorney for defendant, in drawing the first part of this instruction, subjects himself to the same criticism with which he attacks the said second instruction asked by plaintiff.) Said instruction is as follows: "If a person's own want of ordinary care is the proximate cause of his injury or death, this is contributory negligence on his part, and no damages can be recovered from another person for such injury or death, even though the negligence of such other person may also be a cause of the injury or death." We think, therefore, that the jury were fairly given to understand that if the negligence of plaintiff contributed proximately to the injury the verdict should be for defendant, and not that such a verdict depended upon the fact that the injury was the result of plaintiff's negligence solely.

3. We see no error in the fourth instruction excepted to, which is as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant was engaged in the business of transporting passengers for hire, upon a railroad operated by him, then the law denominates the defendant a 'common carrier.'" No doubt the evidence was conflicting, and somewhat evenly balanced, as to several material matters of fact, but we think that the case was fairly put to the jury. Upon that point we are satisfied with the opinion of this court delivered at the first hearing by Justice McKINSTRY.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

78 Cal. 225

SEARS et al. v. STARBIRD. (No. 12,379.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 11, 1889.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—CONTRIBUTION AFTER DISSOLUTION—EVIDENCE.
In an action by two members of a former partnership against the third, for contribution from him of his part of a debt of the firm paid by them, the judgment roll in a former suit, brought by defendant against plaintiffs for a dissolution of the partnership, which shows an adjudication of the amounts invested in the partnership enterprise by each partner, and that the debt in question is a firm liability, is competent to establish those facts.

2. SAME—PLEADING—PROMISE TO CONTRIBUTE.
A complaint by partners against a copartner, for contribution to the payment of a partnership debt paid by plaintiffs after dissolution, need not allege an express promise by defendant to pay his proportionate part.

3. TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EFFECT.
Where a judgment roll is offered as evidence, with no statement limiting its purpose, and upon objection the object of its introduction is stated, whereupon the objection is made that it is incompetent for any purpose, which is overruled, the record becomes evidence for all legitimate purposes, and is not limited to that mentioned by the party introducing it.

4. WRITS—DEFECTIVE SUMMONS—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.
A defect in a summons is waived if, after an unsuccessful motion to vacate it, defendant pleads to the merits.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Action by J. F. Sears and Sidney Smith against R. J. Starbird, to recover a proportionate part of a joint debt of the three paid by plaintiffs. After summons was served on defendant, he moved to vacate and set aside the service, because of its insufficiency, which motion was overruled. Subsequently he demurred to and answered the complaint. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

F. D. & G. W. Nicol, for appellant. F. W. Street, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. In the month of April, 1878, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into an agreement to construct and maintain a toll road and bridge, known as the "Ward's Ferry, Road, and Bridge," in the county of Tuolumne. The parties agreed that in the construction of the road and bridge each was to pay in such sums as he might be able to pay, and that neither of them was to have, as against the other, any claim for any sum invested by him over the amount invested by the other; that after the completion of the road and bridge they should settle their accounts, and ascertain how much each one had invested; each was to be interested in the road and bridge in proportion to the amount he invested therein. After the road and bridge were completed, they endeavored to settle their accounts, but, failing to do so, the plaintiff Sears was appointed by all the parties to take charge of the road and bridge, and to act in liquidation of the affairs of the company. In the construction of the bridge and road one Mason had been employed, and there was due him at the time the work was completed the sum of $992.22. Mason requested Starbird to sign a note or due-bill for the amount due him on his account. Starbird refused to sign it. Thereupon Mason went to the other partners, the plaintiffs herein, and they executed and delivered to him a promissory note, dated April 9, 1881, and signed, "WARD'S FERRY, ROAD, AND BRIDGE CO. By J. F. SEARS. SIDNEY SMITH."

This note remained in Mason's possession until April 7, 1885, at which time plaintiffs executed and delivered to him a new note for the principal sum of the original note and interest due thereon, $1,468.38. Plaintiffs did not know that Starbird had refused to sign any note or due-bill, nor did the defendant, Starbird, at the time they were made and delivered, know that plaintiffs had executed or delivered either of the notes. On February 14, 1887, the defendant, Starbird, commenced an action against Sears and Smith, plaintiffs herein, for dissolution of the partnership existing between himself and these plaintiffs, an accounting, for an order and decree of sale of the partnership property, and for a decree showing the amounts paid out by the several partners on behalf of said partnership, and fixing the indebtedness of the partnership, and the members thereof. He claimed in his complaint that Sears, Smith, and himself were equal partners in the partnership, entitled to equal shares in the profits of the concern, and liable in the same proportion for the losses sustained. This allegation was denied by the defendants therein, who claimed that each copartner was to own and be interested in said road and bridge in proportion to the amount of money, labor, or material which each, respectively, invested or paid out in the construction of said road or bridge. They further alleged that the firm was indebted to Mason in the sum of $1,468.38, with interest thereon from April 7, 1885. The amounts invested by each partner were set forth. Defendants prayed for an accounting to determine the profits or losses resulting from the partnership, and that the partnership property might be sold to pay the debts, etc.

The court in that action found that the terms and conditions of the partnership agreement were as stated by the defendants in their answer; that plaintiff, Starbird, had invested, on behalf of the partnership, $4,007.47; that defendant Sears had invested $4,427.86; and defendant Smith, $1,487.40,—making a total of $9,922.73. The court further found that the liabilities of the copartnership consisted of a promissory note given by the partnership to Mason, dated April 7, 1885, for $1,468.38, with interest thereon; that this note had been given by the defendants, as partners, to Mason for work done and goods furnished the partnership. A decree followed in that action dissolving the partnership, and ordering a sale of the partnership property, and that the proceeds of the sale be applied in payment of the indebtedness of the copartnership, and the balance, if any, be paid to the partners in due proportion. The evidence further shows that the debt for which the original note was given was a partnership debt, acknowledged to be such by all the parties, and the payment thereof assumed by them in the progress of the partnership affairs. The evidence shows that after the work was completed the firm was indebted to one Hall, said Mason, and others. The partners met together, and agreed that the indebtedness should be paid out of the proceeds of the road. All the indebtedness was paid in that manner, except that which was owing to Mason. This agreement was made in the commencement of the year 1879. Starbird and Sears managed the road, and paid part of the debts from the proceeds thereof, under this agreement. Mason was employed, he testified, principally by Starbird. Furthermore, it was adjudicated in the case of Starbird v. Sears et al. that the note given to Mason was a copartnership liability.

There is no question here as to the authority of a partner to bind his copartners after dissolution of the partnership. Of course, after the dissolution of the partnership, one partner cannot revive a debt barred by the statute, but during the pendency of the partnership each partner is an agent for all in making an acknowledgment under the statute of limitations. Wood, Lim. 433; Pars. Partn. 188; Civil Code, § 2428.

It is claimed by appellant that there is no evidence to show the amounts invested by the partners, or to show that Starbird ever invested anything. The judgment roll in Starbird v. Sears et al., from which we have quoted the facts above stated, was competent and relevant evidence upon this topic. The amount invested was put in issue therein by the plaintiff, and was determined by the court. There is nothing to show that the judgment therein is not final; nothing to show that it has ever been set aside, or appealed from. It is claimed, however, that the judgment roll could not be used for the purpose of showing the amounts invested by the partner. The judgment roll was offered in evidence by counsel for respondent without specifying in the offer the object of the evidence. An objection was made on the ground that an appeal had been taken from the judgment, and on the ground that the questions involved therein were not the issues involved herein. Counsel then offered it "for the purpose of showing that on the 8th day of February, 1888, a decree was entered in said action * * * dissolving the partnership, * * * and ordering a sale of the partnership property." Defendants objected, on the ground that it was incompetent for any purpose. The court admitted it, reserving a decision, and thereafter overruled the objection, and admitted it in evidence.

The court was not bound to limit the evidence to any specific purpose, under this offer and objection. In Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 344, it was held that counsel is not bound by the declaration of a limited purpose, so as to preclude him from drawing other deductions than that suggested by the terms of the offer, from the evidence offered, unless injustice would follow to the opposite party by permitting such new inferences. In the absence of an express understanding between counsel and the court that evidence is to be limited to a particular matter, the court will be authorized to consider it for any purpose for which it is competent and relevant to the issues.

In the case referred to (Starbird v. Sears et al.) it was determined that the Mason note was a partnership debt, and that the partnership property should be sold, and the proceeds thereof applied in payment. It was the only debt and liability remaining unpaid after dissolution of the partnership. It was a joint obligation of all the partners, and all the partners were liable. The note was made April 7, 1885, and the suit for a dissolution of the partnership was not commenced until 1887.

It is claimed that "no action lies by one partner against another, unless there has been a settlement of accounts, and a promise to pay the balance." This is true as to matters occurring before a dissolution of the partnership, but where a partnership has been dissolved, and the partnership accounts fully settled, an express promise to pay the balance is not necessary, "because the promise is implied in closing the accounts and stating the balance." Pars.

Partn. c. 8, pp. 278, 287. Where one partner pays a partnership debt existing after dissolution of the partnership, he may maintain assumpsit against his copartner for contribution, and this is true although he gives his individual note for a debt due from the firm. Clouch v. Moyer, 23 Kan. 405; Brown v. Agnew, 6 Watts & S. 235; Whetstone v. Shaw, 70 Mo. 575; section 2412, Civil Code.

Conceding that the summons was defective, which is by no means clear, the defendant, by pleading to the merits, waived his objection to all defects therein. Desmond v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 274. We think that the complaint states a cause of action, although a demurrer for ambiguity would have been sustained. The complaint shows that there had been a dissolution of the copartnership by a decree of the superior court, and that an order of sale had been made for payment of the debts, and, as we have seen, it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to allege an express promise by the defendant to pay his proportion of the partnership indebtedness.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 235

GALE v. BEST et al. (No. 12,326.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 18, 1889.)

PUBLIC LANDS—RAILROAD GRANT—CHARACTER OF LANDS—RES ADJUDICATA.

Where land is patented to a railroad company as public land, under a grant providing for its disposal as agricultural land, without any reservation in the grant except a general one of mineral lands, and no reservation in the patent, the patent is a conclusive determination by the government that the land is agricultural; and in an action at law to recover possession, by one claiming title under the company, against persons claiming under a location of a mining claim upon the public domain, the character of the land cannot be brought in question.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON D. FREER, Judge.

Action by John Gale against S. M. Best, J. W. Reams, J. H. Bassford, Calvin Reams, and L. B. Abernathie, to recover possession of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 27, township 24 N., of range 3 E., Mount Diablo base and meridian, situate in Butte county, Cal. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Gray & Sexton and W. S. Riley, for appellants. Hundley & Gale, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover possession of certain land, and to restrain defendants from doing certain acts thereon in the nature of waste. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The land in contest is within the limits of the grant of lands by congress to the California & Oregon Railroad Company, a corporation; and on March 17, 1875, the government of the United States executed and delivered its patent, in due form of law, to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation, successor to said first-named corporation, by which it conveyed said land to said last-named corporation without any reservation whatever. Plaintiff holds, and was in possession, under said Central Pacific Railroad Company. In December, 1885, and while plaintiff was in possession of said land, defendants entered thereon, and did the usual acts which constitute the location of a mining claim upon the public domain, and in December, 1886, they took possession of said land and dispossessed plaintiff; and since then, until restrained by order of court, were engaged in digging, excavating, and removing large quantities of the soil, etc., from said land. They claim a right to the possession of the land upon the ground that it is mineral land, and that all mineral land was reserved in the grant by congress to said railroad company. That part of their answer which sets up this defense was, on plaintiff's motion, stricken out, and at the trial an objection to their offer to prove that the land was mineral was sustained. Upon these two rulings of the court below the main point in the case arises.

The rule is well settled by numerous decisions of the supreme court of the United States that when a law of congress provides for the disposal and patenting of certain public lands upon the ascertainment of certain facts, the proper officers of the land department of the general government have jurisdiction to inquire into and determine those facts; that the issuance of a patent is an official declaration that such facts have been found in favor of the patentee; and that in such a case the patent is conclusive in a court of law, and cannot be attacked collaterally. Of course, if the patent be void upon its face, or if, looking beyond the patent for a law upon which it is based, it is found that there is no law which authorizes such a patent under any state of facts; or that the particular tract named in the patent has been absolutely reserved from disposal,—then the patent would be worthless, and assailable from any quarter. For instance, if a certain section or a certain township described by legal subdivisions should be expressly and unconditionally reserved by congress from disposal under any statute, a patent for any part of such tract would be void. But if a large body of public lands be subjected to sale or other disposition under a law which has merely a general reservation of such parts of those lands as may be found to be of a particular character, such as swamp or mineral, then the land department has jurisdiction to determine the character of any part thereof, and a patent is conclusive evidence that such jurisdiction has been exercised. In such a case the patent could be attacked only by a direct proceeding, and by a person who connects himself directly with the title of the government.

There are many decisions of the supreme court of the United States establishing these views, and it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, and Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389, where Mr. Justice FIELD, in elaborate opinions, discusses the whole subject, and cites the other cases bearing upon the question. It may, however, be well, perhaps, to allude briefly to the case of French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 169, because that case seems, in principle, to be exactly like the one at bar. In that case a patent had been issued to the state of Missouri for certain swamp and overflowed land, under a certain act of congress. A party claiming the land under a grant to a railroad company, which would have carried the title if the land were not swamp, brought an action of ejectment, and sought to introduce parol evidence to prove that as a matter of fact the land was not of that character, and thus impeach the validity of the patent. There, as in the case at bar, the question was as to the character of the land. The court below rejected the offered evidence, and held that the patent concluded the question. The supreme court sustained the ruling of the court below, and Mr. Justice MILLER, in delivering its opinion, said: "We are of opinion that, in this action of law, it would be a departure from sound principle, and contrary to well-considered judgments in this court, and in others of high authority, to permit the validity of the patent to the state to be subjected to the test of the verdict of a jury on such oral testimony as might be brought before it. It would be substituting the jury, or the court sitting as a jury, for the tribunal which congress had provided to determine the question, and would be making a patent of the United States a cheap and unstable reliance as a title for lands which it purported to convey."

In Steel v. Smelting Co., supra, Justice FIELD, whose exhaustive opinion we cannot here undertake to reproduce, among other things, says as follows: "We have so often had occasion to speak of the land department, the object of its creation, and the powers it possesses in the alienation by patent of portions of the public lands, that it creates an unpleasant surprise to find that counsel, in discussing the effect to be given to the action of that department, overlook our decisions on that subject. That department, as we have repeatedly said, was established to supervise various proceedings whereby a conveyance of the title from the United States to portions of the public domain is obtained, and to see that the requirements of different acts of congress are fully complied with. Necessarily, therefore, it must consider and pass upon the qualifications of the applicant, the acts he has performed to secure the title, the nature of the land, and whether it is of the class which is open to sale. Its judgment upon these matters is that of a special tribunal, and is unassailable except by direct proceedings for its annulment or limitation. Such has been the uniform language of this court in repeated decisions." And again, speaking of the lands held by the possessor of a patent, he says: "If intruders upon them could compel him, in every suit for possession, to establish the validity of the action of the land department, and the correctness of its ruling upon matters submitted to it, the patent, instead of being a means of peace and security, would subject his rights to constant and ruinous litigation. He would recover one portion of his land if the jury were satisfied that the evidence produced justified the action of that department, and lose another portion, the title whereto rests upon the same facts, because another jury came to a different conclusion. So his rights in different suits upon the same patent would be determined, not by its efficiency as a conveyance of the government, but according to the fluctuating prejudices of different jurymen, or their varying capacities to weigh evidence." 104 U. S. 641. And the pith of the whole matter is aptly expressed by the same learned justice in Smelting Co. v. Kemp, supra, where, speaking of the land department, he says: "Indeed, the doctrine as to the regularity and validity of its acts, where it has jurisdiction, goes so far that if in any circumstances under existing law a patent would be held valid, it will be presumed that such circumstances existed." 104 U. S. 646.

It is contended by appellants that former decisions of this court, in McLaughlin v. Powell, 50 Cal. 64; Carr v. Quigley, 57 Cal. 394; and Mining Co. v. Oliver, 16 Pac. Rep. 780,—are in conflict with the doctrine above stated. Whether or not there be any expressions in the opinion in either of those cases inconsistent with the views of the highest federal court on the subject, (which views, in the end, on a question like this must prevail,) it is not necessary here to consider. In order to affirm the judgment in the case at bar there is no necessity to upset either of those cases. In McLaughlin v. Powell the patent itself expressly excepted "all mineral lands, should any be found to exist, in the tracts" embraced by the patent. And the decision is expressly put upon the ground that there was that exception, and that it was "part of the description" of the lands conveyed. And it may be strongly argued that, in such case, although it was the duty of the land department to determine the character of the land before the issuance of the patent, yet, as the patent shows upon its face that such duty was not performed, the patentee must be held to have taken it, knowing its uncertain and unsubstantial character. On the other hand, Judge SAWYER has held, in an opinion of great force and ability, that the issuance of a patent in such a case was a conclusive declaration that the land was of the character to be properly patented under the law,—that is, agricultural land; that there is no authority to make in such a patent a general reservation of mineral lands, any more than there is in case of a pre-emption patent; and that such a reservation is void. Cowell v. Lammers, 10 Sawy. 246, 21 Fed. Rep. 200. At all events, as in the case at bar, the patent contained no reservation whatever. The case of McLaughlin v. Powell is not authority here. And the same may be said of Mining Co. v. Oliver. In that case the patent also excepted "all mineral lands, should any be found to exist," etc. Carr v. Quigley is not in point at all. In that case there was no question about the character of the land patented. It was claimed to be within a "government reservation," and that the body of land itself involved in that case, without reference to its character, was expressly reserved from the operation of the law under which the attempt was made to patent it. Our opinion is that where a patent issues for public land under a law which provides for its disposal as agricultural land, either to a railroad company, or to pre-emption or homestead claimants, and there is no reservation in the law, except a general one of mineral lands, and no reservation at all in the patent, then the patent must be considered as a conclusive determination by the government that the land is agricultural; and afterwards, in an action in a court of law, it is not competent to reopen the question of the character of the land. The opposite view would render the titles to a large region of California, now rapidly filling up with agricultural settlers, unstable, insecure, and almost worthless. It would affect, also, those holding through patents under the pre-emption and homestead laws, for mineral lands are exempted from the provisions of those laws. The theory of that view is that if the land previously patented as agricultural can at any time be shown to be in fact mineral, then the title to it never passed from the United States, but had always remained a part of the public domain; and, as no statute of limitations runs against the government, the insecurity of the title under the patent would be perpetual, and an attack upon it could be made as successfully 100 years hence as now. Such, in our opinion, is not the law.

The view taken of the question presented by the court below was correct, and we see no error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 52

HUMBOLDT SAV. & L. SOC. v. WENNERHOLD et al. (No. 11,674.)*

(Supreme Court of California. February 18, 1889.)

1. BOND—BREACH—LIABILITIES OF SURETIES.
A secretary of a building association executed a bond to well and truly perform and discharge all his official duties, and do all things required by the by-laws, and to perform faithfully all duties required of him, and obey all orders given him by the board of directors. The secretary was confided with the general superintendence of the association's funds, received, cared for, and paid them out, and the performance of these duties by this officer had become the established usage of the association. Held, that his sureties on the bond were liable for moneys of depositors which he had received and entered in their pass-books, but not in the company's books, and converted to his own use; also for moneys taken by him, which had been deposited in the safe for persons who had borrowed the same; and also for moneys taken from the association and converted, he forging a receipt for the same in the name of a third person.

2. SAME—DURATION OF LIABILITY.
The fact that no term of office was ever fixed or put an end to by any by-law, order, or resolution, does not affect the liability of the sureties, the bond being conditioned that he should perform his duties "so long as he shall continue and be continued in said office." No want of consideration being shown, the sureties could bind themselves for an unlimited period.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

Manuel Eyre, for appellants. A. H. Loughborough, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Plaintiff brought this action against Wennerhold, Joseph Frank, and John Wieland. During its pendency two of the defendants, Joseph

*Reversed in banc. See 22 Pac. 920, 81 Cal. 528.

Frank and John Wieland, died, and the executors of Frank and the administratrix of Wieland were substituted as defendants. Judgment passed for the plaintiff, from which, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appealed.

The cause of action set out in the complaint was the breach of the conditions of a bond given to the plaintiff by one Hartmann, its secretary, upon which Wennerhold, Frank, and Wieland were the sureties. The alleged breach consisted in the embezzlement by Hartmann, while acting in the capacity above mentioned, of large sums of money belonging to, or for which the plaintiff was responsible.

The facts attending the affair seem to be that Hartmann embezzled the money which he is charged to have taken, by receiving some of it "from depositors coming to deposit money in plaintiff's bank, and entered such sums in the pass-books of said depositors, but neglected to cause such sums to be entered in the books of the bank. He converted the same to his own use." "The following depositors deposited money, filling out deposit tags; and Hartmann, receiving said money, signed or indorsed said tags with his name as secretary, and returned them to said depositors as their vouchers, but failed to enter such amounts in the books of the bank, but converted the same to his own use." "Said Hartmann took from bags deposited in the vault and safe of plaintiff's bank money set apart for persons who had borrowed the same from the bank, and converted the same to his own use." "And on the following dates said Hartmann took from the money of the bank the following sums, filling a check or receipt, to which he forged the name of V. Chapman, so that it appeared that said sums had been paid by him to said Chapman, whereas he had paid her nothing, but appropriated the money to his own use." "All of which was done by Hartmann while acting as hereinafter testified to in the employ of the plaintiff." "To the testimony adduced, and to each question asked in eliciting such testimony, the defendant objected on the grounds,—First, that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." The defendant further contends that the decision is contrary to the evidence, and that certain of the findings are not supported by the evidence.

The bond seems to have been given under the idea that Hartmann, as secretary of the plaintiff, might thereafter from time to time be re-elected, rechosen, and reappointed, or continued in office, or suffered to hold the same. And in point of fact he seems to have been continued in the office of secretary, to which he was first elected, and to have been suffered to hold the same, and exercise its functions, up to the time of about three days before his death by suicide.

The condition of the bond was that if Hartmann, during his term, or during all the time he should hold the office of secretary, should well and truly serve the plaintiff as such secretary so long as he shall continue and be continued in said office, and "well, truly, and honestly perform and discharge all his duties as such officer, and do all things required of him by the by-laws of said corporation, which may now be in force, or which may be hereafter enacted by said corporation, and shall well and truly and faithfully perform all the duties which shall be required of him, and obey all orders and directions given him by the board of directors of said corporation, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

The averment in the complaint, after setting out the bond in full as having been given, is "that the said bond was conditioned that said Hartmann should well and truly serve this corporation as such secretary, and well, truly, and honestly perform and discharge all his duties as such officer, and all things required of him by the by-laws of the plaintiff, which might then be in force, or which might thereafter be enacted by this plaintiff, as by reference thereto will more fully appear."

The question really is, not what the office Hartmann was to fill was called, but what its duties were, as prescribed by the by-laws or the orders and directions of the board of directors, or which had devolved upon the secretary by the established usage and custom of the bank, with the consent of the directors before and after the giving of the bond of which the sureties must be held to have had notice, and whether or not he had well, truly, and faithfully performed them. "When a certain class of corporations,—for instance, banks, have established, recognized, and well-known usages, all persons dealing with their agents will be affected with notice of these usages, and the contracts of such corporations will be construed with reference to them." Tayl. Corp. § 195, and cases cited.

The interpretation of the terms of the bond is to be governed by the same rules as other contracts. Civil Code, § 2837. In order to give a proper construction to an instrument of the kind here involved, "the circumstances under which it was made, including the situation of the subject of the instrument and of the parties to it, may also be shown, so that the judge be placed in the position of those whose language he is to interpret." Code Civil Proc. § 1860. The appellate court, in speaking to such a matter, after alluding to the rule laid down as to official bonds in Hubert v. Mendheim, 64 Cal. 213, said: "But, as was said in that case with reference to bonds given to individuals and private corporations, 'such matters are the subject of private contract, by which the parties may bind themselves in any manner, or to any extent not violative of public policy or positive statute.' These private contracts are to be interpreted like other private contracts with reference to their language and the circumstances under which they were entered into." Enterprise Co. v. Allen, 67 Cal. 508, 8 Pac. Rep. 59.

The record here shows that the banking corporation of which Hartmann was made the secretary started out on a small scale, and that it was the intention of those controlling and directing it that the secretary should be the chief agent in receiving, caring for, and paying out the moneys which were paid in, paid out, and of which it had charge, or belonged to it. To this secretary, in other words, it was the intention of all those concerned to confide the general supervision of its funds, as cashier, teller, book-keeper, etc. This is shown by the acts of the parties, and all the surrounding circumstances, both before and after the giving of the bond. It was contemplated in the beginning that there would be a time of small affairs, and that a secretary could do all that is ordinarily confided to a receiving and paying teller, cashier, book-keeper, etc. These duties all seem to have been expected of Hartmann, to have been assumed by him, and to have become the established usage of the bank, if not directly ordered by its trustees, both before and after the making of the bond. It is perfectly apparent to us that this was the expectation of the sureties when they signed the bond, and that they must have known what Hartmann for years had been doing as secretary, and what the nature of his duties was. He had been secretary for about 10 years prior to the making of this bond, and had always performed the same duties before and after the bond was executed.

The complaint, in effect, gives the conditions of the bond, and the breach of it by Hartmann, and states a sufficient cause of action. He was elected secretary, and was continued or suffered to stay in the same office for years, up to the time of his defalcation, without further election or order, and this was in consonance with the terms of the bond, which seem to contemplate just such a continuance or sufferance in office. No term of office was intended to be fixed by the bond; that was to be left to the action of the directors for the time being, whoever they might be. Their term of office did not affect his. Brandt, Sur. § 146; Tayl. Corp. § 235. It is not shown that his term of office was ever fixed, or put an end to, by any by-law, order, resolution, or custom. And the sureties could bind themselves for such an unlimited period, as no want of consideration is shown. Association v. Esche, 17 Pac. Rep. 677. The responsibility of the sureties, as fixed by the court, is in accordance with the words of the bond. Upon the whole case we perceive no prejudicial error, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 254

WEINREICH et al. v. JOHNSON. (No. 12,624.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 20, 1889.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—SUIT BY PARTNERS—NOTE TO INDIVIDUAL MEMBER.
   In an action by W. and R. as partners on a note alleged to have been executed to them, where the note appears to have been executed to W. individually, it is error to render judgment thereon in favor of W. individually.
2. PLEADING—VARIANCE—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.
   The case presents neither a variance of proof nor a misjoinder of parties, and it cannot be urged that the objection was waived by failure to raise it by demurrer or answer as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 434, which provides that all objections, except to the jurisdiction and sufficiency of the complaint, shall be deemed waived unless taken by demurrer or answer.
3. PARTIES—MISJOINDER—PLEADING.
   Section 578, providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one of more of several defendants, has no application to such a case, as the effect would be to render a judgment for a party in whose favor no cause of action is stated in the complaint.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

Action by H. Weinreich and F. Raschen, partners as Weinreich & Co., against Thomas Johnson, on a promissory note and an account. Judgment for the firm on the account, and H. Weinreich individually on the note, and from the latter judgment defendant appeals.

Code Civil Proc. § 434, provides: "If no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." "Sec. 578. Judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants."

J. C. Tubbs and Matt. F. Johnson, for appellant. Albert M. Johnson, for respondents.

WORKS, J. The respondents, H. Weinreich and F. Raschen, as partners, doing business under the firm name of Weinreich & Co., sued the appellant in the court below on a promissory note and upon an account. The complaint contains the necessary averments showing the partnership and a compliance with the statute with reference to the filing of a certificate thereof with the county clerk, and alleges in the first count that the defendant executed to the plaintiffs the promissory note sued on, and in the second count the purchase of goods and merchandise and the amount due therefor. The defendant denied all of the material allegations of the first count, except the formal allegations as to the partnership, and admitted the allegations of the second count. It was proved by the evidence, and found by the court, that the respondent Weinreich was, prior to the formation of the partnership alleged in the complaint, doing business individually under the firm name of H. Weinreich & Co.; that the note sued on was executed to and was due to him, and not to the firm composed of the plaintiffs Weinreich and Raschen; and that the amount of the account was due to said firm. Upon these findings the court rendered judgment in favor of Weinreich individually for the amount of the note, and in favor of the firm for the amount found to be due on the account. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appeals.

We think the judgment cannot be supported by reason or authority. As to the judgment in favor of Weinreich individually there is no pleading to support it. Weinreich was not a party to the suit in his individual capacity. The allegation of the complaint was that the note was given to someone else, and there was no allegation of the execution of any note to him, and nothing to show an indebtedness to him from the defendant, or any averments upon which a judgment could rest.

But the respondent contends that the question of variance in the proof or a misjoinder of parties is not raised by demurrer or answer, and is therefore waived under section 434 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was no misjoinder of parties. The plaintiffs alleged an indebtedness to the parties suing, and the defendant in his answer denied it. Not only was it not waived, but his defense was made, proved, and found in his favor by the court. Counsel are right in their contention that this was not a case of variance. It was a clear case of failure of proof, which is quite another thing.

It is further claimed by the respondent that where a joint action is brought, a several judgment may be rendered in favor of a part of the plaintiffs under section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the very object of the section was to "dispense with such frivolous and technical objections as are now urged by the defendant in this case." Let us stop to inquire to what this would lead us. A. and B., as partners, sue C. on a promissory note. C. denies the execution of the note. He has a good defense on this ground. The proof sustains his answer, but it appears that, if he did not give a note to A. and B., he did execute one to A. alone. If A. had sued alone on his note, the defense interposed here could not have been made, but a counter-claim or other valid defense might have been pleaded and proved. By taking the course pursued in this action any such defense could be effectually avoided.

It seems to us that the objection made here is not frivolous, but goes to the heart of the case, and affects the most substantial right of the defendant. In our judgment section 578 of the Code has no application to a case of this kind. To apply it here would be to authorize the rendition of a judgment for a party in whose favor no cause of action is stated in the complaint, and against a party who has had no notice of any such cause of action or any opportunity to meet it. McCord v. Seale, 56 Cal. 262; Cotes v. Campbell, 3 Cal. 191; Curry v. Roundtree, 51 Cal. 184. This would be in violation of the well-established elementary rule that the proof must correspond with the allegations of the complaint. A system of pleading and practice that would permit such a course as was pursued in this case would be a snare and a delusion. We had as well abolish all pleading at once. To allow such a practice would be equally violative of the Code provision that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.

Counsel for respondent earnestly contends that his view is supported by Mr. Pomeroy in his work on Remedies, and asks us to read carefully what is said on this subject by the learned author. We have complied with this request, and find nothing to support counsel's position.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed and cause remanded.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.

with the words of the bond. Upon the whole case we perceive no prejudicial error, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 254

WEINREICH et al. v. JOHNSON. (No. 12,624.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 20, 1889.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—SUIT BY PARTNERS—NOTE TO INDIVIDUAL MEMBER.
   In an action by W. and R. as partners on a note alleged to have been executed to them, where the note appears to have been executed to W. individually, it is error to render judgment thereon in favor of W. individually.
2. PLEADING—VARIANCE—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.
   The case presents neither a variance of proof nor a misjoinder of parties, and it cannot be urged that the objection was waived by failure to raise it by demurrer or answer as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 434, which provides that all objections, except to the jurisdiction and sufficiency of the complaint, shall be deemed waived unless taken by demurrer or answer.
3. PARTIES—MISJOINDER—PLEADING.
   Section 578, providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one of more of several defendants, has no application to such a case, as the effect would be to render a judgment for a party in whose favor no cause of action is stated in the complaint.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

Action by H. Weinreich and F. Raschen, partners as Weinreich & Co., against Thomas Johnson, on a promissory note and an account. Judgment for the firm on the account, and H. Weinreich individually on the note, and from the latter judgment defendant appeals.

Code Civil Proc. § 434, provides: "If no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." "Sec. 578. Judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants."

J. C. Tubbs and Matt. F. Johnson, for appellant. Albert M. Johnson, for respondents.

WORKS, J. The respondents, H. Weinreich and F. Raschen, as partners, doing business under the firm name of Weinreich & Co., sued the appellant in the court below on a promissory note and upon an account. The complaint contains the necessary averments showing the partnership and a compliance with the statute with reference to the filing of a certificate thereof with the county clerk, and alleges in the first count that the defendant executed to the plaintiffs the promissory note sued on, and in the second count the purchase of goods and merchandise and the amount due therefor. The defendant denied all of the material allegations of the first count, except the formal allegations as to the partnership, and admitted the allegations of the second count. It was proved by the evidence, and found by the court, that the respondent Weinreich was, prior to the formation of the partnership alleged in the complaint, doing business individually under the firm name of H. Weinreich & Co.; that the note sued on was executed to and was due to him, and not to the firm composed of the plaintiffs Weinreich and Raschen; and that the amount of the account was due to said firm. Upon these findings the court rendered judgment in favor of Weinreich individually for the amount of the note, and in favor of the firm for the amount found to be due on the account. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appeals.

We think the judgment cannot be supported by reason or authority. As to the judgment in favor of Weinreich individually there is no pleading to support it. Weinreich was not a party to the suit in his individual capacity. The allegation of the complaint was that the note was given to someone else, and there was no allegation of the execution of any note to him, and nothing to show an indebtedness to him from the defendant, or any averments upon which a judgment could rest.

But the respondent contends that the question of variance in the proof or a misjoinder of parties is not raised by demurrer or answer, and is therefore waived under section 434 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was no misjoinder of parties. The plaintiffs alleged an indebtedness to the parties suing, and the defendant in his answer denied it. Not only was it not waived, but his defense was made, proved, and found in his favor by the court. Counsel are right in their contention that this was not a case of variance. It was a clear case of failure of proof, which is quite another thing.

It is further claimed by the respondent that where a joint action is brought, a several judgment may be rendered in favor of a part of the plaintiffs under section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the very object of the section was to "dispense with such frivolous and technical objections as are now urged by the defendant in this case." Let us stop to inquire to what this would lead us. A. and B., as partners, sue C. on a promissory note. C. denies the execution of the note. He has a good defense on this ground. The proof sustains his answer, but it appears that, if he did not give a note to A. and B., he did execute one to A. alone. If A. had sued alone on his note, the defense interposed here could not have been made, but a counter-claim or other valid defense might have been pleaded and proved. By taking the course pursued in this action any such defense could be effectually avoided.

It seems to us that the objection made here is not frivolous, but goes to the heart of the case, and affects the most substantial right of the defendant. In our judgment section 578 of the Code has no application to a case of this kind. To apply it here would be to authorize the rendition of a judgment for a party in whose favor no cause of action is stated in the complaint, and against a party who has had no notice of any such cause of action or any opportunity to meet it. McCord v. Seale, 56 Cal. 262; Cotes v. Campbell, 3 Cal. 191; Curry v. Roundtree, 51 Cal. 184. This would be in violation of the well-established elementary rule that the proof must correspond with the allegations of the complaint. A system of pleading and practice that would permit such a course as was pursued in this case would be a snare and a delusion. We had as well abolish all pleading at once. To allow such a practice would be equally violative of the Code provision that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.

Counsel for respondent earnestly contends that his view is supported by Mr. Pomeroy in his work on Remedies, and asks us to read carefully what is said on this subject by the learned author. We have complied with this request, and find nothing to support counsel's position.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed and cause remanded.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.

78 Cal. 242

In re MOORE'S ESTATE. (No. 13,002.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 18, 1889.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—CONTENTS—RECORDS NOT IN EVIDENCE.

Records and documents neither offered nor read in evidence should not be incorporated in a bill of exceptions, though they refer to the same matter as that in controversy, and were commented on in the argument at the trial.

In bank. Application for writ of mandate against P. W. Keyser, judge of the superior court of Sutter county, to require the settlement of a bill of exceptions.

Warren Olney, for applicant. Chas. B. Younger, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Application to this court to settle a bill of exceptions, on the ground that the court below has refused to insert certain records, papers, and documents therein. The petitioner was the administrator of the estate of Moore, and was, by order of the court below, removed from his trust. One of the grounds of the petition for his removal was that he had failed to file his final account as required by law. In his answer he admits that he has not filed his final account, but alleges as an excuse for not doing so that the estate had been in litigation for nearly 10 years with the widow of the decedent, and that said litigation is not yet ended. The matter sought to be inserted in the bill of exceptions, by this proceeding, consists of the pleadings, papers, and proceedings in the different branches of the litigation between the estate and the widow referred to in the answer. The judge of the court below, for answer to the petition, alleges that the papers and records aforesaid "were not, nor was any part thereof, read, offered, or used in evidence on the trial of said proceeding for the removal of the administrator of said estate, nor was any exception, in any wise relating thereto, taken by said petitioner at said trial." This is conceded by the petitioner, and is a complete answer to the petition. The office of a bill of exceptions is to present to this court the proceedings of the court below. Only such evidence can be inserted therein as was heard by the court, or offered and excluded. To permit an appellant to insert in his bill of exceptions any matter of evidence not actually heard by the lower court would work great injustice both to the court and to the opposite party. It would present to this court a case which might be entirely different from the one presented to and decided by the court below.

It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the papers and records referred to were a part of the proceedings in the settlement of this same estate, and that for that reason it was the duty of the court to examine and consider them in determining the question whether the administrator should be removed or not, and that this court should presume that they were so examined and considered. We cannot accede to this view. Such a rule would leave the lower court no guide in making up a bill of exceptions, and lead to utter confusion. A party who desires that any item of documentary evidence shall be considered by the court must call the attention of the court to it, and offer it in evidence. In no other way can it be regarded as a part of the evidence, independent of some stipulation of the parties. It need not be read in evidence, but must necessarily be offered, and thereby brought to the attention and consideration of the court. By no other means can the practice in this particular be made certain and uniform. Nor can we say as matter of law that the court was bound, in passing upon this question, to examine and consider all of the papers in the estate.

Again, it is claimed that some, if not all, of these papers were commented upon at the argument below, and that they were thereby called to the attention of the court, and should, for that reason, be inserted in the bill of exceptions. But this will not do. Such a practice would lead to just what has taken place here, a controversy between opposing counsel as to what, if anything, was so referred to.

For the reasons given the application is denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

78 Cal. 258

GRENNAN v. MCGREGOR et al. (No. 12,420.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 23, 1889.)

1. DEED—CONSTRUCTION.

A deed of a half section of land from a railroad company contained the following reservation: "Excepting and reserving, however, for railroad purposes, a strip of land 400 feet wide, lying equally on each side of the track of the railroad of said company, or any branch railroad now or hereafter constructed on said lands." The consideration for the conveyance was $450. The only track on the land conveyed, besides the main line, constructed and in use at the date of the deed, was a track 1,500 feet long, used for switching purposes, in connection which the main track, and which cost $2,500. Held, that it was a "branch railroad" within the meaning of the parties.

2. SAME—PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN.

The phrase "branch railroad" is of such ambiguous import that its meaning cannot be determined without reference to the circumstances surrounding the parties when they used it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

Ejectment by John Grennan against Ruth McGregor and S. F. Woodworth. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in his favor as to a portion of the land sued for, but in favor of defendants as to the residue.

Wallace & Prewett, for appellant. Hale & Craig, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action to recover a small parcel of a certain half section of land in Placer county, which was conveyed to the plaintiff January 14, 1884, by the then owner, the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The deed of conveyance contained the following reservation: "Excepting and reserving, however, for railroad purposes, a strip of land four hundred feet wide, lying equally on each side of the track of the railroad of said company, or any branch railroad now or hereafter constructed on said lands."

The defendants are lessees of the successor of the Central Pacific Railroad Company,—plaintiff's grantor,—and the whole controversy turns upon the question whether the demanded premises are within the reservation of the deeds to plaintiff. The superior court, holding that they were included in the reservation, gave judgment for defendants, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It is agreed that the following facts were established by the evidence taken at the trial: "That the said railroad company was, on January 14, 1884, and for many years prior thereto, and ever since, up to the date of the lease hereinafter mentioned, has been, the owner and operator of a railroad running from San Francisco, Cal., to Ogden, Utah; and said railroad traverses the east half of said section; and that on said half section was and is situated the station known as 'Clipper Gap Station.' That along the side of the main track of said railroad at said station the said company had and have constructed a switch, lying on the easterly side of the main track, of the length of about 1,500 feet; that said switch is appurtenant to, and used wholly for and with, said station. That along the opposite side or westerly of said main track, there extends and runs a track called by the plaintiff a 'spur' or 'side track,' and by the defendant a 'branch railroad.' That said last-mentioned track commences at a point below said station's office, distant about six hundred feet, and at or near the point at which the said switch commences, and runs up along-side the main track, but not quite parallel thereto, and extends a distance of about one thousand three hundred feet, and abruptly terminates. That at its furthest point from the main track, it is over three hundred feet therefrom. That it is used by said railroad company for conducting its business as a common carrier, and is necessary for such use. The cost of constructing the said last-described track was not less than $2,500. That there is no station on the same. That all the freight that is ever handled thereon is such as is consigned to said Clipper Gap station, and that is only when it is so consigned in car-load lots that it is run out on the said track to be unloaded. That all freight so run out and unloaded is formally received and receipted for at said Clipper Gap station. That freight received at said station is unloaded from the main track when in less than car-load lots, and from said 1,300-foot track when in car-load lots; and shipments from said Clipper Gap station are usually made in the same way. That passenger trains never run on or over the same. That there are no stations or offices thereon. That there is not, and never has been, any schedule of fares and freights for said track. That freight and passengers, or either, are never received on said track for consignment or shipment to any point thereon. That at the time of the construction of said track and the execution of said deed, on January 14, 1884, there was not on the line of said track any warehouse or place of business, or any place or house to which freight was carried. That since the execution of said deed a box factory has been built thereon, and that freight is now sometimes carried to the same, but that it is always consigned to said station. That all other freight, when carried out on said track for unloading, is unloaded direct from the cars to wagons. That no cars or engines belong to said track, and that trains are never run on said track from one objective point to another, and only move about thereon to facilitate unloading or loading. That occasionally empty freight cars are run out thereon, and are left there to be loaded with freight, and, when so loaded, are run down on the main track and into trains and carried away. That there is a large and deep cut just above said station, commencing about one hundred feet above the station office, and extending a long distance up the track. That by reason of the existence of said deep cut it is impracticable for a switch to be run on the westerly side of said main track, at said station, and again connect with said main track at any point above said point 100 feet above said station, without the same should be extended across a deep ravine at great expense, or without said deep cut should be made very much wider. That by reason of these facts it is impracticable to make a switch, or to extend a track out on the said westerly side of said main track at said station, unless the same is made to run about on the site of said track that is in this action claimed by plaintiff to be only a spur. That in all particulars said last-mentioned track is used only in connection with said station and main road, and never separately and independently therefrom. It is admitted that the leases pleaded in the answer were in fact executed as therein set out, and that, if said Central Pacific retained, or has any right to, the premises in controversy, the same has passed to and belongs to defendant McGregor. The price and consideration paid by plaintiff for the land conveyed to him by the Central Pacific Railroad Company by means of the deed hereinbefore referred to was the sum of $450, and no more."

The premises in controversy are not within 200 feet of the main line of the railroad, but are within 200 feet of the track on the west side of the main line, which is "called by the plaintiff a 'spur' or 'side track,' and by the defendant a 'branch railroad.'"

It is not contended that the following words in the above-quoted reservation, viz., "the track of the railroad of said company," included anything except the main line of the road exclusive of side tracks, switches, etc., and therefore the specific point to be determined is the proper meaning of the phrase "branch railroad," as employed by the parties to the deed. If these words in this collocation had any certain, precise, and generally accepted meaning, the case would present no difficulty, for we take judicial notice of the true signification of all English words and phrases, and may resort for aid to any appropriate books of reference. Code Civil Proc. § 1875. But we cannot find this phrase anywhere accurately defined, and although each of the words composing it has a sufficiently exact meaning, the question debated by counsel still remains, whether the idea expressed by the combination embraces something more or something less than the word "railroad" standing by itself; whether, in other words, a branch railroad must be not only a branch of a main line, but must also have all the elements of a separate road, as termini, and a freight and passenger traffic between its termini, or whether, being a branch of another road, it need have no distinct termini or traffic of its own. We find ourselves unable to say, as a general proposition, applicable to all cases, which of these ideas is the correct one, and must therefore hold that the parties to this deed have used a phrase of such ambiguous import that its meaning cannot be determined without reference to the circumstances surrounding them at the date of the transaction. Civil Code, § 1647. Looking, then, to the surrounding circumstances, and especially to the fact that this branch or spur on the west side of the main track, at Clipper Gap station, constructed and in use at the date of the deed, was the only piece of road within the tract conveyed that could satisfy these words of the reservation: "Branch railroad now constructed," and considering that while the whole price of the tract conveyed was only $450, the cost of this section of railroad was at least $2,500, we are forced to the conclusion that by the words "branch railroad now or hereafter constructed" the parties to this deed intended to and did include the branch or spur referred to, and that the superior court did not err in its decision.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 263

WILHOIT et al. v. BRYANT et al. (No. 12,692.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 25, 1889.)

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—SCHEDULE—INTEREST OF ASSIGNEE.

A debtor excepted from an assignment for the benefit of creditors all property "exempt by law from attachment and execution." In a schedule, made a part of the assignment, mention was made of a quarter section of land "incumbered by a homestead filing," and described as "the exempt real property" of the debtor, "the same being the homestead property of the within assignor, valued at $5,000." Held that whether the value placed upon such quarter section was correct or not, the purpose of the assignor was to except from the assignment the whole of such land, and no interest in it passed to the assignees.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PETERSON, Judge.

R. E. Wilhoit et al., assignees of M. E. Bryant, insolvent, sued Bryant et al. to subject certain real estate claimed by Bryant as a homestead to the assignment. Defendants' demurrer was sustained, and plaintiffs appeal.

J. C. Campbell, for appellants. J. C. Byers and P. S. Wilkes, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant M. E. Bryant, being insolvent, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, under the provisions of the Civil Code, §§ 3449-3473, and the plaintiffs were his assignees. The assignment was of "all his real estate, personal property, chattels, book-accounts, choses in action, and property of every name, nature, and description, wheresoever the same may be situate, save and except such property, land, tenements, and hereditaments, and all as are exempt by law from attachment and execution, as is fully described and set forth in the schedule hereto annexed, and made a part of these assignments, marked 'Schedule A.'" The schedule describes the several parcels of real property owned by the assignor, and, among others, "the S. E. quarter of section 17, all in township 4 N., R. 8 E., M. D. M.," and adds: "Said lands are incumbered as follows: By three mortgages, * * * and the S. E. quarter of sec. 17 is incumbered by a homestead filing of the within assignor." Then, after giving a list of the personal property, it says: "The following is a list of the exempt real property of the within assignor: The S. E. quarter of section 17 in Tp. 4 N., R. 8 E., M. D. M., the same being the homestead property of the within assignor, valued at $5,000."

The plaintiffs, after setting out in their complaint a copy of the assignment and schedule, and all the facts necessary to make the assignment valid under the provisions of the Code, proceed to allege that defendant Bryant conveyed to them the south-east quarter of said section 17, "subject to a certain homestead theretofore filed upon the same" by him, "to the extent and value of five thousand dollars, and no more;" "that said real property did on said 16th day of February, 1886, [the date of the assignment,] and does now, greatly exceed the sum of five thousand dollars in value, and is of the value of eleven thousand dollars, or thereabouts;" "that all of the property of said Bryant that has come into the hands of these assignees, or of which they have any knowledge, including the property herein described, will not be sufficient to pay the creditors of said Bryant in full." Wherefore they pray that the court appoint three disinterested freeholders "to appraise and set aside to said Bryant, from said land herein described, his land as a homestead herein, of the value of five thousand dollars; and that plaintiffs be authorized and permitted to sell the remaining portion of said land under the provisions of their said deed aforesaid;" and further, that the court order and decree that "defendants have no right, title, or interest in or to any of the land or premises herein, save and except the portion thereof that may be set aside to said Bryant as his said homestead." A general demurrer was interposed and sustained to the complaint, and from the judgment thereupon entered against them the plaintiffs have appealed.

It is argued here for appellants that under the assignment made to them they took as trustees, and now hold the title to six-elevenths of the quarter section in question; and that their action is in the nature of an action for partition. In this connection it may be observed that the averment in the complaint is that the property at the time of the assignment greatly exceeded in value the sum of $5,000, and is (about two years afterwards) of the value of $11,000, or thereabouts. There is nothing in this to show what the aggregate value of the property was when the assignment was made, or what interest, if any, the assignees then took in it. We cannot, therefore, know or assume that the value then was what it is now stated to be.

But, however this may be, it is contended for respondents that plaintiffs took no interest in the quarter section under their deed; and this contention, we think, must be sustained. The assignment was voluntary. The assignor could in this way turn over for the use of his creditors as much or little of his property as he pleased. It is true, the Code required him to make a full and true inventory of all his property, whether exempt or not exempt from execution, (section 3461,) and, if he failed to do so, the right of his creditors to proceed against him was in no way impaired. But neither the assignees nor creditors could claim any property under the assignment which was not in fact deeded to them. Now, the deed in this case excepts from its operation all property "exempt by law from attachment and execution," and the schedule, which is made a part of the deed, mentions the quarter section in question as "incumbered by a homestead filing" of the assignor, and describes it as "the exempt real property" of the assignor, "the same being the homestead property of the within assignor, valued at $5,000." The value named, whether correct or not, was intended, as we construe the language, to be of the whole quarter section, and not of some fractional interest therein, and the purpose of the grantor was to have the whole quarter section excepted from the operation of the deed. This being so, no interest in the quarter section passed to the assignees, and the demurrer was therefore properly sustained.

This disposes of the whole case and it is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the other question discussed by counsel.

The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

80 Cal. 397

DE NECOCHEA v. CURTIS. (No. 12,724.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 23, 1889.)

1. IRRIGATION—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—SUBSEQUENT PATENTEE.
   The act of July 16, 1866, (14 U. S. St. at Large, 253,) provided that when rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, and other purposes have vested, and are acknowledged by local custom and laws, the possessors of such rights shall be protected, and the right of way, for construction of ditches, confirmed; and the amendatory act of July 9, 1870, (16 U. S. St. at Large, 218,) provided that patents granted or pre-emptions and homesteads allowed shall be subject to vested and accrued water-rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water-rights. Held, that the right acquired by plaintiff by appropriation after the passage of the act of 1866 is valid, and will be protected as against defendant, who afterwards obtained title to the land from the United States.
2. SAME—POSTING NOTICE.
   The fact that plaintiff did not post or record the notice of appropriation required by Civil Code Cal. § 1415, did not invalidate his right under section 1418, which provides that "by a compliance with the above rules the claimant's right to the use of the water relates back to the time of posting," and section 1419, providing that "a failure to comply with such rules deprives the claimants of the right to the use of the water as against a subsequent claimant." As plaintiff actually diverted the water to his land, and applied it to useful purposes, he acquired the right to its use as against defendant, who showed no compliance on her part with the provisions of the Code.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; R. E. ARICK, Judge.

Action by Jose Maria De Necochea against Minerva Curtis, to restrain the diversion of water flowing on plaintiff's land. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

Hunsaker, Britt & Lamme, for appellant. Leach & Parker, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to restrain the defendant from diverting the water flowing to and upon the plaintiff's land. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The facts, as found by the court, are in substance as follows: The plaintiff is the owner of a tract of land in San Diego county, containing 160 acres, and extending across his land is a canyon or ravine, in which a natural stream of water flows at all times, when not prevented by artificial means. This stream has its source in a large spring issuing from the earth about half a mile distant from plaintiff's land. Some time about the year 1880, plaintiff, in order to prevent the waste and loss of water, consequent upon its flow in its natural channel down the canyon, constructed a ditch from the spring to his land, and diverted the water of the spring into his ditch, and thereby conducted it to and upon his land. From that time until the defendant diverted the water from his ditch, plaintiff used it for domestic purposes and the watering of stock, and, at seasons of the year when irrigation of crops was necessary and proper, for irrigating his land. On a part of his land he has fruit trees and vines growing, which will suffer injury, and the productiveness and value of the land will be reduced, if he is deprived of the use of this water.

The tract of land, containing 80 acres, on which the spring in question is located, was public land in 1885. During that year defendant settled upon this tract, and has since acquired title to it under the pre-emption laws of the United States. Shortly after her settlement, and in the same year, defendant constructed a ditch, and therein diverted the waters of the spring upon her tract of land, to be there used for the purposes of irrigation. Plaintiff objected to this appropriation by defendant, and by his agents entered upon defendant's land, and restored the flow of water from the spring to his own ditch. From that time a controversy as to the right to the use of the water was kept up between the parties till the summer of 1887, when defendant turned the same upon her own land, and entirely diverted it from the plaintiff's land. Defendant has a number of fruit trees, vegetables, etc., upon her tract of land, which have been grown by means of irrigation with the waters of the spring, and such trees and other crops will suffer injury if defendant is deprived of the use thereof.

The question arising from these facts is: Did the defendant, when she obtained the title to her land, thereby acquire a right to the exclusive use of the water of the spring, unaffected by the prior appropriation thereof by plaintiff? From the time of the organization of the government of this state, it has been customary for persons to go upon the public lands, and to construct ditches, and appropriate waters flowing thereon for mining, manufacturing, agricultural, and other useful purposes; and the right to the water so appropriated, as against any subsequent appropriator, not having rights derived from the government, has been recognized and upheld by the courts. Irwin v. Phillips, 5 Cal. 140; Hill v. King, 8 Cal. 336; Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 33; Lobdell v. Simpson, 2 Nev. 274; Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217. And in order to make a valid appropriation, before the adoption of the Codes, no notice of the claim was required to be posted or recorded. It was sufficient that the water was actually appropriated, and used for the intended purpose, before any one else intervened, and claimed a right to it.

On the 16th of July, 1866, an act was passed by congress, the ninth section of which provided "that whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of the courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same, and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed." 14 U. S. St. at Large, 253.

On the 9th of July, 1870, the act of July 16, 1866, was amended, and it was, among other things, provided that "all patents granted, or pre-emption or homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water-rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water-rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by the ninth section of the act of which this act is amendatory." 16 U. S. St. Large, 218.

In Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 456, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice FIELD of the section above quoted, said: "The object of the section was to give the sanction of the United States, the proprietor of the lands, to possessory rights which had previously rested solely upon the local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts, and to prevent such rights from being lost on a sale of the lands."

In Broder v. Water Co., 101 U. S. 276, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice MILLER of the same section, said: "It is the established doctrine of this court that rights of miners, who had taken possession of mines, and worked and developed them, and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and for purposes of agricultural irrigation, in the region where such artificial use of the water was an absolute necessity, are rights which the government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged, and was bound to protect, before the passage of the act of 1866. We are of opinion that the section of the act which we have quoted was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one." And in that case it was held that rights acquired by appropriation before the passage of the act were protected as against one who obtained title to the land from the government after its passage.

It has also been held that where rights to water were acquired by appropriation after the passage of the act of 1866, they were valid, and must be protected as against one who subsequently obtained title to the land from the government. Osgood v. Mining Co., 56 Cal. 571; Farley v. Land Co., 58 Cal. 142; Himes v. Johnson, 61 Cal. 259; Judkins v. Elliott, 12 Pac. Rep. 116; Ware v. Walker, 70 Cal. 591, 12 Pac. Rep. 475.

It is, however, contended for respondent that plaintiff never acquired any valid right to the water flowing from the spring, because he never posted or recorded a notice of his attempted appropriation, as required by section 1415 of the Civil Code. We do not think this contention can be sustained. It is not alleged in the pleadings, or found by the court, that either of the parties ever complied with the provisions of the section referred to; and, in the absence of such an allegation and finding, we may assume that they did not. But the only effects resulting from a compliance, and from a failure to comply, with the provisions of the Code are declared in sections 1418, 1419 as follows:

"Sec. 1418. By a compliance with the above rules the claimant's right to the use of the water relates back to the time the notice was posted.

"Sec. 1419. A failure to comply with such rules deprives the claimants of the right to the use of the water as against a subsequent claimant who complies therewith."

It must be held, therefore, that, notwithstanding the plaintiff failed to post and record the requisite notice, he still acquired a right to the use of the water when he actually diverted it to his land, and applied it to useful purposes. And this right was good, and must be sustained as against the defendant and all the world until a superior right is shown. But no superior right was shown by the defendant, or could be, without a compliance on her part with the provisions of the Code.

It results that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MCFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment because defendant, in her answer, claims the water in contest only as an appropriator. As to what the law would be between one claiming as a riparian owner against a mere appropriator who had not complied with the Code I express no opinion.

78 Cal. 273

McLENNAN v. McDONNELL. (No. 12,606.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 26, 1889.)

1. VENDOR AND VENDEE—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.
Plaintiff and C. purchased land, plaintiff being named as grantee in the deed, by direction of C., who had exclusive possession of the land until December 28, 1885. June 5, 1884, C., for a valuable consideration, deeded the land to plaintiff, but the deed was not recorded, and December 28, 1885, he deeded it to defendant. Plaintiff testified that in August, 1885, when defendant requested plaintiff to renew a mortgage for $700, which plaintiff owed defendant, the latter requested plaintiff to include the debt of C. to defendant, which plaintiff refused to do, saying that he had "bought C.'s interest, and could show it to him in black and white if he wanted it." Defendant admitted that such conversation took place. Held sufficient evidence to justify the court in finding that defendant had notice of plaintiff's deed.

2. DEED—VALIDITY—DELIVERY.
Plaintiff testified that the unrecorded deed was given him in his own house by C. the day it was made; that it was drawn by a third person, and plaintiff requested C. to sign it, which the latter did, and left it on the plaintiff's table, from which plaintiff picked it up and put it away. Held a sufficient delivery.

3. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF INTEREST—WORDS OF LIMITATION.
Under the granting clause in the deed of "all the right, title, and interest of the said party of the first part, the same being a one-half undivided interest in and to the following described property," the grantee takes all the right, title, and interest of the grantor, and the words "being a one-half undivided interest" are not words limiting the extent of the previous terms of conveyance, or excepting out any interest conveyed by the previous terms.

4. QUIETING TITLE—DECREE—CANCELLATION OF DEED.
In an action to quiet title the court found that the deed from C. to defendant was in fact a mortgage, and in the judgment it was ordered and decreed that said deed or mortgage "is as against the plaintiff null and void, and that the same be and is hereby canceled and made of none effect whatsoever as against said plaintiff." Held, as the court had found that defendant had notice of C.'s deed to plaintiff, it was immaterial whether C.'s deed to defendant was regarded as a conveyance of title or a mortgage, and defendant could not complain of the finding.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Action by John McLennan against Alexander McDonnell to quiet title. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

J. G. McCallum, for appellant. Robert Hardie, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Plaintiff and Campbell purchased the land in controversy from Baxter, who was then the owner thereof, on December 15, 1883. In the deed from Baxter, by direction of Campbell, plaintiff alone was named as grantee. It is admitted that plaintiff, under the deed, was trustee for Campbell to the extent of Campbell's interest. Campbell had exclusive possession of the land from the date last named until December 28, 1885. Plaintiff and Campbell were brothers-in-law, and plaintiff permitted the latter to occupy and cultivate the land at his own expense and risk, and for his own benefit, without rent. On the 5th day of June, 1884, Campbell made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff a grant, bargain, and sale deed of the land in controversy. The consideration named therein is the sum of $1,600, receipt whereof is acknowledged. This deed was neither acknowledged nor recorded. On December 28, 1885, Campbell made, executed, and delivered a warranty deed to defendant, purporting to convey all the land in controversy to the defendant. The consideration expressed therein is $1, but the real consideration was a prior indebtedness of $3,035, which Campbell then owed to the defendant.

The principal points in the case depend on questions of fact. The court found "that prior to the 29th day of December, 1885, and prior to the execution by Campbell to defendant of the alleged conveyance of said 29th day of December, 1885, the said defendant had full notice and actual knowledge of the fact that the said Campbell had for a valuable consideration transferred, sold, and conveyed to plaintiff all his (Campbell's) right, title, and interest in and to said land and premises, and every part thereof; that said notice was given by plaintiff to defendant subsequent to June 5, 1884." Appellant attacks this finding on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. We think this objection is not well taken. Plaintiff testified that he had a conversation with defendant in August, 1885, in which the defendant requested plaintiff to renew a mortgage securing payment of $700 from plaintiff to defendant, and also to include in the new mortgage Campbell's indebtedness to defendant. Continuing his testimony, plaintiff said: "I told him I could not stand that,—my property could not stand that, and I refused to do so. * * * He was telling me of Campbell's circumstances; * * * that he lent Campbell considerable money. * * * He was referring that I should help him out; * * * that I should take on Campbell's indebtedness. * * * I told him I would not do it. I told him how it was; that I bought Campbell's interest, and could show it to him in black and white, if he wanted it." There is something in the testimony of the defendant, too, which seems to corroborate this statement of the plaintiff. In the transcript of his testimony the following question and answer appear: "Question. Did not shortly after the agreement—not long after that agreement was made by which you—upon which you lent the $700—did you not meet Mr. McLennan, and want him to give a new mortgage, and include in it the indebtedness of Campbell to you, and he refused to do so, telling you that he owned the whole property? Answer. I think I did; yes, sir." Upon this testimony we think the court was justified in finding the fact of notice as quoted above. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the effect of the Baxter deed on the question as to how far it was constructive notice.

It is further claimed by appellant that there is no evidence to justify the finding of the court that the deed from Campbell to plaintiff was delivered to plaintiff. This contention is as weak as the first one. Plaintiff testified, when shown the deed referred to, that it was given to him in his own house by Campbell on the day it was made, (the 5th of June, 1884,) and that it had been in his possession ever since; that the deed was drawn up by Mr. Shaw; that plaintiff requested Campbell to sign it, which he did, and after some general conversation as to the transaction, in which Campbell stated that the land was then in plaintiff's possession, Campbell signed the deed, and left it lying on plaintiff's table, from which plaintiff picked it up and put it away. Aside from any presumptions arising from plaintiff's possession of the deed, this evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the court.

It is claimed that there is a conflict in the findings. It is said that the first finding, namely, "that the plaintiff was the owner of the entire property," is contradicted by finding 4, which shows that Campbell was the owner of 2637-4435 thereof. This contention is based upon the construction which appellant gives the granting clause of the deed from Campbell to plaintiff. It is claimed that under this deed plaintiff took only an undivided one-half of the land in controversy. The language of the deed is as follows: "Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $1,600, * * * by these presents does grant, bargain, and sell, convey, and confirm unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever, all the right, title, and interest of the party of the first part, the same being a one-half undivided interest in and to the following described real property," etc. This deed clearly conveys "all the right, title, and interest" of Campbell. The words "being a one-half undivided interest" are "not words limiting the extent of the previous terms of conveyance, or excepting out any interest conveyed by the previous terms." Dodge v. Walley, 22 Cal. 228; Wilcoxson v. Sprague, 51 Cal. 640.

The court found that the deed from Campbell to defendant of December 29, 1885, was in fact a mortgage, and in the judgment it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said deed or mortgage "is, as against the plaintiff, null and void, and that the same be, and is hereby, canceled and made of none effect whatsoever as against said plaintiff." It is claimed by appellant that the judgment should be at least "modified so that defendant's mortgage may not be canceled, and that he may not be enjoined from a hearing upon it as a mortgage or otherwise." But the court, having found that defendant had full notice, actual knowledge, of Campbell's deed to plaintiff, it is immaterial whether the deed from Campbell to defendant be regarded as a conveyance of title or as a mortgage. As between plaintiff and defendant the mortgage or conveyance is invalid, and can never be enforced by the defendant. He will be estopped by the judgment from claiming anything under it. The same result would follow from the judgment quieting title, if the court had not ordered the cancellation of the mortgage. Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 54; Estate of Pico, 56 Cal. 420; Parnell v. Hahn, 61 Cal. 131.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 278

WEYANT v. MURPHY. (No. 12,500.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 26, 1889.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—REDEMPTION.

Two tracts of land were sold by the mortgagor, the purchaser of each assuming a share of the debt. One tract was conveyed to plaintiff subject to mortgages. Defendant, the purchaser of the other, paid the amount he had assumed. In foreclosure against both, plaintiff's tract was decreed primarily liable, and was bid in by defendant, under a mistake of law, for less than the amount of the decree. By agreement with the receiver, confirmed by the court, he afterwards raised his bid to the amount of the decree. Held, that plaintiff could not redeem from him for any lesser sum.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, El Dorado county; JOHN W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

Complaint by S. D. Weyant against W. A. Murphy and C. W. Pierce, to redeem certain land from foreclosure sale. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

Freeman, Bates & Rankin, Grove L. Johnson, and Beatty, Denson & Oatman, for appellants. Clinton L. White and McKune & George, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The material facts of this case are as follows: One Segur, who was the owner of two tracts of land, which may be designated respectively as the "El Dorado Tract" and the "Sacramento Tract," mortgaged them both to Mrs. Alice Scott, to secure the payment of $16,000. Subsequently Segur sold and conveyed the El Dorado tract to certain parties for $8,000. Of this sum $1,000 only was paid in cash. The grantees agreed to pay the remaining $7,000 to Mrs. Scott on account of the principal of said mortgage, which agreement was expressed in the conveyance. Subsequently the grantees conveyed the property to other parties upon like terms, viz.: The second set of grantees paid the sum of $1,000 and assumed the payment of $7,000 of the principal of the Scott mortgage; and this agreement was expressed in the deed. This second set of grantees conveyed to the plaintiff by a deed which expressed a consideration of $1,000, and contained the following clause: "Subject to all mortgages now existing against said above-described land." Neither the plaintiff nor any of his grantors ever paid the $7,000 above mentioned, or any part thereof.

The Sacramento tract was sold and conveyed by Segur to the defendant for the sum of $18,000. Of this sum, half was paid down, and the defendant agreed to paid the remaining $9,000 to Mrs. Scott on account of the principal of her mortgage. This agreement was performed by the defendant. He paid Mrs. Scott the $9,000 with the accrued interest thereon, leaving due to her the $7,000, and accrued interest thereon, which had been assumed by the plaintiff's grantors.

In this condition of affairs Mrs. Scott commenced a suit to foreclose her mortgage for the balance due to her, joining both the parties here as defendants in such suit, and in due course a decree of foreclosure was entered adjudging that there was due to the plaintiff in said foreclosure suit the sum of $8,756.54, and decreeing that the two tracts be sold to satisfy the same, by a receiver, who had been appointed by the court. But in view of the fact that the defendant here had paid such portion of the common burden as he had agreed to pay, and that the grantors of the plaintiff had not paid the portion which they had agreed to pay, and subject to which the plaintiff took his tract, the court in the foreclosure suit very properly decreed that the El Dorado tract be sold first. This was an adjudication that the burden of the Scott mortgage should rest primarily upon the tract of the plaintiff here.

As a matter of course, it was important to the defendant to see that the full amount of the judgment was bid upon this tract. But by a stupid blunder he did not bid that amount, but only the sum of $2,500, for which sum the property was struck off to him. Within a few days he was informed of the mistake he had made, and he then applied to the receiver for leave to increase his bid. This the receiver allowed him to do, and reported the sale to the court as for the amount of the increased bid, and the court confirmed the same. The defendant thereupon paid the full amount of the increased bid, viz., the sum of $8,756.54. We think that the evidence shows without substantial conflict that this sum was paid by the defendant here, and received by the receiver as and for the purchase price of the El Dorado tract, and not, as found by the court, as "a voluntary payment, not in pursuance of his bid, but to prevent a sale of the balance of said land."

The plaintiff tendered to the defendant the $2,500, for which the property was struck off at the auction sale, with the necessary percentage, etc.; and, this being refused, he brings the present action to be allowed to redeem for the sum as tendered. The value of the El Dorado tract is shown to be seven or eight thousand dollars.

It will be observed that the defendant had a perfect right to bid in the first instance the sum to which he increased his bid, and which he afterwards paid for the property. His not doing so was the result of a mistake of law on his part, and we think his subsequent action and that of the receiver was in perfect good faith, and not with any fraudulent intent whatever, but simply to rectify the mistake, and to do what he had a perfect right to do in the first instance. If the mistake had not been corrected by the parties, the result would be to relieve the plaintiff's property of the burden which was put upon it primarily by the decree of foreclosure, and to cast the same upon the defendant. The plaintiff appeals to a court of equity to assist him to profit by the defendant's mistake. We think the court should not lend its aid for any such purpose. He is entitled to redeem the property. But as a condition of this relief the court will require him to assume the burden which was properly placed upon him by the decree of foreclosure; that is to say, as a condition of relief, he will be required to pay to defendant, in addition to the amount placed in bank to the credit of defendant, the difference between the sum which he tendered and deposited and the amount due under the decree of foreclosure. It is immaterial that the plaintiff is not legally liable to the defendant for this difference. In imposing a condition a court of equity is not bound down to the strict legal rights of the parties, but will take into consideration all the circumstances, in order to arrive at the justice of the case. Johnston v. Savings Union, 16 Pac. Rep. 753.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

78 Cal. 283

HAUSMAN v. HAUSLING. (No. 12,785.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 26, 1889.)

EVIDENCE—SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS—INADMISSIBILITY.

In an action to compel defendant to convey to plaintiff an interest in a mining claim which defendant had bought under foreclosure of his lien on said claim, plaintiff's evidence was that defendant had agreed to buy an interest in the claim, and a deed of such interest had been given by plaintiff to defendant, and that the latter had tried to borrow money on it. Defendant testified that the deed was given as a further security for a debt due him, and the court found that the deed was made to enable defendant to borrow money on the mine to pay his judgment enforcing his lien against the mine. Letters from defendant to a third person were introduced to explain why he attempted to mortgage the claim. Held, that their admission was prejudicial error, as under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1870, subd. 2, a party cannot strengthen his case by his own declarations. They may be used against him, but not for him.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

Bill in equity by Frederick H. Hausman against Ferdinand M. Hausling, to compel the defendant to convey to plaintiff an undivided nine-tenths part or interest in a mining claim. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. A former action was brought by Hausling against Hausman to foreclose a laborer's lien, and the property was sold under the decree therein entered, Hausling becoming the purchaser. The decree was affirmed on appeal. For former opinion, see 14 Pac. Rep. 856.

Otto Tum Suden and W. B. Lardner, for appellants. J. M. Fulweiler and C. A. & F. P. Tuttle, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is a suit in equity to compel the defendant to convey to plaintiff an undivided nine-tenths part of an interest in a certain mining claim, situate in Placer county. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and denied a motion for new trial, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment and order.

The facts of the case, as shown by the pleadings, are substantially the same as those set forth in the affidavits which were under review in Hausling v. Hausman, 73 Cal. 276, 14 Pac. Rep. 856. It need only be added that defendant, by his answer, denied that he ever agreed to purchase from the plaintiff a one-tenth interest in the mining claim, or ever became liable to pay any part of the losses resulting from working the claim, or that the deed from plaintiff to him was made upon the terms and conditions stated in the complaint, and he alleged that the deed was made "to prevent other creditors from attaching plaintiff's property, and as a further security upon said indebtedness of $1,425 due as aforesaid to defendant from plaintiff." At the trial the plaintiff was a witness and testified to all the facts as alleged in his complaint. He also called three other witnesses, and each of them testified that in the fall of 1885 defendant several times told witness he owned a one-tenth part or share in the mine, and, further, that in the spring or early summer of 1886 defendant had said that he had a deed to the mine from plaintiff, and wished to borrow $1,400, and secure the payment thereof by a mortgage on the mine, and would pay $50 commission to any one who would help him to do so. In defense the defendant's deposition was read in evidence, and in it he stated the facts to be as alleged in his answer, and, among other things, that "the deed of the property was given to me as a further security. * * * I never at any time claimed to be the owner of the property by virtue of the deed made to me by Hausman, but always considered the same as security for the payment of the $1,425 sued for by me, and so always told Hausman." Counsel then offered in evidence two letters written by defendant in April, 1886, "solely as explaining why the defendant had sought to mortgage the claim, as testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, and as explanatory of the deed defendant held of the mine." Counsel for plaintiff objected to the letters on the ground that they were incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, but the court overruled their objections, and admitted them in evidence. One of the letters reads as follows: "SAN FRANCISCO, April 25, 1886.

"John M. Fulweiler, Auburn, Cal.—DEAR SIR: If you can find me a party in Auburn, or any place, who will take a mortgage on the 31 property for the amount of my claim, ($1,425,) I will pay you $50 for doing so. I am anxious to leave here as soon as possible. Address me and send all papers to care of M. Koenig, No. 1527 Dupont street, San Francisco.

"Respectfully yours, F. M. HAUSLING."

The other letter was dated April 12th, and addressed to the same party. Among other things it says: "A deed has been sent up for record of all Hausman's rights, title, and interest to me, and as it is the wish of those interested to stop all further proceeding, I want the case of Luce et al. dismissed, so as to avoid any further expense. Concerning my suit, you will take no further steps whatever. Let it stand in statu quo." The court found that the defendant never at any time made the contract alleged in the complaint to purchase one-tenth, or any part, of the mine, and as to the deed which he received from the plaintiff as follows: "(8) The deed mentioned in paragraph eleventh of the complaint was made for the purpose of enabling the defendant to borrow money on the mine to pay his judgment enforcing a lien on the mine, but he was unable to do so, and enforced said judgment by a sale of the mine on execution."

It is entirely clear that the letters were not admissible in evidence, and that the objection to them should have been sustained. A litigant is not permitted to strengthen his case by his own declarations, whether written or verbal. They may be used against him, but not for him. Code Civil Proc. § 1870, subd. 2. Nor can we say that the error was harmless, as claimed for respondent. All errors are presumed to work injury to the party against whom they are committed, unless it clearly appears that no injury could have resulted. This does not appear. On the contrary, the finding as to the deed, of which the letters were intended to be "explanatory," seems not to be in accord with the averment of the answer or the testimony of the defendant, or any other testimony found in the record. It must therefore have been based upon the letters, and without them a different conclusion, so far as we can see, might have been reached.

The other points do not require extended notice. We think the findings sufficiently covered the issues presented, and that there was no error in refusing to strike out a part of defendant's deposition.

We advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

78 Cal. 270

HOWES v. ABBOTT, Auditor. (No. 12,880.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 26, 1889.)

COUNTIES—COMPENSATION OF COUNTY SUPERVISORS—MILEAGE.

The California county government act (St. 1883, p. 299) provides that in counties of the thirty-third class supervisors shall receive $5 per diem and 10 cents per mile in traveling to and from their respective residences to the county seat. Held, that during the sessions of the board the supervisors officially reside at the county seat and are not entitled to mileage each day, but only to one mileage each way for the session.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Application by W. L. Howes for a writ of mandate to Eugene Abbott, auditor of Tuolumne county, to draw a warrant in favor of petitioner for certain fees and mileage earned by him as supervisor of said county. The writ was refused, and petitioner appeals.

F. D. Nichol and G. W. Nichol, for appellant. F. P. Otis and E. A. Rodgers, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. Application for a writ of mandate. The court below refused to grant the writ, and thereupon this appeal was taken.

The facts are these: The appellant, Howes, was a supervisor, and the respondent, Abbott, was the auditor of the county of Tuolumne during the year 1887. The board of supervisors of the county held a special session, lasting two days, in June, and a regular session, lasting eight days, in July of that year. The appellant attended each meeting of the board, and in doing so traveled from his residence to the place of meeting and back, a distance of 12 miles, each day. He claimed as compensation for his attendance $5 per day, making $50, and mileage at the rate of 10 cents per mile, for the aggregate number of miles traveled by him in going to and from the meetings, making $12. A claim for this compensation was allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors, and thereupon he presented a claim to the respondent and demanded a warrant therefor on the county treasurer. The respondent offered to draw a warrant on the treasurer for the $50, and one mileage for the special and one for the regular session, making in all $52.40, but refused to draw for the balance of the mileage. The appellant declined to accept the sum offered, and thereupon commenced this proceeding to compel respondent to draw his warrant for the full amount claimed by him and allowed by the board. Upon these facts the court found, as a conclusion of law, that appellant was entitled to receive only one mileage at each session of the board, and for that reason the writ was denied.

Whether the court was right in its conclusion or not must be determined by the statute commonly known as the "County Government Act." St. 1883, p. 299. By that act the counties of the state are divided into 48 classes, and separate provision is made for the payment of supervisors in each class. The provision for counties of the thirty-third class—in which Tuolumne falls—is as follows: "Supervisors shall receive five dollars per diem and ten cents per mile in traveling to and from their respective residences to the county-seat. All of which compensation in the aggregate shall not exceed four hundred dollars per annum each."

The whole compensation claimed by appellant, together with that already received by him during that year, did not amount to $400; and it is argued that as the provision contains no express restriction to one mileage for each session, it should be construed to allow mileage for each day. We do not think this construction authorized. Statutes should be so construed, if possible, as to express the intention of the legislature. The term "mileage" is defined to mean "a compensation allowed by law to officers for their trouble and expenses in traveling on public business." Bouv. Law Dict.

The law requires a supervisor to attend all regular and special sessions of the board, and to be present and assist the other members in transacting such business as lawfully comes before them. And while engaged in the performance of these duties his official residence is at the county seat. In going to a place of meeting at the beginning of a session, and in returning to his home at the end of it, he is evidently "traveling on public business." But, if during a session he makes daily visits to his home, such visits must be deemed to have been made for his own convenience, comfort, or economy, or to attend to his own private affairs, and not on public business.

Legislators are allowed $8 per day, during the session of the legislature, "and 10 cents per mile for each mile of travel to and from their residences and the place of holding the session." Pol. Code, § 266. But if a legislator should go to his home every night and back every morning, during a session of the legislature, no one would expect him to claim mileage for each day, or, if he should claim it, that it would be allowed.

In our opinion the legislature did not intend to allow supervisors, in counties of the thirty-third class, more than one mileage for each session of the board, and the fact that no express provision to that effect is found in the statute cannot aid the appellant. The argument based upon the fact that the compensation of supervisors in some of the classes is expressly limited to one mileage for each session is without weight. An inspection of the statute will show that in the 48 different provisions for the compensation of supervisors scarcely any two of them are exactly alike. They appear to be independent provisions, drawn to meet supposed local wants, and as such we think they should be construed.

We advise, therefore, that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

74 Cal. 273

ROYLANCE et al. v. SAN LUIS HOTEL CO. et al. (No. 12,000.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—REQUISITES—NOTICE—SERVICE.
   Plaintiffs recovered a judgment against certain of the defendants, and it was adjudged that "they take nothing against the defendant * * * company, and that their complaint, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, is hereby dismissed," etc., and "that the defendant * * * company, do * * * recover from * * * plaintiffs its costs," etc. Plaintiffs then served upon that defendant the following notice: "Plaintiffs * * * appeal from the judgment * * * dismissing said action as to the defendant * * * company and for recovery by said * * * defendant from plaintiffs * * * costs of * * * action. The plaintiffs appeal from the whole of said judgment, and from every part thereof." Held, to include only an appeal from that part of the judgment dismissing the complaint, and for the recovery of costs against the plaintiffs, and the appeal should not be dismissed for failure to serve notice of appeal upon the other defendants.
2. MECHANIC'S LIEN—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—FILING CLAIM BEFORE COMPLETION OF BUILDING.
   Section 1187, Code Civil Proc. Cal., regulating mechanics' liens, provides that "every original contractor, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor, * * * must, within thirty days after the completion of any building, * * * file for record * * * a statement," etc. Held, that a claim of lien filed before the completion of the building was premature, and could not be enforced.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

This action is to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Appellants, plaintiffs, were material-men, and furnished material to be used in the construction of the hotel of the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company. These materials were furnished directly to the defendants, who were doing work in the hotel for the original contractors. The complaint showed that the claim of lien was filed before the completion of the building. The following is the judgment of the court below: "This cause coming on regularly to be tried, * * * the court, having heard and considered the allegations and evidence of the respective parties, did * * * make and file its findings of fact and conclusions of law herein, and ordered judgment to be entered herein, that the plaintiffs take nothing herein against the defendant San Luis Hotel Company, and that the plaintiffs' complaint, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, be dismissed, and that the said hotel company, defendant, have judgment against the plaintiffs for costs, and that the plaintiffs do have and recover from John D. Armstrong and William Armstrong, partners as Armstrong Bros., the sum of," etc. "Wherefore * * * it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiffs take nothing against the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company, and that the plaintiffs' complaint herein, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed out of this court; and it is further ordered and adjudged that the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Co., do have and recover of and from the plaintiff its costs and disbursements herein, now taxed at $20.25."

The following is the notice of appeal: "You will please take notice that the plaintiffs Joseph Roylance, Robert Dalziel, and Frederick Delger, partners under the firm name and style of San Francisco Brass-Works, hereby appeal * * * from the judgment * * * filed and entered in the said superior court on the 21st day of January, 1886, * * * dismissing said action as to the defendant San Luis Hotel Company, and for recovery by said last-named defendant from the plaintiffs of twenty dollars and twenty-five cents ($20.25) costs of said action. The plaintiffs appeal from the whole of said judgment and from every part thereof."

William R. Davis and Wm. Shipsey, (Wm. Lair Hill, of counsel,) for appellants. McD. R. Venable and C. W. Goodchild, (Metcalf & Metcalf and F. B. Odgen, of counsel,) for respondents.

FOOTE, C. As it appears to us, the notice of appeal in this action was intended to embrace only that part of the judgment of the court below which affected the plaintiffs in adjudging that "they take nothing against the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company, and that their complaint, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed out of this court," and "that the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company, do have and recover from the plaintiff its costs and disbursements, now taxed at $20.25." It was not intended to include in the notice any appeal from that portion of the judgment where the plaintiff recovered a personal judgment against Armstrong Bros., for a sum of money. Taking all the terms of the notice of appeal together, it seems to us that the words "said judgment," where they occur in the last clause of the notice, refer not to the whole judgment as rendered by the court, but to that part of it which is set out in the language of the notice preceding the last clause thereof, which language, fairly interpreted, includes only that part of the judgment which affects the hotel company and the plaintiff, but does not include that portion which affects the rights of Armstrong Bros. Therefore the appeal, as taken, should be entertained notwithstanding that the counsel for Armstrong Bros. were not served with notice of the appeal.

But the complaint does not show that the plaintiffs are entitled to enforce any mechanic's lien upon the building of the hotel company; for as alleged in the complaint, the claim of lien was filed on the 13th of October, 1884, and the building was not completed until after that date. Hence, from that pleading itself, it appears that the plaintiffs prematurely filed their claim of lien, and according to their allegations could not enforce it. In Perry v. Brainard, 8 Pac. Rep. 882, it was said:

"The court below found that the lien which was sought to be enforced by the action was filed prior to the completion of the building, and was therefore prematurely filed. The statute reads: 'Every original contractor, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, must, within thirty days after the completion of any building, improvement, or structure, or after the completion of the alteration or repair thereof, or the performance of any labor in a mining claim, file for record,' etc. Code Civil Proc. § 1187. It will be seen that the time prescribed by the statute for the filing of the plaintiff's claim was 'within thirty days after the completion of the building.' Under a similar statute, the supreme court of Kansas lately held in two cases —Davis v. Bullard, 4 Pac. Rep. 75, and Seaton v. Chamberlain, Id. 89— that a claim so filed was premature, and a lien based thereon could not be enforced. The reasoning of that court commends itself to our judgment, and is much the same as was used here in Dingley v. Greene, 54 Cal. 335: 'No privity of contract,' said the court, in Davis v. Bullard, 'exists between the owner of the building and the subcontractor; but the subcontractor's rights are based simply and solely upon his contract made with the contractor. The contractor, and not the owner of the building, is the subcontractor's debtor, and the subcontractor has no right to claim that the building has been completed until the contractor under whom he claims has such right. Under the contract between the owner and the contractor, the owner agrees to pay the contractor a certain sum for constructing the building, and this sum is a fund which may be held under the statutes for the payment, so far as it will go, of all the claims of all the various subcontractors, for work and materials furnished by them to the contractor, who is the principal and head of all; and all the parties entitled to payment or contribution out of this fund should be able to reach the fund, and get their proportionate shares thereof at the same time or within the same period of time. Besides, one subcontractor ought not to be able to reach this fund and appropriate it to the extent of his claim before another subcontractor could reach it; for if the fund should not be sufficient to pay the claims of all the subcontractors, then each subcontractor should be paid only a proportionate share thereof. Now, the amount of all the claims of all the subcontractors can be ascertained only after all the work and materials have been furnished, and after the building has been completed, so far as the contractor is required to complete the same; for the whole of the work may in fact be done by subcontractors only, or the last item of work performed, or materials furnished, may be performed or furnished by a subcontractor. The building, in such a case, would be completed by a subcontractor; and the subcontractor completing the building, or furnishing the last item of work or material therefor, is entitled to his proportionate share of the general fund equally with the subcontractor who furnished the first item of work or material, or any intermediate portion thereof. Of course, when the contractor has furnished, through himself or his subcontractors, all the work and material which he has agreed to furnish, then the building is completed so far as he is concerned, and is also completed so far as all the subcontractors under him are concerned; and the contractor and each of the subcontractors may then file their respective statements for liens, and each will then become entitled to his proportionate share of the fund.'

"Other provisions of our statute go to show that this is the true construction of section 1187. Section 1190 declares that 'no lien provided for in this chapter binds any building, mining claim, improvement, or structure, for a longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time to enforce the same; or, if a credit be given, then ninety days after the expiration of such credit; but no lien continues in force for a longer time than two years from the time the work is completed, by any agreement to give credit.' It is obvious that if a subcontractor may file his claim before the completion of the building at all, it may very well happen that the building may not be completed until more than ninety days after the claim is filed; and since section 1190 of the Code provides that no lien shall be binding for a longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time to enforce the same, it follows that under such a construction of section 1187 a suit might be maintained to enforce the lien of a subcontractor before the completion of the original contract. This would not only be to give one subcontractor a preference over another not allowed by the statute, but might subject the owner to suit, and possibly his property to sale, although strictly conforming to his contract. In further harmony with the conclusion that section 1187 fixes a common starting-point for all subcontractors under the same original contractor, is section 1195, which provides that 'any number of persons claiming liens may join in the same action, and when separate actions are commenced the court may consolidate them.' The danger suggested by appellants' counsel to subcontractors in thus holding is not perceived, for the owner who pays to the original contractor with notice that the subcontractor has not been paid will be liable to the lien of the latter, and it is an easy matter for the subcontractor to acquaint the owner with such fact."

Although the views there enunciated are not binding as authority on the point, because of the fact that a rehearing was granted by the court in bank, and the cause was compromised, and the appeal dismissed before it was finally determined, yet the reasoning is sound, and the authorities quoted in point, and, as we think, conclusive; wherefore the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

BELCHER, C. C., and HAYNE, C., concurred.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 307

In re TYLER. (No. 11,422.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1889.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—MISCONDUCT—DISBARMENT—JUDGMENT.

In a proceeding before the supreme court of California to disbar respondent as an attorney, under Code Civil Proc. § 287 et seq., the court rendered judgment of disbarment for two years, and until a judgment obtained by a third person for money collected by said attorney should be paid. It was conceded that the court might have disbarred the respondent permanently. Held, that the punishment inflicted was within the jurisdiction of the court, and was not void for uncertainty.

In bank.

Application by George W. Tyler to have part of the judgment disbarring him from practice as an attorney at law stricken out. For previous proceedings, see 12 Pac. Rep. 289.

Sol. Heydenfeldt, for applicant. Edward R. Taylor, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Proceedings were instituted in this court to disbar the respondent, which resulted in a judgment depriving him of the right to practice as attorney or counselor in any or all of the courts of this state, and that he be suspended from the practice for the period of two years from the date of the judgment, "and until the judgment in favor of J. M. Hogan, against the said respondent, mentioned and described in the accusation, shall be fully satisfied and paid, if the same shall not have been satisfied during such period of two years." The facts upon which this judgment was rendered will be found in 71 Cal. 353, 12 Pac. Rep. 289.

The respondent in that proceeding now moves this court to strike out so much of the judgment as suspends him from the practice until the payment of the Hogan judgment, the two years for which he was suspended having expired. The motion is not based upon any new or additional facts, nor is it claimed that the judgment referred to has been paid in whole or in part, or any excuse shown for not having paid the same. The sole ground upon which relief is sought is that this court had no power or jurisdiction to make an order suspending him for what is claimed to be an indefinite time.

The section of the Code upon which the judgment is based is as follows: "Upon conviction, in cases arising under the first subdivision of section 287, the judgment of the court must be that the name of the party shall be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors of the court, and that he be precluded from practicing as such attorney or counselor in all the courts of this state; and, upon conviction in cases under the other subdivisions of that section, the judgment of the court may be according to the gravity of the offense charged,—deprivation of the right to practice as attorney or counselor in the courts of this state permanently or for limited period." Code Civil Proc. § 299. The point made is that under this section the court could deprive him of the right to practice permanently, or for a limited period; that a limited period means a fixed and determinate period; and that the judgment rendered, being for an uncertain time, depending upon the happening of an uncertain event, was not within the power conferred by the section, and is void.

It is conceded that the court might have disbarred the respondent permanently. The accusation made against him was sufficient to warrant such an extreme punishment. In a petition to this court, during the pendency of the original proceeding, asking that the same be set for hearing, the respondent says: "Your petitioner respectfully represents that nearly three months ago there was filed in said court an accusation in writing, prepared by one E. S. Pillsbury, and signed and sworn to by one J. M. Hogan, charging me with acts that, if true, ought not only to deprive me of the privilege of practicing law in any court, but ought to relegate me to the occupation of a felon's cell." This court, upon a full and careful investigation, found the accusation to be true, and might consistently have meted out to him the punishment so rashly approved by him in advance. Therefore we see nothing in this case calling for clemency. It resolves itself into a pure question of jurisdiction in this court to render such a judgment. Upon this question we entertain no doubt. The court might have deprived him permanently of the right to practice. It did so, subject to the right of the accused to relieve himself from its effect, by making restitution of the money illegally withheld by him. In some of the states it is expressly provided by statute that where an attorney has refused, on demand, to pay over money collected by him, he may, on motion of the party aggrieved, be required to do so by an order of the court, and, upon failure, may be suspended for any length of time, in the discretion of the court. In others, the right of the courts to proceed in this summary manner, without statutory authority, is recognized and upheld by the decided cases. Forstman v. Schulting, 15 N. E. Rep. 366; In re Paschal, 10 Wall. 491; Petition of Fincke, 6 Daly, 111, 116; Bank v. Todd, 52 N. Y. 489; Kuhne v. Daily, 23 Hun, 282; In re Mertian, 29 Hun, 459; Anon., 2 Cow. 589. See, as sustaining a judgment in effect the same as the one rendered here, Slemmer v. Wright, 54 Iowa, 164, 6 N. W. Rep. 181. See, also, as bearing upon the question, Weeks, Attys. § 81, and cases cited.

This court having the power to deprive the respondent permanently of the right to practice in the courts of this state, the punishment inflicted here was within its jurisdiction. It was not void for uncertainty. If, instead of a motion to strike out a part of the judgment, the respondent had made a showing that he had paid the judgment mentioned therein in full, and moved for an order reinstating him as an attorney, the order could have been made; but we see no reason, as the case is presented to us, for modifying the judgment.

Motion denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 152

WISE et al. v. GRIFFITH et ux. (No. 11,040.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 25, 1889.)

1. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—PARTIES—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.
   A purchaser at sheriff's sale, under a judgment pending foreclosure of a senior mortgage, is not a necessary party to the foreclosure, and, when joined by an amended complaint, cannot set up a limitation which had not run when the original complaint was filed.
2. SAME—PURCHASER PENDENTE LITE.
   As against such purchaser, it is proper to show that on the day of the sale he was personally informed of the pendency of the suit.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES A. WAYMIRE, Judge.

Action by John H. Wise and Thomas Denigan against George Griffith and Mary, his wife, to foreclose a mortgage on three parcels of land, one of them defendants' homestead. The mortgage was executed March 1, 1876. On August 17, 1877, Henry Heuston obtained a judgment against George Griffith. This action was begun January 9, 1878, Heuston not being made a party. November 26, 1878, the two parcels of land on which the judgment was a lien were sold on execution to Heuston, who received a sheriff's deed, June 3, 1879, and recorded it June 6, 1879. Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint, July 15, 1880, making Heuston a defendant, to which the latter pleaded the statute of limitations, (Code Civil Proc. § 337, setting a period of four years to actions on contracts founded on an instrument in writing; and section 343, prescribing the same time for actions for relief not otherwise provided for.) Defendant Heuston excepted to the court's action in overruling the following question addressed to the witness Maurice Casey: "Question. Did you on the day of the sheriff's sale, in Heuston v. Griffith, give personal notice to the defendant Henry Heuston of the pendency of the action, Wise et al. v. Griffith, to foreclose a mortgage of the plaintiffs herein upon the property about to be sold by the sheriff?" Judgment for plaintiffs against all the defendants. Defendant Heuston appeals.

R. Percy Wright, for appellant. Edward P. Cole, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. We find no error in this record. The evidence of Casey was properly admitted. Defendant Heuston became a purchaser of the mortgaged property pendente lite, with actual notice of the pendency of this action to foreclose the mortgage made by the defendants Griffith and wife. We cannot see how the plaintiffs' action against Heuston is barred. He never was a necessary party to the action, but, as purchaser with actual notice of the pendency of plaintiffs' action to foreclose, he would have been bound by the decree against the Griffiths.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 268

CLANTON v. RUFFNER et al. (No. 12,431.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 25, 1889.)

VENUE IN CIVIL CASES—CHANGE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

A motion for change of venue, based on the convenience of necessary witnesses, is addressed to the discretion of the court, and, when no abuse is shown, its decision will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; C H. GAROUTTE, Judge.

Henly & Oates and R. Clark, for appellant. Geo. P. Harding and F. S. Sprague, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced in the superior court of Sonoma county to recover damages for an alleged libel, printed and published by defendants in Yolo county. The defendants demurred to the complaint and in due time and proper form demanded that the place of trial be changed to Yolo county, on the ground that they were residents of that county. The motion was granted, and the case transferred, and thereafter defendants filed their answer. The plaintiff then moved that the place of trial be changed back to Sonoma county, on the ground that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. When this motion came on to be heard affidavits were presented and read. In the plaintiff's affidavit it was said that there were 28 material and necessary witnesses whom he wished to call and examine at the trial, and that all of them resided in Sonoma county. In the defendants' affidavit it was said that there were 44 material and necessary witnesses whom they wished to call and examine at the trial, and that all of them resided in Yolo county. The motion was denied, and the plaintiff appealed from the order.

It is admitted by counsel for appellant that the application was addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court below, and that the order cannot be reversed unless there was an abuse of that discretion. It is claimed, however, that in this case there was an abuse of discretion. It is contended by each party that many of the witnesses named on the other side were not necessary ones, and this would seem to be so. But, whether so or not, "the mere preponderance in the number of witnesses on the one side or the other is not necessarily decisive of the application." Hanchett v. Finch, 47 Cal. 192. The court was called upon to decide the matter in view of all the facts and circumstances presented, and, after carefully reading the affidavits, we are unable to say that it did not exercise its judgment fairly, impartially, and properly. Certainly we can see no such abuse of discretion as would justify a reversal, and we therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

(78 Cal. 289)

SMITH v. LOS ANGELES I. & L. CO-OP. ASS'N. (No. 12,396.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 27, 1889.)

1. CORPORATIONS—POWER OF DIRECTORS.
   A director of a corporation is disqualified to vote, at a meeting of the board of directors, upon a resolution authorizing the renewal of notes in his own favor.
2. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—NOTES OF CORPORATIONS.
   When a note of a corporation appears on its face to have been executed by its president in his own favor, it is sufficient to charge his assignee with notice of any want of authority to execute it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WILLIAM A. CHENEY, Judge.

Smith & Patton and F. H. Howard, for appellant. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a suit on a promissory note purporting to have been executed by one Garey, president of the corporation defendant, in his own favor, and assigned after maturity to the plaintiff. Conceding, for the purpose of this decision, that the sum for which the note was given was honestly due from the corporation to its president, the note was, nevertheless, invalid, unless authorized or ratified by the directors. The judgment of the superior court in favor of plaintiff rests upon a finding that the execution of the note was duly authorized. But the evidence shows that the only authority to execute it was the following resolution: That "all notes held by T. A. Garey, and also by H. J. Crow, be renewed, and 2 per cent. interest per month be allowed." There were seven directors of the corporation, and only four—a bare quorum, two of whom were Garey and Crow—were present at the meeting at which the above resolution was attempted to be passed. It was essential to its adoption that a majority of the quorum should vote for it, (Civil Code, § 308,) and clearly there could not have been such majority unless the vote of Garey or Crow was counted in the affirmative. Garey testifies that he did not vote at all upon the resolution, and respondent contends that so far as it concerned the renewal of Garey's notes Crow was competent to act. But we cannot assent to this proposition. He was, we think, disqualified by his direct interest in the passage of that inseparable part of the resolution which authorized the renewal of his own notes. We feel constrained to hold that the finding of an original authority to execute the note sued on is unsupported by the evidence.

As to the claim that the judgment of the superior court may be upheld on the ground that the corporation subsequently ratified the execution of the note, we can only say that upon this point the evidence is conflicting, and, as the superior court has made no finding, we cannot supply one. The fact that the note appeared upon its face to have been executed by Garey on behalf of the corporation was sufficient to charge his assignee with notice of any want of authority to execute it. Wilbur v. Lynde, 49 Cal. 290. For these reasons it will be necessary to remand the cause for a new trial, and as the question will necessarily arise in any future trial as to the effect of the judgment pleaded by defendant as an estoppel, we will add that in our opinion the superior court did not err in holding that the plea of estoppel was not sustained by the judgment and findings offered in evidence.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

---

78 Cal. 287

WOOD v. PENDOLA. (No. 12,618.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 26, 1889.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where there are findings sufficient to sustain the judgment, the court, on appeal heard on the judgment roll, will not examine into probative facts contained in the findings where there is nothing to show that the latter are entirely based on or controlled by them.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Action by Marinda Wood against Lorenzo Pendola. Defendant appeals.

Frank W. Street and Ira Hill Reed, for appellant. Reddick & Solinsky, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The appeal from the order denying a new trial has been dismissed. 19 Pac. Rep. 183. The case is before us now to be heard only on the judgment roll. The action is to restrain defendant from obstructing the flow of the waters of Coyote creek into plaintiff's ditch, to the extent of 40 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure. Plaintiff claims to be the owner of a certain ditch, known as the "Stranahan" or "El Dorado" ditch, and a certain water-right. She charges defendant with having diverted and turned all the waters of the creek into ditches owned by the defendant, thereby preventing the same from reaching her ditch. The pleadings present four issues: First, as to the ownership of the ditch referred to above, and the water-right appurtenant thereto; second, whether this water-right is owned by the plaintiff or defendant,—whether plaintiff's right is prior to the water-rights claimed by defendant; third, whether the Stranahan ditch, or water-right, has ever been abandoned; and, fourth, whether there have been acts of diversion, as claimed by plaintiff. Upon all of these issues the court below found the facts and determined the questions in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment went accordingly. Appellant claims that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, but this contention is not sustained by the record.

1. The court found "that at the time of the commencement of this action the said plaintiff was for a long time prior thereto, and had been, and now is, the owner of the Stranahan ditch and the water-right belonging thereto."

2. Upon the second issue the court found as an ultimate fact that the water-right referred to in the above finding, and owned by the plaintiff, was "the first right to the waters of Coyote creek, to the extent of seventy inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure." A jury was called in to advise the court upon some of the issues. There was submitted to the jury the following question: "Has any person a prior right to the waters of Coyote creek to plaintiff, Marinda Wood?" To this question the jury answered, "No," and the court adopted the finding.

3. There was submitted to the jury the question whether any portion of the original water-right belonging to the Stranahan ditch had ever been lost or abandoned by plaintiff, or any of her predecessors. The jury answered that it had not been, and this finding was also adopted by the court.

4. The acts of trespass charged by plaintiff against defendant were not denied in the answer, defendant relying upon a denial that the acts charged were wrongful or unlawful. He claimed the right to divert and use all the waters of Coyote creek. The first three findings, therefore, dispose of the contention made upon the fourth issue.

There are a great many probative facts among the findings, but the ultimate facts, as found, are as we have stated them, and there is nothing to show that the ultimate facts are entirely based upon the probative facts, or in any way controlled by them. We cannot look into the evidence to see the significance of the probative facts found by the court, and, as they appear in the record, they throw no light upon the main issues, and, as stated before, in no way limit the effect of the ultimate facts found. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

---

78 Cal. 293

In re ALLEN. (No. 12,237.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. February 27, 1889.)

HOMESTEAD—EXTENT—PORTION USED FOR BUSINESS PURPOSES.

Where part of a tract of land described in a declaration of homestead is actually appropriated for family use by the declarant, but the remaining portion is used principally for the business of general blacksmithing and wagon building, carried on in a building located thereon, such latter portion forms no part of the homestead claim.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON D. FREER, Judge.

F. C. Lusk, for appellant. Park Henshaw, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment setting apart a homestead under the insolvency laws, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The declaration of homestead covered lots 4 and 5 of block 39 of the town of Chico. These two lots adjoined each other, and were together under the value of $5,000. The family dwelling was upon lot 5, and the outhouses, chicken-yard, etc., covered the rear portion of lot 4. It is conceded that the homestead was valid as to lot 5, and as to the above-mentioned portion of lot 4. But it is contended that the front portion of lot 4—about 89 feet in depth—was used for business purposes, and that there was no actual residence thereon. Upon this 89 feet there was a two-story building. In relation to this the findings (which are full of matter of mere evidence) contain the following statement: "Ever since the erection of the building it has been used principally for business purposes, to-wit, general blacksmithing, wagon building, and repairing, painting, and varnishing wagons," and the balance of the 89 feet was used in connection with said business. In preparing the opinion adopted by the department we overlooked this finding, and we think it makes a difference in the result. In the case of Maloney v. Hefer, 17 Pac. Rep. 539, which was under consideration on rehearing at the time our former opinion was rendered, the court in bank, per SEARLS, C. J., said: "It is the principal use to which the property is put, and not quantity, which furnishes the test in determining the question whether or not property is subject to dedication as a homestead. Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 182; Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220. And if only a part of the land described in the homestead declaration be actually used and appropriated as the home of the family, the remainder not so used and appropriated forms no part of the homestead claim in the sense of the statute." Upon the authority of this decision, we think the judgment in the case before us must be reversed. We do not think, however, that final judgment can be ordered in favor of the appellant, because the finding above mentioned is in direct contradiction of the sixth and eighth findings. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

---

[1] Reversing 16 Pac. Rep. 319.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

---

78 Cal. 296

WHITTAKER v. PENDOLA. (No. 12,795.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 28, 1889.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—HOMESTEAD ENTRY—POSSESSION OF TRESPASSER.
A mere trespasser on the public lands of the United States, with an inclosure erected and maintained contrary to the express provisions of act Cong. Feb. 25, 1885, cannot by such occupany prevent a homestead entry of the land by a citizen who goes peaceably upon a portion of the tract, and in other respects complies with the law.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE OF ENTRY—PRESUMPTION.
That a homestead entry has been made is prima facie shown by the production of the receipt of the land-office for entry fees, it being the duty of the register and receiver of the local land-office, under the department regulations, to make the entry immediately upon receiving the proper fees, and it must be presumed (Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1963, subd. 15) that this official duty was regularly performed.

3. EJECTMENT—TITLE TO SUPPORT—HOMESTEAD ENTRY—TRESPASSER IN POSSESSION.
In ejectment, where the above state of facts is established in favor of plaintiff, he has shown title to the whole tract as against defendant, a mere trespasser in actual possession of all but a few acres, and is entitled to recover, under act Cal. March 23, 1874, providing that every qualified homestead claimant residing on public lands, who shall have made his original entry in accordance with the United States laws, shall from the date of such entry be deemed to have title to and to be in possession of all the land described in such entry, as against trespassers, etc.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Ejectment by George W. Whittaker against Lorenzo Pendola. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

F. W. Street and Ira Hill Reed, for appellant. Reddick & Solinsky, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover all but two or three acres of the land described in the following receipt:

"RECEIVER'S DUPLICATE RECEIPT NO. 4,760. HOMESTEAD.

"RECEIVER'S OFFICE, STOCKTON, February 17, 1887.

"Received of George W. Whittaker the sum of sixteen dollars ——— cents, being the amount of fee and compensation of register and receiver for the entry of the east half of north-west quarter, and the east half of south-west quarter, of section 18, in township 2 north, of range 14 east, M. D. M., under section 2290, Revised Statutes of the United States.

"$16.00. JOHN E. BUDD, Receiver."

On the trial the plaintiff introduced this receipt in evidence, and testimony which showed that before the commencement of the action he had, in addition to the payment mentioned in the receipt, built a house, and taken up his residence on the two or three acres covered by his homestead location, and not sued for. It further appeared that most of the demanded premises had been inclosed and cultivated by the defendant for about two years before the issuance of the receipt, and that he had thereon a house and barn. On this case plaintiff rested, and defendant moved for nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff had shown no title. The motion was overruled, and defendant, without offering any evidence upon his part, submitted the case. The court gave judgment for plaintiff, from which, and from an order subsequently made, overruling his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The defendant, not having shown any capacity in himself to acquire the government title to the demanded premises, nor any effort or intention to do so, stands in the position of a mere naked trespasser upon the public domain, with an inclosure erected and maintained contrary to the express provisions of the act of congress of February 25, 1885, (St. 1884–85, p. 321,) and the main question in the case is whether, by such unauthorized inclosure, he can prevent a homestead entry of the land by a citizen of the United States who goes peaceably upon a portion of the tract, and in other respects complies with the law. This is the precise question, or the converse of it, involved and decided in the case of Haven v. Haws, 63 Cal. 514; and on the authority of that case we hold that this plaintiff had the right to make his homestead entry of the whole tract, notwithstanding the possession by defendant of the greater portion of it. That he made the entry was, we think, sufficiently proved prima facie by the production of the receipt from the land-office. Under the department regulations, of which we take notice, it was the duty of the register and receiver of the local land-office, upon payment of the proper fees, to issue this receipt, and thereupon to make the proper entry of the location. This official duty we must presume was regularly performed. Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. And especially ought this presumption to obtain, in view of the provision of the statute forbidding the issuance of any certificate of entry prior to the expiration of five years. Rev. St. U. S. § 2291. The evidence, therefore, brought the plaintiff squarely within the provisions of the second section of the act of the legislature of this state, passed March 23, 1874, (St. 1873–74, p. 544,) which reads as follows: "Sec. 2. Every qualified homestead claimant under the homestead laws of the United States, residing on public land of the United States within this state, who shall have made his original homestead entry in accordance with said laws, shall, from the date of such entry, be deemed to have title to and to be in possession of all the land described in such entry, as against trespassers and all persons having no superior right or title to the same, as long as he shall continue to reside thereon, and to comply in good faith with said homestead laws." Under this law the plaintiff must be deemed to have the title, as against the defendant, to the demanded premises.

Judgment and order affirmed.

78 Cal. 301

BANK OF SANTA CRUZ COUNTY v. BARTLETT et al. (No. 11,968.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1889.)

1. COUNTIES—LIABILITIES OF OFFICERS—ALLOWANCE OF INVALID CLAIM.
The California county government act of 1883, § 7, provided that "all supervisors, and any other officer, authorizing, or aiding to authorize, or auditing, or allowing, any claim, * * * against said treasury, * * * in violation of any of the provisions of this act, shall be liable in person * * * to the person or persons damaged by such illegal authorization to the extent of his loss by reason of the non-payment of his * * * claim." A claim was allowed in favor of plaintiff's assignor, and a warrant therefor issued, but payment of the warrant was refused. It was admitted that the assignor's claim against the county and the warrant were invalid. Held, that no action would lie against the supervisors and auditor for damages.

2. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—COUNTY WARRANTS—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE.
A county warrant has not the qualities of a negotiable paper, and the plaintiff stands in the shoes of his assignor, the original holder.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Santa Cruz County against S. A. Bartlett and others, supervisors and auditor of Santa Cruz county, to recover the amount of a warrant drawn upon the county treasury. Demurrer to complaint sustained, and judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

Spalsbury & Burke, for appellants. Joseph H. Skirm, and Underwood & McCann, for respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and, plaintiff refusing to amend, final judgment went for defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment. One of the defendants (as appears from the complaint) was auditor of Santa Cruz county, and the other defendants were supervisors. One Swinford, having been injured by the breaking of a bridge on a county road, presented a demand to the defendants, (supervisors,) which was by them allowed in the amount of $400; and the other defendant (auditor) drew a warrant for that amount upon the county treasury, payable to said Swinford, or bearer. Swinford sold and assigned the warrant to the plaintiff. The plaintiff presented the warrant to the county treasurer, who refused to pay it. This action was then brought against the defendants individually, plaintiff basing its asserted right of action upon section 7 of the county government act of 1883. That section is as follows: "Sec. 7. All supervisors, and any other officer, authorizing, or aiding to authorize, or auditing, or allowing, any claim or demand upon or against said treasury, or any fund thereof, in violation of any of the provisions of this act, shall be liable in person, and upon their several bonds, to the person or persons damaged by such illegal authorization, to the extent of his loss by reason of the non-payment of his or their claim." It is admitted that Swinford never had any legal claim against the county for damages, and that the warrant was unauthorized and invalid. He was not induced by any act of the defendants to give or lose any valuable thing whatever. How can he be said, therefore, to have been "damaged," or to have sustained any "loss by reason of the non-payment of his claim?" He lost nothing, for he did not have anything to lose. As to plaintiff, it has been held repeatedly that a county warrant has not the qualities of negotiable paper, and that the assignee stands in the shoes of the original holder. Plaintiff was bound to know that the warrant was invalid, and the mere transfer could not make it valuable as to any person against whom it was worthless in the hands of Swinford. It is not necessary to notice the other points made by the respondents. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

78 Cal. 304

Ex parte ARRAS. (No. 20,473.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1889.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY—SENTENCE—NON-PAYMENT OF FINE.

Pen. Code Cal. § 245, provides, as punishment for the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, "imprisonment in the state-prison, or in a county jail, not exceeding two years, or by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by both." Petitioner was sentenced to the state-prison for two years, "as a punishment for said crime, and that in addition thereto he pay a fine of $2,000, and that he be imprisoned in the said state-prison until said fine be satisfied," etc. Held, that so much of the judgment as provided for imprisonment in the state-prison as a means of enforcing the payment of the fine was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and void. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

2. SAME—HARD LABOR.

Nor had the court jurisdiction to impose hard labor as a part of the punishment.

In bank.

Application for discharge of Charles Arras, under a writ of habeas corpus; the prisoner being confined in the state-prison under sentence for the crime of assault with a deadly weapon.

Carroll Cook, for petitioner. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an application for the discharge of the prisoner, under a writ of habeas corpus, from the state-prison at San Quentin. The petition alleges that the petitioner "is detained, confined, restrained, and imprisoned by virtue of a judgment and commitment, which judgment and commitment attempt to imprison him for two years in said prison, and to impose a large fine, and order his further imprisonment in said prison in case he do not pay said fine for a long period of time, to-wit, for one day for each dollar of said fine not paid; that the two years' imprisonment ordered by said judgment and commitment have, by virtue of the credits accorded to him by law, and which have not been taken away from him, expired; and that he is now held and imprisoned in said prison at hard labor solely for the purpose of collecting such fine." The warden of the prison makes return that he is entitled to the custody of the petitioner, as such warden, by virtue of a judgment of conviction and commitment of said petitioner to said prison by the superior court of Merced county. The judgment and commitment are filed with and made part of the return. That part of the judgment, material to the question raised here, is that the petitioner "be imprisoned in the state-prison of the state of California, at San Quentin, for the term of two years, as a punishment for said crime, and that in addition thereto he pay a fine of two thousand dollars, and that he be imprisoned in the said state-prison of said state until such fine be satisfied, said imprisonment not to exceed one day for each two dollars of such fine, and on the payment of such portion of said fine as shall not have been satisfied by imprisonment at the rate prescribed—that is, one day for each two dollars thereof—that he be discharged from custody on account of said fine." The return does not controvert the facts alleged in the petition that the petitioner has served the full term of imprisonment adjudged as a punishment, and that he is being held and imprisoned at hard labor solely for the purpose of collecting such fine.

It is claimed by counsel for the petitioner that the judgment, so far as it authorizes the imprisonment of the petitioner in the state-prison until payment of the fine, is void, (1) because there is no law authorizing imprisonment in the state prison for said purpose; (2) because it imposes hard labor as a part of the penalty in case the fine is not paid.

The judgment of the court is based upon section 245 of the Penal Code, which provides, as punishment for the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, (the offense of which the petitioner was convicted,) "imprisonment in the state-prison, or in a county jail, not exceeding two years, or by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by both." The court rendering the judgment evidently proceeded upon the theory that where imprisonment in the state-prison was imposed as a part of the penalty, the imprisonment for the fine must be in the same prison.

We are not inclined to this view. It is provided generally that all persons committed by authority of law shall be confined in the common jails in the several counties. Pen. Code, § 1597. Imprisonment in the state-prison is provided as a part of the punishment only in case of the commission of a felony. Pen. Code, § 17. The whole scope of the law regulating such prisons must be held to provide only for prisoners convicted of felonies, and as a punishment therefor. St. 1880, p. 67. The court below had no jurisdiction to impose hard labor as a part of the punishment. Ex parte Kelley, 65 Cal. 154, 3 Pac. Rep. 673.

Counsel for petitioner claims that this was the effect of the judgment here, for the reason that all persons imprisoned in the state-prison are required to labor. The act for the government of the prisons provides that "all convicts not employed on contracts may be employed by authority of the board of directors, * * * in the performance of work for the state," etc., and that such board "shall require, of every able-bodied convict confined in the state-prison, as many hours of faithful labor, in each and every day during his imprisonment, as shall be prescribed by the rules and regulations of the prison."

If the petitioner continued to be a "convict" after his imprisonment as a punishment had expired, it was the duty of the officers of the prison to compel him to perform labor, and the effect of the judgment imprisoning him there until the payment of the fine was to impose that burden upon him. If he ceased to be a convict, and could only be confined without labor, there must be a class of prisoners in the state-prison not contemplated by any law that has come to our notice, and the control and management of whom therein is nowhere provided for. It is clear to us that so much of this judgment as provided for imprisonment in the state-prison as a means of enforcing the payment of the fine was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and void.

For the reasons given, the petitioner is entitled to his discharge, and it is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

I dissent: THORNTON, J.

Ex parte MIDDLETON. (No. 20,472.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1889.)

In bank.

Carroll Cook, for petitioner. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WORKS, J. The questions presented in this case are the same as in Ex parte Arras, ante, 683, (this day decided,) and for the reasons stated therein we hold the judgment under which the petitioner is imprisoned to be void, and that he is entitled to be discharged. It is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.: SHARPSTEIN, J.

I dissent: THORNTON, J.

78 Cal. 388

PEOPLE v. O'NEIL. (No. 20,502.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1889.)

MURDER—DEGREE—VERDICT.

Under the provision of the California Code that, whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict, must find the degree of the crime, a conviction for murder cannot stand, where the degree is not specified in the verdict.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; JOSEPH P. JONES, Judge.

John H. O'Neil appeals from a conviction of murder.

Joseph H. Budd, James H. Budd, and H. C. Levynsky, for appellant. Geo. H. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Appellant was tried upon an information which alleged that he feloniously, unlawfully, and with malice aforethought, killed and murdered one Philip Stump. The jury returned a verdict in these words: "We, the jury, decide the defendant, John H. O'Neil, guilty as charged; the penalty to be imprisonment for life." The Code provides that, "whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty." It has been uniformly held that a failure to specify the degree of murder under that section vitiates the verdict. People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129. The attorney general confesses error. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

---

78 Cal. 381

STROHLBURG v. JONES. (No. 11,746.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1889.)

TRESPASS—PLEADING—PARTIES.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff was lawfully in possession of certain premises as tenant, and that defendant wrongfully entered thereon, and committed divers trespasses and injuries to the land, is not demurrable for the non-joinder of the landlord as party plaintiff.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county. E. M. GIBSON, Judge.

C. L. Colvin, Philip Teare, and T. F. Graber, for appellant. Thomas H. Smith, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment. The complaint was demurred to, and the demurrer overruled, defendant answering. Cause tried by a jury. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Appellant insists that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint, and whether it did or not is the sole question for consideration. The allegations of the complaint are that on the 20th day of March, 1885, W. G. Flynn and John R. Spring, then being the owners of certain premises described in the complaint, leased and demised the same to the plaintiff for the term of one year, at a stated monthly rent; that by virtue of said lease plaintiff went into and continued in the peaceable and quiet possession of said premises until the committing of the grievances complained of; that on the 1st day of June, 1885, the defendant wrongfully and maliciously entered upon said premises, and, on divers other days between that day and the commencement of this action, committed divers trespasses, enumerated in the complaint, to the damage of the plaintiff $3,000, for which he demands judgment. One of the grounds specified as a ground of demurrer is "that there is a defect of parties plaintiff, in this, to-wit: It appears from the complaint that one W. G. Flynn and one John R. Spring are the owners in fee of the property described in the complaint, and that the injury complained of is an injury to the freehold, and also that the acts complained of are an ouster of the said Flynn and Spring, owners in fee." The allegations of the complaint show that the plaintiff was in the possession, and in the rightful possession, of the premises, under a lease from the owner thereof. "A tenant's possession, while it continues, is as complete for all purposes of redress against wrong-doers as is the possession of an owner in fee-simple." Cooley, Torts, *326. This question was discussed quite fully in Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 371, 14 Pac. Rep. 22. In Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 685, the court says: "In an action of trespass upon real property, the plaintiff may recover upon alleging and showing, in addition to the injury complained of, his possession of the premises." Tested by that rule, the demurrer, on the ground above specified, was properly overruled. We fail to discover that several causes of action are improperly joined, or that the complaint is ambiguous. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

78 Cal. 384

PICO v. COHN et al. (No. 12,590.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1889.)

1. APPEAL—RECORD—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO MOVE FOR NEW TRIAL.
   A former statute having expressly required that the notice of intention to move for a new trial should be made part of the record on appeal, and such requirement being omitted from Code Civil Proc. Cal., and there being no provision for bringing it up in any manner, such notice need not be presented on appeal; and it will be presumed, in the absence of showing to the contrary, that any question presented in the statement or specification of errors was properly presented to the court below, and passed on in its ruling on the motion for new trial.
2. SAME—REVIEW—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
   Where there is substantial conflict in the evidence, the decision of the court below will not be disturbed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WILLIAM A. CHENEY, Judge.

Action by Pio Pico against B. Cohn and others. Plaintiff appeals.

Glassell, Smith & Patton, Graves & Chapman, Anderson, Fitzgerald & Anderson, and Campbell, Houghton & Silent, for appellant. R. H. Chapman, Stephen M. White, and Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for respondents.

WORKS, J. This is an action by the plaintiff and appellant to compel the reconveyance of certain real property conveyed by him to the defendant, on the grounds: First, that the same was conveyed as security for money borrowed; and, second, that the conveyance was procured by fraud.

Preliminary to a discussion of the merits of the case, we are called upon to determine whether the matters presented by the statement on motion for a new trial can be considered. The respondents contend that the statement must be disregarded, for the reason that no notice of intention to move for a new trial is set out therein, or in any way shown to have been given. The point made is that, as the notice of intention to move for a new trial is not before us, we cannot know upon what grounds the motion was made, and therefore no error appears in the record. The question is not a new one, but the decisions of this court have not distinctly and clearly settled the practice in this respect. Formerly the notice was made a part of the record on appeal by express statutory provision. But it is not so under the present Code. Code Civil Proc. § 670; Girdner v. Beswick, 69 Cal. 112, 10 Pac. Rep. 278;

Dominguez v. Mascotti, 74 Cal. 269, 15 Pac. Rep. 773. Nor is ther any provision of the Code requiring that such notice shall be brought to this court by including it in the statement, or in any other manner. The papers necessary to be brought up are set out in sections 661 and 952 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the notice of intention is not one of them. The former statute having made the notice of intention a part of the record, we must assume that it was omitted from the present Code with a purpose. Being omitted from the section providing what papers shall constitute the record on appeal, and no provision being made for bringing it up in any other way, it is fair to presume that it was not intended to require it to be brought to this court at all. This leads us to the conclusion that it was the legislative intention that the notice should be the basis of the motion to be made in the court below, and that, upon the proper statement being filed, and the necessary motion made and passed upon by the court below, the notice has performed its functions, and is not a necessary part of the record on appeal, or to be presented here in any form. When the case comes to us we must look to the statement or bill of exceptions, and the specifications in which the decision of the court below is not sustained by the evidence, and the specifications of errors of law, as our guide in reviewing the case, and to these alone. If a question is presented by such specifications, and is properly saved in the statement or bill of exceptions, this court will look no further, but must presume that the question was properly presented to the court below, and passed upon in its ruling upon the motion for a new trial. We do not put this upon the ground of waiver by the opposite party, as is done in some of the earlier cases, but upon the sole ground that we must look alone to the statement or bill of exceptions for the questions to be determined, in the absence of any showing by the respondent that no notice, or an insufficient one, was given. Undoubtedly the notice of intention is necessary; but if it has not been given, or has been given too late, that must be shown by the respondent as against the settlement of the statement or bill of exceptions, or at the time of, and in opposition to, the motion for a new trial; and, if the court below rules against him, he must cause the facts necessary to present the question to be then included in the statement, or a proper bill of exceptions, so that this court can determine whether a proper notice has been given or not. The specifications in the statement or bill should conform to the notice of intention to move for a new trial. If they do not, the opposite party should move such amendments thereto as will remove therefrom all matter foreign to the grounds stated in the notice, and in settling the same the court below should see that the statement does not go beyond the notice, either in the body of it or in the specifications. If this is done, and the statement or bill is properly made up, no injury can result to any one from the failure to bring up the notice. It has been held by this court in a number of cases that it must be made to appear by the statement that a notice of intention has been given or that the giving of such notice has been waived. Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 151; Wright v. Snowball, 45 Cal. 654; Dominguez v. Mascotti, supra. There may be other cases to the same effect. The legislature has said, in effect, that the notice need not come to this court as a part of the judgment roll, and has made no provision for bringing it here in any other way. The conclusion that must necessarily be drawn from this is that it was not the intention that it should come to this court at all, and we so hold. The cases cited above, and all others laying down a rule of practice, under the Code as it now stands, in conflict with the practice as above stated, are overruled.

As to the merits of the case, but one question is presented by the briefs, viz., whether certain findings of the court are sustained by the evidence. Counsel for appellant contend with great earnestness that there is no evidence against them as to some of these findings, and then proceed, in elaborate and able briefs, to prove that the evidence against them is unworthy of belief. We have carefully examined the transcript, and find that all the findings attacked are supported by some evidence. Counsel simply ask us to enter upon an investigation of the evidence to determine the credibility an weight to be given to the testimony of the witnesses, and especially that o the defendant Cohn. This we cannot do under the well-established rule that where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, as there is here, this cour will not disturb the decision of the court below. Bernal v. O'Hanlon, 5 Cal. 284; Bank v. Reel, 62 Cal. 425. The importance of the case and th elaborate arguments of counsel might seem to call for a review of the evidence, but it seems to us to be unnecessary, and that to extend this opinion i that way could serve no useful purpose.

Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 40

PEOPLE v. REED. (No. 11,769.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 18, 1888.)

DEDICATION—ACCEPTANCE—REVOCATION.

In 1862 the owner of a tract of land caused the same to be surveyed and platted Part of one of the streets marked on the plat was never opened or used as a publi street, and for a period of more than 20 years the owner had a barn and shed on sai part, inclosed by a substantial fence. There was no acceptance of said street unti the passage of a city ordinance, in 1884, directing the street commissioners to demand the possession of the part of the street so occupied. Held, that there was n sufficient dedication or acceptance, and that, if there had been a dedication, it wa revoked before acceptance.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

Action by the people against Reed to compel the defendant to remove obstructions from an alleged public street in the city of San Jose. Judgmen for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Wm. Matthews, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson and D. W. Harrington, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action is brought to compel the defendants to remove obstructions from an alleged public street in the city of San Jose. The plaintiff alleges and the defendant denies that the land upon which the obstructions are maintained is a part of a public street. Upon that issue the court below found in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, and rendered judgment accordingly. From the judgment this appeal is taken. The contention of appellant is that the findings do not justify the judgment. Whether the facts found justify the conclusion that the land in controversy was dedicated and accepted as a public street is the question to be determined on this appeal. The facts found are substantially as follows:

In 1862 appellant was the owner of a certain tract of land in San Jose, and in that year caused the same to be surveyed into streets and blocks, and said blocks to be divided into lots; the streets being designated by names, and the blocks and lots by numbers, on a plat or map prepared by the surveyor. Between the years 1862 and 1877 appellant sold and conveyed to divers persons lands within the tract so surveyed and platted as aforesaid. One of the streets designated on said plat or map was Divine street, running from First street to Terraine street, through North Market and San Pedro streets. But said Divine street, or so much thereof as lies between said North Market and San Pedro streets, has never been used or opened as a public street; and for a period of more than 20 years before the commencement of this action there was a barn and shed thereon, inclosed by a substantial fence, which effectually and completely prevented any use thereof as a public street. There was no formal or other acceptance of said alleged street prior to the passage of an ordinance on the 12th day of December, 1884, directing the street commissioner of said city to demand the possession of the strip of land claimed to have been dedicated as aforesaid, and to remove all obstructions therefrom, and to throw the same open for public use.

Are the facts found sufficient to constitute a dedication of the land in controversy to a public use? We think not. In the leading case in the United States on this subject, the court says: "There is no particular form necessary in the dedication of land to public use. All that is required is the assent of the owner of the land, and the fact of its being used for the public purposes intended by the appropriation." City of Cincinnati v. Lessee of White, 6 Pet. 431. In the case at bar, as before stated, the land never has been used for a public purpose. The supreme court of West Virginia says: "If there has been no use by the public, we may safely adopt the language of the court of appeals of New York, strong as it is, as laying down correctly the law in such case," i. e.: "The owner's acts and declarations should be deliberate, unequivocal, and decisive, manifesting a positive and unmistakable intention to permanently abandon his property to the specific public use." Pierpoint v. Harrisville, 9 W. Va. 215; Holdane v. Trustees, 21 N. Y. 477. In the case at bar the only acts of defendant which tend to show an intention to dedicate the land in controversy, are the survey and map on which a street is delineated. The intention not to dedicate is more strongly manifested by keeping the premises inclosed, and maintaining on them substantial buildings. There is a very strong resemblance between this case and the cases of Tate v. Sacramento, 50 Cal. 242, and Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. Rep. 141, in both of which it was held that the facts were insufficient to constitute a dedication. But, conceding that the defendant in 1862 evinced an intention to dedicate the strip of land in controversy as a public street, it is not claimed that there was an acceptance of it until after the lapse of more than 20 years, during all of which time it was in his power to revoke the dedication. The only act claimed to constitute an acceptance is the passage of the ordinance for the opening of the street, which appears to us more like an attempt to take private property for public use without compensation than it does like an acceptance of a street.

We think the facts found insufficient to constitute a dedication or acceptance, and that if there had been a dedication it was revoked before there was any acceptance of it.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment for defendant upon the findings.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 43

MAGEE v. NORTH PAC. COAST R. CO. (No. 11,730.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 24, 1888.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

In an action by a brakeman against a railroad company for injuries received in a collision with an ox which was on the track through defendant's negligence in not keeping up proper fences, it appeared that it was apparent to any one who looked at them that the fences were insufficient to turn stock; and it was known that cattle had frequently broken through them while plaintiff was in defendant's employment, when the train would be stopped, and the cattle driven off the track; and at least once plaintiff had assisted in driving them off. Plaintiff, a man of intelligence, had, as brakeman, ridden over the road along which the fences ran for some months. The court charged that if plaintiff knew the condition of the fences, or, as a prudent, reasonable man, should have known it, the verdict should be for defendant. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff could not be sustained, though he testified that he did not know the condition of the fences.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; J. F. SULLIVAN, Acting Judge.

Action for personal injuries by William F. Magee against the North Pacific Coast Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

W. H. L. Barnes, for appellant. Hepburn Wilkins, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to recover damages from the defendant for the alleged injuries suffered by the plaintiff in being thrown from a train of cars operated upon the defendant's railroad track. The plaintiff recovered a judgment for $2,500; from which, and an order refusing a new trial, the defendant appeals.

The complaint alleged that it was the duty of the defendant towards the plaintiff, one of its employes, viz., a brakeman and assistant baggage master, to keep the right of way and track of its railroad "fenced with good and sufficient fence on both sides thereof, so as to prevent cattle and animals from getting on said track," and "to provide a good, safe, and secure locomotive and tender, with a pilot cow-catcher in front thereof, and to run and operate its trains in such manner as to always have the locomotive in front of its train, and a pilot or cow-catcher in front of said locomotive engine, and in a position to remove obstructions from said track." It was then alleged that these general duties were unperformed, and that of their non-fulfillment the defendant had notice.

The charge was also made against the defendant that by reason of its negligence its railroad track and right of way were not at the time of the plaintiff's injury fenced with good and sufficient fences, by reason of which neglect a bull or ox got upon said track; and by reason of that, and the negligence of the defendant in running its locomotive engine with the tender in front, and without a cow-catcher, etc., the locomotive engine ran against the bull or ox, which collision resulted in the plaintiff (while using due care and attention in the line of his duty) being thrown off the car where he was properly stationed, and seriously and painfully injured.

There seems to be no doubt but what the facts show that the plaintiff suffered the injuries complained of through a collision of the train with the ox or bull, which had gotten upon the track through the negligence of the defendant in not keeping up proper fences. It is equally clear that the plaintiff was fully aware of the fact that the defendant's locomotive engine was run with the tender in front, and had been so run for a long time, and it is apparently conceded on both sides that under the evidence no cause of action existed in favor of the plaintiff on that ground. But it is insisted by the plaintiff, and denied by the defendant, that the negligence which caused the accident in which the plaintiff had his leg broken was by reason of the fact that the fences along the track were insufficient to turn cattle and stock, and that on account of the bad condition of the fences, well known to the defendant and unknown to the plaintiff, the bull or ox got on the track, caused a car or cars to be precipitated therefrom, the plaintiff violently thrown off and permanently injured.

The evidence unquestionably and without serious conflict shows that the fences were neither good nor sufficient; in fact, it appears from the evidence of all the witnesses who testified as to the matter that the fences were very bad; and this fact must have been apparent to even the most casual observer. They were composed of posts loosely set in the ground. There were but two planks, six inches wide and sixteen feet long, nailed parallel to each other from post to post. They were impaired by frequent nailing in some places, and could with difficulty be kept on the posts by nails. They were known to have repeatedly fallen off, or been pushed off by cattle which came out on the track. On various occasions during the time when plaintiff was in the defendant's employment the train would have to be stopped, and the intruding cattle driven off by the train hands, and upon at least one occasion the plaintiff had assisted in driving such intruding cattle off the track.

The plaintiff had been in the employment of the defendant for about a year and a half, and had been engaged for some months of this time in traveling upon its trains over the track and right of way, along which these insufficient fences ran. He declares in his evidence that he did not know of any defect in the fences, and that, so far as his observation went, they appeared to be good fences.

If it be conceded that the plaintiff paid so little attention to the fences as to suppose that they were good, it then appears that he acted in that respect in a manner entirely different from several other persons, who testify to facts from their observation which show that the fences would appear to any prudent man as being in a condition utterly inadequate to the turning of stock. The fences undoubtedly appeared to every one who looked at, and who has testified as to, them, in the case, as bad and insufficient fences.

The evidence shows plaintiff to be a man of intelligence and acuteness; so that if he did not come to the conclusion, after abundant opportunity, that the fences were bad, it must have been because he did not notice them at all, when he should have done so. If he had been a reasonably prudent man, he would have known that the fences were bad; and that cattle, which were abundant thereabout, and had gotten on the railroad track, causing the train to stop until they could be driven off, would do so again, and that a collision might take place, and he be seriously hurt.

Such being the state of the evidence, what was the duty of the jury in the premises, under the instructions of the court, unobjected to by the plaintiff, one of which was as follows: "If, on the contrary, you find that the plaintiff fully knew the unsafe condition of the fences at the place of injury, or, as a prudent, reasonable man, should have known their condition, then your verdict should be for the defendant."

It would seem that it was their duty to say that, as a prudent, reasonable man, the plaintiff should have known the condition of the fences at the place of injury, as many other witnesses who testified in the case stated facts about the fences which uniformly showed their condition to have been bad, and the plaintiff himself does not in any way whatever contradict their statements in that respect.

There is no conflict in the testimony as to the fences being bad,—a fact which must have impressed itself upon any prudent man, viewing them as he rode past them day after day for months, if he had chosen to avail himself of an abundant opportunity presented to him of looking at them, and being compelled by such observation to note their wretched condition. The only conflict is between the statement of the defendant that he did not know they were bad and insufficient fences, and that of everybody else who looked at and stated them to be insufficient.

The plaintiff nowhere even intimates that the fences were not glaringly insufficient; in fact, he succeeded by the testimony of his own witnesses in demonstrating the truth of that matter. Yet he utterly fails in his evidence to explain how he alone, of all those who gave the fences any attention, did not observe their insufficiency. How, then, could he fail to know that the fences were bad, and appreciate the risk which he ran, unless he neglected, as a prudent man, to observe the condition of the fences, which were daily within his his view? He does not say that he gave them any attention; he does not declare that those who did view them were wrong in their conclusion; he does not give any reason why he did not know their condition, which was patent to any observer; he contents himself with saying he did not know their bad condition, as they appeared to him to be good.

It is impossible, in view of the uncontradicted evidence in the record, that the plaintiff could have remained in ignorance of the insufficiency of the fences, unless he had willfully refrained from looking at them, or had utterly neglected to do so. In either event he did not act either as a prudent or reasonable man in his situation should have done.

In the case of Sweeney v. Railroad Co., 57 Cal. 15, the engineer, who was killed by the train colliding with cattle, was shown to have known that he ran a great risk because of the entire absence of all fences along the track, and the appellate court held that a recovery could not be had against the railroad company whose train he was operating at the time he met his death.

The jury in the case in hand either disregarded the instruction of the court, or found contrary to the evidence. We, therefore, advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 50

In re ROSE'S ESTATE. (No. 12,408.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1888.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 939, providing that an exception to the decision or verdict because not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed unless the appeal is taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment, an appeal from a decree settling an administrator's account, taken within the statutory time after the entry of the decree, but not within 60 days after the decision and the filing of the findings, is not in time to present the question of the insufficiency of the evidence. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. W. CROSS, Judge.

Wal. J. Tuska and W. W. Foote, for appellant. Stetson & Houghton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by an administrator from a decree settling his account. When the account was rendered, written grounds of contest were filed; and after trial, at which witnesses were examined, the judge of the superior court made findings and a decree whereby it was adjudged that the account presented was not correct, and that the administrator owed the estate more money than the balance of his account showed. The appeal was taken within 60 days after the entry of the decree, but not within 60 days after the announcement of the decision and the filing of the findings. There was no motion for a new trial.

The respondent contends that the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision cannot be considered; and we think this position must be sustained. It is not necessary to decide whether a motion for a new trial would have been a proper remedy. Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "an exception to the decision or verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment unless the appeal is taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment." If the appeal be not taken within 60 days from the rendition of the judgment, the question as to the insufficiency of the evidence cannot be considered. Clark v. Gridley, 49 Cal. 105; Handley v. Figg, 58 Cal. 578; Bettis v. Townsend, 61 Cal. 333; Moyk v. Peterson, 17 Pac. Rep.

447. The words "rendition of the judgment" do not mean the same thing as "entry of the judgment." They mean either the announcement from the bench entered in the minutes, or the filing of the findings, if there are findings, or both. But it is not necessary to decide what is the precise meaning of the term here; for in this case both things occurred more than 60 days before the appeal was taken. It may seem a strange result that, in order to present the question of the insufficiency of the evidence, the appeal must be taken within 60 days from an event which may occur long before the judgment is entered. But the statute is explicit to that effect; and it may very well be that the legislature recognized the fact that a long period may happen to elapse between the rendition and the entry of the judgment, and considered it undesirable that questions as to the insufficiency of the evidence should be allowed to remain open so long. We think the provision referred to applies to decisions in probate matters like the one in this case, and hence that the evidence cannot be reviewed on this appeal.

The only questions which can be reviewed upon the appeal are as to the sufficiency of the findings to support the decree, and as to errors in law occurring at the trial. The findings seem to us to be sufficient, and we see no error in law.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

McFarland, J. I dissent. I do not think that the action of a court in settling an administrator's account was intended to be included in the provisions of section 939 about an appeal from "a final judgment in an action or special proceeding." It is simply a probate order, and an appeal from it is specifically provided for in subdivision 3 of section 963. And, in my opinion, if an appeal be taken from such an order within the 60 days after the order has been entered, as provided in section 1715, the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision may be considered.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 56

Humphreys et al. v. Hopkins. (No. 12,626.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 27, 1889.)

Replevin—By Receiver—Judgment.

In replevin, plaintiffs alleged that they had been duly appointed and qualified as receivers of a railroad company in another state, which thereupon delivered all its property to plaintiffs, and that the property in question had been wrongfully taken from them by defendant in this state. The answer admitted the appointment and qualification of plaintiffs as receivers, but denied that the company had delivered to them its property, and specifically denied the delivery of the property in question, which defendant claimed to hold as sheriff under an attachment issued against the company. Held, that the issues demanded a finding that the property had been delivered to plaintiffs as receivers before it came into this state, and that a finding that plaintiffs were entitled to its possession when taken from them by defendant was insufficient; it being but a conclusion of law.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco, James G. Maguire, Judge.

Frank M. Stone, for appellant. F. Z. Blakeman, for respondents.

Per Curiam. The findings of the court do not respond to the issues. The complaint alleges, in substance, that on the 25th day of May, 1884, plaintiffs were, by an order of the United States circuit court of Missouri, appointed receivers of all the property of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railroad Company, with authority to take possession of, control, and operate its railroad, and preserve the property; that plaintiffs duly qualified as such receivers, and thereafter the said railroad company transferred and delivered all of its property to the plaintiffs, in pursuance of said order; that plaintiffs took possession of, and ever afterwards managed and controlled, the same, until interfered with by the defendant, as hereinafter stated; that the car in controversy is a part of the property so transferred; that, while plaintiffs were in possession of the car, the defendant at the city of San Francisco, April 3, 1885, wrongfully and unlawfully took it from their possession, and still unlawfully detains the same, although a demand for the possession of the car has been made by the plaintiffs.

The answer admits that the plaintiffs were appointed, and that they duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties as receivers, as alleged, but denies that the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railroad Company delivered any property to plaintiffs as receivers, and denies specifically that the car described in the complaint was ever transferred or delivered to plaintiffs by said company. For a further and separate answer defendant (sheriff of San Francisco) averred that he, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, in obedience to a writ of attachment issued out of the superior court, had taken and held the property on the 1st day of April, 1885, at the instance of the plaintiffs in an action by Payot, Upham & Co. vs. said Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railroad Company, wherein said firm claimed the sum of $641.71 upon an express contract.

The court found that the car in controversy was on the 16th day of March, 1885, at the city of St. Louis, lawfully in possession of plaintiffs; that on said last-named day said car was loaded with freight by plaintiffs and sent to the city of San Francisco, where it arrived about April 1st, in the custody of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which company was the agent of plaintiffs for the purpose of delivering freight and returning the car to plaintiffs at St. Louis; that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully seized and took said car from the custody of said railroad company on April 3, 1885, and continued to detain the same until September 5th following, when it was taken under due process from the defendant, and delivered to the plaintiffs in this action; that on March 24, 1885, Henry Payot and Isaac Upham were partners doing business in the city and county of San Francisco, and commenced an action against the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railroad Company, as alleged by defendant, and that defendant, as sheriff, took and held possession of the car, as alleged by him.

It is apparent from the allegations of the complaint that the plaintiffs are suing in their representative capacity as receivers, and it is equally clear that the defendant, in his answer, attempts to meet the claim of the plaintiffs solely upon that theory. There is nothing in the complaint to indicate that the plaintiffs intended to sue in their individual capacities. The caption of the complaint is immaterial in cases of this kind; it is the body of the complaint which shows the capacity in which a party sues, not the designation in the title of the cause. Boone, Code Pl. § 9. It is not pretended, in fact, that the plaintiffs have any title to the property other than such as they acquired by virtue of the assignment by the company under and in pursuance of the order of the United States circuit court for the Eastern district of Missouri.

In view, therefore, of the facts alleged, that plaintiffs were receivers, and that the car was a part of the property of the railroad company, transferred to them as such, and the denials that the car was a part of the property transferred as alleged, or that the plaintiffs, as such receivers, ever took possession of it, it became a material issue whether the property had come into the hands of plaintiffs under the assignment from the railroad company, as alleged. The plaintiffs were not entitled to recover unless the property had been actually delivered into their custody before it came into this state. Even if the court had found the fact to be that the property had been delivered to the plaintiffs in Missouri, the evidence is insufficient to support such a finding. The court found in general terms that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the car on the 3d day of April, 1885, when it was wrongfully taken from them by defendant, and retained by him until taken from him, by due process in replevin, on September 5, 1885. This finding does not answer the objections made to the sufficency of the finding on the question of delivery. Under the issues it is a mere conclusion,—a matter of law. The plaintiffs base their right to recover on certain facts alleged, some of which are denied. The defendant is entitled to specific findings of fact upon those issues. The defendant is a sheriff. He had seized the property as the property of the railroad company under a writ issued in an action against that company at the instance of a plaintiff claiming to be a legal creditor of the company, and this was the justification which he pleaded. If he levied the writ upon the property of the company, as required by the writ, he was justified. Section 4187, Pol. Code.

Again, the defendant pleaded that the members of the firm of Payot, Upham & Co., plaintiffs in the attachment suit, were citizens of the state of California, and domestic creditors. The court found that Henry Payot and Isaac Upham were copartners doing business in the city and county of San Francisco when the suit was commenced, but did not find whether they were citizens of the state. While, perhaps, the failure to find on this issue was due to a failure on the part of the defendant, upon whom rested the burden to supply the proof, and would not justify the reversal of the case, we think there should have been a finding as to whether said parties were citizens of the state. The mere fact that they were copartners doing business in the city of San Francisco when the suit was commenced is insufficient.

As we are unable to determine the merits of the case without a finding upon the issue as to whether the car was ever transferred and delivered to the plaintiffs as a part of the property of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railroad Company the judgment must be reversed; and, as the judge who tried the case in the court below has gone out of office, the case cannot be referred simply for additional findings.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

---

78 Cal. 310

BURKETT v. BURKETT. (No. 12,459.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 5, 1889.)

1. HOMESTEAD—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE—SUFFICIENCY.

Civil Code Cal. § 1265, provides that when a selection of a homestead is made by a married person from community property, the land, on the death of either spouse, vests in the survivor. Section 158 provides that husband and wife may contract with each other respecting property as if unmarried. Held, that a declaration of a homestead by a husband on his separate property vests a joint title thereto in himself and wife, and a subsequent conveyance of the property by him to his wife is valid, and passes the complete title to the wife, subject to the homestead, though sections 1242, 1243, provide that an instrument of conveyance of a homestead must be executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife.

2. DIVORCE—RIGHTS IN REAL PROPERTY.

On a subsequent divorce procured by the wife for the husband's fault, the absolute title to the property, as between them, vests in her, as she is the "former owner" within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 146, subd. 4, providing that on divorce, "if a homestead has been selected from the separate property of either, it shall be assigned to the former owner, * * * subject to the power of the court to assign it for a limited period to the innocent party."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

Action by Alexander Burkett against Orpha Burkett, to quiet title to land. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Civil Code Cal. § 1265, referred to in opinion, provides that when a homestead is selected by a married person from community property, the land, on the death of either spouse, vests in the survivor.

D. S. Terry and J. C. Campbell, for appellant. Joseph H. Budd, (Dunlap & Vischer, of counsel,) for respondent.

WORKS, J. This case presents two questions necessary to be considered: (1) Can a husband make a valid conveyance to his wife of his separate real estate, upon which he has declared a homestead, which is still subsisting at the time of the conveyance? (2) If so, what was the effect upon the title, of a divorce granted to the wife subsequent to the conveyance, the property rights of the parties not being adjudicated in such divorce proceeding? The plaintiff, being the owner of certain real estate as his separate property, declared a homestead thereon, he and the defendant then being husband and wife, and residing on the property. Subsequently he conveyed the property directly to the defendant, who was still his wife. Thereafter the defendant procured a decree of divorce, but there was no adjudication as to the property. The plaintiff prosecutes this action to quiet his title. The court below found for the plaintiff, on the ground that the conveyance was void, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The defendant appeals.

1. In this state either husband or wife may enter into any agreement or transaction with the other, respecting property, which either might, if unmarried. Civil Code, § 158. Therefore a husband may convey his real estate directly to his wife, as he may to any other person. The effect of declaring the homestead was to convert the separate title of the husband into a joint title in himself and wife to the extent of the homestead. Id. §§ 1237, 1242, 1265; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 14. And thereafter the homestead could not be conveyed or incumbered, except by an instrument executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife. Civil Code, §§ 1242, 1243; Barber v. Babel, supra; Flege v. Garvey, 47 Cal. 375; Gagliardo v. Dumont, 54 Cal. 498; Graves v. Baker, 68 Cal. 133, 8 Pac. Rep. 691; Porter v. Chapman, 65 Cal. 365, 4 Pac. Rep. 237; Tipton v. Martin, 71 Cal. 325, 12 Pac. Rep. 244.

The cases cited construe the statute as enacted in the interest of the wife, where the declaration is by the husband, and hold that no conveyance in derogation of her rights under the homestead can be effective unless she joins in the same. But all of the cases relate to conveyances to third parties, which are necessarily in derogation of her homestead rights. It is true the case of Tipton v. Martin, supra, was a conveyance to the wife, but only in trust, and for the benefit of the cestui que trust. The case before us presents an entirely different question. The conveyance was not in derogation of the homestead rights of the wife. Being a conveyance of the legal title from one of the joint owners of the homestead right to the other, the property must be held to remain a homstead as before. The requirement of the statute that the wife shall join in the conveyance only applies to a conveyance or abandonment of the homestead. As the deed under consideration did not in any way effect the homestead, it is not within the statute, and no reason occurs to us for holding such a conveyance to be void.

In the case of Gagliardo v. Dumont, supra, it was said: "Under the restraints imposed by the homestead law, neither the husband nor the wife had power to transfer the homestead by a separate conveyance, nor could either incumber it to the prejudice of the other or of both, or to the destruction of the homestead itself. The obligation between them, in respect to its preservation, was reciprocal. Neither could, without the consent and concurrence of the other, alienate or transfer it. It was created as a place of residence for the family, and it is the policy of the law to preserve it intact for that purpose until both the husband and wife shall mutually resolve to destroy it by alienation or abandonment. In pursuance of that policy its destruction is prohibited, except by the joint act of both in the mode provided by the homestead law." It will be seen from the language of this and other cases that the object of the statute, as construed by this court, is to prevent the destruction of the homestead, except by the consent of the parties, expressed by a joint conveyance. If this deed could be held to have that effect, it might be declared void. But as its effect is to leave the homestead intact and vest in the wife the legal title to the property, subject thereto, no right intended to be protected by the constitution and legislation under it, is infringed or affected in any way. The question is an open one in this state, but we are not without authority to support such conveyance. Spoon v. Van Fossen, 53 Iowa, 494, 5 N. W. Rep. 624; Green v. Farrar, 53 Iowa, 426, 5 N. W. Rep. 557; Thomp. Homest. & Ex. § 473, Platt, Prop. Rights Mar. Wom. § 70, p. 225; Riehl v. Bingenheimer, 28 Wis. 86; Baines v. Baker, 60 Tex. 140; Ruohs v. Hooke, 3 Lea, 302; Harsh v. Griffin, (Iowa,) 34 N. W. Rep. 441.

The holding in the cases cited is, in effect, that the conveyance from the husband to the wife of the homestead property does not affect the homestead character of the estate, but carries his title subject thereto. She holds the title for the benefit of the family, subject to the same restriction against alienation applicable to the same in the hands of the husband. It is said in Thompson on Homesteads, (section 473:) "The policy of those statutes which restrain the alienation of the homestead without the wife joining in the deed is to protect the wife, and to enable her to protect the family, in the possession and enjoyment of a homestead, after one has been acquired by the husband. They are not intended to interpose obstacles in the way of a conveyance of the homestead to the wife, or to the wife and children, with the consent and approval of the wife, whatever may be the form of such conveyance." So in Spoon v. Van Fossen, 53 Iowa, 494, 5 N. W. Rep. 624, the court said: "Section 1990 of the Code provides: 'A conveyance or incumbrance by the owner is of no validity unless the husband and wife, if the owner is married, concur in and sign the same joint instrument.' It is urged by appellant's counsel that it would be absurd to require the wife to sign a conveyance to herself. This may be admitted, but it does not follow that a deed from the husband to the wife will operate as a surrender of the husband's homestead rights in the property conveyed. It is the policy of the law to preserve to every family a homestead. Such a course greatly subserves the interests of society and of good government; hence the law has wisely thrown restrictions about the manner of conveying or incumbering the homestead. If the nature of these restrictions is such that they cannot be observed in the case of a conveyance by the husband to the wife, it follows that the husband cannot convey his homestead rights to the wife, rather than that the conveyance shall prove effectual notwithstanding its failure to comply with the conditions of the statute. It does not follow that the deed to the wife is a nullity. It may have operated to vest in the wife the legal title to the property, but the property continued still to be the homestead of the family. The declaration in the deed of the intention to surrender homestead rights and allow the wife the absolute disposition of the property is ineffectual, because not expressed in the manner required by the law. After the conveyance the homestead remained, with the title, it may be conceded, in the wife."

In the case of Riehl v. Bingenheimer, 28 Wis. 84, the deed was to a third party in trust for the wife, and the court said: "It is contended by counsel for the plaintiff that the conveyance by Paul Bingenheimer to Judge Paine is void, because the premises sought to be conveyed by it were a homestead, and the wife of the grantor did not join in such conveyance. The statute then was, and still is, that a mortgage or other alienation of a homestead by the owner thereof, if a married man, shall not be valid without the signature of the wife to the same. This statute was enacted to protect the wife, and to enable her to protect her family, in the possession and enjoyment of a homestead, after one had been acquired by her husband; but evidently it was not intended to interpose obstacles in the way of the conveyance of such homestead to the wife, or to the wife and children, with the consent and approval of the wife, whatever might be the form of such conveyance. Under the circumstances of this case we are of the opinion that the conveyance to Judge Paine was not an alienation of the homestead, within the meaning and intent of such statute. The express trust which was attempted to be created by that conveyance is clearly a passive one, and the grantee took no title by virtue of the conveyance, but the legal estate vested immediately in the defendant, the plaintiff, and Elizabeth, to the extent of the estate therein granted to them respectively."

It is claimed by the respondent that the homestead laws of other states differ from our own and for that reason the decisions of the courts of such states cannot be relied upon. But we find that the statutes in the states referred to are the same, in principle, as the Code of this state, in respect to the power and manner of alienating the property. However this may be, we should not hesitate to hold such a conveyance to be valid, independent of authority. That such conveyances should be upheld seems to us to be eminently just, and entirely consistent with the letter and spirit of the homestead laws. We can see no just reason for permitting the husband to question his own conveyance of the property, and, as no one else is complaining, or could be injured thereby, the same must be upheld.

The respondent makes the point that this was a mere gift, and, the mode of making it being incomplete, it cannot be enforced. If the gift were not perfectly executed, and this were an attempt to compel a specific performance, the rule invoked would be applicable. But as we have held that the execution of the conveyance was perfect without the signature and acknowledgment of the wife and the action is by the grantor to avoid the same, the point is not well made.

2. We pass to the question as to the effect of the divorce upon the title. At the time the divorce proceeding was instituted and the decree rendered therein, the property was a homestead upon the separate property of the wife by virtue of the declaration by the husband and his subsequent conveyance to her. There was no adjudication as to their rights in the property. In that proceeding the rights of the parties to the property might have been determined, and, if the plaintiff had shown any just ground for setting the whole or any part of the same off to him, this might have been done for a limited time, under subdivision 4, § 146, Civil Code, which provides that "if a homestead had been selected from the separate property of either, it shall be assigned to the former owner of such property, subject to the power of the court to assign it for a limited period to the innocent party." The husband having conveyed the property to the wife by a valid deed, prior to the commencement of the divorce suit, she must be regarded as the "former owner" under this section, and entitled to the property subject only to the power of the court to set the same apart to the husband for a limited time, if he appeared to be the innocent party.

It affirmatively appears from the record before us that the plaintiff was not the innocent party in the divorce suit, but, if he had been, his only right was to ask to have the property set apart to him in that proceeding. Not having done so, her title to the property became absolute, as between them, from the granting of the divorce.

As the facts are fully found by the court, and the error is in the conclusions of law drawn therefrom, a new trial is unnecessary.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with instructions to the court below to enter judgment on the findings in favor of the defendant.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

78 Cal. 317

People v. Lee Chuck. (No. 20,483.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 5, 1889.)

1. Homicide—Trial—Harmless Error.
In a prosecution for homicide, a witness testified, in answer to a question as to how long he had known defendant, that he knew him before he killed the decedent. Held, that error in allowing such testimony was harmless, where it appeared that the killing was an undisputed fact.

2. Same—Alibi—Evidence.
Evidence that defendant was found several hours after the homicide, and after a warrant had been issued for him, apparently in a place of hiding, was not admissible to disprove an alibi.

3. Same.
It appeared that other persons than defendant were present at the homicide, for whom warrants of arrest had been issued, on the charge that they were guilty of complicity in the crime, and the defense introduced evidence to show that the homicide had been committed by defendant and such other persons in self-defense. Held, that the admission of evidence that, although every effort had been made, such other persons could not be found, the evidence being offered to show the guilt of defendant, was fatal error.

4. Same—Trial—Argument of Counsel.
In such case, where the attorney for the state, in arguing for the admission of such evidence, commented at length upon it, with the evident intent of prejudicing the minds of the jury against defendant, the refusal of the judge to prevent his remarks was error.

5. Same—Misconduct of Jury.
The drinking of intoxicating liquor by a jury while deliberating on their verdict, in a prosecution for murder, is cause for setting aside a verdict of guilty; and it is not necessary to show that defendant was actually injured thereby, though Pen. Code Cal. § 1181, subd. 3, provides for a new trial where the misconduct prevents a fair consideration of the case.[1] Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

6. Same.
Where a new trial is sought on the ground of the misconduct of the jury, the cross-examination of parties filing affidavits in support of the verdict of the jury is within the discretion of the trial court.

7. Same—Appeal—Objections not Made Below.
The alleged misconduct of a juror, which was not made one of the grounds for a new trial, will not be considered on appeal.

8. Same—Instructions.
Where an instruction on a certain point, standing alone, is open to criticism, but the instructions, taken as a whole, fairly state the law on such point, there is no ground of objection.

9. Same—Objections to Evidence.
A ruling of the court in favor of the admission of evidence, on an objection being made to a question asked of a witness, will not be reviewed, where the record does not show that the question was answered.

10. Witness—Examination—Evidence on Former Trial.
Where a witness is interrogated with regard to statements made by him at a former trial, he has the right, if such statements were reduced to writing, to have the writing presented to him, and read.
McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Toohy, Judge.

Geo. A. Knight and H. H. Lowenthal, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for appellee.

Works, J. The appellant was charged, tried, and convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death. He moved the court below for a new trial, which was denied, and now prosecutes this appeal.

Several grounds for reversal are urged, which may be grouped and considered as follows: (1) Alleged erroneous rulings of the court below on the admission and exclusion of evidence; (2) misconduct of the district attorney;

---

[1] Contra, see Burgess v. Territory, (Mont.) 19 Pac. Rep. 558; Rider v. State, (Tex.) 9 S. W. Rep. 688, and note.

(3) misconduct of one of the jurors in visiting and inspecting certain premises during the trial, unaccompanied by the officer of the court, and without leave, (4) misconduct of the jury in drinking intoxicating liquors while deliberating upon their verdict; (5) error in the instructions of the court.

The evidence is not all in the record. The bill of exceptions recites, substantially, that there was evidence tending to show that the appellant shot and killed one Yen Yuen, on one of the streets of the city of San Francisco; that he attempted to escape, was followed by an officer, whom he also attempted to shoot, was arrested, and found to be armed with four revolvers, and protected by a coat of mail, made of links of steel, worn under his clothing; that at the time of the shooting he was accompanied by several other persons, who also ran away immediately afterwards; that the deceased had a pistol on his person which was fully loaded, none of the chambers having been discharged. There is no general statement showing what the defendant proved in his defense, or its tendency.

1. During the cross-examination of one Chow Hin, a witness for the prosecution, he was asked by the defense how long he had known the defendant. He answered: "Several years ago, because it was on last year six months 28 day that he killed Yen Yuen, and I knew him about a year before that." The defendant moved the court to strike out so much of the answer as referred to the killing of Yen Yuen by the defendant, on the ground that it was not responsive to the question. The motion should have been sustained, but, as the record comes to us, we cannot say that any injury could have resulted from the ruling of the court. The killing of the deceased by the defendant may have been, and we infer from the matters appearing in the record was, an undisputed, though perhaps not an admitted, fact, the defense being that the killing was justifiable. If so, the statement of the witness was harmless.

The same witness was asked whether he did not testify to certain things before the police court, and answered that he did; whereupon the prosecution asked him whether he did not at the same time make certain other statements. To this the defendant objected, and the objection was overruled, but there is nothing in the record to show that the question was answered by the witness. To render a ruling in favor of the admission of evidence material, the record must show that the question objected to was answered, thereby carrying the objectionable evidence to the jury. It is unnecessary, therefore, for us to determine whether the evidence that might have been elicited was competent or not.

The defense, on cross-examination of one Sorr Sinn, asked whether he did not on a former trial of this case make certain statements, when the following occurred: The district attorney objected on the authority of People v. Ching Hing Chang, 74 Cal. 389, 16 Pac. Rep. 201, holding that whatever the witness might have said at the former trial he had the statutory right to have it presented to him, and read, if in writing. The court remarked to counsel for defendant· I would sustain you if I could reverse the supreme court, but I cannot." As the rule referred to is well established, and one in every respect fair and just, it is fortunate that the court below was not possessed of the power to reverse it. There was no error in this ruling.

The bill of exceptions recites: "Evidence having been introduced by the prosecution tending to show that Lee Chuck, the defendant, and Quan Gee and Chung Kit and Chung Wye and Chung Sam were present at and participated in the killing of Yen Yuen, the deceased, the defense then introduced evidence tending to show an alibi for Quan Gee and Chung Kit, and also tending to show that Lee Chuck and Chung Wye and Chung Sam were first attacked by Yen Yuen and Chow Hin and others, and that Lee Chuck and Chung Wye and Chung Sam shot in self-defense at Yen Yuen and his party." The prosecution then proved by the witness Cox that he was an officer; that he had received certain warrants of arrest for the persons above named, and that he had never been able to serve two of them, although he had made every effort to find the parties, and the warrants not served were offered in evidence, and excluded; but the court permitted the witness to testify that he had searched diligently for the parties who had not been found, and that if he could have found them he would have arrested them on the charge set out in them, which the district attorney had openly stated to the jury was the same offense for which the defendant was being tried. As to the other party named, the prosecution was permitted to prove that he had been arrested where he had been found several hours after the shooting, in a small "cubby hole" at the top of a house near the place of the shooting. The witness was permitted to testify minutely to the nature of the room, its furniture, the means of reaching it, with the view, we suppose, of showing that he was there in hiding to avoid arrest. The evidence was objected to by the defense on the general grounds that it was immaterial and incompetent. For what purpose or upon what theory the evidence was admitted does not clearly appear. We can only infer it from the statement of the district attorney, made in support of his offer, which will be set out hereafter in connection with another point made. His position, in brief, was that as to those who were not found it tended to show that they were not innocent and acting in self-defense, as claimed, or they would not have run away; and that the fact that they were not present to explain what occurred at the time of the shooting was a circumstance against the defendant, and was "offered to show the utter improbability of this self-defense fabrication; that is why this is offered."

There is nothing to show that the defendant was in any way responsible for their absence, or that he was not as desirous that they should be present at the prosecution. This is to permit the act or conduct of one party, after a crime is claimed to have been committed, indicating his guilt, to be proved as against another in no way connected with such act or conduct. We are wholly unable to see upon what rule of law or justice such a ruling can be upheld. People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y 427, 14 N. E. Rep. 319, is a case in point. There the defendant was charged with bribery. The prosecutor, as a part of his evidence, offered to show by a detective officer that he was employed to serve subpœnas upon three other parties, all of whom the district attorney claimed to be material and competent witnesses, and to show, further, that the detective was unable to find them in the state, but did find one of them in Canada, and learned that the others were there, but did not see them. These persons were named in the indictment as co-defendants with Sharp, and the evidence already in tended to show that they were mediaries between the persons offending against the statutes relating to bribery. It was not claimed by the prosecution that the defendant was privy to their absence. The district attorney disclaimed any intention of proving the flight of those persons as co-conspirators, and so make use of their absence as evidence of guilt, or an admission of their conduct that the accusation against the defendant was true, but for the purpose of explaining his inability to produce them as witnesses. In the case before us the district attorney openly avowed that the evidence was offered to disprove the defendant's defense, or, in other words, to prove his guilt. In the case referred to the court says: "The evidence already in was, so far as Sharp was concerned, altogether circumstantial, but tended to show that the persons named, or some of them, were qualified from actual knowledge to give evidence bearing more or less directly upon the very point in issue. We think evidence of their absence was inadmissible. It could have no legitimate bearing upon the issue, and the danger is very great that such testimony will prejudice a party against whom it is offered. It may be and frequently is admissible in answer to evidence from the other side, which would naturally call for an explanation. But the absence out of the jurisdiction of the court of an associate, or one seemingly connected with the defendant in the act charged, is easily construed as evidence of guilt, and, unless the occasion calls for such proof, it should not be allowed. It is an old maxim that 'he confesses the fault who avoids the trial,' but in its application, even to the fugitive, there is great danger of error. A man may avoid the trial for many motives besides consciousness of guilt, but, however actuated, his conduct can in no degree, in a court of justice, reflect upon another. Its admission in this case was virtually saying to the jury: 'There is better evidence, and it might be had from the defendant's associates. It is not the fault of the prosecution that the evidence is not before you, but because of the voluntary act of those who, with the defendant, stand charged with the offense.' Thus the non-production of the witnesses is made to supply the place of proof of the issue; with that issue the evidence has no possible connection. The rule is that where a party to an issue on trial has proof in his power which, if produced, would render material, but doubtful, facts certain, the law presumes against him if he omits to produce that proof, and authorizes a jury to resolve all doubts adversely to his defense. But the rule cannot be applied unless it appears that the proof, whether it is a living witness or paper, is within his power. It is easy to see that the evidence offered here might be used for an ulterior purpose, although not pressed by the prosecution, yet entertained and made effective by the jury, and there certainly could be no presumption that the prosecution had the power to produce any particular witness, certainly not one of those named, nor did the law require it of them. It is therefore impossible to find any reason for or lawful purpose to be gained by the proof offered, and its admission was a very dangerous innovation upon the general rule, which excludes it as irrelevant to to the issue. * * * Proof even of the absence of these persons was inadmissible. But that was not all. The proof was not only of their absence, but of unavailing search by a detective, the service of a subpœna upon some of them, and the failure to obey its mandate. Under the circumstances of the case the ruling of the court in this instance may not have been of much importance, and upon it alone we should not grant a new trial. But the legal principle which requires relevant and material evidence, and admits no other, is important; and, however serious the charge against an accused may be, and however great the evil it uncovers, he cannot properly be made the subject of a judicial sentence, unless the crime is substantiated according to the established rules of evidence."

It will be seen that the evidence improperly admitted was held not to be of sufficient importance to warrant a reversal of the case, but it must be borne in mind that the evidence there was not offered to prove guilt, while here it was offered for that purpose, and so went to the jury. Having gone to the jury for that purpose, its injurious effect upon the rights of the defendant must be apparent. We hold that this was a fatal error, for which a new trial should have been granted.

As to the evidence of the arrest of the party who was found by the officer, it was claimed by the district attorney to have been competent to disprove an alibi attempted to be proved by the defendant. If competent at all for this purpose, the proof of his presence near the scene of the alleged crime was all that the prosecution was entitled to. The fact that there was a warrant for his arrest for the crime for which the defendant was on trial, and that he was found under circumstances tending to show that he was in hiding, and seeking to avoid arrest, were wholly immaterial. But we are quite clear that it was not competent for that purpose. There is nothing to show that his whereabouts tended in any way to establish the presence of the defendant at the place of the killing, and it appeared that the time to which the testimony referred was several hours after the homicide occurred. It was error to admit the evidence.

2. It is claimed that the assistant district attorney was guilty of misconduct which prevented the defendant from having a fair trial. At the time the warrants above referred to were offered and under discussion, the following proceedings took place: "Assistant District Attorney. The defense set up here is the plea of self-defense. They claim that Yen Yuen, Chow Hin, and other persons assaulted Lee Chuck, Chung Sam, and Chung Wye, and under such circumstances that would make Chow Hin the principal in an attempt to murder,—murder by way of lying in wait, which would be murder in the first degree. We now offer to show that upon the same day— Attorney for Defendant. I object to the counsel's statement, and as to his offer of proof. He offered the warrants, and the objection is before the court. Assistant District Attorney. I am answering your objection. We offer to show that upon the same day, the 28th day of July, Chow Hin, who, it is alleged, picked up Yen Yuen's pistol; Chow Hin, the unsuccessful murderer of Lee Chuck; and Chow Hin, the person who will be rated here as a highbinder and a gambler,—Chow Hin went down to the proper police authorities, and made complaint against Chung Sam and Chung Wye, and had warrants issued for their arrest for murder; that these warrants were placed by the chief of police in the hands of the most skillful detective in the Chinese quarter. Attorney for Defendant. I most strenuously object to the statement of counsel as to the warrants, and what disposition was made of the warrants. He offered certain warrants against Chung Sam and Chung Wye, and I say it is improper to prejudice the jury by speaking of cases,—of any other person except the defendant. The object is to prejudice the minds of the jurors against the defendant. The Court. Proceed. Attorney for Defendant. I except to the ruling of the court on behalf of the defendant. Assistant District Attorney. I offer to show further that this skillful detective officer, who has had several years' experience, who has had eight or ten years' experience among the Chinese, searched high and searched low, and searched every Chinese outgoing steamer which he could search, and has not been able to discover either Chung Sam or Chung Wye, the innocent attacked parties who were with Lee Chuck at the time that Yen Yuen and Chow Hin and Fong Fat and those other people made this malicious attack upon them with pistols, on Washington street. We want to go to the jury on that fact, and we want to ask why these men are not here. We want to know why they should run away from here; why they do not make their appearance here, if they were attacked; why these men who took part in this conflict do not come here to this court, and explain how it was, of all the people in the world, Chung Sam and Chung Wye, the men who were with Lee Chuck. Attorney for Defendant. I protest now, in the name of justice, that the district attorney be not allowed to proceed in the manner in which he does. It is improper testimony, and an illegitimate manner to produce testimony before the jury. Assistant District Attorney. It is not in this view that this testimony is offered. Attorney for Defendant. I protest against it, and I want the record to show it. Assistant District Attorney. It is offered to show the utter improbability of this self-defense fabrication; that is why this is offered."

We have been called upon many times to caution, sometimes to rebuke, prosecuting officers for the overzealous performance of their duties. They seem to forget that it is their sworn duty to see that the defendant has a fair and impartial trial, and that he be not convicted except by competent and legitimate evidence. Equally with the court the district attorney, as the representative of law and justice, should be fair and impartial. He should remember that it is not his sole duty to convict, and that to use his official position to obtain a verdict by illegitimate and unfair means is to bring his office and the courts into distrust. We make due allowance for the zeal which is the natural result of such a legal battle as this, and for the desire of every lawyer to win his case, but these should be overcome by the conscientious desire of a sworn officer of the court to do his duty, and not go beyond it.

We regret to say that the assistant district attorney seems to have failed, in this instance, to apply this salutary check to his conduct. The evidence he was seeking to have admitted was clearly incompetent. What was said was not only an argument in favor of its admission, but as to its effect. The evident intent was to prejudice the jury against the defendant by commenting upon the conduct of others, over whose action he was not shown to have any control, and that in language the impropriety of which is apparent at a glance. The court was appealed to time and again to prevent it, but declined to do so. While we might hesitate to reverse the case on this ground alone, we hold it to have been error. See, as bearing on this point, People v. Mitchell, 62 Cal. 411, and cases cited; State v. Smith, 75 N. C. 306.

Questions of this kind usually arise out of the closing arguments of counsel, but the rule must be the same at whatever stage of the cause the improper language is used.

3. It is claimed that there was misconduct on the part of the jury which entitled the defendant to a new trial. As to the alleged misconduct of one of the jurors in visiting and examining certain premises unattended by an officer, and alone, it was not made one of the grounds for a new trial, and for that reason cannot be considered here.

The grave charge is that the jury drank intoxicating liquors while they were deliberating upon their verdict. The affidavits show, beyond question, that the case was given to the jury at 3:35 o'clock in the afternoon; that they had failed to agree up the hour of 6:30, when they were taken, in charge of a deputy-sheriff and bailiff, to a restaurant for dinner; that they were served with a "French dinner," and with other refreshments, partook of a half-dozen quart bottles of claret wine and a half bottle of cognac, the latter being used as flavoring for their coffee; that they were about an hour at the restaurant, when they returned to their room, and within two hours agreed upon the verdict that was returned into court. There are affidavits showing that when they returned from their dinner their conduct and appearance, or that of some of them, were such as to indicate that they had been indulging in intoxicating liquors, and it is alleged that their having done so resulted in their agreeing upon the verdict. The two officers in charge make affidavit that none of the jurors were intoxicated, or gave any evidence of being in that condition. Each of the jurors makes an affidavit in which he admits that they drank wine, and took cognac in their coffee, but he does not know how many bottles. Their affidavits are, we believe, substantially, if not precisely, alike, and in each it is said: "And this affiant further avers that upon the said occasion this affiant was not drunk or intoxicated, and that this affiant's intelligence and good judgment were not obscured or affected in any way by intoxicating drinks of any character, and, as far as his observation extended, no one of said jury became drunk or intoxicated upon said occasion, and that the intelligence and good judgment of no one of said jury became or was obscured by intoxicating drinks upon said occasion;" and, further, "that he, for himself, did not find any such verdict against the defendant by reason of partaking of the liquor and wine above mentioned; and this affiant repels and repudiates the truth of any insinuation that he, or, so far as his observation extended, any of the members of the jury, found any such verdict against the defendant by reason of partaking of the liquor and wine above mentioned." It appears, therefore, that the amount of liquors mentioned was consumed. Whether it was equally divided, one pint of the wine to each juror, does not appear. If any juror drank less, he has refrained from saying so, perhaps out of delicacy for the feelings of his associates, who would be convicted thereby of having taken more.

The learned attorney general contends that this was not such misconduct as should reverse the case, because the wine was "California claret," and the cognac was used as a "flavoring for coffee." Whether he intends to insinuate that California claret is too weak to intoxicate, or to claim that to drink wine of our own make should not be treated as misconduct, does not appear; nor does he show that cognac is less effective when adulterated with coffee. The affidavits show that the wine was intoxicating, and the prosecution introduces the affidavit of the proprietor of the restaurant to show its age, quality, and probable effects. He says: "Said claret wine was a good quality of California Zinfandel wine, of four years of age;" and that he has "been engaged in the restaurant business for a period of ten years past; that he has had great experience with wines, and their effects, and that he scouts as foolish and absurd the idea that twelve full-grown men could be seriously or at all affected by using—if they did use—six bottles of claret at dinner, with a little cognac in their coffee afterwards."

It must be conceded that this is some evidence that the whole twelve could not have been seriously or at all affected, and perhaps that none of them were so affected, assuming that the wine and cognac were equally divided. We are thus led to consider, at the outset, whether this court should stop to inquire what was the effect of the drinking of these liquors. That the jury drank the liquors is not denied. The sole question raised is whether the mind of any member of the jury was so affected thereby as to impair his intelligence or judgment, or render him less competent to transact with clearness and impartiality the grave duty resting upon him. It is infinitely more important that the channels of justice be kept pure and untainted than that the verdict against this defendant shall be maintained. The question is not a new one. In some cases it has been held that for a juror to take a drink of liquor during the trial was sufficient ground for granting a new trial. The case before us presents quite a different question. Here the trial had closed. The life of the defendant was in the hands of the jury. They were deliberating upon a question of the gravest consequence to the defendant, to society, and to themselves. They had, up to the time of partaking of the liquors, failed to agree, and soon after agreed upon and returned a verdict that, if sustained, must send the defendant to the gallows. It seem to us that if the fact that the jury drank intoxicating liquors, without proof that it affected their minds, or the conclusion reached by them, could be held sufficient to set aside the verdict in any case, no stronger case than the one before us could be presented. We are of the opinion that where the proof of the drinking is clear and undisputed, and that it was done while the jury were actually deliberating upon their verdict, in a capital case, a verdict of conviction should not be allowed to stand. This is our conviction, independent of authority, but the great weight of authority is to the same effect. People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, 183; Leighton v. Sargent, 31 N. H. 119; Brant v. Fowler, 7 Cow. 562; People v. Douglass, 4 Cow. 26; Wilson v. Abrahams, 1 Hill, 207; Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168; State v. Baldy, 17 Iowa, 39; Ryan v. Harrow, 27 Iowa, 494; Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496; State v. Bullard, 16 N. H. 139; Pelham v. Page, 6 Ark. 535; Gregg v. McDaniel, 4 Har. (Del.) 367.

In the case of People v. Douglass, supra, the court said: "It will not do to weigh and examine the quantity which may have been taken by the juror, nor the effect produced." And in Leighton v. Sargent: "For the cause that brandy was furnished to the jury, and drank by several of them, while deliberating upon the cause, after retiring to form their verdict, we think the verdict must be set aside. The quantity drank was probably small, but we cannot consent that that fact should make a difference."

So in State v. Baldy: "The parties have a clear right to the cool, dispassionate and unbiased judgment of each juror, applied to the determination of the issues in the cause; and the use in any degree of that which stimulates the passions, and has a tendency to lessen the soundness of judgment, is itself conclusive evidence that the party who has the right to the exercise of that dispassionate judgment has been prejudiced in not having it, as perfect as it existed in the juror when accepted, applied to the determination of the cause.

If this is true as a general rule, and as applicable to civil cases, a fortiori is the rule applicable in criminal cases, and especially in this case, in which the offense charged involves obedience to passions stimulated more than others by the use of spirituous liquors, and of course, in its correct determination, requiring the most careful guarding against undue influence from them." And in Davis v. State it is said: "The bailiff, we may presume, had been sworn, in the usual form, to take charge of the jury, and keep them together without meat or drink, water only excepted, etc. The jurors had taken upon them an oath well and truly to try the cause, etc., and had been solemnly sent out to deliberate upon questions involving the life of an unfortunate fellow-being. If misbehavior, such as that shown by the affidavits, and which is without attempted palliation or justification, should not be regarded as sufficient to set aside the verdict, it would be a stigma upon the law and a disgrace to the courts. We do not mean to say that the court should enter upon the question as to how far such conduct was or was not excusable or innocuous. It will be time to decide that question when it shall come up. In this case it does not arise. We concede that on this point the authorities are not uniform. But as to the sufficiency of such misbehavior, unexplained, to set aside the verdict, the authorities are abundant and satisfactory." Also in State v. Bullard: "There had indeed been other acts of misconduct in the case, but we think that the old law forbidding the use of refreshments at all to jurors deliberating upon a verdict, although relaxed materially from its early severity, has not yet so far yielded as to exempt them wholly from the control of the court in this particular. And we are of the opinion that the use of stimulating liquors by a jury deliberating upon a verdict in a criminal case, without first showing a case requiring such use, and procuring leave of court for that purpose, is a sufficient cause for setting aside a verdict found against the prisoner in such circumstances, whether the use was an intemperate one or otherwise."

The respondent cites the following authorities not already referred to as opposed to the doctrine that the mere fact that the jury drank intoxicating liquors is sufficient to set aside the verdict, without a showing that it did or might have affected the result: Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 3; People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 31; People v. Brannigan, 21 Cal. 339; People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 349; People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 625; People v. Turner, Id. 370; People v. Anthony, 56 Cal. 397; People v. Lyle, 4 Pac. Rep. 977; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 999; State v. Caulfield, 23 La. Ann. 148; Davis v. People, 19 Ill. 74; Thompson's Case, 8 Grat. 657; State v. Upton, 20 Mo. 398; Rowe v. State, 11 Humph. 492; Roman v. State, 41 Wis. 312; Westmoreland v. State, 45 Ga. 225; Kee v. State, 28 Ark. 155; Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 382.

We have given these authorities our careful attention, and find that, while they support the general rule that misconduct of the jury should not avoid a verdict unless it appears to have injured the complaining party, in our judgment they do not shake the well-established and salutary rule above laid down, when applied to a capital case, where the misconduct occurred while the jury were actually deliberating upon their verdict.

Section 1181 of the Penal Code, relied upon by the respondent, provides (subdivision 3) that a new trial may be granted to the defendant "when the jury has separated without leave of the court, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict, or being guilty of any misconduct by which a fair and due consideration of the case has been prevented." It is urged upon us that the section referred to sets forth and limits the kind of misconduct for which a new trial may be granted, and that to authorize the setting aside of the verdict it must affirmatively appear that a fair and due consideration of the case is prevented. Such a construction of the statute would compel a defendant, in every case of this kind, to show affirmatively that he had been actually injured by the misconduct complained of. None of the cases cited go to that extent, and, if they did, we should not be inclined to follow them. That the jury in this case was guilty of misconduct we presume none will deny. The wrongful act committed was one the direct tendency and natural consequence of which was to affect their capacity to perform their duties. Such being the nature of the misconduct complained of, and the act being committed at the most critical time in the trial, when a cool head and unclouded brain was so essential to the preservation of the rights of the defendant, to allow the verdict to stand could not, in our judgment, be justified by any rule of law, reason, or justice.

Of the many cases cited by respondent there is but one where the punishment was death, and in none of them was the liquor drank while the jury were deliberating upon their verdict. In most, if not all, of them, it is conceded that the act was reprehensible, and should be punished; but they say that as the act was committed at a time during the progress of the trial, when it affirmatively appeared that no injury could have resulted, the verdict should not be disturbed. Thus in Russell v. State, supra, the court said: "No cause can be more baneful to the purity of a verdict than the use of intoxicating drinks by the jury while engaged in their deliberations. Nothing can be more revolting to a sense of justice or of decency than the idea of the life or liberty of a citizen depending upon the maudlin deliberations of drunken jurors. The parties in a civil suit, and a fortiori the defendant in a criminal prosecution, have the right to demand that the case shall be tried, not only by jurors who are not drunk, but by men whose minds are not even influenced or clouded by liquor. Intoxicating liquors as a beverage, therefore, should be rigidly and carefully excluded from the jury-room; and, if absolutely necessary for medical purposes, should be administered only in small portions, upon the prescription of a physician, and under the sanction of the judge. But, while the introduction of such liquors in any other manner is highly censurable, and should be the subject of exemplary punishment, it will not vitiate the verdict, if it can be affirmatively shown not to have injuriously affected the deliberations of the jury. The trial lasted five days. The liquor was given to the jury on the night of the second and early in the morning of the third day. The state had not then closed its testimony in chief, nor the defendant commenced his. The quantity of liquor was small, and a portion of the second supply was drunk. Several of the jury are proved to have been affected by the spoilt beef, and it is stated that a number of them partook of the liquor. The quantity was therefore presumably insufficient to have seriously affected the minds of any of them. In addition, it was received at night and early in the morning, some hours before they were called upon in court to listen to testimony, and two days before they retired to consider their verdict. Lastly, it is proved that 'their conduct during the whole trial was marked by great dignity, decorum, and propriety.' Under these circumstances, we think it may be fairly said that it has been affirmatively shown that the verdict was not affected by the liquor."

In the case of People v. Lyle, supra, this court said: "The legal presumption is that jurors perform their duty in accordance with the oath they have taken, (People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 31;) and that presumption is not overcome by proof of the mere fact that during the trial, which lasted over thirty days, two or three of the jurors, after the adjournment of the court for the day, drank a few glasses of liquor at the expense of the district attorney; that one of them partook of a dinner at the house of the same officer under circumstances which rendered the act of invitation necessary, and of a supper at the hotel of his associate counsel under like circumstances. Such acts, however improper or indiscreet, could not in themselves have affected the impartiality of any one of the jurors, or disqualified him from exercising his powers of reason and judgment, and they will not warrant a court in setting aside a verdict. 'While the law,' says Chief Justice SHARKEY, 'is rigidly vigilant in guarding and preserving the purity of jury trials, yet it will not, for light or trivial causes, impugn the integrity of juries, or question the solemnity and impartiality of verdicts.' Hare v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 187. It is the settled rule that to warrant the setting aside of a verdict and granting a new trial, upon the ground of irregularities and misconduct of a jury, it must be either shown as a fact or presumed as a conclusion of law that injury resulted from such misconduct. When it is clear that the party against whom the verdict has been found was not injured by the misconduct, the verdict will not be disturbed."

It must be conceded that this case supports the contention of the respondent, but the facts are so different that it should have but little weight; and so far as it declares, in general terms, that to warrant the setting aside of a verdict, and granting a new trial, upon the ground of misconduct of a jury, it must be either shown as a fact, or presumed as a conclusion of law, that injury resulted from such misconduct, it is not in harmony with the cases on the question before us, nor does it coincide with our views on the subject, when applied to the circumstances of this case. In the case of People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, 186, (decided by the court in bank, all of the justices concurring,) it was said: "It should be added here that, if it is necessary that intoxicating liquors of any kind should be drank by a juror, application for leave to do so should be made to the court, who can make such allowance as will be proper. Jurors should not be allowed to judge for themselves in this matter. A defendant in a criminal case should not be called on to consent; and in any case when the party consents, if the juror becomes intoxicated, the verdict should not stand. The purity and correctness of the verdict should be guarded in every way, that the administration of justice should not be subjected to scandal and distrust." And it was there held that liquors furnished the jury were not suitable food such as they were allowed to have by section 1136 of the Penal Code. The court below should have granted the defendant a new trial on this ground.

4. The appellant complains of one of the instructions of the court, in which it was attempted to define the right of self-defense. This instruction, taken alone, may be subject to criticism; but, taking the instructions as a whole, we think the law on that point was fully and fairly stated.

5. The appellant asked leave of the court to cross-examine the parties who filed affidavits in support of the verdict of the jury, which was denied, and this is urged as error. The defendant was not entitled to such cross-examination as a matter of right. The court might, in its discretion, have allowed it, but the refusal to do so was not error.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of Mr. Justice WORKS, except upon one point. It appears that after the case had been submitted to the jury, and they had been for three or four hours deliberating of their verdict, they were by direction of the court sent in custody of two sworn officers to dinner. They were taken by the officers to a public French restaurant, where, in accordance with the invariable custom of the place, they were served with six quart bottles (a half-bottle each) of California claret, which they consumed with their dinner, and a small modicum of brandy, which they used with their coffee. In other words, they had, under the sanction of the court, and in the presence and custody of its officers, an ordinary dinner, in a respectable house, embracing only the usual concomitants of that meal at that place. As to whether the jurors were at all affected by the wine and brandy so partaken, the affidavits were conflicting, but certainly there was ample evidence to warrant the judge of the superior court in finding that none of them were affected; and unless we are warranted in holding, as mere matter of law, that any drinking of wine by a jury, after retiring for deliberation, however moderate, and whether sanctioned by the trial court or not, is misconduct per se, or unless we can find as matter of fact that men who use wine and brandy in the manner and to the extent these jurors did, and as thousands of men do every day without impeachment of their sobriety or decorum, are thereby necessarily deprived of their ordinary judgment and discretion, we cannot say that this jury was guilty of misconduct, or the defendant prejudiced in this particular. There is, it seems to me, a clear distinction in principle between this case, in which the jurors did, openly and without attempt at concealment, what was apparently, if not expressly, authorized by the trial court, and that class of cases in which jurors have themselves clandestinely conveyed intoxicating liquors into the jury-room, or where, with their connivance, it has been smuggled in by other unauthorized persons. In such cases the means of procuring the liquor amounts in itself to grave misconduct, and evinces a total disregard on the part of the jurors of their obligations and of the rights of the parties. By reason of this distinction, we are not, in my opinion, constrained by the authorities to hold, and I am unwilling to say that the jury in this case was guilty of misconduct.

I dissent: McFARLAND, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 64

CARTER v. PAIGE. (No. 12,637)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1889.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD.
   On appeal from a judgment on the judgment roll alone, which shows that the judgment was entered on default of defendant to answer or demur to an amended complaint, the objection that the amended complaint was not filed within the time provided in the order allowing the amendment, and that it does not affirmatively appear that the time was extended, will not be considered, as the order allowing the amendment is no part of the judgment roll.
2. PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—JUDGMENT—VACATING—APPEAL.
   The fact that the amended complaint was filed after the time prescribed is an irregularity merely, and can be reviewed only on a motion to set aside the judgment, and on an appeal from the order denying the motion.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; CHARLES H. MARKS, Special Judge.
D. S. Terry, for appellant. Stanton L. Carter, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Plaintiff had judgment in the court below. Defendant appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The judgment roll shows that, after defendant had answered the original complaint, an amended complaint was filed on the 6th day of June, 1887. There was no answer to the amended complaint. On July 23d—about 47 days after the filing of the amended complaint—the court rendered judgment for plaintiff. This judgment commences as follows: "In this action the defendant, Timothy Paige, having been regularly served with process, and having failed to appear and answer to the plaintiff's amended complaint filed herein on June 6, 1887, and served on defendant's counsel on June 2, 1887, and the legal time for answering or demurring to said amended complaint having expired, and no answer or demurrer having been filed to said amended complaint, the default of said defendant, Timothy Paige, in the premises, was duly entered herein according to law on the 15th day of July, 1887, upon demand of the plaintiff's attorney in writing filed herein." It then recites that plaintiff introduced evidence upon the matters alleged in the amended complaint; finds from the evidence that all the averments of the said amended complaint are true; and adjudges that plaintiff recover of defendant the sum of $10,500.

There is in the transcript filed by appellant what purports to be an order of the court made April 26, 1887, that "the court grants plaintiff ten days in which to file an amended complaint, and the defendant ten days thereafter in which to file an answer to said amended complaint." The indorsement upon the amended complaint shows that it was not filed within the 10 days. And the point (and the only point) made by appellant is that as the amended complaint was not filed within the 10 days, and as it does not affirmatively appear that there was an extension of time within which to file it, given either by the court or by stipulation of parties, therefore the filing of the amended complaint was unauthorized, and defendant could disregard it; the clerk had no right to enter a default; and the judgment was erroneous.

But, in the first place, on this appeal we can look only at the judgment roll; and the order allowing the amended complaint is no part of it. Code Civil Proc. § 670; Livermore v. Webb, 56 Cal. 489. The judgment roll does not show want of jurisdiction, or error, or even irregularity. Whether a default was or was not entered by the clerk was immaterial. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 316.

Moreover, if we could consider the order allowing the amendment within 10 days, the fact that the amended complaint was filed after that time would not render it a nullity. It would be, at most, only an irregularity; and it could be reviewed only upon a record made on a motion in the court below to set aside the judgment, and on an appeal from an order denying such motion. Bailey v. Sloan, 65 Cal. 387, 4 Pac. Rep. 349. See, also, Lower Kings, etc., Co. v. Kings, etc., Co., 67 Cal. 577, 8 Pac. Rep. 91.

It is unnecessary to consider respondent's objections that the transcript is not properly certified and authenticated, and that it does not contain the whole judgment roll.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 358

CLELAND v. WALBRIDGE. (No. 12,731.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1889.)

APPEAL—PRACTICE—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

An order striking out an amended complaint will not be reviewed where there is no bill of exceptions showing why or upon what showing it was stricken out. The fact that the papers are printed in the transcript, simply marked by the judge as having been read on the hearing, is not sufficient.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; EDWIN SHEARER, Judge.

Action by J. S. Cleland against J. M. Walbridge. From a judgment on an order striking out the second amended comp'aint plaintiff appeals.

J. S. Beard, (E. H. Wakeman, of counsel,) for appellant. H. B. Gillis and H. B. Warren, (A. L. Hart, of counsel,) for respondent.

HAYNE, C. In this case the defendant's demurrer to an amended complaint was sustained. The learned judge filed a document which is really an opinion and order sustaining the demurrer, but which the parties have called a "judgment." Subsequently a second amended complaint was filed, and the defendant filed a demurrer thereto. Apparently no action was taken on this demurrer. Nearly three years afterwards the plaintiff obtained leave to file a third amended complaint. The defendant moved to strike out this last complaint, and the court granted the motion, and ordered judgment for the defendant, which was entered. The plaintiff appeals from this judgment.

It is to be surmised from some papers printed in the transcript that this motion was made and granted upon the ground that the third amended complaint was the same in substance as the one to which a demurrer was sustained. But the papers referred to are not incorporated in a bill of exceptions, but are simply marked by the judge as having been read on the hearing of the motion. This is not sufficient. The order striking out the complaint was not itself appealable, but was reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Swain v. Burnette, 18 Pac. Rep. 394. And in such case there must be a bill of exceptions. Strathern v. Dakin, 63 Cal. 478, and cases cited in section 262, Hayne, New Trials & App.

It is true that the judgment recites that a motion to strike out the third amended complaint was made and granted; and that by reason of the law, and of said order, judgment was given for the defendant. This recital sufficiently informs the appellate court that the complaint was stricken out, and that therefore judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. But it does not show why the pleading was stricken out, or upon what showing; and it must be presumed in support of the judgment that it was properly done, in the absence of a showing to the contrary.

We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

78 Cal. 345

PEOPLE v. PRATT. (No. 20,413.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1889.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—JURISDICTION.
Defendant, a citizen of the United States, while living in a foreign country, under a treaty between the United States and that country, was surrendered to a police agent, and brought to California, on request of the governor, by the foreign government, the United States government having declined to make the request, there being no extradition treaty with the foreign government. Held, that the California court, having jurisdiction of the offense with which defendant was charged, had jurisdiction to try him on his being brought before it, even if the act of the governor in obtaining his return was illegal.

2. NEW TRIAL—IMPEACHMENT OF VERDICT—AFFIDAVITS OF JURY.
Affidavits of jurors, which impeach the verdict, cannot be considered on motion for new trial.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—SETTLING BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REFUSAL.
Where bills of exception were prepared, amendments proposed and left with the judge, and nothing further was done for nearly two years, other bills, not containing the same exceptions, having been settled meanwhile, when application was made to the judge to settle the first bills, evidence that the judge then stated that he knew nothing about the first bills, and that they were not in his possession, does not show such a refusal to settle the bills as to bring the matter within Pen. Code Cal. § 1174, which provides that where the trial judge refuses to allow an exception, the party may apply to the supreme court to prove the same.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

Calvin Pratt appeals from a conviction for forgery, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Pen. Code Cal. § 1174, referred to in the opinion, provides, among other things, that, when a trial judge refuses to allow an exception, the party desiring it may apply to the supreme court by petition to prove the exception.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and J. A. Hosmer, for the people.

Foote, C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of forgery, and has appealed from the judgment rendered, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. After the cause had reached this court upon appeal, the defendant filed a petition under section 1174 of the Penal Code, to have certain bills of exception settled which he claimed had been refused to be allowed by the judge of the court below. It appears that the bills were prepared, amendments proposed, and they were then left with the judge for allowance or settlement. No further attention seems to have been paid to the matter for some time, nearly two years having elapsed since the bills were placed in the hands of the judge, another voluminous bill of exceptions having meanwhile been settled and allowed, which is in the transcript here, but contains none of the exceptions now prayed to be allowed. On the 14th of July, 1888, for the first time, (the case being then here on appeal,) application was made to the trial judge to settle and allow the first bills, when he stated that he knew nothing of them, and that they were not in his possession.

Passing the question as to whether the proceedings instituted by the defendant as to proper notice to the parties concerned are in accordance with the rules usual in the appellate court as to such a matter, it is evident that the defendant has not shown such a refusal on the part of the judge below to settle and allow the bills as brings the matter within the section of the Penal Code, supra. His petition should therefore be denied. Conceding, without deciding, that the special plea to the jurisdiction of the court can be considered now, as also the action of that tribunal in overruling and in refusing to hear evidence to establish it, it appears to us that the court was not in error.

The facts set up in the plea, and the evidence offered, are to the effect that the defendant was living in Japan, as he was entitled to do, as a citizen of the United States, under a treaty existing between these two governments, when, "without any charges having been entered against him, or any legal examination had, as is provided by the laws of Japan or the laws of the United State, he was by force of arms, and against his will, brought thence into the city and county of San Francisco in this state, where he has since been by force of arms detained, and so continues to be. The defendant was not demanded of the Japanese government by the United States government, nor surrendered by the Japanese government to the United States government. On the contrary, the United States government, on being asked by the governor of the state of California to request the Japanese government to deliver up the defendant on the charge set forth in said information, expressly declined to make any request whatever of the Japanese government for the surrender of the defendant, stating in its refusal that the practice of the United States had been and was to refuse to ask or accept the surrender of a fugitive from the United States from any foreign country with which they did not have an extradition treaty." It is then charged that the governor of California, with knowledge of such refusal, and acting as such governor, made a formal request on the Japanese government for the delivery up of the defendant to a police officer of the city and county of San Francisco; that solely in compliance with that request the defendant was against his will forcibly delivered to the police officer, and was brought by him to said city and county. The defendant protested against all these acts, contending that as a citizen of the United States he has a right to reside where he then was, under its treaty with Japan. He also objected because, as he alleged, the governor of California, in his action, had violated the constitution of the United States in making the request which he did of the Japanese government.

The governor of California could not make any treaty with Japan, and seems merely to have made a request that a party charged with a criminal offense, of which the courts of the state had jurisdiction, might be delivered to a police officer of San Francisco, and returned to be tried for his alleged crime to the state whose laws he was asserted to have violated. If, as the defendant claims, the governor had no legal right, as such, to demand and obtain his return to California, then it would seem that he was returned by means of illegal force used by that officer and his assistants, and through the wish of the Japanese government to oblige the governor as being the executive officer of one of the United States. While this might be said in a certain sense to be a violation of the defendant's personal right, and a kidnapping, so to speak, so far as the governor's action is concerned it does not appear that the Japanese government has complained in any way of his act. The matter then resolves itself into this: that, as between the governor and the defendant, the latter has suffered a deprivation of personal liberty in a case where the governor had no legal power to act. The defendant being before the proper court, which had jurisdiction of his offense, it matters not how he may have entered into the presence of the court; it was its duty to try him. "The jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is found is not impaired by the manner in which the accused is brought before it." Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 708, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1208, and cases cited. "It would indeed be a strange conclusion if a party charged with a criminal offense could be excused from answering to the government whose laws he had violated, because other parties had done violence to him, and also committed an offense against the laws of another state." Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 712, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1211; Ex parte Ah Men, 19 Pac. Rep. 381. The governor of the state cannot oust the courts of the commonwealth of their right to try an individual charged with an offense over which they have jurisdiction, because of the fact that he has been instrumental in having the defendant there by violation of his personal rights. It will not do to say that a fugitive from justice can escape the punishment for his crime because the governor of a state may have violated some law. The people of a state are not bound by any illegal act of their governor, nor should they be.

The argument of the defendant to the effect that the state is bound in law and good morals to have this defendant released, and that her courts should so hold, strikes us as being without force. The governor, evidently actuated by the motive that one charged with a high crime should have meted out to him just punishment, may have taken steps to bring him before the bar of a court of justice having jurisdiction of his offense, which are not warranted by law, but that is a matter personal to the governor, with which neither the commonwealth nor the courts have any concern. This is not the case of a defendant who has been extradited for an offense under a treaty existing between the United States government and some foreign power, where it is attempted to try him for some other offense for which he has not been extradited.

The affidavits of the jurors, which were procured to be taken by the defendant for use on his motion to obtain a new trial, are not entitled to any consideration, as they went to the impeachment of their verdict. People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 183.

On the whole case, presented as it has been upon both sides fully and ably, we perceive no prejudicial error, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C., HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

78 Cal. 341

STEARNS v. HOOPER et al. (No. 11,526.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1889.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for damages to plaintiff's wharf, by defendant's schooner being blown against it by a violent gale, plaintiff alleged that the accident might have been avoided if the schooner had been properly fastened to its buoy, or if it had put out to sea when it began to drag towards the wharf, and that the master was negligent in not calling on a steam-ship near by to tow the schooner out to sea. The master, mate, and one of the crew of the schooner testified that they did all possible to secure the vessel, and two master mariners testified that they could have done nothing more than was described, and that it would have been impracticable and dangerous to have put out to sea, or for the steam-ship to have towed the schooner out. Held, that a finding for defendants on the ground that the accident was inevitable was warranted.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action by Stearns against Hooper and others for damages to plaintiff's wharf. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Milton Andros and Charles Page, for appellant. Daniel T. Sullivan, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. On the 30th day of December, 1878, the schooner Alice, then owned by the defendants, arrived at the port of Santa Barbara, and made fast to plaintiff's wharf for the purpose of discharging her cargo. While the crew were engaged in transferring the cargo of lumber to the wharf, plaintiff notified the master of the schooner that in his (plaintiff's) opinion a heavy gale would soon arise, and that he (said master) should before night cast off the lines and fasts by which the vessel was attached to the wharf, and haul her up to a certain buoy which he (the plaintiff) had placed at about 100 fathoms from the end of the wharf, and make her fast thereto. Early in the afternoon of that day, and after a part of the cargo of lumber had been discharged, the lines holding the schooner to the wharf were thrown off, and she was hauled out towards the buoy, about 35 fathoms from where she had been lying at the wharf. A nine-inch hawser was then run out to the buoy. As the storm increased, the crew hauled in on the line until the vessel came within 50 fathoms of the buoy. The master dropped the port anchor at the time he made fast to the mooring buoy, but did not drop the second anchor until the vessel had dragged well in towards the wharf. The vessel dragged both the mooring buoy and the anchor until about 7 o'clock in the evening of the 31st of December, when a heavy breeze struck her, and drove her into the wharf, causing the injury for which plaintiff claims damages in the sum of $5,000.

It is claimed by appellant—First, "that if the said master of said schooner had pulled up to and made fast said schooner to said buoy in a proper, careful, and skillful manner, and in a proper position with reference to the wind and sea, all danger of said vessel drifting against or striking said wharf by reason of a heavy gale and sea, which arose in the afternoon of said 30th of December, might have been by him then and there avoided," and that, if he had let the second anchor go when he found his vessel was dragging, the accident would have been averted; second, that the accident might have been easily avoided by casting out the lines and putting out to sea when he found the vessel dragging in towards the wharf; third, that the master was guilty of negligence in not calling upon the steam-ship Ancon, then lying at the wharf, to tow the schooner out to sea.

The court found the facts upon all the issues in favor of the defendants, and concluded that the accident was inevitable. We think there was material evidence to support all the findings of the court, and, of course, if there was, under the well-established rule the judgment and order must be affirmed.

1. The master of the schooner testified that he was 45 years of age, and had been going to sea for 32 years. Had been a master mariner 7 years in command of schooners and brigs on the coast of California. That at the time of the accident he had a full complement of competent seamen on board. He described the manner in which he made fast to the buoy, and cast the port anchor. He continued: "There was nothing else in my judgment which I could have done to make myself secure for the night. * * * The wind came up about 9 or 10 o'clock. It blowed pretty fresh, and came in with a rain squall. After that squall came we could not have slipped our cables and gone to sea. * * * Mr. Stearns told me he had a 3,300-pound anchor to the buoy, and thirty fathoms of 2½-inch chain attached to it. He told me that if I had the hawser I represented I had, he would defy any wind to drag me with that buoy. * * * Just about the time when we went into the wharf, the breeze struck us, and swung us right on. I think that must have been a cyclone or tornado. It was no ordinary wind."

The mate of the schooner, Westerberg, testified that they had the port anchor down all the time, with 45 fathoms of chain, and the hawser out to the buoy; that they had dropped the starboard anchor before she began to drag; that they "could do nothing more, it was so rough;" that they "had all their lines out,—everything dragged." The witness Nelson, who was one of the crew, testified substantially to the same facts, and said: "Everything was done in a seaman-like and skillful manner."

2. C. Less testified that he was a master mariner; had been going to sea for 22 years; had commanded schooners of all sizes, from 45 tons up to 144 tons; that he knew the roadstead of Santa Barbara; had been there about five times, but never in tempestuous weather; knew Stearn's wharf and the buoy called the "Big Buoy;" that, if a heavy storm broke upon him while he was moored to the big buoy with his anchor down, he could do nothing more; that it would not be prudent for a master mariner seaman, under the circumstances, to attempt to go to sea. W. E. Plummer, another witness on behalf of defendants, testified that he was master of the steamer Newport. Had been 30 years a master mariner; 39 years at sea; 9½ years sailing up and down the coast of California. Had been at Santa Barbara a great many times; knew Stearn's wharf, and had discharged cargoes there. The circumstances occurring on the 30th and 31st of December were related to him, and he was asked to say, as an expert, whether, in his opinion, it would have been prudent to slip the cables and attempt to go to sea. He answered that he would not consider it prudent to attempt to do so; that he would "sooner hold on there."

3. The master of the schooner and the witnesses Nelson, Less, and Plummer all testified, in substance, that it would have been impracticable and dangerous for the steamer Ancon to have towed the schooner to sea. The witness Plummer testified that he had been in command of the Ancon, and that, if an attempt had been made by the captain of the Ancon to leave the wharf, in all probability he "would have got across her bow and cross her hawser, and be right athwartships. Then away would go steam-boat, wharf, and all."

The foregoing extracts from the testimony show, we think, that the findings of the court are supported by material evidence. There is sufficient, at least, to make a substantial conflict in the evidence. It is unnecessary for us, therefore, to review the evidence which tended to support the allegations of the complaint. The learned judge of the court below saw and heard the witnesses, passed upon their credibility, and determined the weight of evidence. We see no abuse of discretion.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J,

3 Cal. Unrep. 66

HANSON v. HANSON. (No. 11,494.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 11, 1889.)

1. JUDGMENT—VACATION.

In California the trial court has no power to review its own order setting aside a judgment for want of service of summons, where the order was regularly made after hearing and consideration.

2. SAME.

A judgment which is void for want of jurisdiction may be set aside, in California, on motion made on notice, though more than a year has elapsed since entry of the judgment.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; RODNEY J. HUDSON, Judge.

Action for divorce by J. F. Hanson against Delia Hanson. Defendant appeals from an order setting aside an order vacating a judgment by default.

P. M. Sullivan, J. J. Bruton, E. W. Britt, and Ball & Craig, for appellant. D. M. Hanson, A. E. Noel, and R. W Crump, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Appeal from an order setting aside an order vacating a judgment by default. The action was for divorce. No answer having been put in, the default of the defendant was entered, and after evidence had been taken a decree of divorce was made. After more than a year from the entry of this decree the defendant moved, upon notice, to have the decree set aside upon the ground that she had never been served with summons. This motion was granted; and it must be assumed from the record that it was granted upon the ground upon which it was made, viz., that there had been no service of summons upon the defendant. About three weeks after this the court made a second order setting aside the first order. The ground upon which this second order was made does not appear from the record. But it is stated by the counsel for the respondent that it was made upon the ground that more than a year had elapsed between the entry of the decree and the motion to set it aside, and that therefore the defendant could not have it set aside upon motion, but was obliged to resort to an action; in other words, that the court had no power to act in the way it did. But we think that the court had such power. If the decree was made without service of process upon the defendant, and without appearance by her, it was absolutely void. And it was held in People v. Greene, 16 Pac. Rep. 197, after careful examination of the authorities, that a judgment which is void for want of jurisdiction over the party may be set aside on motion, made upon notice, notwithstanding the fact that more than a year has elapsed since the entry of such judgment. The only difference between that case and this is that there the judgment was void upon the face of the judgment roll, while here the decree (having been entered upon an affidavit which was sufficient in form, though false in fact) was not void upon the face of the roll, but had to be shown to be void by evidence of the want of service. But while this might make a difference upon a collateral attack, it makes none upon a direct attack. And it has been held that a motion made upon notice is a direct, and not a collateral, attack. People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. Rep. 348; People v. Greene, supra.

The court, therefore, had power to make the order setting aside the decree; and such order was regularly made after hearing and consideration. This being the case, the court had no power to vacate it because subsequent reflection had induced it to believe that it was erroneous. Litigation must have some end. There must be some time when a judgment or order which the court had power to make becomes final, and the party is turned over to the appellate court for relief. It is true that there are some cases in which a trial court may review its own action; but such cases are prescribed by statute, and the trial court is confined to such cases, and has no power in review in other cases. Carpenter v. Superior Court, 19 Pac. Rep. 174; Wunderlin v. Cadogan, 75 Cal. 617, 17 Pac. Rep. 713. And there is no provision authorizing the review by the trial court of an order setting aside a judgment for want of service of summons, where such order was regularly made after hearing and consideration. It is true that where a judgment or order was inadvertently or improvidently made, as, for instance, where the court was imposed upon by some trick or artifice, or where it did not intend to make the order entered, as where there has been some clerical misprision, the court may set it aside. But this being an unusual case will not be presumed upon appeal, but must be shown affirmatively. Carpenter v. Superior Court, supra; Wunderlin v. Cadogan, supra. Unless this were so, no case could be reversed on appeal unless the record contained an affirmative showing that there had been no trick or artifice, or other case of inadvertence or improvidence, which is certainly not necessary.

But, if the court had the power to review its action because it had come to a different conclusion after reflection, we think that, even upon this theory, the order appealed from must be reversed; for, in our opinion, the first order was properly made. See McBlane v. McBlane, ante, 61.

We therefore advise that the order appealed from be reversed, and the appeal from the judgment dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is reversed, and the appeal from the judgment dismissed.

---

78 Cal. 366

CALLAHAN v. DUNN, State Comptroller. (No. 12,682.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1889.)

1. DRAINAGE—DAMAGES—MATERIAL FURNISHED.
   Laws Cal. 1885, p. 78, provided (section 3) that "all persons having claims, 'unaudited by the state board of drainage directors,' for work done or materials furnished under the provisions of 'An act to promote drainage,' approved April 23, 1880, [and which had been declared unconstitutional,] are authorized to present their claims to the state board," and have them allowed. Plaintiff, in proceedings to compel the state comptroller to draw a warrant for his claim as audited, the basis of which claim was a judgment condemning his land for drainage purposes under the act of 1880, alleged that by that judgment it was adjudged that the land should be condemned, and that plaintiff should recover therefor the sum of, etc. Held that, even assuming that land so taken can be regarded as "material furnished," within the meaning of the act of 1885, yet, as it is not shown that the award was for "damages" sustained, but rather for the proposed "taking" of the land, nor that any final order of condemnation was made or recorded, as required by Code Civil Proc. § 1253, which provides that "thereupon" the property shall vest in the corporation, and, as the award was never paid, the title to the land condemned never vested in the drainage district, and hence nothing was "furnished," and plaintiff is not entitled to payment.
2. SAME—COMPLAINT—ALLEGATIONS OF DAMAGE.
   An allegation that the award was "as compensation for the property condemned and taken, and as damages thereby done to his property not taken," evidently refers to an injury which would result to the remainder of plaintiff's tract from a segregation of the portion condemned; but as there was no taking, and so no segregation, that element of damage did not accrue.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; JOHN W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for appellant. J. H. Craddock, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This was an application for mandamus to the state comptroller, to compel him to draw his warrant in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,618. Final judgment was rendered in plaintiff's favor upon demurrer to the complaint, and the defendant appeals.

The basis of the claim is a judgment of condemnation of plaintiff's land for the use of drainage district No. 1, established by the "Act to promote drainage," passed in 1880. See Laws 1880, p. 123. It is alleged that by the judgment it was adjudged that the land should be condemned, and that plaintiff should recover therefor the sum of $1,618; that there was in the treasury sufficient money to the credit of said drainage district, "applicable to the payment of its judgment debts, including the judgment debt of this plaintiff;" that plaintiff presented "his said judgment claim" to the state board of examiners, who allowed it, but that the comptroller refuses to draw a warrant "for said judgment claim."

The act of 1880, referred to in the complaint, was declared unconstitutional in People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 625. It is evident, therefore, that plaintiff's claim is of no validity, unless it be validated by subsequent legislation. It is contended that such legislation is to be found in the act of 1885. See Laws 1885, p. 78. And hence it is plain that in order to entitle plaintiff to any relief his case must fall within the latter act. The act of 1885 was passed for the purpose of making provision for the payment of claims which had arisen under the first act. It deals with three classes of cases. The first section provides that the treasurer shall pay all warrants which had already been drawn. The second section provides that the comptroller shall draw warrants for all claims which had already been allowed by the board of drainage directors constituted by the first act, and that the treasurer should pay such warrants. The third section provides for the auditing and payment of unaudited claims. If the case of the plaintiff comes within the act at all, it must come within the third section, which is as follows: "Sec. 3. All persons having claims 'unaudited by the state board of drainage directors,' for work done or materials furnished under the provisions of 'An act to promote drainage,' approved April 23, 1880, are authorized to present their claims to the state board of examiners. All claims so presented shall be itemized, and verified by the claimant, his heirs or assigns. The state board of examiners shall audit and allow said claims, either in whole or in part, or reject the whole, as they may deem just and proper, and certify the amount so allowed to the state comptroller, who shall draw his warrant in favor of each claimant for the said amounts upon the state treasury. The state treasurer is authorized and required to pay the same out of any money in the general fund not otherwise appropriated: provided that unaudited claims of $10,000 only shall be allowed by the provisions of this section."

We do not think that the complaint states a case within this provision. Whatever may be the nature and validity of the discretion confided to the board of examiners, they are certainly confined within the limits fixed by the provision under which they are to act. And by the terms of that provision they are empowered to act upon claims "for work done and materials furnished under the provisions of 'An act to promote drainage.'" If the claims are not of that character, the board has no power to act upon them. The claim here was for compensation for land condemned for the use of the drainage district. And we are somewhat inclined to doubt whether such land can be held to be "materials," within the meaning of the provision. But, assuming that it may be so considered, we do not think that under the averments of the complaint it can be said to have been "furnished" to the drainage district. It is true that a judgment is alleged to have been rendered for its condemnation; but the money was not paid for it, and the final order of condemnation is not alleged to have been made or recorded. Consequently the title did not vest in the district. The act of 1880 provided that the condemnation proceedings should be had under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. And the provision of the Code is as follows: Sec. 1253. "When payments have been made, and the bond given, if the plaintiff elects to give one, as required by the last two sections, the court must make a final order of condemnation, which must describe the property condemned, and the purposes of such condemnation. A copy of the order must be filed in the office of the recorder of the county, and thereupon the property described therein shall vest in the plaintiff for the purposes therein specified." Now, whether or not the making and recording of a "final order" of condemnation are necessary to the vesting of the title, it certainly does not vest before the payment is made, which the complaint shows was not done. The title to the property, therefore, never passed to the drainage district. And it can never pass, because, according to the plaintiff's own averment, "the corporate existence of said drainage district number one was determined and dissolved, whereby all proceedings by or against said corporation under the act aforesaid ceased." This being the case, is the plaintiff, who has never parted with his property, entitled to payment for it out of the state treasury? We think that, inasmuch as he has never parted with the property, he cannot be said to have "furnished" it to the drainage district.

It is to be observed that the judgment upon which the plaintiff bases his claim is not alleged to have been for damages to his property. The constitution provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation." And if it had appeared that the judgment was for damages actually sustained by the property from some act of the alleged corporation, it is possible that a different result would follow, although we express no opinion as to that. But it is not averred that the judgment was of that character. The allegation that the sum recovered was "as compensation for the property condemned and taken, and as damages for the injury thereby done to his property not taken," evidently refers to an injury which would result to the remainder of plaintiff's tract from the segregation of a portion. But if there is no segregation the damage would evidently not accrue.

It is to be further observed that we are not saying that the vesting of the title is the only meaning of the word "taken," in the eminent domain clause of the constitution. That was at one time held. See Fox v. Railroad Co., 31 Cal. 538. But the position was receded from, and it was held that "the occupation of land by the corporation for its own purposes pending the proceedings for condemnation is a taking of the property within the meaning of the constitution." Davis v. Railroad Co., 47 Cal. 523; Water-Works v. Sharpstein, 50 Cal. 284; Sanborn v. Belden, 51 Cal. 266; Vilhac v Railroad Co., 53 Cal. 208. And if it had been alleged that the judgment was for such occupation, it is possible that a different case would be presented, although we express no opinion upon the question.

But, as we construe the complaint, the compensation awarded by the judgment upon which the claim is based was for the land itself, and for the damages which would result from a segregation; and if the value of an occupation entered into the question at all, it was at most only a part of the compensation awarded. And even upon that hypothesis the claim for the whole judgment could not be sustained.

The other allegations of the complaint do not, in our opinion, interfere with the conclusions above expressed. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complai

78 Cal. 380

HEBBRON v. GRAVES. (No. 11,657.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1889.)

PUBLIC LANDS—PATENT FROM STATE—EJECTMENT.

A state patent to land (other than in a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section) is prima facie valid, without showing a prior grant from the United States, and, if a defendant in ejectment can attack it at all, the burden is on him to show the invalidity.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

N. A. Dorn and W. M. R. Parker, for appellant. S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action is in ejectment, Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and an order denying a new trial, this appeal was taken. The plaintiff introduced in evidence a certain state patent for the land in dispute. This was objected to by the defendant on the alleged ground "that no predicate had been laid therefor. That the United States government is the source of all title; and, as none of this land is of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, there is no proof that the state of California had any interest in the land which could be granted." Whether such a patent "is conclusive or not, it is at least prima facie valid; and, if a defendant in ejectment can attack it at all, the burden is on him to show the invalidity." People v. Stratton, 25 Cal. 242; Leviston v. Ryan, 75 Cal. 293, 17 Pac. Rep. 239, and cases cited. There is nothing in the record going to show the invalidity of the patent. The main point in the controversy was as to the true location of the line between two sections of land denominated 19 and 20. Although the evidence was to some extent conflicting, the court below was warranted in making its findings. No prejudicial error appearing, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C., HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 360

WRIGHT v. CALIFORNIA CENT. RY. CO. et al. (No. 12, 821.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1889.)

1. CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—EVIDENCE.
Civil Code Cal. § 484, requires railroad companies to have conspicuously posted in their cars their rules regarding fare and conduct of passengers. Plaintiff was ejected from defendant's train for refusing to pay an extra charge for riding in a certain car. Plaintiff claimed that he was wrongfully made to leave the car. He testified that the conductor pointed out to him, posted in the car, the regulations of the company; also that the conductor explained that he was required to collect an extra fare for riding in that car. There was no evidence or pretense that the explanations were not true. Held, that the court properly assumed that there was a regulation requiring an extra fare for riding in that car, and that plaintiff knew and willfully disobeyed it.

2. SAME—PROVINCE OF JURY.
Plaintiff having testified that he might have gone from the car into a first-class passenger car, the court was not required to submit the questions whether the regulations were public, uniform in their operation, or reasonable.

3. SAME—RETURN OF TICKET.
The fact that plaintiff's ticket was not returned to him cannot aid him in his action for damages for ejection.

4. SAME—NECESSARY FORCE.
Where plaintiff admits that he received all his injuries after he had gone out of the car, and as a result of his holding on to the railing in resisting the force of those removing him, and the evidence does not show that more force than was necessary to put him off was employed, he cannot recover for injuries, on the ground of the force employed.

5. SAME—PLACE OF EJECTION.

Where plaintiff testified that the ejection occurred at the railroad station at A., and other witnesses alluded to A. as a small town where the train stopped, Civil Code Cal. § 487, requiring the ejection to be at any usual stopping place, or near any dwelling-house, is sufficiently met.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action by B. C. Wright against the California Central Railway Company and E. B. Leonard, for damages for ejection from a train. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit. Civil Code Cal. § 487, requires an ejection of a passenger to be "at any usual stopping place, or near any dwelling-house."

Williams & McKinley, for appellant. A. Brunson, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover damages for being put off a railroad car. The court below granted a nonsuit, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial. The material facts are as follows:

On the 26th of July, 1887, the plaintiff purchased a round-trip ticket on defendant's railroad from Los Angeles to San Diego and back. With other passengers he went into what is called a "chair car," and sat down, no one informing him that the car was a special one. The train started, and when a few miles out the conductor went into the car, and took up the part of plaintiff's ticket which was from Los Angeles to San Diego, and gave back the return portion thereof. He then collected the tickets from other passengers in the car, and, having done so, went back to plaintiff, and demanded 25 cents more for the privilege of sitting in that car. Plaintiff refused to pay the extra charge, and asked the conductor if he did not furnish seats to sit in. The conductor replied: "Yes; but not in this car. This is a chair car. You can take a seat in the other car." Plaintiff said he had a first-class ticket, and did not propose to take a seat in the other car. The conductor called his attention to "a card up in the car stating terms and so forth," and said it was the regulation of the company. He explained why the 25 cents was an extra charge; said it was a chair car, and it was the rule. The conductor went to plaintiff three or four times, and asked him if he would pay the two bits or go into the other car, and said if he didn't do so "we will put you out; we will put you in." Plaintiff persistently refused to comply with the conductor's request, saying he "didn't care for the two bits, but it was the principle of the thing." When the train reached a station called Azusa the conductor and another man went up to plaintiff; and, taking him by the arms, led him to the front door of the car, where he caught hold of the iron railing, and resisted with all his might. They tried to put him into the car immediately in front of the chair car. That car was a first-class passenger car, and he could have gone into it and continued his trip there if he had wished to do so. After he was on the ground the men invited him to go into the car, but he refused, preferring to leave the train and abandon his journey. The conductor did not return, or offer to return, to him his ticket, or any money in lieu thereof.

Plaintiff claims that he was wrongfully made to leave the chair car; that he was ruptured and seriously injured, while standing on the platform, and holding on to the railing of that car, by the efforts to put him into the other car; and that he suffered great mental and bodily distress in consequence of the wrongful acts of defendants; and is entitled to demand and receive therefor damages in the sum of $25,000.

It is urged that the court erred in granting the nonsuit, because there was no evidence showing any regulation of the railroad company requiring the payment of an extra rate on the chair car, and that, if there was such a regulation, it was a matter to be proved in defense, and could not be inferred from what was said by the conductor. The Civil Code provides that "every railroad corporation must have printed and conspicuously posted on the inside of its passenger cars its rules and regulations regarding fare and conduct of its passengers." Section 484. We think it sufficiently appears that the defendant company had complied with this requirement. The plaintiff testified that the conductor "pointed out to me, posted up in the car, the regulations of the company." He further testified, in effect, that the conductor explained to him that he was required by the regulations to collect from passengers riding in that car an extra charge, and there was no evidence, and there is no pretense, that the explanations were not true. It seems clear, therefore, that the court was justified in assuming that there was a regulation of the company requiring payment of an extra rate on the chair car, and that plaintiff knew of its requirements, and willfully refused to comply with them.

But it is said that, in order to be valid, "such regulations must be lawful, public, uniform in their application, and reasonable," and that whether they were so or not were questions of fact, which should have been submitted to the jury. And in this connection it is suggested that, "from anything that appears from the evidence, it may have been the only car provided with seats at all." The evident purpose in requiring the regulations to be posted in the car was to make them public, so that all passengers could read them, and be fully informed as to their provisions. The conductor demanded and received from the other passengers in the car an extra sum for riding in it, and there was nothing in the evidence tending to show that the regulations in question did not fully comply with all the conditions named. The suggestion that the car in which the plaintiff was riding may have been the only car provided with seats is met by the plaintiff's own testimony that "I was able to have gone from the chair car where I was into a first-class passenger car." This being so, the court was not required to submit to the jury the questions as to whether or not the regulations were public, uniform in their operation, or reasonable.

It is next claimed that if the regulations existed, and were lawful and proper, plaintiff's ticket should have been returned to him. Conceding this to be so, it cannot aid him here. He might have gone into a first-class passenger car, and continued his journey, and was invited to do so, but refused. He voluntarily left the train, and terminated his trip, and, if he was entitled to "stop over" and use the ticket on another train, his claim must be for a return of the ticket money, and not for damages for being put off. The facts in Bland v. Railroad Co., 55 Cal. 570, were different, and that case is not in point.

It is contended that more force was used in ejecting plaintiff from the car than was necessary. He admitted at the trial that he received all of his injuries after he had gone out of the car, and while he was holding to the railing on the platform. He should have gone voluntarily into the next car or to the ground, and if he had done so he would have had no injury to complain of. He chose, however, to hold on with all his might, and to resist the efforts to remove him. The force was to overcome that resistance, and the evidence fails to show that any more force was used than was necessary for that purpose. If he was injured, therefore, his own wrong contributed immediately and proximately to the result, and he must bear the consequence.

Lastly, it is said that it was incumbent on the defendants to show as a defense that they ejected plaintiff at a usual stopping place, or near a dwelling-house, and the fact that they did so could not be presumed on a motion for nonsuit. The answer is that the plaintiff testified that "this occurred at the Azusa station; at the railroad station at Azusa;" and his other witnesses spoke of Azusa as a small town where the train stopped. This was sufficient to meet the requirements of section 487, Civil Code, and no further proof on this point was necessary.

We find in the record no error calling for a reversal, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 374

ONETO v. RESTANO. (No. 12,495.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1889.)

1. WATERS AND WATER-COURSES—WATER-RIGHTS AND EASEMENTS—PRESCRIPTION—ADVERSE USE.
In an action to determine the right to certain water which defendant claimed the right to use on alternate days, there were findings that defendant's predecessor in title leased from plaintiff's predecessor the right to so use the water; that more than five years before suit brought, defendant paid plaintiff's predecessor a certain sum, in consideration of which the latter waived all claim to one-half of the water; that defendant has since claimed the right to use, and has used, the water "as his own property;" and that his possession, claim, and use have been quiet, peaceable, open, and notorious. Held, that they did not show that defendant's use was adverse, and were insufficient to support a judgment in his favor on the ground of a prescriptive right.

2. SAME—LEASE—CONSTRUCTION.
The use before and since the lease having been of all the water on alternate days, the lease "of one-half the water * * * every alternate day" entitled the lessee to half the water to be obtained by using all half the time; and the intention was not to give the lessee the right to use half on alternate days, thus leaving him free to claim the other half absolutely, and the use of defendant's predecessor could give him no prescriptive right.

3. SAME—RELEASE.
But defendant would acquire a prescriptive right where, having claimed the right to the water irrespective of the lease, he made a verbal compromise with the lessor, and paid the amount agreed upon, and used the water adversely for five years afterwards.

4. SAME—PRESCRIPTION—PAYMENT OF TAXES—BURDEN OF PROOF.
One claiming by prescription is not bound to show payment of all taxes where it does not appear that any taxes have been assessed. He need not prove that no taxes have been assessed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Action by Giovani Oneto against Giacomo Restano, brought in 1887. The findings trace the title to the water in controversy from Bache to Restano, who acquired his land in 1880, and describe the use thereof by the several claimants. The fourteenth and seventeenth findings are as follows:

"Fourteenth. That on the 1st day of May, 1877, the said David Sanguinetti, leased from Joseph Bache, for the term of ten years, one-half of the water running in the said flume and ditch every alternate day, from 12 o'clock noon to 12 o'clock noon of the succeeding day."

"Seventeenth. That immediately prior to the time the said defendant, Giacomo Restano, entered into possession of the said lots, deeded to him as aforesaid by David Sanguinetti, he, said defendant, went to said Joseph Bache, from whom said Sanguinetti had secured said lease as aforesaid, and offered to him, the said Bache, the sum of fifty dollars for the purpose of having him, the said Bache, waive and surrender to him, said defendant, any and all claim which he, said Bache, might at said time have to the one-half of the waters of the said spring and creek, used before said time by said David Sanguinetti, on said lot, * * * leased as aforesaid by said Bache to said Sanguinetti; that at said time the said Bache did accept the said offer of fifty dollars, and agreed, in consideration of the payment thereof by said defendant, to waive all his claim to the said one-half of the said waters, and to surrender any and all of his claims thereto to him, the said defendant; that defendant did thereupon pay to him, the said Bache, the said sum of fifty dollars, and the said Bache did then and there, in consideration of the said payment, waive any and all of his claims to said one-half of the said waters, and did then and there surrender to him, said defendant, all such rights; that immediately thereafter, on the 11th day of January, 1880, the said defendant entered into possession of the said lots and of said water, and ever since said date has been claiming the right to use as his own property the said waters of said creek and said spring, through the said ditch and flume, on the said lot, * * * on each alternate day, from 12 o'clock noon to 12 o'clock noon of the succeeding day, and has been since said time using the said waters on said lots and at said times."

Plaintiff appeals.

F. W. Street and A. L. Hart, for appellant. F. D. & G. W. Nicol and P. W. Bennett, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit to determine the right to certain water. The trial court gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

The subject-matter of the suit, as defined by the complaint, is the water of a certain spring, which the predecessor of the plaintiff conducted through a flume or ditch across the land of the predecessor of the defendant to his own land. The answer hints at other water coming through the same flume or ditch, and the findings set forth the fact; for while it is found that one Joseph Bache, the plaintiff's predecessor, was the owner of the spring, it is also found that he and other parties "did, by means of the said ditch and flume, commence to collect therein and convey therethrough the water of said spring, together with the waters of Sonora creek." And all through the findings the water in controversy is spoken of as the water "of said creek and spring." It would seem from the evidence that the main portion of the water comes from the spring; but the relative proportions are nowhere shown. It does not appear what right the parties had to the waters of the creek; but it seems that they treated it as on the same footing as the water of the spring; for in the lease mentioned below they refer to the water as that flowing through the ditch, which phrase would include the water from both sources. But it is evident that the right of the plaintiff to the waters of the spring would not be affected by the fact that other water flowed through the ditch; and for the purposes of this opinion we shall consider the subject of the action to be that alleged in the complaint, viz., the water of the spring.

In view of the fact that the predecessor of the plaintiff is found to have been the owner of the spring, the defendant's claim to its waters can only be sustained upon the basis of a prescriptive right; and we think that the findings are not sufficient to support a judgment in his favor upon that ground. The finding in this regard is that "the possession, claim, and use of the defendant and his grantors, as in these findings set forth, have been quiet, peaceable, open, and notorious." This finding is clearly insufficient, in that it does not state that the use was adverse or continuous. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 595. In another place the findings show that the use was continuous; but they nowhere show that it was adverse. The statement that the defendant used the water "as his own property" does not necessarily mean that the use was adverse to the plaintiff. Defendant may have had a qualified or limited property in the water. If the use was under a lease from the plaintiff's predecessor it might be said, in one sense, that defendant used the water "as his own property." Where a party relies upon a prescriptive right the finding should not be in any such ambiguous phrase. There is nothing inconsistent with this in Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 603, 14 Pac. Rep. 379. There the finding expressly stated that the use of the water was "adversely to the whole world." Nor do the probative facts set forth in the seventeenth finding necessarily show that the use was adverse. See Emmal v. Webb, 36 Cal. 1, 204; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 381; Packard v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 183, 184. The judgment must be reversed upon this ground. But inasmuch as certain questions upon the evidence will arise upon a retrial, and have been discussed by counsel, we proceed to examine them.

It appears that in 1861 one Joseph Bache was the owner of the spring above mentioned, and conducted its waters through a flume or ditch across the land of two brothers named Antonini, (now owned by the defendant,) to his own land, which is now owned by the plaintiff. The parties were friendly, and it was agreed between them that, in consideration of certain work to be done upon the flume or ditch, the Antoninis could use the water on alternate days. This was by permission of Bache, and under him. One of the Antoninis testified as follows: "We had no arrangement with Bache about this water; we only got the water from Bache just as a favor from a neighbor." And Bache's son says: "They were good neighbors, and my father let them have the water whenever they needed it. My father says: 'Whenever you come to sell out the place, Mr. Antonini, I want to have my right to the water.'" In 1877 the Antoninis conveyed their land to one Sanguinetti; and shortly afterwards a lease was signed by both Bache and Sanguinetti, and recorded, whereby, in consideration of one dollar, Bache leased to Sanguinetti for the term of 10 years "one-half of the water flowing in his ditch * * * every alternate day from 12 o'clock noon to 12 o'clock noon the next day." The evidence sufficiently shows the delivery of this lease. And, notwithstanding some ambiguity in its language, we think it clear from the circumstances that the proper construction is that the lessee was to have the use of half of the water only, and that such half was to be arrived at by the use of the whole stream for half the time. This seems to have been the practical construction put upon it by the parties. And we think it wholly inadmissible to say that the intention was to give the lessee the right to the use of half of the stream on every alternate day, leaving him free to claim the other half absolutely. Such being the evidence, we think that the defendant cannot rely upon the use of the water by his predecessors as giving him a prescriptive right, and that the cases cited by the learned counsel are not in point.

In January, 1880, Sanguinetti conveyed his land to the defendant, "together with all the water-rights belonging to, or heretofore used in connection with, said lots of land." It does not appear that the defendant used the water under the lease. According to the plaintiff's own testimony, when the defendant acquired the land he "refused to take another lease from me. He said to me that he was entitled to one-half of the water, and he was going to have it. He also said, if by law I was entitled to all the water, that he would not let the water go through his ranch." And according to the testimony of one Marengo, who conducted the negotiation with Sanguinetti on the part of the defendant, the following is what occurred: "I said to Bache, 'I think we can compromise this matter with you.' He said, 'We can, if you will pay me something.' I asked him how much he wanted. * * * He said, 'If you will pay me $100, I will do it.' I told him, 'If you want, I will give you $50, and be done with the matter.' He thought a little while, and then he says, 'All right.' So he took it; was glad to take it. This agreement was made with Bache before the deed from Sanguinetti was made to Restano. Restano was to pay Sanguinetti $3,000. He only paid him $2,950. The other $50 I told Restano to pay to Bache. We paid Bache the $50 the same day the deed was executed, after the deed was made, and before Restano went into possession. I was present when Giacomo Restano paid him the money. Restano went into possession of the place next day. From that time up to the present time I know Restano has been claiming one-half of the water, and asserting such claim over it." It is conceded by the learned counsel for the defendant that this agreement did not amount to a valid conveyance of the water-right, for the reason that it was not in writing. But he contends that it is evidence tending to show that the use by defendant was adverse to Bache, and to establish a prescriptive right in the defendant; and in this we agree. If the defendant can show upon a retrial a sufficient adverse use of the water for five years from the above transaction, we think he will be entitled to judgment in his favor.

It is argued for the plaintiff that in order to recover upon this ground the defendant must show that he paid all the taxes which have been assessed. It has been held, however, that if no taxes are found to have been assessed it need not be found that the party claiming by adverse possession has paid taxes. Heilbron v. Ditch Co., 75 Cal. 117, 17 Pac. Rep. 65. In other words, the requirement as to payment of taxes does not apply where none have been assessed to anybody. And the inference is that the burden of showing that none have been assessed is not upon the claimant by possession. That is a negative which he is not required to prove. This is the rule which convenience requires; for it is an easy matter for the other party to show that an assessment has been levied, but a difficult one to show that none have been levied for a series of years.

We advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

---

78 Cal. 371

POOL v. CLIFFORD. (No. 12,860.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1889.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE'S SEPARATE PROPERTY.

In an action to recover the value of certain horses, the evidence as to ownership of the horses was that plaintiff had several thousand dollars in money, which she loaned to her husband. She testified: "The money was in the stable, in the safe. My husband used it as he pleased. Susie [one of the horses] was bought with my money, and he said I should have her as security. I loaned my husband $200 to buy her." Other horses were bought much in the same way, and were brought to the stable, and used by the husband in his business. Plaintiff further testified: "Whenever he used my money to buy property, horses, he gave them to me as security. None of this property was purchased without it being reported to me, and I acquiesced in it." Held, under this evidence, that the ownership of the property was in the husband.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

L. W. Elliott, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to recover the value of certain horses and other personal property. Verdict for plaintiff for $800. Defendant appeals. It is contended that there is no evidence that the plaintiff was the owner of the property. As to two of the horses, Tommy and Dandy, which, however, do not seem to have been of much value, there can be no doubt that they belonged to the plaintiff. They were raised upon her ranch, and she allowed her husband to use them in the business. But we cannot say that there was any evidence that the other horses were the property of the plaintiff. It appears that the plaintiff had several thousand dollars in money, which she lent to her husband. She says: "The money was in the stable, in the safe. My husband used it as he pleased. I gave him the money, and he used it as he deemed it advisable in the business. He didn't tell me all his business, but he often told me, whenever he got the money, he would do as he deemed best. The money was there, and he would use it as he deemed profitable for the business. Susie was bought with my money, and he said I should have her as security.

* * * I loaned my husband $200 to buy her." Other horses, carts, etc., were bought much in the same way, and were brought to the stable and used by the husband in his business. Plaintiff says: "Whenever he used my money to buy property, horses, he gave them to me as security. None of this property was purchased without it being reported to me, and I acquiesced in it."

This is the substance of the testimony in relation to the question of ownership. We think it must be held that the wife loaned the money to the husband, and that the horses were his property. The "security" which she seems to have supposed she had amounts to nothing, because she never had possession of the property. The defendant's motion for nonsuit should have been granted except as to Tommy and Dandy. The deed offered by defendant should have been received in evidence, the description being, in our opinion, sufficient to recover all the personal property which the husband had. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

THORNTON, J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, on the ground that the complaint of plaintiff should have been stricken out and the action dismissed on defendant's motion to dismiss the action. The defendant, after issue joined, gave notice to plaintiff's attorney of the taking of the deposition of plaintiff on the 15th of February, 1888, at a place and time stated in the notice. Along with this notice was served an affidavit that Jennie R. Pool was the plaintiff in the action. Plaintiff was duly subpœnaed to appear at the time and place mentioned above. The plaintiff refused to appear at such time and place to give her deposition. On these facts the defendant, on the 15th of February, 1888, the day on which the action was tried, moved the court below to dismiss the action, which motion was denied, and defendant excepted. I am of opinion that the defendant had the undoubted right to have the complaint of plaintiff stricken out, under section 1991, Code Civil Proc. In this case a party to an action willfully refused to obey a subpœna, or to be sworn as a witness. In either case, defendant was entitled to have the complaint of such party stricken out. It makes no difference that plaintiff's motion was in form to dismiss the action, instead of to strike out the complaint. Striking out the complaint is substantially dismissing the action. The motion may well be to dismiss the action or to strike out the complaint. I will add, further, that there was manifest error committed by the court at the trial in excluding from the jury the deed of assignment of January 8, 1887, executed by Pool to Clifford, with evidence of its acknowledgment and record. There is no defect or insufficiency in the description in the deed. This description is general, but it is aided in that regard by the schedule, which was erroneously excluded by the court, as was the bond executed by Clifford as assignee.

3 Cal. Unrep. 69

SYMONS v. BUNNELL et al. (No. 12,558.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1889.)

1. RULES OF COURT—SUSPENSION OF.
   Rules of court are but a means to accomplish the ends of justice, and it is always in the power of the court to suspend its own rules, or to except a particular case from their operation, whenever the purposes of justice require it.
2. NEW TRIAL—SURPRISE—AFFIDAVITS.
   Where the affidavits are conflicting as to the question of surprise, made the ground of a motion for a new trial, the court below cannot be said to have acted without the exercise of a proper discretion.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Ejectment by William Symons against E. F. Bunnell and Joseph Clark. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. They complaint that the case was set for trial on plaintiff's motion, without any notice of such motion, and without consent; that such notice or consent was required by a rule of the trial court; and that the court should have granted a continuance for that reason.

I. M. Kalloch, (Theodore Bradley, of counsel,) for appellants. F. D. & G. W. Nicol and P. W. Bennett, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. An appeal from a judgment in ejectment and an order denying a new trial. The grounds of the contention of the appellants are that the court below abused its discretion in not allowing a continuance of the cause upon their motion, and in denying their motion for a new trial based upon surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. The action of the court, under the circumstances, (as stated in the affidavits used in the motions to set aside the judgment and for a new trial,) in going on with the trial of the case in violation, as it is alleged, of one of its rules, was not erroneous. Such rules are but "a means to accomplish the ends of justice," and it is always in the power of the court to suspend its own rules, or to except a particular case from their operation, whenever the purposes of justice require it. Pickett v. Wallace, 54 Cal. 147, and cases cited. The affidavits were conflicting as to the question of surprise, and the court below cannot be said to have acted without the exercise of a proper discretion. The defendants have been deprived of no legal right, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

78 Cal. 399

In re GOOD et al. (No. 12,418.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1889.)

INSOLVENCY—WHEN APPLICATION FOR DISCHARGE GRANTED.

Under the California insolvent act of April 16, 1880, providing that no discharge shall be granted if the debtor, being a merchant or tradesman, has not kept proper books of account, an application by a firm to be adjudged insolvent, and for a discharge, will be denied where it appears that, owing to the omission of certain entries of moneys lent to the firm to use in its business, the firm was wrongly made to appear solvent, although such omissions were made in good faith. PATERSON and MCFARLAND, JJ., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county; A. J. BUCKLES, Judge.

J. F. Wendell and Fred W. Hall, for appellant. Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. H. C. Good and James Roney were partners, "carrying on a grocery and bar business at Vallejo in a small way," for about four years. On the 3d day of July, 1886, they filed a petition in the superior court of Solano county, asking to be adjudged insolvents, and in February, 1887, Good applied to the court for a discharge from his debts. This application was opposed by some of the creditors, on the ground that the firm of Good & Roney had not kept proper books of account, and it was specified that they did not enter in their books "an indebtedness of said firm to John Good, amounting to about $7,500, and did not enter in said books an indebtedness of said firm to Walter C. Good, amounting to about $2,500, and thereby falsely made it appear by said books that said firm was indebted in a less sum, to-wit, $10,000 less, than said firm actually owed, and thereby falsely made it appear by said books that said firm was solvent, and that the indebtedness of said firm did not exceed its assets, whereas said firm was wholly insolvent, and its actual indebtedness largely exceeded the value of its assets." Good filed an answer to the objections made to his discharge, and, admitting that the indebtedness of $7,500 to John Good, his father, and $2,500 to Walter C. Good, his brother, was not entered in the books of the firm, averred that the books were not kept by himself, but by James Roney, and that neither of the partners was an expert book-keeper, and that they did not consider it necessary to enter those items; that the items were for moneys loaned to the firm to enable the partners to commence and continue their business, and constituted their capital stock, and that promissory notes therefor had been given. He also averred that the omissions were made in good faith, and without any intention to deceive or defraud any one, or to make the firm appear solvent when it was insolvent, and that no creditor of the firm was injured or defrauded thereby; that the books correctly set forth the mercantile transactions of the firm, and did not purport to show its indebtedness for money borrowed, and for which notes had been given, and therefore did not falsely or at all make it appear that the firm was indebted in a less sum than it actually owed, or falsely or at all make it appear that the firm was solvent, or that its indebtedness did not exceed its assets. Upon the specifications of their grounds of opposition, and the answer thereto, counsel for the opposing creditors moved the court to deny Good's application for a discharge, and the motion was granted. From that order this appeal is prosecuted.

We think that the order was proper. The insolvent act was passed on the 16th of April, 1880, and provides that "no discharge shall be granted, or, if granted, shall be valid, if the debtor, * * * being a merchant or tradesman, has not, subsequently to the passage of this act, kept proper books of account." Section 49. The books, as kept, showed that the firm was in good condition. If the omitted entries had been made, the books would have shown that the firm was utterly insolvent. Was it "proper" that they should show the true condition of affairs? What else are books for? If the omitted entries had been of outside matter, they would not have had to be made. But that is simply because the statute does not require books to be kept as to outside matters. These entries were not in relation to outside matters. They were for money lent to the firm as such, for the express purpose of being put into the business. Such being the case, we cannot see how it can be said that they were not within the provision of the statute. But stress is laid upon the fact that the omission was "in good faith." This simply amounts to saying that, although the partners did not comply with the law, they did not mean anything by it. This might be material if it were proposed to inflict a positive punishment on them. But no crime is charged against them. They were simply offered a valuable privilege upon certain conditions, and they have not complied with the conditions. Good faith in the matter may enter into the question under certain circumstances; but it is not controlling. Suppose that a merchant should not keep any books at all. Would it make any difference that he acted in perfect good faith, and did not think that books were necessary? Or suppose that, in perfect good faith, and from sheer stupidity, he kept books that were utterly incomprehensible. Would it avail him that his intentions were good? We do not think it would. As said by GRIER, J., in Re Solomon, 2 N. B. R. 287, concerning a similar provision in the federal bankrupt law, the object of the provision was "to enable any competent person to determine from the books and invoices the real condition of the debtor's affairs." Or, as said by BLATCHFORD, J., in Re Garrison, 7 N. B. R. 287, the purpose was to require them to "keep such books in relation to their business as will furnish an intelligent account to their creditors of the state and course of their business transactions, not leaving such account to be made up from memory or from sources other than such books." The requirement is in our judgment a wholesome one. It is difficult to prove fraud or want of "good faith." Any lawyer who has had much experience in this class of cases knows that, as a rule, creditors for moderate amounts prefer to let the matter go rather than to undertake the difficult and expensive task of a contest upon such a basis. Crowds of fraudulent bankruptcies take place in consequence. In view of this the statute has very wisely made the failure to keep proper books one of the tests. As a matter of course, trivial inaccuracies are not to be regarded, and books which would be proper for one kind of business might not be proper for another. The provision, like every other, must receive a reasonable construction. But we do not think that a set of books which shows that the firm was in good condition when in fact it was utterly insolvent, can be held to be "proper" in any view. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

PATERSON, J. I dissent. As the motion was made upon the pleadings, all the averments of the answer are taken as true. It is therefore admitted that proper books were kept of all the mercantile transactions of the firm; that the omissions complained of were made in good faith, without any intent to deceive or defraud any one, and that no creditor of the firm was injured or defrauded thereby; that the partners honestly supposed it was not necessary to enter in their books accounts of moneys which they had borrowed on their promissory notes before commencing business, and which constituted their capital stock. Now, conceding that some notes or memoranda of this borrowed money should have been entered in the books, the question is, did the failure to make the entries, under the circumstances shown, necessarily deprive the appellant of all right to a discharge from his debts? I am unable to see any good or sufficient ground for holding that it did. The statute was intended to be beneficent in its scope and purposes. In passing it, the legislature evidently thought that the best interests of the state and of its citizens would be promoted if one who had become insolvent, while endeavoring honestly and fairly to carry on some business, could surrender his property to his creditors, and then be discharged from his debts, and permitted to commence his business life anew. Many restrictions were thrown around the proceedings, but they were intended mainly to hinder fraudulent and dishonest debtors in their efforts to escape from the just claims of their creditors. An examination of the section of the insolvent act referred to will show that the keeping of books is made a condition of discharge only in case of merchants and tradesmen. It will also be seen that, while many grounds for denying the discharge are specified, all but two of them are based upon the fraudulent and wrongful acts of the debtor. The exceptions are the failure to keep proper books of account by the merchant or tradesman, and an application for discharge made within three years next after a prior discharge. Each case must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances. In Re Graves, 24 Fed. Rep. 551, the court said. "No fraud or dishonesty is charged, and it would seem not to be the policy of the courts to keep a young man under the harrow for years, when the only accusation against him is that he failed to insert in his cash-book the items of his daily sales,"—and it was held that although his cash book was imperfect, inartistic, and inaccurate in a strictly commercial sense, it was not so improperly kept as to justify the court in withholding the discharge.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice PATERSON.

---

78 Cal. 405

PEOPLE v. HILL. (No. 20,498.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1889.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.
   Where a defendant in a criminal case in preparing a bill of exceptions relies upon a waiver of the two-days notice of presentation for settlement, required by Pen. Code Cal. § 1171, such waiver should be made of record, or by some writing, and not left to the uncertainty of parol evidence.
2. SAME—PROOF OF NOTICE OR WAIVER.
   Where it does not appear that any showing was made to the trial court that the two-days notice was given, or that it had been waived, there is no improper refusal to settle the bill of exceptions.

In bank. Application by Charles O. Hill for mandamus against D. J. Toohy, judge below.

John D. Whaley, for applicant. D. J. Toohy, respondent in pro. per.

WORKS, J. The appellant makes application for a mandamus to compel the judge of the court below, who has retired from office, to settle and sign a bill of exceptions in this case. The motion for a new trial was denied, and judgment rendered March 3, 1888, and on the 12th of March 15 days' additional time was given within which to file the bill of exceptions. The affidavit of the attorney for the defendant shows that a draft of the bill was presented for settlement on the 24th day of March, but the judge who tried the case makes affidavit that it was never presented to him for settlement, and the minutes of the court, which are made a part of his return to the alternative writ, are silent on the subject. There is nothing to show that the proposed bill of exceptions was ever served upon the district attorney, or that notice of the presentation of the same for settlement was given him. There is an affidavit by a former attorney of the defendant, that on the 6th day of March the assistant district attorney, in open court, waived the two-days notice required, and the appellant then presented the proposed bill to the judge for settlement, but, if any such action was taken in open court, it does not appear of record. The same attorney makes affidavit of the same waiver of notice and presentation of the proposed bill of exceptions in open court on the 24th day of March, but the record discloses nothing of the kind, and, as we have said, the judge denies that the proposed bill was ever presented to him for settlement.

There is nothing to show that any showing was made to the judge of the court that the two-days notice required by section 1171 of the Penal Code was given, or that it had been waived, nor is it shown that the waiver claimed to have been made was ever brought to his attention before instituting this proceeding. Therefore, leaving out of consideration the conflicting evidence upon the question whether the proposed bill was ever presented or not, it does not appear that the judge has improperly refused to settle the bill of exceptions. People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 422. Besides, we are of the opinion that where the defendant, in a criminal case, relies upon a waiver of the notice required by the statute, such waiver should be made of record, or by some writing, and not be left to the uncertainty of human memory.

Writ denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

78 Cal. 300

In re SACKETT'S ESTATE. (No. 12,679.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1889.)

ADMINISTRATORS—POWERS AND DUTIES—PAYMENT OF DEBTS.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. c. 3, art. 7, providing for the appointment of a special administrator, does not authorize him to pay claims against the estate. It requires, in section 1412, that the order of appointment shall be entered on the court minutes, and that it shall specify the powers given him. A special administrator, without any order of court, paid a claim, and upon the settlement of his accounts it was disallowed by the court. Held, in the absence of the record of his appointment showing the powers given him, it did not affirmatively appear that the court erred.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Upon the settlement of the accounts of H. J. Barling, special administrator, etc., of the estate of Hannah M. Sackett, deceased, a voucher for $400 presented by him, it being the amount paid to a creditor of his intestate, was disallowed, and he appeals.

Daniel Titus, for appellant. Selden S. & Geo. T. Wright, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Appellant was appointed special administrator of said estate, and as such filed his account for settlement. Exceptions were filed thereto. The court allowed certain of the exceptions, and disallowed others. The court found that he had received $1,275.10, and that he should be credited with $848.25. Appellant claims that the court erred in disallowing a claim of $400, which he paid Scholle Bros. for rent due them from deceased at the time of her death. It does not appear that this claim was ever presented to the court or judge, or by the court or judge directed to be paid. Article 7, c. 3, Code Civil Proc., provides for the appointment and prescribes the powers and duties of special administrators, but does not authorize or require them to allow or pay claims against estates. The appointment must be made by entry upon the minutes of the court, specifying the powers to be exercised by the administrator. Id. § 1412. That entry is not now before us, and we are not able to determine what powers beyond those specified in the Code were conferred on the appellant. On the record before us we are unable to discover that any error was committed by the court below, and the order must be affirmed. Order affirmed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

---

78 Cal. 410

HOULT et al. v. BALDWIN. (No. 12,092.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1889.)

SALE—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

On the trial of an action for the price of a combined header and separator, it appeared that on the delivery of the machine it was taken from the cars, properly put together, and carefully moved, and that it broke down from its own weight. A new driving-wheel precisely like the first was put on, which broke in the same manner. Both plaintiffs testified, but one had nothing to do with the manufacture of the machine, and the other testified that after the second break-down they strengthened other machines constructed by them in the part that broke, and that only one machine constructed exactly like defendant's was sent out, and that it broke down in the same part. The manufacturer of the casting testified that it was manufactured according to contract, but that he did not think it was of sufficient strength, without the additions subsequently made. Held, that a finding for plaintiff was not supported by the evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

Lloyd & Wood and Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. J. C. Campbell and W. L. Dudley, for respondents.

WORKS, J. Action to recover the price of a combined header and separator. This is the second appeal to this court. The facts will be found stated in Hoult v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 610, 8 Pac. Rep. 440. In its former decision, reversing the case, this court said that the principal questions for the jury were: (1) Would the machine, as sent forward, do good work in cutting and thrashing ordinary grain, from one to five feet in height? (2) Was it reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was ordered? (3) Was there any latent defect, arising from the process of manufacture, not disclosed to the buyer?

Upon the second trial these precise questions were put to the jury in the form of special interrogatories. The first and second were answered in the affirmative, and the third in the negative. A general verdict was also returned for the plaintiffs for the amount of their claim, with interest, and judgment was rendered accordingly. There was a motion for a new trial by the defendant, which was denied, and he appeals from the order denying him a new trial and from the judgment. The principal question presented on this appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings and verdict of the jury.

The sole question presented by the evidence was whether or not the driving or guiding wheel of the machine was defective or insufficient. There was no question made upon the warranty that the machine would do good work in cutting and thrashing ordinary grain, from one to five feet high. It may be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that the machine would have done the work, as warranted, if the grain had been brought to it. The trouble seems to have been that it could not be taken to the grain, for the reason that it was not able to carry its own weight. We have read the evidence carefully, and find that it is shown, beyond any question, that the machine was taken from the cars, properly put together, and carefully moved, and that it broke down of its own weight; that a second driving-wheel, precisely like the first, was furnished, which, upon a second attempt to move the machine, gave way in the same manner. This seems to us to have been almost conclusive proof either that this part of the machine was not of sufficient strength, admitting it to have been properly constructed, or that it was defectively manufactured. From which of these causes the defect resulted, if either, is immaterial. In addition to the fact that this part of the machine gave way, as stated, it is shown that the plaintiffs strengthened the same in all the machines sent out thereafter. Besides, it was shown by one Lewis, a witness on the part of the defense, that this casting was improperly constructed. After showing that he was an expert in that kind of work, he says: "For the purpose for which the casting was intended, it was wrong in shape. The plate was thin; at its thickest part it was five-eighths of an inch, and the standard was three inches in diameter, and cast solid on this plate. The standard extended in height about twenty or twenty-four inches, tapering about two inches, and at the end of that point there was a wrought-iron band shrunk on, and at the end there was a pintle. This wrought-iron had nothing to do with the broken part. The plate and standard were all one casting, and it was bolted through the plate to the push-beam. The lower pintle came out from the end of the beam. The upper one was at the upper end of the tiller-post, and the wheel was attached to these pintles, and this made the guiding apparatus of the machine. The plate being thin, and the standard being three inches in diameter, it would be weakened at the point of contact between the standard and the plate, on account of the difference in cooling. One would cool much faster than the other. The plate would cool much faster. That is a great difficulty foundrymen have to contend with, and this casting was wrong in shape for the purpose for which it was intended. It would be liable to break, and the place where it would break would be the point of contact between the standard and the plate, in the same way in which that one was broken which was exhibited to me."

The plaintiffs each testify in general terms as to the condition and fitness of the machine for the work to be done. Mr. Young says: "The castings for it were made in the Globe Foundry & Machine-Shop, in Stockton. George Lissenden did the wood-work. I shipped the machine about the 12th day of May, 1878. I took the machine from the shop, and loaded it on the cars. We took part of it apart on the platform at the depot. We had four animals to draw it from the shop to the depot. I cannot say how many blocks we crossed. The streets were in an ordinary condition. We crossed all the street crossings. We crossed two railroad tracks. The turning-wheels stood at an angle of about forty-five degrees while crossing the railroad,—I mean the tiller-wheel, or the standard of the tiller-wheel, that was broken. I put it upon the cars. It was in good condition when we put it upon the cars. Everything was all right. There was nothing wrong that I could see. I started seven of the same make that year, and they all worked well in grain from one to five feet in height." He further stated that the machine was "capable of cutting grain from one to five feet in height." It was shown by the witness that Mr. Hoult superintended the making of the machines, and that the witness saw them in course of construction, and saw the parts put together; that they put out thirteen of the machines that year, the other twelve being duplicates of this one, the one sold to the defendant being the first; and that the principle of this machine was precisely the same as a number of other machines that did work; after which he further testified: "I was on ten of them that season; started ten of them myself in the field in Merced, in grain from two and a half to five feet high, on the land of Mr. Huffman, Merced county,—on level land. Have seen the same kind of machine working since that time. The guiding-wheels of all the machines were made at the Globe Foundry. In taking the machine from the shop to the depot, and crossing the street crossings, and crossing the railroad track, and in making this turn at the depot, I consider a much harder test was made of the machine than any test in the field. I consider it a severe test. The machine was all right when taken apart and put upon the cars. I am satisfied the machine will do all that is claimed for it. In my opinion, it is fit for the purpose for which it was made. There was no latent defect arising from the process of manufacture not disclosed to Mr. Baldwin." It will be seen that this witness had nothing to do with the manufacture of the casting, and he so testifies in express terms. As to the only question, therefore, about which there was any real controversy, he was not an expert, and should not have been allowed to give an opinion, and would not have been, probably, if the objection to his giving an opinion had been confined to that branch of his testimony. Having given an opinion, under such circumstances, it was entitled to no weight whatever, and should be given none in arriving at a conclusion as to the sufficiency of the evidence. After testifying that the other machines were exact duplicates of the one sold to defendant, he was asked, on cross-examination, whether the other machines were not strengthened where this one is claimed to have been weak, and answered: "I don't know."

Mr. Hoult, the other plaintiff, testified as follows: "The machine shipped to Baldwin was well constructed. In my opinion, it would do good work in cutting and thrashing ordinary grain, from one to five feet in height. I think it was reasonably fit for that purpose. I don't know of any hidden defects in that machine, through any casting or wood-work. My opinion is based upon seeing duplicates of the same machine work, I mean a machine of a similar pattern in all respects. After the telegram for this second plate, we came to the conclusion there might be something wrong, and put a strap on it to make it stronger. Some of them had gone out without that, though, but those that remained we put a strap on, and then, after that, we added more metal to the plate, for they would break occasionally. There was never one broke before, to my knowledge. We made the plates after that seven-eighths of an inch thick. I saw the machine running with a plate similar to the one on Baldwin's machine during the year 1878. It was at Hughes' place, at Waterford, Stanislaus county. The grain was from two to four feet, —ordinary grain. I did not use the machine. I went there to look at it. It worked well. The tiller-post and plate on that machine was of the same dimensions as the one shipped to Baldwin,—the same kind. It did not have the strap on it, or anything else, but I will say it broke afterwards. It broke the next season. I think the machine sent to Baldwin would have done what we guarantied it to do under proper handling. I could not say whether the machine sent to Baldwin was the first one or not in the year 1878. My recollection is that two, may be three, machines were sent out during 1878, after that sent to Baldwin, on which the improved tiller-post was not placed. My recollection is clear in regard to one machine that went out, and that is of the machine of which I have spoken, and in which the tiller-post broke down the subsequent year." It thus appears that, as to the matter in controversy here, this witness, like the other, was not an expert, and was testifying without knowledge. His testimony makes it clear that but one machine like the one sold to the defendant was sent out, and that it gave way at this same weak spot, though not so soon as the one sold to the defendant.

One Lissenden was called for the plaintiffs, and testified that he had been a manufacturer of agricultural implements for more than 40 years, and that the material used in the machine was "first-class, number one material, and done satisfactory to the contractor;" that during his experience he had been using castings such as were used in these machines; that he tapped all of the castings, by way of testing whether they were perfect or not, and that there were no defects in any of the castings when they were put on; and that the shrinking was done by one Mosey, who was a competent man. It may be doubted whether this witness was shown to be an expert in the matter of these castings; but, admitting that he was, he testified as follows on the direct question in controversy: "Question. State to the jury whether or not, from your knowledge of the construction of these machines, from your knowledge of the material that went into them, and from your knowledge as a machinist, for the purpose for which they were manufactured and put together, whether or not they were fit for the purpose of cutting and thrashing ordinary grain, from one to five feet in height? Answer. I do not care to answer that question direct. Men have various opinions in reference to that. I can state that the quality of the material was first-class, and the work done first-class, according to the contract, but there are various opinions as to the qualifications of these machines in the field. I will testify that I did not intend to say that the machine is just as I would have done it, but it was built according to contract, and the work was done first class, and the material was first class." And on cross-examination: "Question by Counsel for Defendant. I understand you to say, in answer to a question by counsel on the other side, that you knew and gave it as your opinion, because of your knowledge and experience in the business, that the tiller-post sent Baldwin was a sufficient casting for that purpose. Answer. Yes, sir; it was a sufficient casting, in my opinion, with the strap or stirrup. Q. Without the strap or stirrup, was it sufficient? A. I don't think it was. I don't think it was weak around the foot of the post." The strap or stirrup was one of the improvements made in other machines subsequent to the sale to defendant. The evidence of this witness weakened, rather than strengthened, the plaintiff's case.

This is the substance of the evidence on this point. Applying to it the law, as declared by this court on the former appeal, it seems to us that the findings and verdict of the jury are entirely without evidence to support them. There were objections to some of the evidence, particularly the opinions given by the plaintiffs, and some of the instructions were complained of, but the conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to consider these questions. Upon the main issue in the case, in fact the only one material to have been considered, there was no substantial conflict in the evidence, and the verdict and judgment must be set aside for that reason.

Judgment and order appealed from reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

78 Cal. 389

BAILEY v. FOX. (No. 12,592.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1889.)

1. SALE—RESCISSION—DELAY.

Defendant, being the owner of a stock of hardware, sold a one-third interest each to plaintiff and one M., and formed a partnership with them. A large part of the stock was sold, and new stock purchased on credit, for which all the partners were liable. Afterwards plaintiff sued to rescind the sale, on the ground that a false inventory of the stock had been made, and that defendant had misrepresented the profits of the business. The discovery of the alleged fraud was made in May, but the offer to rescind was not made until the following October. Held, that the offer to rescind came too late.

2. SAME—TENDER—SUFFICIENCY.

The offer made by plaintiff to deliver to defendant the goods on hand, and pay him the amount realized from the sale of those disposed of, was not a sufficient tender. Defendant, before paying back the purchase money, was entitled to receive the identical things sold.

3. SAME—RESCISSION.

Plaintiff's right to rescission was also defeated by the fact that at the time the offer to rescind was made the whole of the stock had become partnership property, in which M., who was not made a party to the action to rescind, had an interest, making it impossible to place the parties in statu quo.

4. EQUITY—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—PLEADING.

No cause of action was stated in the complaint so far as it related to the alleged fraudulent representations respecting the former profits of the business, where it contained no allegation that the plaintiff was induced thereby to pay a higher price for the goods than he would otherwise have done, nor that the business was not profitable after plaintiff bought into it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; W. O. MINOR, Judge.

Suit by Samuel B. Bailey against John Fox, to rescind and cancel a contract of sale. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Schell & Bond and W. E. Turner, for appellant. Hatton & Fulkerth and W. L. Dudley, for respondent.

WORKS, J. On the 4th day of November, 1885, the appellant, being the owner of a stock of hardware and agricultural implements, sold a one-third interest therein to the respondent. The terms of sale were that an inventory of the stock should be taken and completed on or before November 30, 1885, the same to be valued at net San Francisco wholesale prices, and when the value was thus ascertained the value of the fixtures should be added, and the respondent should then pay the one-third of the amount thereof, as follows: Fifteen hundred dollars in cash, and the balance in two secured notes of equal amounts, payable January 1, 1887, and January 1, 1888, respectively. The sale was consummated in accordance with this agreement on the 30th of November, 1885. At the same time the appellant sold a like interest in the stock to one Meinecke on the same terms, whereby the parties to this suit and said Meinecke each became the owner of one-third interest in said stock. The inventory was taken in the presence of the respondent, who assisted in taking the same. The value of the stock and fixtures was found to be $6,434.32. It was a part of the agreement that the three owners of the stock should form a copartnership and carry on the business, the respondent and Meinecke to take the active management of the business, and the appellant, who had no knowledge of the business, to furnish some one in his place. The copartnership was formed by a written agreement, by which it was stipulated that the same should continue for three years, the profits and losses to be equally divided, and that the stock of the copartnership should be the stock on hand, all being equal owners therein.

This action is to rescind and cancel this contract of sale. Two grounds therefor are stated in the complaint: "(1) That the defendant, on said 4th day of November, 1885, and repeatedly before and at the time of his said offer to sell said stock of goods and interest in said business to plaintiff, and for the purpose of inducing said plaintiff to buy the same, and with the intent to deceive and defraud said plaintiff, did falsely and fraudulently state and represent to said plaintiff that said business as then and theretofore conducted by him was and had been a profitable and paying business, and that defendant had realized up to said time of said sale a fair profit in his said business; that plaintiff had confidence in said defendant, and believing said statement and representations so made by said defendant to be true, and relying thereon, purchased said interest in said stock of goods, wares, and merchandise, with said interest in said business and fixtures, and paid him therefor said sum of $6,434.32, in cash and notes, as hereinbefore stated; that in truth and in fact, and as defendant well knew, said statements and representations were false, and said business was not then, nor as it had theretofore been conducted by him, a profitable or paying business, and the defendant had not realized up to the date of said sale, or at any time, a fair or any profit whatever from the same. (2) Said plaintiff further charges and avers and shows, upon and according to his information and belief, that the said defendant, with the intent to defraud this plaintiff, caused and procured a false invoice and valuation to be made of said stock of goods, and in and by which the price thereof was greatly enhanced over and above net San Francisco wholesale prices, to-wit, in the sum of about thirty-five hundred dollars; all of which was and is in violation of said agreement between said plaintiff and defendant, and in fraud of said plaintiff, and by reason thereof defendant fraudulently obtained from said plaintiff the sum of about eleven hundred and seventy-five dollars." It is further averred that when plaintiff discovered that these representations were false, and that the inventory had been falsely taken, "plaintiff informed and notified said defendant thereof, and then and there demanded of said defendant that he return to this plaintiff the sum of $1,500, being the sum or amount which he had paid to said defendant as a part of the purchase price of said stock of goods, business, and fixtures; and that he also surrender and give up to plaintiff said two promissory notes of $2,468.16 each, hereinbefore described, the plaintiff at the same time offering to return to said defendant all of his one-third interest in said stock of said goods then on hand, and to account to him in cash for the value of such part or portion as had been sold, and to restore to him in kind or value everything which he had received from said defendant under and by said contract, upon the condition that the said defendant do likewise. But said defendant refused and still refuses to return to said plaintiff said sum of $1,500, or any part thereof, or give up or surrender said promissory notes, or either of them, to the great wrong and damage of said plaintiff in the sum of $6,434.32." There is no allegation in the complaint showing, or tending to show, that the business had not been profitable under the new management, or any other facts tending to show the materiality of the representations in respect to former profits, or that any damage or injury had resulted to the plaintiff by reason thereof.

The court finds against the plaintiff as to the allegation of fraud in taking the inventory, so that he must recover, if at all, upon the ground of false representations as to former profits in conducting the business. The court finds the making and consummation of the sale, in substance, as stated above; that the false representations were made, and believed and relied upon by the plaintiff, and that said business had not, prior to the sale, been profitable. Whether it had since been profitable or not is not found. It is further found that the plaintiff did not discover that said representations were false until June, 1886; that in the mean time the defendant had assigned the notes to a third party as collateral security; the copartnership had continued to carry on the business, had contracted an indebtedness of about $6,000 for other goods, purchased to replenish the stock, and had sold several thousand dollars' worth of the stock, a part of which had been sold on credit; that "plaintiff is not incapable, by reason of said copartnership, or the said business or outstanding indebtedness, of restoring defendant to his former condition, or to make restoration, if the notes which the defendant holds against the plaintiff be delivered up and canceled." The court further finds that "there was no unreasonable delay on the part of plaintiff in bringing this action," and that he has been damaged in the sum of $6,434.32, being the amount paid and agreed to be paid by him for the stock of goods.

The conclusions of law are as follows: "(1) That said contract was and is fraudulent and void, and that plaintiff is entitled to have it rescinded, canceled, and set aside; and it is so ordered. (2) That said plaintiff is entitled to have and recover of and from said defendant the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, ($1,500,) and legal interest thereon from November 30, 1885; and it is so ordered. (3) That said plaintiff is entitled to have and recover of and from said defendant the surrender of the said two promissory notes for $2,468.16, each to be canceled and destroyed; and it is so ordered."

It will be seen that these conclusions of law are to the effect that the contract should be canceled; that plaintiff recover back his $1,500, with legal interest, from the date of its judgment; and that the notes given by him should be surrendered to him and canceled. This seems to us to be a cancellation of one side of the contract, leaving the other side intact. It leaves the plaintiff with all the stock of goods purchased by him remaining unsold, and all the money realized from sales of that disposed of, and the defendant takes nothing. This is partially remedied by the decree, which, in addition to the matters provided for in these conclusions of law, decrees "that Samuel B. Bailey, plaintiff, restore to John Fox, defendant, all the right, title, and interest of said Bailey in and to all the goods, wares, and merchandise now on hand, and purchased by said Bailey from said Fox, under the contract of sale alleged and set forth in the complaint, and all the right, title, and interest of said Bailey in and to all the goods, wares, and merchandise now on hand and received since the making of said contract of sale, in the conducting and carrying on of the hardware business, conducted and carried on by said Bailey, Fox, and one E. Meinecke, together with all the right, title, and interest of the said Bailey in and to all indebtedness, and the evidence thereof, due or owing to said parties by or on account of the conducting or carrying on of said business." The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appeals.

Several questions as to the misjoinder of parties and rulings at the trial are presented by the briefs, but the conclusion we have reached upon the merits renders it unnecessary to consider them.

The judgment in favor of the plaintiff is erroneous for several reasons: (1) The attempted rescission by him was not in time. (2) The tender made upon an offer to rescind was insufficient. (3) It appears to have been impossible, at the time of the offer to rescind, to place the defendant in statu quo. (4) The court, having found against the plaintiff in respect to the alleged fraud in taking the inventory, the findings show no cause of action, as there is no finding showing that the representations as to the former profits of the business were material, or resulted in any injury to the plaintiff.

1. It is a well-established and just rule of equity that a party who seeks to avoid a contract for fraud must rescind the same promptly after the fraud is discovered, or he will be deemed to have waived it. Civil Code, § 1691; Pratt v. Fiske, 17 Cal. 380; Barfield v. Price, 40 Cal. 535; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533; Benj. Sales, § 452; Ross v. Titterton, 6 Hun, 280; Foley v. Crow, 37 Md. 51. It is true the court finds that the fraud was discovered in June, and that when plaintiff made the discovery he notified the defendant, and demanded the rescission. The court also finds that there was no unreasonable delay in bringing the action. So far as the finding as to the time of discovery and offer to rescind is concerned, it has no evidence to support it. The evidence of the plaintiff, which is undisputed, is that he made the discovery in May. He says: "I made the discovery that the business was not paying some time in the spring or summer, and notified Fox some time in September or October. I said all along in the spring and summer-time we found things were not as we liked there and were represented. It was earlier than May or June that we made the discovery; along about in May." The discovery being made in May, if not earlier, and the offer to rescind in September or October, there were at least four months intervening, and the plaintiff testifies that during all of that time he continued to sell the old stock of goods and purchase new stock. It would be entirely inequitable, it seems to us, to permit a party to rescind a contract after such a delay, under the circumstances of this case.

2. The tender made was not of the goods purchased, as a great part of them had been sold. The offer was to deliver the goods on hand and pay the amount realized from the sale of those disposed of. This was not sufficient. Upon a rescission the defendant, before paying back the purchase money and delivering up the notes, was entitled to receive the identical things sold. He was not bound to take the price at which they were sold. That might, so far as we know, have been less than their value. But, whether it was or not, the rule is well settled that, where the party complaining has parted with the thing purchased, he cannot rescind, but must resort to an action for damages. Herman v. Haffenegger, 54 Cal. 161; Cobb v. Hatfield, supra; Benj. Sales, § 452.

3. Again, at the time the offer to rescind was made, it had become impossible by the act of the plaintiff himself, or jointly with the other active partner, to place the defendant in statu quo. As a result of the sale, a partnership had been formed, as we have stated, and the whole of the stock had become partnership property, in which Meinecke, who was not made a party to this action, had an interest. A large part of the stock had been sold and new stock purchased on credit, for which the defendant, as well as the other partners, was personally liable. This being the situation of affairs, it was utterly impossible to place any of the parties in statu quo. It is well settled that under such circumstances there can be no rescission of the contract. Civil Code, § 1691; Herman v. Haffenegger, supra; Pullman v. Alley, 53 N. Y. 637; Gould v. Bank, 86 N. Y. 75; Sinclair v. Neill, 1 Hun, 80; Hogan v. Weyer, 5 Hill, 389; Matteawan Co. v. Bentley, 13 Barb. 641; Kerr, Fraud & M. 48, 328; Benj. Sales, § 452; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 706; 1 Whart. Cont. § 286; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533.

4. The complaint states no cause of action so far as it relates to fraudulent representations respecting the question of former profits of the business. It contains no allegation that the plaintiff was induced thereby to pay a higher price for the goods than he would otherwise have done, nor is it averred that the business was not profitable after the plaintiff bought into it. In other words, there is nothing in the complaint to show that the plaintiff was in any way injured by the representations, admitting them to have been false. The findings make no better case for the plaintiff than the complaint. In order to entitle a party to rescind a contract, he must not only show the fraud, but that as a result thereof some damage has resulted to him. Morrison v. Lods, 39 Cal. 381; Marriner v. Dennison, ante, 386. For these reasons the defendant would have been entitled to judgment in his favor on the findings in the court below, if he had asked it.

The form of judgment is objected to. We think these objections are well taken, but the view we have taken of the merits of the case renders it unnecessary to consider them at length. As the case has been fully tried by the court, and the facts found, a new trial would be fruitless under the law as stated above. Therefore the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with instructions to the court below to so modify its conclusions of law as to conform with this opinion, and render judgment thereon for the defendant.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 421

In re LLOYD. (No. 20,524.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 19, 1889.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—THE JUDICIARY—CREATION OF COURTS—JUDGES.

Act Cal. March 5, 1889, provides for the creation of the "police court of the city and county of San Francisco," to consist of three judges. It also provides that the two judges then acting as judges of the police judges' courts in said city and county shall, upon the passage of the act, become judges of the police court, to hold office for the length of time for which they have been elected. Held, that the effect of the act was merely to add a new judge to a then existing court, and not to create a new court, and that it was not unconstitutional as an attempt by an act of the legislature to make the judges of an existing court, judges of a new court.

In bank. Application for habeas corpus.

J. A. Spinetti and W. T. Baggett, for petitioner. Alfred Clark, amicus curiæ, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an application for the discharge of the petitioner from imprisonment under a judgment of conviction for battery, rendered by the police court of the city and county of San Francisco. The only ground upon which the right to his discharge is claimed by the petitioner is that the act creating said court is unconstitutional. The act referred to was approved March 5, 1889. The first section thereof provides:

"Section 1. There is hereby created and established in and for the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, a court to be known as the 'Police Court of the City and County of San Francisco,' which court shall consist of three judges, who shall be elected at the general elections held according to law, each of whom shall hold office for the term of two years, any one or more of whom may hold court. The court shall be divided into departments known as 'Department Number One, Department Number Two, Department Number Three.' There may be as many sessions of said court at the same time as there are judges thereof. The judges shall choose from their number a presiding judge, who may be removed at their pleasure. He shall assign the judges to their respective departments: provided, however, that either of the judges may preside in either of the departments in the absence or inability to act of the judge regularly assigned thereto. The judgments, orders, and proceeedings of any session of said court, held by any one or more of the judges of said court, respectively, shall be equally effectual as if all of the judges of said respective courts presided at such session."

This is followed by provisions defining the jurisdiction, regulating the organization, and providing the officers for the court. Section 11 of the act is as follows:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting the two judges at present acting as police judges in the city and county of San Francisco; but they shall, immediately after the passage of this act, become judges of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, and hold office for the length of time for which they have been elected. Within thirty days after the passage of this act, the governor of the state of California shall appoint a suitable person to act as judge of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, who shall hold office until the first Monday in January, 1891, and he, together with two judges aforesaid, shall constitute the police court of the city and county of San Francisco until their successors are elected and qualified according to law. The salary of each of the judges of said court shall be the same as that now paid the judge of 'the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco.'"

At the time the statute was enacted, there existed in the city and county of San Francisco two courts known as "Police Judges' Courts," and presided over by the judges referred to in section 11 of the act. The jurisdiction of these courts was precisely the same. They were essentially one and the same court, acting in departments, and constituted the police court of the city and county. The only objection to the new act, worthy of consideration, is that it created a new court to consist of three judges, and that, being a new court, the then judges of the police judges' courts could not be declared and made judges thereof by an act of the legislature.

Immediately after the enactment of the statute H. L. Joachimsen was appointed a judge of said police court, and qualified as such; whereupon the two judges of the police judges' courts and said Joachimsen organized said court by electing one of their number presiding judge, and each of said judges was assigned to one of the departments of the court. Judge Joachimsen being so assigned to department 3, the petitioner was regularly charged before him, and tried and convicted.

Assuming that the two old judges were not parts of the court, it is urged that the court had not legally organized, and was not a court, and the trial and conviction of the petitioner were, for that reason, without authority of law. The act in question is not carefully and accurately worded, but its object, purpose, and effect seems to us to be clear enough. It does not have the effect, nor was it intended, to abolish the existing police courts of the city and county, or to create a new and independent court, but to add to the existing courts another judge, and to reorganize the court thus increased in numbers by dividing the same into departments, with a presiding judge. This is perfectly clear from the fact that the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the court are unchanged. The only ground upon which it could be claimed that anything more was intended than above stated is the slight change made in the name of the court, and this should have no weight when, taking the whole act together, the legislative intent is so apparent.

We hold, therefore, that the act in question is constitutional, and the petitioner should be remanded. It is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

78 Cal. 351

HABENICHT v. LISSAK. (No. 11,578.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1889.)

1. EXECUTION—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—SEATS IN STOCK EXCHANGE.
A seat in a stock exchange is property, and liable for the owner's debts, notwithstanding the provisions in the by-laws of the exchange that the property is held in trust for the members, that "no member under any circumstances shall be deemed to have or claim or possess any individual right, title, or interest in the property or assets of the association" until finally dissolved, and that every applicant for membership is subjected to the scrutiny of a committee, especially as it is also provided that the member may dispose of his privileges, subject to the right of the board to reject any nominee.[1]

2. SAME—RECEIVERS.
It is proper in supplementary proceedings against such owner to appoint a receiver with power to sell the seats, and to order the owner to execute an assignment or any other instrument necessary to vest the title to such seats in the purchaser.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Supplementary proceedings by Habenicht against Lissak. From an order appointing a receiver and directing assignments of seats in a stock exchange, owned by the debtor, defendant appeals.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. Pillsbury & Titus and Horace G. Platt, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. In March, 1884, the plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant for several thousand dollars. About a year later a writ of execution was issued on the judgment, and placed in the hands of the sheriff, by whom it was afterwards returned wholly unsatisfied. In June, 1885, the proceedings to be reviewed herein—proceedings supplementary to execution—were instituted by the plaintiff upon the unsatisfied judgment in his favor. Upon the examination of the judgment debtor, it was disclosed that he owned a seat or membership in the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, and another seat or membership in the San Francisco Produce Exchange. In September, 1885, upon due notice given, plaintiff made a motion for the appointment of a receiver of the two seats above named, with power to sell the same, and apply the proceeds thereof in satisfaction of the judgment. The motion was accompanied by an affidavit setting forth the facts above stated, and the additional facts that defendant had refused to apply the seats in satisfaction of the judgment, and that each of said seats exceeded in value the sum of $1,000. Upon the hearing of the motion, the defendant filed affidavits, in one of which the constitution and by-laws of the two boards were fully set forth. It appears from the constitution and by-laws of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board that the legal title and ownership of the property of the association is vested in certain officers "in trust for the benefit and enjoyment of its members;" that "no member, under any circumstances, shall be deemed to have, or claim, or possess any individual right, title, or interest in the property or assets of the association, except when the same shall be finally dissolved, and its affairs wound up by its then remaining members;" that every application for membership is subjected to the scrutiny of a committee, whose report, if favorable, entitles the applicant to be balloted for, and, whether favorable or unfavorable, the applicant may be rejected by 20 negative votes; that if a member of the association join any similar organization in this state he may be immediately expelled; that it is "distinctly understood and agreed between the board and each member thereof that the board reserves the right to reject any nominee."

---

[1] See note to Clute v. Loveland, 9 Pac. Rep. 133, cited in opinion.

The constitutions and by-laws of the two boards are, so far as the questions before us are concerned, similar in character; and so far as the rights, duties, and interests of the members are concerned, the laws of the two boards are essentially the same as those of other stock and produce exchanges in New York and other states of the Union.

After the hearing upon the motion, the court below made an order appointing C. K. Bonestell, Esq., a receiver of both seats, with power to sell the same and apply the proceeds thereof, after payment of the expenses, to the satisfaction of the judgment, and requiring the defendant to execute any assignment or other instrument necessary for the purpose of vesting his title to the seats in such person or persons as might become purchasers thereof from the receiver, and might be qualified to hold the same under the rules of the respective boards. No provision was made in the order as to the manner of sale,—whether it should be a public or private sale. Thereafter the receiver reported to the court that he had sold the seats to one H. L. E. Meyer for the sum of $2,200. This sale was confirmed by the court, the amount realized from the sale was credited on the judgment, and the appellant was directed to execute and deliver assignments of the two seats within five days thereafter, said assignments to be deposited, pending the appeal, with the clerk of of the court. Appellant excepted to the order appointing the receiver, and directing him to sell the seats, and also excepted to the order directing the execution and delivery of the assignments, but no objection was made to the order confirming the sale.

As stated by appellant, two questions are presented here for consideration:

1. Did the seats or any interest therein constitute property within the reach of the appellant's judgment creditors?

2. If they did, was the order appointing a receiver, and the order directing the appellant to execute assignments of all his right, title, and interest in and to the seats a proper mode of reaching that property?

On the first question presented there is an apparent conflict of judicial opinions. In Thompson v. Adams, 93 Pa. St. 55, the court said: "The seat is not property in the eye of the law; it could not be seized in execution for the debts of the members. It is the mere creation of the board, and, of course, was to be held and enjoyed with all the limitations and restrictions which the constitution of the board chose to put upon it. In Pancoast v. Gowen, Id. 71, the court said: "A seat in the board of brokers is not property subject to execution in any form. It is a mere personal privilege, perhaps more accurately a license, to buy and sell at the meetings of the board. It certainly could not be levied on and sold under a fi. fa. The sheriff's vendee would acquire no title which he could enforce." It may be said, before passing to the authorities cited on the other side of the question, that in Thompson v. Adams "the plaintiff below was not a member but had furnished the money by which Richards obtained a seat." He therefore contended that he was the equitable owner of the seat, and that the defendant had no right to apply the proceeds to debts due by Richards to other members, in pursuance of the terms of the constitution of the club. The question for the decision of the court there was whether or not plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds of the seat, either in full or pari passu with the other creditors of said Richards, who at the time of his decease were members of the board, or whether the claims of such members were paramount to the plaintiff's until the former were satisfied. The court decided that the seat "was to be held and enjoyed with all the limitations and restrictions which the constitution of the board chose to put upon it." And in Pancoast v. Gowen it did not appear whether there were any claims against the seat by members of the board, but "the answers of the garnishees admitted that Houston, the defendant in the judgment, owned a seat in the stock exchange, against which there were no claims by the members of that body at the time the attachment was issued, but they alleged that claims had since been presented." In the case before us it is not claimed that the defendant was, at the time of the proceedings in the court below, indebted to any of his associates in either board.

In Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523, the court decided that the proceeds of a sale of the seat in the hands of the treasurer of the board, after payment of the preferred claims of members of the board, could be reached by the assignee in bankruptcy, and of the person whose seat had been sold. While this was the only matter for decision before the court, Mr. Justice MILLER, speaking for the court, said: "There can be no doubt that the incorporeal right which Fenn had to his seat when he became bankrupt was property, and the sum realized by the assignees from its sale proves that it was valuable property. Nor do we think there can be any reason to doubt that, if he had made no such assignment, it would have passed, subject to the rules of the stock board, to his assignee in bankruptcy. * * * Though we have said it is property, it is incumbered with conditions when purchased, without which it could not be obtained. It never was free from the conditions of article 15, neither when Fenn bought, nor at any time before or since. That rule entered into and became an incident of the property when it was created, and remains a part of it, into whose hands soever it may come."

In Clute v. Loveland, 68 Cal. 254, 9 Pac. Rep. 133, this court said: "The rules expressly authorize each member to dispose of his seat, subject, however, to the condition that before the purchaser can participate in the proceedings of the board he must be elected a member thereof. The power to dispose of the seat includes the power to dispose of it absolutely or conditionally. If a member should sell his seat to one who should not be elected a member of the board, it cannot be doubted that such purchaser would take, subject to the conditions imposed by the rules of the association, the interest of the seller in the property of the association. * * * Whether the disposition be absolute at the beginning, or subsequently becomes so through judicial proceedings, the result is the same." It is true, in that case there was an agreement between the parties, Clute and Loveland, by which the latter mortgaged his seat to the former as security for the repayment of moneys due from the one to the other. But this particular feature of the case, if the seat is property, is not enough to distinguish it in principle from the one before us. The constitution and by-laws of the association seem to regard the seats as property. Article 13 of the constitution provides that a member in good standing "shall have the right to dispose of his privileges in the board, and to nominate a successor to fill the vacancy occasioned by his retirement, * * * but the board reserves the right to reject any nominee. In the event of the death of a solvent member, the board will dispose of the vacant seat to the best advantage for the benefit of his widow and children, or those persons who shall be designated by him in his last will and testament," etc. Whenever a member has been deprived of his privileges, or surrenders his membership, it is provided that his seat may be sold, and the president of the board, as trustee, shall hold the proceeds "to discharge the obligations due by such person to members of the board, and any surplus remaining shall, after having satisfied all other claims against him, be delivered to the delinquent, or to any person authorized to receive the same."

In Londheim v. White, 67 How. Pr. 467, the court said: "It must be conceded, I think, in the light of all the decisions, that a seat or membership in the stock exchange is property, and should be applied in the same manner as other property of a debtor to the payment of his debts. It may be surrounded and clogged with conditions and restrictions, but still it is property available for the payment of debts, and can be made available for that purpose, subject to and by an observance of those restrictions and conditions. * * * This question has been passed upon so frequently by the courts as to make it no longer doubtful or debatable." In Bank v. Murphy, 60 How. Pr. 426, the court, referring to the contention that such a seat is not tangible property, said: "If such a result may be attained the effort of active imagination cannot circumscribe the associations human ingenuity will produce to thus transmute veritable assets into intangible, and yet most substantial and valuable, shadows." Judge CHOATE, in the United States district court, Southern district, New York, upon an application for an order requiring a bankrupt to make a transfer of his seat in the New York Stock Exchange to the assignee in bankruptcy, or to such person as the assignee may procure as a purchaser of the seat, said: "It (the seat) is a part of the bankrupt's business assets, or more generally of his property, which it was the primary design of the bankrupt law to distribute among his creditors, and that the peculiarities which distinguish this from other property are, in view of the evident purpose and scope of the bankrupt law, mere technicalities,—cobwebs, which the law is strong enough to break through." In re Ketchum, 1 Fed. Rep. 842. See, also, Powell v. Waldron, 89 N. Y. 328.

We conclude, therefore, that the weight of authority and the better reasoning support the proposition that such a seat or membership is property, and should be applied, as other property of a debtor, to the payment of his debts. To hold that it cannot be thus applied would establish a rule giving to the members of such associations the power to invest fortunes under the name of licenses and privileges, and by their constitutions and regulations to establish a law of exemption for the same.

Upon the other question raised we think there can be little doubt. In Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. 520, it was held that proceedings supplementary to execution are intended to take the place of the creditors' bill, and in such a proceeding it was proper to order the execution debtor to make an assignment to a receiver of his patent right to an invention. It was always the rule in a proceeding known as a "creditor's bill," as we understand it, to appoint a receiver after the execution had been returned nulla bona. Note to Ward v. Beebe, 15 Abb. Pr. 373; Stoors v. Kelsey, 2 Paige, 417; Hadden v. Spader, 20 Johns. 554; Londheim v. White, supra; In re Ketchum, supra. Freeman, referring to such seats says: "They have been spoken of by the courts as property, and it has been said that on bankruptcy they would pass to the assignee, subject to the rules of the stock board. If this be true, they must be subject to execution in some mode, perhaps by creditor's bill, or by proceedings supplemental to execution, in which a receiver could be appointed and a transfer to him compelled." 1 Freem. Ex'ns, (2d Ed.) § 110; 2 Freem. Ex'ns, (2d Ed.) § 419; Code Civil Proc. § 564, subd. 4.

No claim was made in the court below that a better price could have been realized for the seats than was obtained through the sale by the receiver, and, as stated before, no objection was made to the order of the court confirming the sale of the seats for $2,200, nor has any appeal been taken therefrom.

The orders are affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

78 Cal. 418

HAILE v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 13,103.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 19, 1889.)

PROHIBITION, WRIT OF—INSOLVENCY—RECEIVERS—ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

An insolvent debtor made an assignment for the benefit of creditors of the property in controversy to petitioner, who duly qualified and took possession. This property was attached by a creditor, and, pending replevin by petitioner, the insolvent filed her petition in insolvency, reciting the assignment of this property, and was declared an insolvent, and the sheriff was ordered to take possession of her property. A receiver was appointed upon a petition by the creditors, which petition wholly ignored this petitioner's claim to property, as assignee or otherwise, nor did it show that the property sought to be placed in the receiver's hands was the same as that assigned to petitioner. The order directed the receiver to take charge of "all property of said insolvent." Held that, as the order did not affect in any way the petitioner's rights, he was not entitled to a writ of prohibition.

In bank. Application for a writ of prohibition to the superior court, San Bernardino county; James A. GIBSON, Judge.

Rotchild & Ach, for petitioner. Paris & Fox and H. Goodcell, Jr., for respondent.

WORKS, J. Application for a writ of prohibition. Order granting alternative writ, with leave to the respondent to move to vacate the same. The motion to vacate has been made, and presents the questions to be considered. The facts as they appear from the petition are substantially these: On the 2d day of January, 1889, one W. R. Tolles, being in insolvent circumstances, made an assignment to the petitioner of the property in controversy, for the benefit of her creditors. The necessary inventory and bond was filed and the property taken into his possession. On the 16th of the same month, one Sachs, a creditor of Mrs. Tolles, brought his action in the court below to recover his debt, and caused the property assigned to the petitioner to be attached, whereupon the petitioner brought his action against the sheriff to recover possession of the property. While matters stood in this condition, Mrs. Tolles filed her voluntary petition in insolvency, from which it appears that the property here in controversy had been by her assigned to the petitioner as above stated. She was duly adjudged to be an insolvent, and the sheriff ordered to take charge of her property. Thereupon the creditors filed their petition, setting out that the property of the insolvent consisted of a stock of millinery goods and other property, and stating certain reasons tending to show a necessity for the immediate sale of the property in the interest of the creditors. The petition entirely ignores any claim of the petitioner here to the property, as assignee or otherwise. The validity of the assignment to him is not questioned, nor does it appear upon the face of the proceedings that the property sought to be placed in the hands of a receiver is the same property that had been assigned to him, except that such an inference may be drawn from an allegation in the petition that the property mentioned therein is in the hands of the sheriff, and in litigation. Upon the filing of this petition an order was made reciting the substance of the petition, and concluding as follows: "It is therefore ordered that E. C. Seymour be, and he is hereby, appointed such receiver upon taking the oath and giving a bond to the state of California, as required by law, in the sum of $25,000, and that upon qualifying he take charge and possession of all property of said insolvent, real, personal, or mixed, whatsoever and wheresoever situated, and all persons having the same, or any part thereof, in his possession or their possession, are hereby directed to deliver the said property to said receiver, and all persons owing money to said insolvent are hereby directed to pay the same to said receiver, and said receiver is hereby authorized and directed to sell and dispose of all of said property at public or private sale, as he may deem best, after giving at least ten days' notice of such sale, by publication in at least one newspaper published in the following-named cities, to-wit, San Bernardino, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and that he keep the proceeds of such sale, less the necessary expenses and charges of preserving and disposing of said property, subject to the order of this court." It is alleged in the petition here that the court below, without notice to the petitioner, ordered the receiver to take possession of and sell the property assigned to him, and it was contended at the argument that the court had no jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner, and therefore no power to adjudicate upon the question as to his right or title to the property, and no authority to order his property to be sold. But the petition shows upon its face that the court below did not assume or undertake to adjudicate upon the title or claim of the petitioner to any property, nor did it order the sale of any specific property, or any property owned or claimed by him. The whole proceeding appears upon the face of the petition and exhibits, and shows that the order was that the receiver take charge of "all property of said insolvent, real, personal, and mixed," and that "all persons having the same, or any part thereof, in his or their possession, are hereby directed to deliver the said property to said receiver," and the same property is ordered to be sold. The proceedings and order, being set out as a part of the petition, must control in determining what action was taken by the court below, as against the allegations of the petition itself. The order of the court below could not affect the petitioner's rights in any way. If the receiver has taken property belonging to the petitioner under the order, he has done so without authority, and is a mere trespasser. This being the case the petitioner has his remedy against the person claiming to act as such receiver, and cannot resort to the extraordinary remedy of prohibition. Motion to vacate order granting the alternative writ of prohibition is allowed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

21 PACIFIC REPORTER

21

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

21 PACIFIC REPORTER

(78 Cal. 439)

GATES v. CARQUINEZ PACKING CO. (No. 12,531.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

SALE—DELIVERY TO CARRIER.

Under a contract for the sale of fruit, the seller was to deliver the fruit on board the cars, consigned to the buyer, and send daily statements of weights. Upon its arrival at the buyer's cannery it was to be immediately reweighed, and the seller notified of any substantial difference in weights, and the fruit held for 12 hours for adjustment of weights and rebate for defect in quality. In case of failure to give notice, the shipping weight was to be taken as conclusive. Held, that the title passed upon delivery to the carrier, and loss from shrinkage during transit must be borne by the buyer.[1]

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county; A. J. BUCKLES, Judge.

George A. Lamont, for appellant. J. F. Wendell and O. P. Dobbins, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover the sum of $301.60, balance alleged to be due for fruit sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The court below gave judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The facts are these: The plaintiff owned a tract of land in Vaca valley, on which he was raising apricots, peaches, and Bartlett pears, and the defendant was engaged in the business of canning fruit at Benicia. On the 15th of October, 1886, the parties entered into a written contract for the sale and purchase of the fruit to be raised on the plaintiff's trees during the five years then next ensuing. The portions of the contract material to the determination of the questions presented on this appeal are as follows: "Said party of the first part sells, and said party of the second part buys, said fruit upon the terms and conditions hereinafter expressed. The party of the first part, at his own cost and expense, shall, during said term, gather said fruit each season when the same is in a suitable condition of ripeness for canning purposes, and deliver the same on board the cars at the railroad station at Vacaville, in said Solano county, consigned to party of the second part at Benicia, in open 50-pound boxes, such as are now used to transport fruit from said point to canneries. Freight from Vacaville to Benicia, and all charges thereafter, to be paid by said party of the second part. * * * Said fruit shall be consigned to the party of the second part at its cannery at Benicia, in said Solano county, and immediately upon its arrival at said cannery shall be weighed by said party of the second part. * * * The party of the first part shall send to the party of the second part, at the cannery at Benicia, a daily statement of the weights of the fruit shipped that day, and in case the weight at the cannery shall not substantially correspond with the same, or in case the quality of the fruit shall not be according to contract as herein provided, the party of the first part shall be immediately notified by telephone or telegraph, and the fruit shall be held twelve hours for inspection and adjustment of weights, and arrangement as to rebate in case of defective quality, should the party of the second part be willing to accept the same at a rebate. Should said party of the second part fail to give such notice, or so hold said fruit, the quality of the fruit and the shipping weight shall be conclusively taken as correct." It is further provided in the contract that the fruit "so delivered" shall be of certain sizes and quality, and that for "the fruit so delivered" the party of the second part shall pay certain named prices. The attorney for appellant states the case very clearly and concisely, as follows: "It is conceded that plaintiff has fully complied with all the terms of the contract on his part; that the fruit referred to in the contract was properly and correctly weighed at Vacaville, and there placed on board the cars, consigned to the defendant at Benicia. It is also conceded that the fruit, as fast as it reached the cannery of defendant at Benicia, was immediately and correctly weighed. It was found upon comparison of weights that the defendant's weights fell short of plaintiff's weights. This shortage is conceded to be attributable solely to natural causes,—from evaporation after being placed on board the cars at Vacaville, and while in transit to defendant's cannery at Benicia. The only question involved in the case is, which weights are to govern,—those of plaintiff at Vacaville, or those of defendant at Benicia? In other words, which party, plaintiff or defendant, is to bear the loss of the shrinkage of the fruit after being placed on the cars at Vacaville, and while in transit to Benicia?"

---

[1] Respecting delivery to a carrier as vesting title on a sale of chattels, see Hershiser v. Delone, (Neb.) 38 N. W. Rep. 863, and note. In general, as to when title passes, see Rechtin v. McGary, (Ind.) 19 N. E. Rep. 731, and note; Jamison v. Simon, (Cal.) 8 Pac. Rep. 502, and note.

The question presented must be determined by a construction of the contract. It is argued for appellant that, looking at the whole contract, the conclusion of the court below was not warranted; but we think it was. Mr. Benjamin, in his work on Sales, states the rule as to the delivery of goods to a common carrier as follows: "It is well settled that the delivery of goods to a common carrier, a fortiori to one especially designated by the purchaser, for conveyance to him or to a place designated by him, constitutes an actual receipt by the purchaser. In such cases the carrier is, in contemplation of law, the bailee of the person to whom, not by whom, the goods are sent; the latter in employing the carrier being considered as an agent of the former for that purpose. It must not be forgotten that the carrier only represents the purchaser for the purpose of receiving, not accepting, the goods." Section 181. And the same learned author further says that even where the vendor agrees to make the delivery at a distant place, "thus assuming the risks of the carriage," his "duty to deliver them in merchantable condition is complied with if the goods are in proper condition when delivered to the carrier, provided the injury received during the transit does not exceed that which must necessarily result from the transit." Section 693, 3d Amer. Ed., and section 1640, Ed. 1888. Now, the plaintiff's fruit was to be weighed and delivered on board the cars at Vacaville, and the defendant was to pay the freight and all charges thereafter, and also an agreed price per pound "for the fruit so delivered." Under the rule above stated, it must therefore be held that the fruit was received by defendant at Vacaville, and the fact that the right was reserved to reject it, after its arrival at the cannery, if the plaintiff's weights proved not to be substantially correct, or the quality was not according to contract, is not material. There is a broad difference between the receipt and acceptance of goods. The right to reject goods because they are not of the kind or quality required by the contract is, of necessity, usually exercised by the buyer after they have been actually received by him; and this is always the case where they are consigned to him from another place. The country buyer may refuse to accept goods ordered from the city merchant, if they prove, when received by him, not to be of kind or quality ordered; but this does not change the rule that, if they are of such kind and quality, they will be held in law to have been delivered to him at the place of shipment, and to be at his risk while in transit. In this case it was expressly stipulated that if defendant should reject any fruit because of a substantial inaccuracy in plaintiff's weights, notice by telephone or telegraph should be immediately given to plaintiff, and, in case of a failure to give such notice, the "shipping weights" should be conclusively taken as correct. The shipping weights were the plaintiff's weights, and for what purpose were they to be deemed conclusively correct? We can see but one purpose, and that is to fix conclusively the number of pounds received and to be paid for by defendant. There is nothing in the balance of the contract necessarily in conflict with this view, and we therefore conclude that the judgment was right, and should be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.
I concur in the conclusion: HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 443

COBURN v. BROOKS et al. (No. 11,576.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. 1872, § 1254, relating to proceedings in eminent domain, authorizes the plaintiff to take possession, pending the proceedings upon the execution of a bond, "to pay, as well the compensation in that behalf, when ascertained, as all damages which may be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property shall not be finally taken for public use." Held, that it is not necessary to make a demand on the principal in order to maintain an action against the sureties on such bond.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Code Civil Proc. 1872, § 1254: "At any time after service of summons, the court may authorize the plaintiff, if already in possession, to continue therein, and, if not, then to take possession of and use the property during the pendency, and until the final conclusion, of such proceedings, and may stay all actions and proceedings against the plaintiff on account thereof; but the plaintiff must give security, to be approved by such court or judge, to pay, as well the compensation in that behalf, when ascertained, as all damages which may be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property shall not finally taken for public use."

Crittenden Thornton and F. H. Merzbach, for appellant. Fox & Kellogg, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This action was commenced August 22, 1876, trial had January 6, 1886, and judgment of nonsuit thereafter entered, from which plaintiff has appealed. The action is against the defendants, as sureties, in an undertaking given under section 1254, Code Civil Proc. The defendants herein became sureties for the plaintiffs in the case of Templeton et al. v. Coburn et al., a proceeding in eminent domain then pending in the Twelfth district court. The condition of the undertaking is that said sureties "do hereby undertake, promise, and agree that the plaintiffs in this case shall and will pay all such damages or compensation as may be awarded to the defendants, or either of them, * * * if, for any cause, such land shall not be finally taken for public use, or, in default thereof, we will pay the same," etc. Upon the trial the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove each and every allegation of the complaint herein, and rested his case. There is no allegation in the complaint of a demand upon the principals named in the undertaking for the damages claimed by plaintiff, nor did the plaintiff offer any evidence of such demand. The judgment of nonsuit was granted solely upon the ground that the plaintiff had neither pleaded nor proved a demand upon the principals named in the undertaking, and the only question before us is whether such a demand must be alleged or proved.

The court below seems to have been embarrassed by the decisions of this court in Morgan v. Menzies, 60 Cal. 348, and 65 Cal. 243, 3 Pac. Rep. 807, and bound by the following statement of Chief Justice MORRISON on the first appeal: "It will be observed that the undertaking on the part of the defendants is that the plaintiff in the action will pay, and there is no averment in the complaint that it has not paid, or that even a demand has been made. There is not, therefore, any averment in the complaint of a breach which would give the plaintiff in this case a right of action against the defendants on the undertaking." The two decisions referred to are somewhat confusing, but, when read together, they fail to support the proposition, we think, that a demand upon the principal in cases like the one before us is necessary. In that case, the principal for whom the defendants had become sureties, was the city and county of San Francisco. An examination of the full record, including the briefs, discloses the fact that the principal contentions on behalf of the appellants therein were: First. That "the attachment undertaking on which the action was based was taken without authority, and contrary to law, no undertaking being required of the city. Code Civil Proc. 1058. Being unauthorized and taken by an officer without authority of law, it is void, and cannot be enforced." Second. That "the city and county were not in default for nonpayment, because no payment could be made under the statute then in force without a presentation of the claim to the board of supervisors by the claimant, Morgan, himself." It may be said in passing that inasmuch as the first contention was sustained by this court, holding that the undertaking was absolutely void, it was unnecessary to the decision of the case to consider the question of demand. It was argued by the appellant that "putting a party in default, as applied to the case, must mean putting him in such a position that his failure to pay becomes a default, and by not presenting the claim the city was not put in a position by which it was obligated to or could pay the demand; in other words, was not put in default. Parnell v. Hancock, 48 Cal. 452, was relied on in support of the proposition that the sureties, under such circumstances, could not be sued until the judgment against their principal was in a condition to be enforced by an execution; that, so long as anything remained to be done to put the principal in default, no action could be maintained against the sureties." The court evidently took the same view of the case as counsel for appellant. On the second appeal it was said: "On a former appeal in this case we held that no recovery could be had in the action out of which the case arises, because there was no averment and no proof that the claim of the plaintiff had been presented to the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, as required by the statute of 1863–64, pp. 152, 153, and payment demanded." It is true, the court said: "Where a demand is necessary to fix the liability of sureties to an undertaking, it is parcel of the contract, and it must be made before the commencement of an action for the breach of the undertaking, and in the action itself it must be averred and proved." But this statement must be considered in the light of the circumstances involved in the case before the court. The court had held that the city and county of San Francisco could not be put in default under the statute of 1863–64, supra, until a proper claim had been made and presented to the board of supervisors, as required by that statute. No such question is presented here. The principals referred to in the undertaking are the individuals who were plaintiffs in the suit of Templeton v. Coburn et al.

The weight of authority supports the proposition that a demand in cases like the one before us is not necessary. In Murdock v. Brooks the court said: "The point that the complaint is bad because it contains no averment that an execution had been issued and returned unsatisfied, and because no demand for payment is alleged to have been made upon the principal, is also untenable. * * * The undertaking is the independent and absolute contract of the sureties." 38 Cal. 604. In Heebner v. Townsend, 8 Abb. Pr. 237, the court said: "The undertaking may be considered as additional and collateral security for the payment of the judgment required by the statute to be given as a condition of staying the execution of the judgment during the pendency of the appeal. * * * The undertaking is an absolute undertaking that the appellant will pay the judgment if it be affirmed. * * * Notice of the affirmance of the judgment by the general term, or of the appellant's default in not paying on such affirmance, and demand of payment of the defendants, are not alleged in the complaint, and were not necessary. * * * The fact of the affirmance of the judgment was as open to the inquiry or knowledge of the defendants as of either of the parties to the judgment, and they were obliged to take notice of the default of the appellant, as it could have been ascertained by inquiry. As a general rule, no notice or demand is necessary where one guaranties the act of another, unless the contract requires it. The notice required between indorsees and the indorsers of bills of exchange and promissory notes is an exception founded on mercantile usage." To the same effect we cite Anderson v. Sloan, 1 Colo. 487; Baylies, Sur. § 82, pp. 110–112. In Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 538, the court cited Morgan v. Menzies, supra, in support of its decision therein that in order to maintain an action against the sureties on an undertaking given to release an attachment under section 555, Code Civil Proc., a demand upon the sureties and their principal for the payment of the value of the property was necessary. But the two cases are widely different. An undertaking under section 555, supra, provides that the sureties shall covenant and agree "that in case the plaintiff recover judgment in an action the defendant will, on demand, redeliver the attached property," etc., and the undertaking contained the covenant required by that section, but no demand on the defendant was alleged, and the complaint was properly held insufficient. No such demand is required by section 1254, Code Civil Proc. In some states it is held that the demand must be made upon the principal debtor in order to fix the guarantor's liability, as in the case of indorser, but, as stated before, the weight of authority is on the other side of the question; and, if there was any doubt as to the correct rule before the Code, it seems to us it has been removed by the provisions of sections 2806 and 2807, Civil Code, which, in the absence of anything in the contract calling for a demand, render the liability of the sureties absolute. See, also, sections 2831, 2837, 2840, and 2844, Civil Code. We think the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J; MCFARLAND, J.

COBURN v. JOSSELYN et al. (No. 11,577.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Coburn v. Brooks, No. 11,576, ante, 2, (this day filed,) the judgment is reversed.

SMITH v. SMITH. (No. 12,599.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1889.)

EJECTMENT—CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS—PLEADING—MORTGAGE.

1. Where plaintiff brought two actions of ejectment against defendant, to recover separate tracts of land in the same county, the court properly ordered them to be consolidated, (Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1048,) as they could both have been united, under section 427.

2. Whatever may be the exact nature of the interest which a partner takes under a deed of land to the firm, he takes a sufficient interest to enable him to maintain ejectment against a mere intruder.

3. Where the evidence in ejectment shows that the deed, absolute on its face, under which plaintiff claims, was in fact given to secure a debt, and is therefore merely a mortgage, he has failed to show either title or right of possession.

4. Defendant set up in his answer that the deed under which plaintiff claimed was only a mortgage, and that the debt had been fully paid; but he did not ask for any affirmative relief from the mortgage. Held, that the answer was in effect only a denial of plaintiff's title; that whether the debt had been paid or not was immaterial; and that plaintiff was not entitled to proceed first with the trial of the question as to whether the deed was a mortgage, on the ground of an equitable defense.

5. Defendant testified in support of his claim of adverse possession that plaintiff "told me to go on the place, and live on it, and make it my home, and he would give it to me for to stay there permanently." Also, that the arrangement was that he was to take some of plaintiff's sheep on the place, and take care of them on shares. He admitted that he afterwards agreed to take a lease from plaintiff if one could be made to suit him. During a portion of the time of his possession he caused the land to be assessed to plaintiff. Defendant would not deny that he knew of an offer made by his wife during the time to purchase the land from plaintiff, or that he did not object thereto. Held, that the evidence failed to show adverse possession.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

J. K. Law and E. Jackman, for appellant. E. A. Rogers, J. C. Cambell, Thos. Gardner and C. H. Clement, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The plaintiff brought two actions of ejectment against the defendant,—one for a tract of 280 acres, and the other for a tract of 1,320 acres. The land was all in one county, and the actions were pending in the same court. Upon motion of the defendant the court ordered the cases to be consolidated. We think this was proper. The causes of action might have been united, (Code Civil Proc. § 427; Boles v. Cohen, 15 Cal. 151;) and, this being so, the court could order a consolidation, (Code Civil Proc. § 1048.) The trial of the consolidated action resulted in a judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

1. Prior to 1874 the plaintiff and one D. G Smith, his brother, were partners in the business of raising sheep. The title to most of the property stood in the name of D. G. Smith, having been conveyed to him by United States patent. For part of it a patent had not been issued, but D. G. Smith held a certificate of purchase therefor. In 1874 he bought out the interest of the plaintiff in the concern, agreeing to pay him therefor the sum of $60,000. A portion of this sum was to be paid at or soon after the execution of the agreement; and promissory notes, each for the sum of $5,000, payable at intervals extending up to 1878, were given for the remainder. After the dissolution D. G. Smith carried on the business alone, but became involved in financial difficulties, and was unable to pay his debts, among which was the indebtedness represented by said promissory notes. In 1876 he made a deed to the plaintiff of the property in controversy, and at the same time made other deeds to plaintiff of lands in other counties, and bills of sale of certain sheep and other personal property. The business of sheep raising was thereafter conducted in the name of the plaintiff. This condition of affairs continued to the death of D. G. Smith, in 1883. During all this time and up to the commencement of the actions in 1885, the defendant, who was another brother, lived upon the property with his family, and his position is that he acquired a title by adverse possession.

One of the main questions litigated at the trial was whether the deed of 1876 from D. G. Smith to the plaintiff was absolute in fact as well as in form, or was a mere mortgage. And as to the greater portion of the land we think that the decision upon appeal must turn upon this question. For reasons given below we do not think that the possession of the defendant was sufficient to give him a title under the statute of limitations. But the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of that of his adversary; and if the deed of 1876 was a mere mortgage it did not give him a title to, or right of possession of, the property. It is the settled rule in this state that if a deed, absolute in form, was made merely to secure an indebtedness, it is a mere mortgage, and does not pass the title. Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 514, 2 Pac. Rep. 399; Healy v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 519, 6 Pac. Rep. 386; Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 309, 13 Pac. Rep. 866; Booth v. Hoskins, 17 Pac. Rep. 225. We understand this rule to mean that (except with reference to subsequent purchasers without notice) such a deed gives a mere lien upon the property, just as if the parties had put their agreement in the form of a mortgage; and consequently that it does not give a right of possession of the property. Civil Code, § 2927; Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 309, 13 Pac. Rep. 866. In reference to this question the jury found that the deed was intended merely to secure an indebtedness, and the verdict was incorporated by the court in findings of its own. The plaintiff contends that this finding is not supported by the evidence. But, after a careful examination of the evidence, we do not think that the finding can be set aside upon this ground. D. G. Smith, at the time of the execution of the instrument, was in San Francisco, trying to raise money upon the property to satisfy the claims of the plaintiff and other creditors who were pressing for payment. The final negotiation was conducted by one P. B. Smith, who was another brother. He swears positively that D. G. Smith refused to give an absolute deed, and that the transaction was merely to secure the indebtedness, and to enable plaintiff to raise money to satisfy the other creditors. The testimony of this witness was somewhat weakened on cross-examination, but was not destroyed, and the jury were entitled to give credence to it if they saw fit to do so. There was also evidence of certain declarations made by the plaintiff to third persons, which are inconsistent with the idea that he was the absolute owner of the property. In addition to this, the evidence of the plaintiff himself is in some respects unsatisfactory. He admits that he retained possession of some of the notes, and said they were to be paid as they became due, which seems inconsistent with the theory that the indebtedness was to be canceled by the deed itself. Taking everything together, we think that the case comes fairly within the rule as to conflicting evidence.

Some question is made as to whether P. B. Smith had authority from the plaintiff to take a mortgage, instead of an absolute deed. But he swears that he informed the plaintiff of what had been done, and that plaintiff approved of it. And, even if this was not done, it is perfectly clear that if the arrangement which was in fact made was merely to secure an indebtedness, the plaintiff cannot repudiate a part of it, and claim under the remaining part.

It results that the deed of 1876 does not give the plaintiff the right to maintain the actions.

There was a subsequent deed from D. G. Smith to the plaintiff for a portion of the land described in the deed of 1876. The title to this portion had not been obtained from the government at the time of the arrangement in question. D. G. Smith held a certificate of purchase of it. When the title was obtained from the government he executed the second deed above referred to. This deed was without additional consideration, and was evidently to carry out whatever arrangement was made at the time of the first deed. Counsel do not base any claim upon this deed, and we therefore dismiss it from further consideration.

So far as this part of the case is concerned it is immaterial whether the indebtedness secured by the deed of 1876 was ever paid or not. And it is also immaterial whether the defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession. We perceive no prejudicial error in relation to this branch of the case.

2. But as to some of the land, viz., the N. W. ¼ of section 13, township 2 S., range 13 E., the plaintiff occupies a different position. The title to this portion was derived from one Yates, and the deed was to the plaintiff and D. G. Smith, while they were partners. As to this portion, therefore, the plaintiff had a title independent of the instrument ex ecuted by D. G. Smith. And whatever may be the precise nature of the interest which one partner takes under a deed made to the members of the firm, (see generally Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 580,) we think it clear that he has a sufficient interest to enable him to maintain ejectment for the whole tract against a mere intruder. The question, therefore, arises whether the defendant acquired a title by adverse possession. The finding is that he did. But we think that this finding is not supported by the evidence. The defendant's account of the matter is that D. G. Smith "told me to go on the place, and live on it, and make it my home, and he would give it to me for to stay there permanently." This is somewhat ambiguous, but is not necessarily inconsistent with the idea of a holding under the true owners. And we do not think that the evidence shows that defendant held adversely to them. According to his own statement, the arrangement was that he was to take some of the firm's sheep on the place, and take care of them on shares; and it is to be inferred from other testimony that he was to do something in the way of improvements and to pay some of the taxes. He went upon the property, planted a few shade trees, put up some buildings and some fences, —although the latter were put up as late as 1882 or 1883,—cultivated bits of the land, and grazed some sheep on it,—at first those which he had on shares, and afterwards some of his own. Aside from some vague statements as to what he "always claimed," we see nothing to show that he held adversely to his brothers. On the contrary, during a portion of the time he caused the property to be assessed to the plaintiff. His wife, who, he says, conducted all the correspondence, wrote to the plaintiff a letter in which she said: "If we ever buy this place it must be done now." And defendant would not say that he did not know of an offer by his wife to purchase the property from the plaintiff, or that he made any objection thereto. And we do not think that this can be disposed of by saying that it was an offer to compromise. After the commencement of the actions he refused to take a lease from the plaintiff, but at one time he seems to have been willing to do so. For (referring to the time at which the fences were erected) he was asked: "Didn't you state at that time that you would sign a lease if one was made to suit you?" And his answer was: "I may have stated it. There was considerable cheap talk there that day." D. G. Smith seems to have considered the property as his own, as is manifest from his making a deed of it to the plaintiff. Defendant heard of this deed, but made no comments thereon to either of his brothers. Upon the whole evidence, we think that it appears, without substantial conflict, that the possession of the defendant was not adverse to the owners of the property.

3. The plaintiff contends that his motion to proceed first with the trial of the affirmative defense set up by the answer should have been granted for the reason that it was an equitable defense, and that the whole judgment should be reversed upon this ground. The affirmative defense was, in substance, that the deed of 1876 was a mortgage, and that the debt secured thereby had been fully paid. But the allegation that the deed was a mortgage was merely another way of saying that the plaintiff had no title, which was fully covered by the denial of the plaintiff's ownership. And so far as the plaintiff's right of possession was concerned, it was immaterial whether the debt had been paid or not. And while it may be possible that if the defendant had a title he would have been entitled to some affirmative relief in the nature of the removal of a cloud, yet he did not ask for such relief in terms, and no affirmative relief of any kind was awarded to him by the judgment. If, therefore, it be assumed for the purposes of this opinion that there was an irregularity, it is not one of which the plaintiff can complain.

The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed as to the N. W. ¼ of section 13, township 2 S., range 13 E., and the cause remanded for a new trial as to said property, and that said judgment and order be affirmed in all other respects, the appellant to recover one-half of the costs on appeal.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed as to the N. W. ¼ of section 13, township 2 S., range 13 E., and the cause remanded for a new trial as to said property, and said judgment and order are in all other respects affirmed, the appellant to recover one-half of the costs on appeal.

(78 Cal. 407)

GLOSTER v. WADE. (No. 12,461.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1889.)

HIGHWAYS—PRESCRIPTION.

Pol. Code Cal. § 2619, providing that all roads used as such for a period of more than five years are highways, was amended by act March 30, 1874, so as to provide that all roads laid out and recorded by the board of supervisors should be highways, and also all turnpikes, toll-roads, etc., where the companies are dissolved or have expired by limitation. Section 38 of the act provided that it should apply only to certain counties, among which Modoc county was not named. Held, that section 2619 remained as to Modoc county unaffected by the amendment, so that a road used continuously in that county for more than five years would become a public highway.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county; G. F. HARRIS, Judge.

Ewing & Claflin, for appellant. Goodwin & Jenks, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. According to the allegations of the complaint in this action, Wade had torn down the fence on the land of Gloster, which the latter had replaced, and the former was threatening again to tear it down at a certain point, and travel aross the plaintiff's land, in violation of his rights and to his damage. An injunction restraining the defendant from doing the injuries threatened, and for the recovery of damages for the alleged trespass already committed, were prayed for. The defendant denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and set up by way of justification and defense for his alleged acts that they were done in accordance with law, in pursuance of an order from the board of supervisors of the county, he being a road overseer, and that the land alleged to have been intruded upon by him had become, and was by dedication, a public road and highway. The cause came on to be tried before a jury, which was discharged during the progress of the trial by the court for sufficient reasons. That tribunal then proceeded to hear the cause, made its findings of fact, and rendered judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for, except for damages, which were expressly waived; from which, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. The whole matter turns upon the point as to whether or not there had been, for some 12 years immediately prior to the trespass complained of, any law upon the statute book applicable to the county of Modoc, by which the public could by user acquire a right to a highway as such. The court below held no such law to exist or to have existed within that time. The appellant's contention is that such a law did exist and was operative in this cause, by means of which the public, by the use of the land in question continuously for more than five years, had acquired it as a public road and highway in Modoc county; that the dedication of it as a highway was complete. In section 2619 of the Political Code (as it existed up to the passage of the act of March 30, 1874, which latter act is found at page 116 of Amendments to the Codes 1873 and 1874) it is provided, among other things, that "all roads used as such for a period of more than five years are highways." The section was amended by the act, supra, to read as follows: "Sec. 2619. Roads laid out and recorded as highways by order of the board of supervisors are highways. Whenever any corporation owning a toll-bridge or a turnpike, plank, or common wagon road is dissolved, or has expired by limitation or nonuser, the bridge or road becomes a highway." Section 38, (p. 129,) of the same act, provides: "This act shall apply only to the following-named counties: Calaveras, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, Ventura, Fresno, Kern, Tehama, Contra Costa, Marin, Lake, Sierra, Plumas, Sacramento, Sutter, Mendocino, Mariposa, Alameda, and Larsen: provided, that this act shall not be in force and effect in Solano, Los Angeles, San Joaquin, and Yuba counties until the first Monday of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, (1876.)"

The effect of these provisions of law, taken together, is, as we think, that section 2619 supra, remained, for the purpose of this action, unaffected by the act, supra, so far as concerned Modoc county. In that county during the 12 years immediately prior to the trespass complained of a highway might have become such to all intents and purposes by user on the part of the public for more than five years continuously. This, among other questions, seems to have been involved in the case of Bolger v. Foss, 65 Cal. 251, 3 Pac. Rep. 871, where the dedication by user of a highway in Humboldt county was under consideration, which county occupied the same position with relation to section 38 of the act, supra, as did Modoc county, where the highway now in hand is located. Although the point was not directly adverted to, the appellate court appears to have taken the view of the matter which we do. The defendant ought, therefore, to have been permitted to introduce his proffered evidence that the land in dispute had been used continuously and uninterruptedly as a highway by the traveling public for the "last past twelve years." The matter was clearly within the issues raised by the pleadings, after the amendment had been made to the defendant's answer. For the error committed in not admitting the evidence as offered the judgment and order should be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed.

---

78 Cal. 427

In re LOWENTHAL. (No. 20,490.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

MISCONDUCT OF ATTORNEY—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. The petition for the disbarment of an attorney alleged, as grounds, failure to maintain the respect due the court, defending an unjust cause, employing means of defense inconsistent with truth, and misleading the court by artifice and falsehood. The facts were set out in narrative form, without allegations connecting them with one or the other general charges of misconduct. Held good on demurrer.

2. Such charges are not barred by the statute of limitations.

In bank. Application for the disbarment of an attorney.

John H. Boalt, Ralph C. Harrison, and Edward R. Taylor, for relator. W. W. Cope and P. F. Dunne, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an accusation for the disbarment of the respondent, an attorney of this court. The accusation charges generally "that heretofore, to-wit, at the several times hereinafter mentioned, said Lowenthal violated the said oath taken by him as such attorney and counselor at law, by—First, not maintaining the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers of this state; second, by counseling and maintaining a defense to an action which did not appear to him legal or just; third, by employing means in defense of an action which were inconsistent with truth; fourth, by misleading in an action in this state the judge of the court by artifice and by false statement of fact and law. Following this is a full narrative statement of the acts and conduct of the respondent claimed to constitute the misconduct above charged.

There is a demurrer to the accusation, which raises the only question to be determined. The demurrer is upon the general ground that the accusation does not state facts sufficient to constitute any offense or violation of the oath of said Lowenthal, as attorney and counselor at law, or any cause for disbarment. The demurrer also goes to that part of the accusation setting out the facts relied upon, upon the same ground. The further ground of demurrer is that the offenses charged are barred by the statute of limitations. The specific objection made to the allegation of facts urged at the argument is that the facts set out are not attempted to be applied to any of the specifications alleged, but are stated generally, leaving it for the respondent and the court to apply them as best they may. We must say that the accusation is not a model pleading in this respect. The facts stated, as we have said, are set out in narrative form, without any allegations connecting them with one or the other of the general charges of misconduct, and are unnecessarily long, but we think they are such as to show misconduct on the part of the respondent, as an attorney of this court, sufficient to put him upon his trial. As these facts will necessarily have to be more fully considered upon the final hearing, we do not set them out here in full, or comment upon them.

As to the objection made that the offenses charged are barred by the statute of limitations, it appears that the acts complained of were committed some three years since. We do not understand that a charge of this kind can be barred by the statute of limitations, or that it should be, under any circumstances. The fullest opportunity should be given to investigate the conduct of an attorney who is charged with a violation of his duties as such, and while this court might not be willing to disbar or suspend an attorney if it appeared that there had been unreasonable delay in the presentation of the charges, so that a fair opportunity could not be had for procuring the witnesses and meeting the accusation, we are not prepared to say, as a matter of law upon this demurrer, that the accusation is barred either by the express terms of the statute of limitations or by analogy. For the reasons stated the demurrer to the accusation is overruled, and the respondent is allowed 20 days within which to prepare and file his answer.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

78 Cal. 477

In re SOHER'S ESTATE. (No. 12,747.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1889.)

WILLS—OLOGRAPHIC WILLS—REVOCATION.

1. A codicil, written entirely by testator, and signed by him, is a valid olographic codicil, though also signed by one person only, as a witness, without any formal attestation clause, as such witnessing does not indicate an incomplete execution of what was intended as an attested codicil.

2. An attested will, not written by testator, may be revoked by such an olographic codicil, though the latter refers to the former, without which it cannot be understood, as the will does not by such reference become such a part of the codicil that the latter is not "entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of testator himself."

Department 2. Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Chas. E. Wilson and Wm. A. Plunkett, for appellants. George A. Knight and J. A. Hosmer, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Lewis Soher executed before two witnesses, in the form prescribed by statute, a will which was in the handwriting of another. Subsequently he attached to said will the following codicil: "Owing to the conduct of my son, Adolph, toward my wife and myself since this will was made, I hereby affirm the foregoing will, except in the ninth article of bequests, where Adolph is included with my wife, and other children, which bequest to Adolph I hereby revoke. Witness my hand this 29th day of April, 1886. Lewis Soher." Underneath were the words: "Witness: GEORGE PENLINGTON, 123 O'Farrell street." All except these latter words is in the handwriting of the testator. The court below admitted the will to probate, but refused to admit the codicil. Two points are made by the respondent in support of the action of the court with reference to the codicil:

1. It is argued that the fact that the codicil was attested by one witness shows that it was not the intention of the testator to make an olographic codicil; that it must be presumed that he intended to make an attested codicil, and left the execution incomplete. We see no force in the argument. It will be observed that there is no attestation clause, such as is usual in attested wills and codicils; no statement that the testator signed the will in the presence of the witness, and declared, at the time of signing, that the instrument was his will. If there had been such a clause, signed by only one witness, or unsigned by anybody, there might be more force in the position, although we do not desire to be understood as expressing or intimating any opinion upon such a case. Here are simply the words, "Witness: George Penlington, 123 O'Farrell street." These words do not seem to us to indicate an intention to make an attested will or codicil. It may be that the testator caused them to be placed there for the purpose of supplying proof of his own handwriting, or, in other words, proof that the codicil was olographic. Many testators execute their wills long before death, and they may be persons who are not well known in the community. It may therefore be difficult to prove the handwriting of a document purporting to be a will, found among their papers after death. In view of this, it would be a natural and proper precaution to furnish means of making the required proof. And it seems to us that courts should presume that the intention of the testator was that of a reasonable and prudent man, under the circumstances, and should not adopt a somewhat strained construction to defeat what there is every reason to believe was the desire of the testator. The witness clause is not, under the circumstances, to be considered as a portion of the will, which is no more affected by it than any other document which does not require attestation, such as a deed or contract would be. The case of Power v. Davis, 3 MacArthur, 162, is not in point. There the testator appended a formal attestation clause in his own handwriting, but left such clause unsigned by anybody. There is no room here for the argument made in that case.

2. It is contended that an attested will cannot be revoked by an olographic codicil. The position of the respondent is based upon the fact that the olographic document refers to the other. The argument is that the olographic codicil cannot be understood without referring to the attested will; that the latter is, in contemplation of law, "a part" of the former; and that therefore it does not come within the definition of an olographic will, which is a will "entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself." This argument, if allowed to prevail, would have far-reaching consequences. It would exclude all reference to any document which was not entirely written, dated, and signed by the testator himself. For example, an olographic will which devised all the right, title, and interest of the testator under a will of his ancestor, or under a marriage settlement or other contract drawn by another hand, would be invalid. Pushed to its logical conclusion the argument would exclude all reference to deeds or other documents for descriptions of property, etc. A similar objection was at one time made to references in attested wills to documents which were not attested. Wills have always been required to be executed with formalities of some kind or other; and it was argued that documents which were not executed with these formalities could not be referred to. But considerations of practical convenience prevailed over technical reasoning; and it became well settled that an attested will could refer to documents which were not attested. See Newton v. Society, 130 Mass. 91; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 381; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 377; Fickle v. Snepp, 97 Ind. 291; Fesler v. Simpson, 58 Ind. 87; Gerrish v. Gerrish, 8 Or. 351. And see Estate of Shillaber, 74 Cal. 144, 15 Pac. Rep. 453. Now, if an attested will can refer to a document which is not attested, we see no good reason why an olographic will may not refer to a document which is not in the handwriting of the testator. The only difference between an olographic and an attested will is in the form of the execution. The statute has prescribed two forms in which written wills may be executed. In each case the instrument must be signed by the testator. But the formality of witnesses is dispensed with if the instrument is all in the handwriting of the testator himself. One form is the precise equivalent of the other. Whatever would be good as an attested will or codicil is good as an olographic one, if written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. And whatever may be done in or by the one, may be done in or by the other. Therefore, if the formalities of attestation are not required in a document referred to by an attested will or codicil, the corresponding formalities are not required in a document referred to by an olographic will or codicil.

The argument made for the respondent rests upon the proposition that a document referred to by a will or contract is, in contemplation of law, "a part" of the document making the reference. And if this be granted in the sense in which it is asserted, a very plausible argument can be built upon it. But as has been said in other connections, it is not true, as a matter of physical fact, that the two documents are one and the same. The law for some purposes—mainly of construction—regards one as a part of the other; but this fiction ought not to be extended to absurd or unjust consequences. See City of Napa v. Easterby, 18 Pac. Rep. 255; Bull v. Coe, Id. 809. And we think it should not be extended so as to cover the present case. The will which the statute requires to be attested by witnesses in the one case and written by the testator in the other, is the document signed by him. The documents referred to are for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the will, and aiding in its construction.

The conclusion which we have reached is sustained by authority. The decision in Estate of Shillaber, 74 Cal. 144, 15 Pac. Rep. 453, does not quite cover the case; for although the language of the opinion sanctions the reference, the decision was that the document referred to could be rejected as unnecessary, and the will left to stand without it. But Estate of Skerrett, 67 Cal. 587, 8 Pac. Rep. 181, goes further than is required here. In that case the deceased in his life-time signed a deed purporting to convey certain property to his sister. This deed was never delivered, and therefore did not convey the property. It could not take effect as a will because it was not witnessed as such, and was not in the handwriting of the deceased. But a copy of the deed was found after the death, in an envelope, with a letter addressed to the sister, and written, dated, and signed by the deceased himself. This letter was insufficient standing by itself, as a will. But it referred to the deed, and stated, in substance, that said deed was intended to be a provision for the sister in case of the death of the writer. The court held that, although neither document, taken by itself, was sufficient as a will, yet both, taken together, should be admitted to probate as such. The point is not reasoned out at length, but the opinion is clear, and the decision proceeds upon the principle above discussed. The courts of Louisiana, which are governed by a similar statute, seem to act upon the same theory. See Miller v. Miller, 32 La. Ann. 441. And we think that the rule is a sound and salutary one. If testators are to be encouraged by a statute like ours to draw their own wills, the courts should not adopt upon purely technical reasoning a construction which would result in invalidating such wills in half the cases. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, with directions to admit the codicil to probate in connection with the will.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with directions to admit the codicil to probate in connection with the will.

---

78 Cal. 424

HASKELL v. DOTY. (No. 12,772.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—APPEAL.

1. Where a bill for specific performance alleges that the parties entered into an agreement whereby the plaintiff agreed to buy, and defendant to sell, and the answer alleges that at "the time of entering into the agreement aforesaid" the contract was deposited with one G., to hold for 30 days, until plaintiff made a payment, in default of which "the trade should be considered off," and "that said agreement never was delivered to plaintiff," but that he obtained "possession thereof forcibly," the question of non-delivery is raised by the answer.

2. Where the evidence as to the delivery of a contract is conflicting, the finding of the court will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Brousseau & Hatch and Houghton, Silent & Campbell, for appellant. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit for specific performance of a contract to convey certain real property. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The question upon which the case turns is whether the contract was delivered. The court below found that it was not. The findings set forth facts which show that the contract was delivered by the parties to one Green in escrow, the condition being that plaintiff should pay the sum of $2,200 within 30 days; that he failed to do so, and did not tender the money for more than six months thereafter; that Green, "understanding that the trade between the plaintiff and the defendant was off," returned the papers to the defendant; and that the plaintiff obtained possession of the contract from defendant by asking to be allowed to look at it, and, upon its being handed to him for the purposes of inspection, making off with it against the will of the defendant. It is contended for the plaintiff, in the first place, that the findings are contrary to admissions in the pleadings. The argument is that the complaint alleges that the parties "entered into an agreement under their hands and seals, whereby the plaintiff agreed to buy and the defendant agreed to sell," etc.; that this allegation was not denied; and that it imports a delivery of the paper, inasmuch as there can be no agreement without a delivery. But, assuming in favor of the appellant that such is the construction to be put upon the allegation, we think that the answer sufficiently puts the delivery in issue. It avers that, "at the time of entering into the agreement aforesaid," the agreement was by the parties deposited with said Green upon the understanding that he should hold the same, and that plaintiff should pay the amount above mentioned within 30 days, and that if he should fail to do so "said trade should be considered off." This is not a very scientific way of pleading the non-delivery. But we think it will pass, especially in view of the fact that no objection to its sufficiency was made at the trial. But, in addition to the foregoing, the answer avers in a separate defense "that said agreement was never delivered to said plaintiff, and that he never had a right to the same, but obtained possession thereof in a forcible and surreptitious manner as aforesaid." And we think it would be straining this language to say that it refers only to "the manner in which the appellant possessed himself manually of the paper upon that occasion, and has no reference to the delivery thereof at the time of its execution."

It is contended, in the next place, that the evidence does not justify the findings. We think, however, that it very clearly appears that both parties did deposit the papers with Green at the time of their execution; that after a time Green returned them to the defendant; and that they were not subsequently delivered by the defendant to plaintiff, but that plaintiff obtained them against the will of the defendant in an improper and reprehensible way. The only point which, in our judgment, is open to doubt is as to why or on what conditions the papers were deposited with Green. Green does not recollect that anything was said to him by the parties or much about the transaction. The defendant's testimony is in substance as found by the court. He does not express himself with much formality, but he says: "Mr. Haskell and I went in there and made arrangements that Mr. Green should hold the contract for thirty days. At the expiration of thirty days Haskell was to pay $2,200 on the contract at that time, and he was to have possession of the place after the thirty days." "He was to pay the money to P. M. Green. He was the man who had the contract. There was an understanding that he was to hold the contract until Mr. Haskell had settled it." And there was evidence of a declaration by the plaintiff to a third party to the effect that "the whole thing was off," which could not have been true if there had been an absolute delivery to the plaintiff. The fact that the defendant offered in his answer to return the sum of $300 which he claimed was forfeited does not seem to us of much significance. Upon the whole case we think that the finding of the court as to the understanding upon which the papers were left with Green is within the protection of the rule as to conflicting evidence. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 509

MILLER et al. v. THOMAS et al. (No. 11,960.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1889.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

S. O. Houghton and John Reynolds, for appellants. Wm. Matthews, S. F. Leib, T. H. Laine, and J. C. Black, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. We are unable to determine precisely from the record herein what is the nature of the action, who appeared as parties in the court below, or who were served with summons, or upon how many of those who did appear the notice of appeal was served. There is no judgment roll before us; no complaint, summons, answer, findings, or judgment. There is a document purporting to contain part of the findings relating to the matter of expenditures and costs, and another document purporting to be a portion of the final judgment relating to costs, but what matters are contained in other findings and other portions of the judgment not before us we cannot determine. It is asserted by counsel for certain respondents that there were 400 defendants in the court below. If this be true, there are over a hundred parties to the record whose names do not appear in the notice of appeal, and there is nothing to show that all of those named in the notice were served. The notice of appeal states that the appeal is "from that part of the final judgment made and entered in the above-entitled action on the 19th day of June, 1886, fixing the amount of costs, in so far as it refuses or fails to include therein counsel fees paid and incurred by the plaintiffs for the benefit of all the tenants in common, who are charged in said judgment with the payment of the costs of partition." But it is impossible to tell from the scrap of the decree designated in the transcript as "portions of the final judgment relating to allowance of costs, and to the question involved on this appeal," whether the court, in fixing the amount of costs, refused or failed "to include therein counsel fees paid and incurred by the plaintiffs for the benefit of all the tenants in common," etc. There are other objections to the transcript, but we have pointed out a sufficient number to show beyond all question, we think, that it would be useless to attempt an examination of the case on its merits. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.

---

78 Cal. 454

LEARNED et al. v. CASTLE et al. (No. 12,244.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 22, 1889.)

NUISANCE—REMEDIES—FINDINGS—DAMAGES.

1. In an action for a nuisance for diverting water on plaintiffs' land, there was a finding that defendants' acts were not an obstruction of the free use of plaintiffs' property, but there were other findings that none of the waters diverted by defendants' works would flow on plaintiffs' land if allowed to take their natural course; that the waters diverted flowed on plaintiffs' land; and that defendants' embankment caused water to flow there, which would not do so were the embankment removed. Held that, the findings being thus contradictory, a judgment for defendants could not stand.

2. Where it appears that plaintiffs were largely and seriously damaged by water flowing on their land, a large part of which was caused to flow there by defendants, though a larger part of it came from other sources, a finding that plaintiffs' damage from the acts of defendants was but one dollar, cannot be sustained.

3. But, in such case, the object of the action being to declare a nuisance, to prevent its continuance by mandatory injunction, the amount of damage is immaterial.

4. The acquiescence of plaintiffs' grantor in the acts of defendant is no defense to the action for an injunction.

5. Defendants having removed an embankment erected by plaintiffs to keep the water off, defendants cannot allege with respect thereto that they are not maintaining it, or keeping it up. It is an injury which keeps itself up.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. On rehearing. 18 Pac. Rep. 872.

Garber & Bishop, W. L. Dudley, and D. S. Terry, for appellants. J. B. Hall and J. C. Campbell, (A. P. Catlin, of counsel,) for respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action for damages for an alleged nuisance, and for a mandatory injunction to prevent its continuance. The nuisance or nuisances charged consist in this: North-east of plaintiffs' lands there is a stream or slough called "Stone Slough" or "Bear River," and between that stream and plaintiffs' lands there are other (smaller) natural sloughs. Stone slough and the other said sloughs run in a south-westerly direction. Stone slough, at a point about three miles from plaintiffs' lands, is tapped by a canal, constructed by defendant Christian and others, which carries its waters westerly to and across the said other sloughs, in which obstructions were placed by defendants in order that the water might be prevented from flowing down the sloughs, and forced to follow the canal. It is averred in the complaint that, if the said obstructions were not placed in the said sloughs, the water brought there by the canal would flow naturally down the sloughs, and away from plaintiffs' land; and that by reason of said obstructions and canal the water was caused to flow onto plaintiffs' land, to their great injury. Plaintiffs also aver that they (plaintiffs) put an embankment across said canal at a point on a road called the "Davis Road," which was sufficient to protect their land from said water, and that defendants wrongfully entered upon said embankment and removed it, and thus allowed said water to run on their land, to their damage, etc. At the trial some issues were presented to, and passed upon by, a jury. These findings were adopted by the court. Other findings were then made by the court, and judgment was given for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The cause was heard here in department 2, and an opinion was delivered, affirming the judgment. We adopt that opinion so far as it determines that the complaint was sufficient, and that the alleged acquiescence of plaintiffs' grantor, Yolland, did not constitute a defense to plaintiffs' cause of action for an injunction. The action was not barred by the statute of limitations. But upon a more thorough consideration of the case, after argument on rehearing, we are satisfied that the findings are fatally conflicting and contradictory; that they do not support the judgment; and that, in a material respect, they are not supported by the evidence.

The action was commenced in August, 1878; and the first main damage to plaintiffs' land, by the said alleged turning of the water upon it, is averred to have taken place in January and February of that year. There is no doubt that in those months a very large quantity of water was caused by said acts of defendants to flow upon plaintiffs' land. It happened, however, that at that time, owing to unusual floods, other large quantities of water also flowed upon plaintiffs' land from natural sources; and this coincidence seems to have been the cause of much of the confusion and conflict which appear in the findings of the court, and the answers of the jury to the issues presented to them. It seems to have been thought that, as the water which flooded the land from other sources would probably, or certainly, have caused the damage averred in the complaint if the water caused to flow there by the acts of defendants had not been mingled with it, therefore the latter should not be considered as having added much to the injury. (It may be remarked, however, that it is difficult to find the principle upon which damage done by commingled water, coming from two sources, can be attributed to one of the original sources, rather than the other.) The thirteenth finding of the court is as follows: "That the said obstruction in the natural sloughs is not an obstruction to the free use of plaintiffs' property, and does not interfere with the enjoyment thereof; and that the removal of said embankment across said canal in the Davis road does not prevent said plaintiffs from the free use and enjoyment of their said property." But in the tenth finding the court finds "that none of the waters diverted by the canal would have flowed upon the plaintiffs' land, if allowed without interruption to take their natural south-west course and direction to the river; and the embankment on the south side of the canal, on Christian's and other lands, cause waters to flow upon plaintiffs' land which would not flow there if the embankments were removed." In the eighth finding it is found that in 1878 some of the waters of Stone slough flowed through the canal onto plaintiffs' land.

The jury, whose findings were adopted by the court, found, among other things, as follows: "(7) Question. What is the natural direction of the waters of Stone and the other sloughs east of the road, as they flow to the river? Answer. South-west. (8) Q. Would any of the waters which are diverted by the canal flow upon plaintiffs' land if allowed, without interruption, to take their natural courses to the river? A. No. (9) Q. Do any of the waters diverted by the canal flow upon the lands of plaintiffs? A. Yes." "(13) Q. Were the waters diverted by the canal in 1878 the predominant and proximate cause of damages sustained by the plaintiffs from the water in 1877-78? A. No. (14) Q. Did other waters, or other causes other than the waters of the canal, materially contribute as causes of the damages claimed by plaintiffs? A. Yes. (15) Q. If the jury answer 'Yes' to the last question, and find that the damages claimed by plaintiffs were caused by the joint action of waters from the canal and waters from other sources, then the jury will answer, if possible, how much damage was caused by the waters of the canal. A. $1." "(18) Q. Do the embankments on the south side of the ditch on Christian's and other lands east of the road cause any waters to flow upon plaintiffs' lands which would not flow there if the embankments were removed? A. Yes." The court also further found (finding 9) that plaintiffs were not damaged by the said acts of defendants "to any extent greater than in the sum of $1."

It is apparent, we think, that the findings above quoted are inconsistent and contradictory; and that the contradiction thus presented is not merely formal, and about things not essential,—such as frequently creep into findings inadvertently. The contradiction is, in our opinion, important, material, and fatal to the judgment. For instance, how can the thirteenth finding, (upon which the judgment rests,) that the results of the acts of defendants are "not an obstruction to the free use of plaintiffs' property," and do "not interfere with the enjoyment thereof," etc., be reconciled with the other findings? And how can it stand if the other findings be true? In the other findings it is declared that the natural course of the sloughs east of plaintiffs' lands is to the south-west; that none of the waters of said sloughs, diverted by the canal, would flow upon said lands if allowed to take their natural courses to the river; that the waters diverted by the canal do flow upon said lands; and that the embankments on the south side of the canal do cause waters to flow upon plaintiffs' lands "which would not flow there if the embankments were removed." These findings cannot be true if it be also true that there was no interference with the "free use and enjoyment" of plaintiffs' property. There can be no more marked interference with a man's free enjoyment of his property than to wrongfully cause water to flow onto his land which would not flow there naturally. And how can we take one of these findings as true, and disregard others which are directly contradictory of it? The rule on this subject may safely be said to go this far, at least: that where there are contradictory findings about matters material to the merits of the case, and the determination of which, one way or the other, is essential to the correctness of the judgment, there the judgment cannot stand. If one part of the contradictory findings would support the judgment, and another part would necessarily upset it, then the judgment must be reversed. Kerns v. McKean, 65 Cal. 411, 4 Pac. Rep. 404; Randall v. Hunter, 66 Cal. 512, 6 Pac. Rep. 331; Gilman v. Curtis, 66 Cal. 116, 4 Pac. Rep. 1094; Sloss v. Allman, 64 Cal. 47; Richards v. Dower, Id. 62; Carman v. Ross, Id. 249; Reese v. Corcoran, 52 Cal. 495.

The finding that the damage done to plaintiffs' land in 1878 by the water which defendants caused to flow there was only one dollar, does not affect the merits of the case. In the first place, we do not see how that finding can be held to be supported by the evidence. It clearly appears in the evidence that at that time plaintiffs were largely and seriously damaged by water flowing onto and over their land, and that a very large part of that water was caused to flow there by the acts of defendants. It is true that, when the damage was done at that time, the water from the canal was mingled with water from other sources, which (it may be admitted) was of a larger volume than that of the water brought there by defendants; and it may have been difficult to separate the mingled elements of mischief, and calculate with any great exactness the proportionate amount of damage done by each. But surely there was no warrant for finding that all the damage was done by the other water, and none (practically) by the water poured onto the plaintiffs' land by the canal. A wrongdoer who contributes to a damage cannot escape entirely because his proportional contribution to the result cannot be accurately measured. (In a case like the one at bar it would be at least as near justice to hold him for all the damage as to hold him for none.) And we think the evidence did not warrant the finding that the damage caused by the acts of defendants was to the extent only of one dollar. But the amount of the damage, estimated in money, was immaterial. That finding was only as to the damage done in 1878, when there was water on the land from other sources. The findings show that the waters diverted by the canal "flow" upon plaintiffs' land, which would not flow there if allowed to take their natural course; and that the embankments erected by defendants "cause" such artificial flowing. And to thus wrongfully cause water to flow upon another's land, which would not flow there naturally, is to create a nuisance per se. It is an injury to the right, and it cannot be continued because other persons (whether jurors or not) might have a low estimate of the damage which it causes. And especially is this so when the continuance of the wrongful act might ripen into a right in the nature of an easement or servitude. Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 64, and cases there cited; Tootle v. Clifton, 22 Ohio St. 247; Casebeer v. Mowry, 55 Pa. St. 419; Wood, Nuis. (2d Ed.) 639. The right to an injunction, therefore, in such a case does not depend upon the extent of the damage measured by a money standard. The maxim de minimis does not apply. The main object of the action is to declare a nuisance, and to prevent the continuance by a mandatory injunction. There is nothing in the point that, with respect to the removal of the embankment across the canal, the defendants are not maintaining or keeping it up. "It is an injury which keeps itself up." Our opinion, therefore, is that for the reasons above given the judgment should be reversed. Judgment and order appealed from reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J., did not participate in the decision of the above cause.

THORNTON, J.,(dissenting.) I dissent from the conclusion reached in the foregoing opinion, and from the opinion, except that portion of it which agrees with the opinion formerly drawn up by me in this cause. I see no cause to change the views expressed by me in the opinion just referred to, and adopt it as my opinion herein I will add that in my view the contradictory findings referred to in the opinion of Justice McFARLAND relate to matters which are not material to a proper decision of the cause.

78 Cal. 450

COOPER v. CHAMBERLAIN, Tax Collector.

(No. 11,800.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 22, 1889.)

DURESS—LEVY OF VOID TAX.

Where a tax assessment upon land is void, because the property has not been described in the assessment roll, the tax collector's levy and threat to sell to satisfy the tax do not constitute duress.[1]

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; J. K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Wm. Matthews, for appellant. R. M. F. Soto, J. A. Wall, and W. H. Webb, (Hermann & Soto, of counsel,) for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action is to recover $2,742.99, paid by plaintiff to defendant, tax collector of Monterey county, for what plaintiff claims to have been unlawfully demanded for delinquent taxes. The plaintiff alleges that he was the owner of certain tracts of land in said county, all of which are described in the complaint by metes and bounds and proper designation. For the fiscal year 1883–84 the assessor of said county undertook to assess and to list, and in form listed and set down, said land in an assessment book, and valued the same in gross at $141,402.02. Said assessor undertook to levy against and did in form charge said property with a tax of $2,601.98. Afterwards the board of supervisors of said county, sitting as a board of equalization, attempted to increase the valuation of said property, and did in form increase the same by the sum of $20,972.98, making the total valuation thereof $162,393, and added to said pretended taxes the sum of $361, making the total of said alleged tax the said sum of $2,742.99. It is alleged that said tax was illegal, because said property was not described in the assessment roll, as required by law, by township, range, section, or fractional section, of any congressional or other subdivision, or by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it, and the said order of the board of equalization was illegal, because the same was made without legal notice to the plaintiff. The defendant seized said property, advertised in a public journal that he would sell so much thereof as would be necessary to pay said tax and 5 per cent. thereon, together with costs and charges, unless plaintiff, before the day fixed for said sale, paid said tax, percentage, charges, and costs. To prevent said sale plaintiff paid said sum of $2,742.99, first filing his protest with defendant, in which he set forth that the whole of said tax was unlawfully assessed and levied, because said land was not described in the assessment roll as the law requires, or other description sufficient to identify it, and that the increase of said assessment by the board as aforesaid was made without legal notice to the plaintiff, and he, at the same time, notified defendant that suit would be brought against him for said sum of money, unless the same was refunded. No part of said sum has been paid to plaintiff. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was entered against him. The appeal is from the judgment. The case, as presented by the complaint, is, as we understand it, that the defendant levied upon and advertised property for sale for a delinquent tax which had not been validly assessed, and that, to prevent a sale, plaintiff paid the amount of the tax demanded under protest, and brings this action to recover it back. The question is whether the facts alleged sufficiently show that the sum paid was paid under duress. If not, the demurrer was properly sustained. According to the allegations of the complaint, the plaintiff's property was not assessed. It could not be assessed without being described, and the allegations of the complaint show that it was not described. Not being assessed, all the proceedings of the defendant in the premises were void, and his threat to sell constituted no duress. Wills v. Austin, 53 Cal. 152; Bucknall v. Story, 46 Cal. 589; De Baker v. Carillo, 52 Cal. 473; Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265. On the authority of these cases, the demurrer was properly sustained, and the judgment must be affirmed.

I concur: THORNTON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment solely upon the authority of former decisions of this court.

78 Cal. 468

McCORMACK v. NORTH BRITISH INS. CO.

(No. 12, 577.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 22, 1889.)

INSURANCE—PROOF OF LOSS.

In an action on a fire insurance policy containing the usual condition as to making preliminary proofs of loss, and providing that the amount shall be paid 60 days after proofs shall have been made and received, and the loss shall have been ascertained and proved according to the provisions of the policy, a nonsuit is proper where there is no evidence that the proofs have been given or waived.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; C. H. GAROUTTE, Judge.

Action by H. McCormack against the North British Insurance Company. Plaintiff appeals.

E. R. Bush and R. Clark, for appellant. Van Ness & Roche, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action upon a fire insurance policy. Trial by the court. Motion for nonsuit on the ground, among others, that there was a failure to prove a compliance with the conditions of the policy relative to the making of the preliminary proofs of loss subsequent to the fire, and that the action was prematurely commenced, in that it had been commenced before proofs of loss were made. The court below granted the nonsuit, and the plaintiff appeals. The policy contained the usual condition as to the making of preliminary proof of loss, and provided that the amount to be paid under the policy should be paid "sixty days after the proofs shall have been made by the assured and received at their office, and the loss shall have been ascertained and proved in accordance with the terms and provisions of the policy." Where such preliminary proof is required by the policy, the assured must allege and prove that the proof has been made, or that the requirement has been waived. Doyle v. Insurance Co., 44 Cal. 264; May, Ins. § 465. There was no evidence that the necessary proof of loss had been given, nor was it shown that such proof had been waived. The nonsuit was therefore properly granted. Judgment affirmed.

---

[1] In general, as to what constitutes duress, see Lomerson v. Johnson, (N. J.) 13 Atl. Rep. 8, and note; Avery v. Layton, (Pa.) Id. 528; Shoro v. Shoro, (Vt.) 14 Atl. Rep. 177; Adams v. Schiffer, (Colo.) 17 Pac. Rep. 21.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

MCFARLAND, J. I dissent. I think there was evidence that the proof was waived.

BEATTY, C. J., being disqualified, did not participate in the decision.

(78 Cal. 449)

MCINTYRE v. TRAUTNER. (No. 11,469.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 22, 1889.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—COSTS.

By Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1195, on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien the court must allow, as part of the costs, reasonable attorney's fees in the superior and supreme courts, such costs and attorney's fee to be allowed to each lien claimant whose lien is established. Plaintiff, in an action to foreclose such a lien, was nonsuited, and on appeal the judgment was reversed. Held, that the attorney's fees are not part of the costs, but are incident to the foreclosure, and plaintiff, having failed on the merits on the second trial, was not entitled to an attorney's fee on the appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action by William McIntyre against Chas. Trautner. Plaintiff appeals. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1195, relating to liens of mechanics and others, as it stood when the case was decided by the superior court, provided that "the court may also allow, as part of the costs, the moneys paid for filing and recording the lien, and reasonable atttorney's fee in the superior and supreme courts."

William H. H. Hart, for appellant. Henry H. Reid, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The appellant brought this action against the respondent to foreclose a mechanic's lien for plumbing work. The court rendered judgment of nonsuit against him. He appealed to this court, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. 63 Cal. 429. Upon the return of the case to the court below he filed his cost-bill, including as one of the items of costs the sum of $200 for his attorney's fees in the supreme court. The court, on motion of the respondent, made an order striking out and disallowing this item of costs. Subsequently the case proceeded, and there was finding and judgment in favor of the respondent on the merits. This appeal is from the order striking out the item of costs above mentioned. The appellant contends that as he was successful in this court he was entitled to his attorney's fees for services rendered here, and in support of this contention cites Rapp v. Gold Co., 74 Cal. 532, 16 Pac. Rep. 325. The case relied upon holds, and, we think, correctly, that the attorney's fees are not a part of the costs, but are, under the Code, an incident to the foreclosure of the lien. This being the case, there can be no recovery for attorney's fees unless the plaintiff succeeds in his foreclosure proceeding. The court below having found against him on the merits, the lien, which is the basis upon which the right to recover the attorney's fees must rest, is gone, and the right to such attorney's fees must go with it. The fact that he was successful in the supreme court cannot affect the question. The final determination that the appellant had no lien was an adjudication of the controlling question, and was decisive of the point made on this appeal. Order affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.

(83 Cal. 344)

SMITH et al. v. BISCAILUZ et al. (No. 12,827.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1747, relating to the appointment of a guardian for an infant under 14 years of age, and providing that "such appointment may be made on the petition of a relative or other person on behalf of the minor," and that "before making such appointment the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of the minor, and to such relatives of the minor, residing in the county, as the court may deem proper," the appearance by petition of the mother of the minor, in whose care the minor was, and of all the relatives to whom notice would be requisite, by their written consent filed in the cause, is proof that they all had notice of what was in progress, and waived any more formal notice.

2. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1537, applicable to sales of infants' real estate, provides that a failure to set forth in the petition the facts showing the sale to be necessary, as required by section 1781, will not invalidate the proceeding, if the defect be supplied at the hearing, "and the general facts, showing such necessity, be stated in the decree." A decree of sale recited that "on such hearing the said guardian was examined on oath, and, it appearing to this court that it would be for the benefit of said minor that said real estate be sold, and the proceeds of said sale be placed at interest, the said real estate being now unproductive, and liable to heavy taxes," etc. Held a sufficient finding and statement of the "general facts" showing the necessity for sale.

3. A recital in the decree that before making said sale said guardian duly executed an additional bond, as required by Code Civil Proc. § 1788, is, in effect, a recital that the bond was delivered before sale to the judge, without which delivery it could not have been "duly executed;" and such delivery and approval by the judge are a sufficient filing.

4. Where it is apparent that the appraisement was substantially filed in court before the confirmation of the sale, the marking it "Filed" by the clerk was not essential.

5. As to the question whether the appraisement in the form made gave sufficient information to the court to enable it to exercise its prerogative in rendering judgment, the court had, by virtue of the petition exhibited to it, jurisdiction to determine the sufficiency of the evidence, and its judgment cannot be collaterally questioned.

6. A decree of distribution was of all the estate remaining in the hands of the executor, "which estate is hereinafter particularly described, and other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to the said" deceased. Then followed a description, from which one tract owned by the estate in fee was omitted. Held, that the decree passed title to that tract also.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

F. H. Howard, Bicknell & White, R. Dunnigan, and Smith & Patton, for appellants. Chapman & Hendricks and W. J. Foley, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. Action to quiet title under section 381, Code Civil Proc. Judgments passed for the defendants, from which and an order refusing a new trial this appeal is taken. The plaintiffs deraigned their title to the lands in dispute from one P. Beaudry for the purpose of establishing their own source of title to certain lots in the city of Los Angeles, amounting in the aggregate to about 350 acres of land. All parties deraign their title from one A. Z. Jordan, in whom they stipulate the title to the lands in controversy was vested on the 26th day of June, 1873. Upon that day Jordan conveyed an undivided half of the lands, except one subdivision, to Catalina Batz. Afterwards, on the 28th day of July following, Jordan died, still seised of the remaining interest in the lands. He left as his sole heirs his widow, Mary, and two children, the defendant Victoria Jordan, and her sister, who died pending the administration of his estate. Under his will, and by inheritance from the deceased child, the widow became the owner of five-eighths, and the child Victoria of three-eighths, of an undivided half of certain lands involved in this controversy, which interests were allowed to them by a decree of distribution. It is admitted by all that Beaudry acquired the interest of the widow of Jordan and that of Catalina Batz, and, except as to the interests of the plaintiffs Gay and Miller, there seems to be no contention except as to the title to the land originally vested in Victoria Jordan by the decree of distribution. Beaudry purchased the interests of all the plaintiffs here, except those of Gay and Miller, at a guardian sale, made on behalf of the ward, Victoria, an order for which was made by the judge of the probate court of Los Angeles county, and conveyances executed to him by the guardian of the minor, on the 14th day of August, 1876. The ward, after coming of age, just before the institution of this suit, deeded the property to one Biscailuz, who defends this action joined with her; (1) It is claimed by the respondents that the order of the probate court appointing the guardian for Victoria was void for the want of notice (2) that the petition for the sale of the lands of the minor was insufficient to give the court ordering the sale jurisdiction to do so; (3) that the additional bond required by the statute on the sale of real estate was not filed until after the confirmation of the sale; (4) that the inventory and appraisement of the ward's estate, ordered by the court, was not filed until after the confirmation of the sale of the ward's real estate, and that the description of the land was insufficient, as contained in the inventory.

1. That part of section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure which prescribes the notice required for the appointment of a guardian of a minor under 14 years of age, such as the one here concerned, is as follows: "Such appointment may be made on the petition of a relative or other person on behalf of the minor. * * * Before making such appointment, the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of the minor, and to such relatives of the minor residing in the county as the court may deem proper." In the present instance, the mother of the minor, under 14 years of age, having the care of her, preferred the petition for the appointment of the guardian, Joseph Jordan, the uncle of the minor, and her only other relatives residing in the county, two cousins, Joseph P. Jordan and Anton Jordan, filed in the court their written consent to the appointment of the uncle, Joseph, to be the guardian; after which, and upon the same day, the court appointed him guardian in accordance with the petition and consent thus filed. Conceding, without deciding, that the language, "the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of the minor, and to such relatives of the minor residing in the county as the court may deem proper," required the court to have some proper notice given to the person having the care of the minor, and to such of her relatives, residing in the county, as the court may deem proper, as a prerequisite to a valid appointment of her guardian, nevertheless the appearance by petition of the mother of the minor, under whose care she was, and of the other necessary parties, to whom notice was requisite, by their written consent filed in the cause, was proof that they all had notice of what was in progress before the court, and had waived any more formal notice. To have ordered and given any such, under the existing state of facts, would have been an idle and useless ceremony, which the law does not impose upon courts of justice. The minor being of tender years, and not supposed to be able fully to protect her rights, the law provides notice to be given in some proper way to certain persons who may appear and do what is just in her interests. It is not required that any notice be given to the minor, and if the persons to whom the notice is intended to give the opportunity to defend the minor's rights appear in court, and, by petition and written consent, ask that tribunal to appoint the guardian whom it does appoint, we cannot perceive how any harm can come to the minor, or how the law, in its substance, is violated. The case of Burroughs v. De Couts, 70 Cal. 373, 11 Pac. Rep. 734, seems to concur in the view of the statute we have thus taken, and to go further and hold that where there is a collateral attack, such as is here made, upon the action of the court appointing a guardian, and the record affords sufficient evidence that all the near relatives of a minor residing in the county are consenting to the appointment, it is sufficient to warrant the presumption of the existence of the jurisdiction of the court and the validity of its acts, so far as the statutory notice to such parties is concerned. Brodribb v. Tibbits, 63 Cal. 80. The order appointing the guardian, in this matter, showing that all the near relatives of the minor residing in the county were the mother, the uncle appointed guardian, and the two cousins of the minor; that the mother filed the petition, and the cousins filed their consent to the request for the appointment of the uncle as guardian,—it would seem, both upon reason and authority, that such appointment was valid.

2. Conceding, under the decision of the appellate court in Fitch v. Miller, 20 Cal. 352, that the petition for the sale of the minor's real estate was defective in not "setting forth the condition of the estate of his ward, and the facts and circumstances on which his petition is founded, tending to show the necessity or expediency of a sale," as prescribed by section 1781 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was in force in all its substantial features at the date of the order of sale in controversy, it becomes a material question whether or not the provisions of section 1537, which was also in force at the date of the order of sale, validate the decree made in this instance. Sections 1789 and 1808 of the Code of Civil Procedure make that last section applicable to guardian sales. The clause of section 1537, material to the matter under consideration, is: "If any of the matters enumerated cannot be ascertained, it must be so stated in the petition; but a failure to set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary will not invalidate the proceeding if the defect be supplied by the proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity be stated in the decree." The decree of sale in the case in hand contains this statement: "On such hearing, the said guardian was examined on oath, and after a full examination, it appearing to this court that it would be for the benefit of said minor that said real estate be sold, and the proceeds of said sale be placed at interest, the said real estate being now unproductive and liable to heavy taxes." According to the statute and the opinion of the appellate court in Fitch v. Miller, supra, the necessity for a sale exists when it is expedient, or, what is the same thing, can be made with propriety. It must be presumed on this collateral attack, from the decree just recited, that the court determined upon sufficient proof that the condition of the estate, and the facts and circumstances surrounding it, are such as render a sale necessary or expedient. When the statute with reference to what the decree must contain in order to validate the sale (notwithstanding the failure of the petition to state the condition of the estate, and the facts and circumstances going to show a sale to be necessary or expedient) provides that a failure to set out those facts and circumstances in the petition shall not invalidate the sale if the decree contains a recital of "general facts" showing such necessity, it means to declare that neither the failure to set out the special facts and circumstances which, taken together, show the necessity or expediency of the sale, nor the failure to state the condition, (which appears of necessity from, and is a part of, the special facts and circumstances showing the necessity or expediency of a sale,) shall invalidate the sale if the decree shall recite the "general facts" above stated. Therefore it becomes pertinent to inquire and determine what is meant by the words "general facts" showing the necessity or expediency of a sale, as used in section 1537, supra. An examination of sections 1777, 1778, 1781, Code Civil Proc., which are the same in language as the sections in the same Code at the time this sale was made, shows that sections 1777, 1778, prescribed certain ultimate facts or contingencies under which the real estate of the minor may be sold by the guardian, and which must appear in some form in the petition therefor to give the court jurisdiction. An inspection of section 1781, supra, shows that by it certain special facts and circumstances showing the condition of the estate, and tending to show the necessity or expediency of the sale of the whole or a part of the minor's real estate, must be set out in the petition. In the last clause of section 1537, supra, it is plain that a different meaning is given to the word "facts," where it is said, "but a failure to set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings," from that which is given to the words "general facts," where it is said, "if the defect be supplied by the proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity be stated in the decree." What construction is to be given to the language of that clause, when taken in its entirety, in order that the whole clause may be intelligible, and convey a plain and consistent meaning? It would seem that "general facts" must be held to mean those ultimate facts showing a contingency, as prescribed in sections 1777 and 1778, supra, and that the words "the facts showing the sale to be necessary" must refer to those more explicit facts and circumstances set out in section 1781, from a statement of which also would necessarily appear the condition of the estate. In no other way can the language of all the sections supra be made to harmonize. The decree of sale does, as we have seen, state the "general facts" showing a necessity for the sale of the real estate of the minor in almost the exact language of section 1778, supra, showing the existence of one of the contingencies provided for in that section. And on this attack we must presume that at the hearing the court had all the necessary proofs before it. The decree of sale was therefore valid and binding.

3. The appellants further contend that the sale was void because the bond to be given under section 1788, to the probate judge, before the sale of the land, although approved and executed before, was not filed until after the sale.

4. That it was void, also, because the appraisement of the property, although made within a year of the time of the making of the sale, as required by section 1550 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not marked "Filed" before the confirmation of the sale, and that there was no sufficient description in it of the property to be sold. According to the recitals of the decree of sale, "before making said sale said guardian, as required in and by said order of sale, duly executed an additional bond to the state of California," etc. The bond could not have been "duly executed" unless it had been delivered to the judge, and all other acts performed which the statute required. Joseph v. Dougherty, 60 Cal. 360. If delivered to the judge, and approved, as the stipulation shows it was, before the sale, that was a sufficient filing. A paper is filed when delivered to the proper officer, and indorsing it with the time of filing is not a part of the filing. Tregambo v. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 506. It therefore must be conceded that a bond in accordance with law was executed, approved, and filed before the sale, which is all that is required under the section of the Code Civil Procedure supra.

5. The affidavit attached to the inventory and appraisement shows that it was sworn to before the confirmation of the order of sale before the clerk of the court. The decree of the court, after describing the real estate sold, recites, "The said real estate was appraised within one year of the time of such sale, and that the sum aforesaid," that is, the amount of purchase money at the sale, which was previously set out in the decree, "was at least 90 per cent. of the appraised value thereof." In addition, the stipulation shows that "the appraisers were appointed on July 29, 1876," before the sale; "their appointment was made out by the clerk on the same day; and that upon that day, also, they took the oath of office." The oath of the appraisers to their bills for services, and their certificate of appraisement, also bore the same date. It is apparent, therefore, that the appraisement had been substantially filed in the court before the confirmation of the sale, and the marking it "Filed" by the clerk was not essential to its validity.

6. As to the question whether the appraisement in the form made gave sufficient information to the court to enable it to exercise its prerogative in rendering judgment, it may be said that in a collateral attack the court (being, as in this case, for such proceedings, of general jurisdiction) had, by virtue of the petition filed and exhibited to it, jurisdiction to determine the sufficiency of the evidence upon the matter in hand, and its judgment in the premises cannot here be controverted. Dennis v. Winter, 63 Cal. 17. This disposes of the case as affecting the defendants, and all of the plaintiffs who have appealed, except Miller and Gay.

7. Miller obtained an undivided one-half, or eight-sixteenths, of his lot, through Jordan, Batz, and Beaudry. He obtained five-sixteenths through the decree of distribution to the widow of Jordan. The other three-sixteenths of the lot belonged, under the decree of distribution, to the minor Victoria Jordan, and now, by her deed, to Biscailuz. Her interest in this lot was not sold at the guardian sale; so that the judgment as to Miller is correct, and upon his part no points or authorities have been filed.

8. As to the interest of Gay, it appears that Jordan, the father of Victoria, died seised and possessed of the whole of the tract which Gay now claims. The latter obtained from Beaudry title to the interest of the widow, which she received under the decree of distribution, if that decree is not void for the want of sufficient description of the land which Gay claims. The minor's interest was never sold, so that the question here is whether or not Gay can look to the decree of distribution, as fixing his title. The decree recites, among other things: "It is hereby adjudged, ordered, and decreed * * * that the residue of the estate of said A. Z. Jordan, deceased, now remaining in the hands of such executor, which estate is hereinafter particularly described, and other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to the said A. Z. Jordan, deceased, or in which the said estate may have an interest, be, and the same is hereby, distributed as follows, to-wit: An undivided five-eighths part is hereby assigned, transferred, set over, and delivered and distributed to the said Mary Jordan, now Mary Huarte, the said widow of the said A. Z. Jordan, deceased. And the other undivided three-eighths to Victoria, the minor child of the said A. Z. Jordan, deceased. * * * The following is the personal property, and a particular description of the real estate remaining in the hands of the said executor, belonging to the estate of the said A. Z. Jordan, deceased, being the residue of the said estate referred to in this order, and of which distribution is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, as aforesaid." Here follows the particular description of certain lands, in which that of Gay is not mentioned. It was evidently the intention of the judge, in making the decree, to distribute to the widow an undivided five-eighths, and to Victoria Jordan three-eighths, of any lands in which the estate of the decedent had an interest. Is this description sufficient upon a collateral attack to include the land of Gay? It is clear that the estate did have an interest in this land, for it is admitted that by deed Jordan had acquired it, and he had never parted with it. Is the decree to be pronounced "a nullity for uncertainty of description," "because" the court can see that "nothing is described?" Is it one where the description is so defective that "the purchaser," relying "upon the description," and applying the ordinary rules of evidence to such a matter, can find nothing? If not, then the decree on a collateral attack, such as this, is not void. Sepulveda v. Baugh, 16 Pac. Rep. 226. It is conceded here upon all sides that Jordan purchased the property for a valuable consideration, and the description in the decree, under the test of the application of the ordinary rules of evidence to the subject, can readily be shown to represent a specific and certain piece of land, the property of the decedent at the date of his death. The decree of distribution is not, therefore, void upon this attack for want of a description of the land in which Gay claims an interest. As he claimed none of the interest of Victoria Jordan in the property, the court was correct in deciding that he was seised in fee-simple of an undivided five-eighths of the lot. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed as to all the parties who appeal, except Miller and Gay, and that as to them the same be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed as to all the parties who appeal, except Miller and Gay, and as to them the judgment and order are affirmed.

78 Cal. 525

BYAM v. CASHMAN et al. (No. 12,835.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1889.)

INJUNCTION—BOND.

Upon the commencement of a suit the bill praying for an injunction pending the hearing, which on final hearing should be made perpetual, the court granted an order to show cause why the temporary injunction should not be granted as prayed for, and also ordered that the defendants be restrained from committing the acts until the decision upon said motion; said preliminary order to take effect upon the execution of a bond conditioned to pay such damages as defendants might sustain by reason of said restraining order. A bond was executed reciting the filing of the complaint, conditioned as follows: "In consideration of the premises, and of the issuing of said writ of injunction," the parties promise "that, in case said writ shall issue," they will pay damages, etc. Upon the motion to show cause the bill was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Held, that the injunction for which the bond was given was not the writ directed to be issued by the preliminary order, and that no action could be maintained on the bond.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; JOHN W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

Action by Byam against Cashman and others on an injunction bond. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Beatty & Denson and Robert T. Devlin, for appellants. McKune & George, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. On the 16th of September, 1885, Cashman commenced a suit in equity in the circuit court of the United States for the Ninth circuit, district of California, against Byam and others, defendants, and in his bill prayed for a writ of injunction, pending the hearing of said suit against the defendants, enjoining and restraining them from the commission of certain acts set forth in the bill, and that on the final hearing the writ be made perpetual. Upon an application to the judge of the circuit court, the Hon. LORENZO SAWYER, for the writ prayed for, the judge made an order that the defendants in the action, and each of them, show cause on the 2d day of November, 1885, why a temporary injunction, as prayed for in the bill, should not be issued, and that the defendants, and each of them, be and are enjoined and restrained until the decision upon said motion from committing or suffering any of the acts sought to be enjoined by the said bill of complaint, said preliminary restraining order to issue and take effect upon filing in this cause, approved as directed by the order, a bond in the sum of $10,000, payable to the defendants, conditioned that plaintiff will pay the defendants such damages, not exceeding the sum above mentioned, as said defendants, or each of them, may sustain by reason of said restraining order, if said court shall finally decide that the complainant was not entitled thereto. This order was made on the 12th of September, 1885, and on the same day the bond on which this action was brought, was filed. This action is brought against Cashman and two of the sureties on the bond.

The bond has, as a caption, the title of the court and cause, following which it is recited therein that whereas the complainant above named has commenced an action in the court above named against certain defendants, (giving their names,) and in his prayer for relief has asked for a writ of injunction pending the hearing of said action against said defendants, and enjoining and restraining them from the commission of certain acts, as in the bill of complaint filed in said action are more particularly set forth and described. Then follows the condition of the bond, which is in these words: "Now, therefore, we the undersigned, George Cashman, as principal, C. W. Pierce, Frederick Cox, H. C. Wilson, and N. D. Rideout, as sureties, in consideration of the premises, (and of the issuing of said writ of injunction,) do jointly and severally undertake in the sum of ten thousand dollars, ($10,000,) lawful money of the United States of America, and promise to the effect that, in case said injunction shall issue, the said complainant will pay to said defendants, the said parties enjoined, such damages, not exceeding the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) lawful money of the United States of America, as said defendants, or either of them, may sustain by reason of the said injunction, if said circuit court shall finally decide that such complainant was not entitled thereto." On the hearing of the order to show cause the court dismissed the bill for want of jurisdiction. On the trial of this action a verdict and judgment were rendered against the defendants, and this appeal is prosecuted by them from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Appellants' contention is that the bond which was executed was not the bond ordered by the order of the 12th of September, 1885; that the parties by the instrument executed agreed to become liable only in case the temporary writ of injunction prayed for in the bill should issue; that such writ was never ordered to be issued, and never did issue, and therefore the defendants never became liable on the bond which was executed. It clearly appears from the foregoing that the bond executed was not such a bond as was directed by the order of the 12th of September, 1885. This is apparent in the recital and in the condition of the bond given. The recital is of a writ of injunction pending the hearing of the action. The condition refers to the recital. The parties to the bond, "in consideration of the premises, and of the issuing of the said writ of injunction," do undertake, etc. There is here a double reference to the recital, one in the word "premises," and the other in the words "said writ of injunction,"—said writ referring directly to the writ of injunction mentioned in the preceding recital, which was a writ which would be of force "pending the hearing of the action;" that is to say, during the pendency of the action. It is manifest that the writ of injunction just above mentioned was not the writ directed to be issued by the order of the 12th of September. The writ then ordered was one to be of force until the hearing of the motion to show cause why the preliminary injunction prayed for in the bill should not issue.

We think it follows from the foregoing that the defendants, having executed a bond which was never authorized to be executed by any order of the court, never assumed any responsibility to the plaintiff which he could enforce by action. It is further manifest that the writ of injunction on the issuance of which the parties to the bond in suit agreed to make themselves responsible was never issued, for, on the hearing of the order to show cause, the court not only refused to order the writ to issue, but dismissed the cause for want of jurisdiction. As this conclusion disposes of the action, it is unnecessary to pass on the other points made. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, to be proceeded with according to the views expressed in this opinion. So ordered.

We concur: Paterson, J.; Sharpstein, J.; Works, J.

(78 Cal. 430)

Magee v. North Pac. C. R. Co. (No. 11,730.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1889.)

Master and Servant—Pleading.

1. Plaintiff, a brakeman on defendant's train, was injured in an accident caused by a bull on the track. Held, that even if plaintiff knew that the engine was without a cow-catcher, and the fences along the track were defective, the question of his recovery for the injuries was for the jury.

2. A complaint for such injuries need not state that the defects causing the accident were unknown to plaintiff, as such fact is matter of defense.

3. Allegations in the answer that plaintiff's injuries were caused by his own negligence, and that but for his negligence he would not have been injured, authorize plaintiff to testify on his own behalf that the defects causing the accident were unknown to him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; J. F. Sullivan, Judge.

On rehearing. Former decision, 20 Pac. Rep. 709, reversed.

W. H. L. Barnes, for appellant. Hepburn Wilkins, for respondent.

Sharpstein, J. This appeal is from a judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial. The first ground upon which appellant's counsel insists that the judgment should be reversed is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The plaintiff alleges that he was in the employ of the defendant as brakeman and baggage-master, and was seriously injured by the train being thrown from the track by a bull which had intruded upon it. He further alleges that the fences inclosing the track were insufficient to prevent the intrusion of cattle thereon, and that the cow-catcher was not in a position to remove obstacles from the track; that the defendant knew of the defects in the fence, and the improper position of the cow-catcher. But he does not allege that he was ignorant of the defects in the fence, or of the improper position of the cow-catcher. And the omission so to allege constitutes, as appellant contends, a failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

In McGlynn v. Brodie, 31 Cal. 376, it is said, arguendo, that the pleader in that case had not "overlooked the necessity of averring in his complaint the essential fact 'that plaintiff had no knowledge that the same [cupola] was insecure.'" While it is sufficiently clear that the court then thought such an averment in a complaint necessary to constitute a cause of action in cases like the one then before it and the one now before us, the expression of an opinion upon a question not before the court for decision is not entitled to the same consideration as it would be entitled to if such a question had been involved in the case. In Robinson v. Railroad Co., 48 Cal. 409, it was held that in actions based on the negligence of defendants "the complaint need not allege that the injury was done without fault of the plaintiff." In McQuilken v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 7, the case of Robinson v. Railroad Co., supra, is cited on this point approvingly. In Railroad Co. v. Klein, 11 Ind. 38, which was an action by an employé of a railroad company against the company to recover damages for an injury received while in the employ of the company as a brakeman, there was a demurrer to the complaint. In passing upon it the court said: "It is objected to this complaint that there is no averment of a want of knowledge by the plaintiff of the defects complained of. In other words, it is insisted that the plaintiff should in his complaint negative a knowledge or notice by him of the condition of the road and machinery. We do not think such averment necessary. It was a matter of defense, which would more properly appear in the answer." In Crane v. Railroad Co., 87 Mo. 588, the court says: "It has been settled in this state since the case of Thompson v. Railroad Co., 51 Mo. 191, that contributory negligence is a matter of defense, and that the onus of establishing it is on the defendant, and the rule has been reiterated in the late case of Stephens v. City of Macon, 83 Mo. 345. If the onus of proving contributory negligence or of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff of defective machinery rests on the defendant, it would be a singular rule of pleading to require a plaintiff to aver negatively that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, or did not have knowledge of defective machinery, neither one of which he would be required to prove to make out his case, but which the defendant would be required to prove to make out his defense." In Hackford v. Railroad Co., 6 Lans. 386, the court said: "No precedent of a common-law declaration in case for negligence can be found, I think, in which the plaintiff asserts that he was free from negligence, nor any decision that he is bound to make such proof." This seems to accord with the rule that "it is not necessary to state matter which would come more properly from the other side;" the meaning of which is "that it is not necessary to anticipate the answer of the adversary, which, according to HALE, C. J., is 'like leaping before one comes to the stile.'" Steph. Pl. 350. In Lee v. Gas-Light Co., 98 N. Y. 115, the court says: "In the multitude of cases of this general character, we know of none which requires of the pleader any independent or explicit allegation that the plaintiff himself was without fault." Our conclusion is that the demurrer was properly overruled.

On the trial, while the plaintiff was testifying as a witness in his own behalf, he was asked by his counsel, "Did you ever know of any defect in the fence?" Defendant's counsel objected to the question "as incompetent and inadmissible under the pleadings;" it being "nowhere alleged in the complaint that there was any defect in the structure of the fence that was unknown to plaintiff." The objection was overruled, and, before the witness answered the question, counsel for plaintiff put the question in the following form: "If there were any defects in the fence along the right of way, were any such defects known to you up to the 17th day of April, 1882,—that is, the time when this suit was commenced?" The witness answered, "No, sir. Counsel. They were not? Witness. They were not." It does not appear that counsel for defendant renewed his objection to the question as it was finally put and answered, but we think he should nevertheless have the benefit of his objection and exception, as the change in the form of the question was one of phraseology only. If the question was irrelevant, the objection was improperly overruled; otherwise not. We think it was relevant; for while, as has already been shown, the complaint contained no allegation of plaintiff's ignorance of the defects in the fence, the answer "alleges and charges the fact to be that whatever injuries were sustained by said plaintiff were caused solely and wholly by his own carelessness and negligence, and that, but for his own carelessness and negligence, he would not have been injured." This allegation must be deemed denied by plaintiff, and it raised an issue to which the evidence was applicable, and if so such evidence was not irrelevant or incompetent. We perceive no error in that ruling.

After the plaintiff rested, defendant's counsel moved for a nonsuit, on the grounds —First, that there was no evidence that the train was not properly run, or that plaintiff did not know the manner in which it was run,—that is, with no cow-catcher in front; second, that the evidence shows that plaintiff knew of the condition of the fence.

Conceding that the evidence shows that plaintiff knew of the preposterous manner in which the train upon which he was injured was operated, and knew that cattle had previously intruded upon the track, it does not, in our opinion, follow that a nonsuit should have been granted. The right of a servant to recover on account of the master's negligence is not affected by notice of any defects other than such as the servant ought in the exercise of ordinary prudence to have foreseen might endanger his safety. 1 Shear. & R. Neg. § 214; Dale v. Railroad Co., 63 Mo. 455; Mehan v. Railroad Corp., 73 N. Y. 585. It has been expressly held that mere continuance of a servant in his work in the face of a known danger only raises a question for the jury. McMahon v. Iron Co., 24 Hun, 48; Hawley v. Railroad Co, 17 Hun, 115, 82 N. Y. 370. In fact, judgments for damages have been sustained in many cases where the servant had knowledge of the particular defect or danger which resulted in his injury. Clarke v. Holmes, reported in 2 Seymour, Neg. 953; Fairbank v. Haentzsche, 73 Ill. 236; Dorsey v. Phillips, 42 Wis. 583. In Clarke v. Holmes, supra, COCKBURN, C. J., said: "But the question whether the injury of which plaintiff complains is to be ascribed wholly to the negligence of the defendant, or whether the plaintiff had any share in bringing it about, is one wholly for the jury." The motion for nonsuit was properly overruled.

Consistently with the views above expressed, we cannot disturb the order denying the motion for a new trial. There is no evidence that the plaintiff knew of the particular defect or danger which resulted in his injury. He knew that cattle had previously been on the track, but he did not know that effective measures had not been taken before the occurrence of which he complains to prevent their coming on. We think he had a right to assume that such measures had been taken as would prevent the recurrence of that danger. At least there was evidence to justify the jury in finding that he had no knowledge of the particular defect or danger which resulted in his injury. In Trask v. Railroad Co., 63 Cal. 96, where a train hand was injured and the court found that the injury was caused by the unskillful, improper, and negligent manner in which the defendant constructed its road, it was held that "the plaintiff did not assume the risk arising from the unskillful, improper, and negligent manner in which defendant's road was constructed." "It has been often said that the master is not liable for defects in such things to a servant whose means of knowledge thereof were equal to those of the master. But this is an erroneous statement. The master has no right to assume that the servant will use such means of knowledge, because it is not part of the duty of the servant to inquire into the sufficiency of these things. The servant has a right to rely upon the master's inquiry, because it is the master's duty so to inquire; and the servant may justly assume that all these things are fit and suitable for the use which he is directed to make of them. The true definition is that, when circumstances make it the duty of the servant to inquire, it is contributory negligence on his part not to inquire. A servant is chargeable with actual notice as to matters concerning which it was his duty to inquire, and especially should this rule be applied where the servant's action is founded upon the assumption that the master ought to have known of something which he did not actually know." 1 Shear. & R. Neg. § 217. We think that rule fairly deducible from a majority of the cases in which the question was involved. There are cases, however, to the contrary, at least, seemingly so, among which is Sweeney v. Railroad Co., 57 Cal. 15, in which it was held that a new trial was properly granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; because "from the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses, and as the case stood when plaintiff rested, it would hardly be rational to deny that the deceased had known for months, indeed years, before the accident which caused his death, that the road at and for miles each side of the point where the collision occurred was not protected by fences and cattle-guards; and being an intelligent, reasonable human being, and engaged constantly as a locomotive engineer over this particular portion of the road, he must be deemed to have known that cattle were likely to intrude upon the track, and that thereby there was danger of just such an accident as resulted in his death." In that case the motion for a new trial was granted; in this case it was denied. In that case it does not appear that the road had ever been fenced,—a fact of which an employe might more reasonably be supposed to take notice than of the fact that there was a defect in an existing fence. And a very large discretion has been accorded to trial courts in the matter of granting or refusing new trials in this state. But we will not attempt to parry the force of that decision by suggesting a distinction which is not obvious. The principle upon which the court proceeded in that case is not, in our opinion, supported by the weight of authority, and does not commend itself to our favorable consideration. We think the question of the plaintiff's knowledge of the danger to which he was exposed by reason of the omission to fence the road was one for the jury. In this case we are satisfied that the verdict of the jury ought not to be disturbed on the ground that it was not justified by the evidence. It appears to us that the questions discussed were fairly submitted to the jury by the court in its instructions. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; WORKS, J.

(78 Cal. 470)

TYRRELL v. BALDWIN. (No. 11,408.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1889.)

HOMESTEAD—RIGHTS OF SURVIVOR—APPEAL.

1. The right of homestead and exemption is the creature of the legislature, and can be limited according to the legislative will in any respect and at any time; and the law in force at the time of the death of husband or wife, and not the law in force at the time the homestead was created, controls as to the rights of the survivor.

2. Civil Code Cal. § 1265, vests the homestead absolutely in the survivor upon the death of one of the spouses, but declares that it shall in no case be liable for the debts of the owner except as therein provided. Held, that it was not subject to forced sale for the subsequent debts of the survivor.

3. A second motion to dismiss an appeal, based on the same facts as the former motion, which was denied without leave to renew it, will be denied.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

A. L. Rhodes and Wm. Leviston, for appellant. Wm. Royal, (E. W. McGraw, of counsel,) for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Action to quiet title. The appeal is from the judgment, the only question being as to the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment of the court below in favor of the plaintiff. Two years ago the respondent moved to dismiss the appeal herein, and the motion was denied. 72 Cal. 192, 13 Pac. Rep. 475. At the hearing of the appeal on its merits the motion was renewed. It is based on the same facts, and as leave was not granted in the former order to renew the motion there is nothing to commend it to the discretion of the court. It is therefore denied. Ford v. Doyle, 44 Cal. 637.

As to the merits. On August 13, 1867, M. Tyrrell and his wife, by a declaration duly executed and recorded, selected the land in controversy as a homestead from their community property. On August 22, 1874, Mrs. Tyrrell died. She left surviving her a daughter, then aged seven years, who has ever since been dependent upon her father for support, and has lived with him. In April, 1877, one Porter commenced an action against M. Tyrrell, and in March, 1880, he recovered a judgment against him for the possession of the property sued for, and if a return could not be had, then for the recovery of $250, the value thereof, together with costs taxed at $150. The property sued for was a house that had stood on the premises in controversy, but had been removed therefrom prior to the commencement of the action. In October, 1877, Porter made, executed, and delivered to Baldwin a deed of the land in controversy, and thereupon Baldwin entered into possession of the land, and has ever since held the same. On February 8, 1883, Porter procured an execution upon his judgment against Tyrrell, which was levied upon all the interest Tyrrell had in the premises on March 24, 1880. Under this execution and levy the sheriff duly sold the land to defendant Baldwin on April 11, 1883, for $540. Defendant paid the money over to the sheriff, and, no redemption having been made, a deed in due form passed from the sheriff to defendant on November 21, 1883. Since the trial of the action M. Tyrrell died, and his daughter, administratrix, has been substituted as plaintiff.

The main question before us is whether the sale under the execution issued in Porter v. Tyrrell was valid or void. Plaintiff claims that it was void; that the land was subject to the declaration of homestead as well after the death of Tyrrell's wife as before; that it continued to be a homestead,—the homestead of Tyrrell and his daughter; and could not be taken from them on forced sale under an execution issued on a money judgment recovered against Tyrrell after the death of his wife. Defendant claims that the premises did not constitute a homestead at the time of the levy of the execution and the sale thereunder, and that they were not exempt from sale under the execution. At the time the declaration of homestead was filed for record the homestead act of 1862 was in force and effect. St. 1862, p. 519. Section 4 of that act reads as follows: "The homestead property selected by the husband and wife, or either of them, according to the provisions of said act, shall, upon the death of the husband or wife, vest absolutely in the survivor, and be held by the survivor as fully and amply as the same was held by them, or either of them, immediately preceding the death of the deceased, and shall not be subject to the payment of any debt or liability contracted by or existing against the said husband and wife, or either of them, previous to or at the time of the death of such husband or wife, except such debt or liability as the homestead was subject to at the time of the death of such husband or wife." There is no doubt that under this section the survivor would take the entire title, (that both spouses held immediately preceding the death of the deceased spouse,) but such title could not vest in the survivor until the death of the other spouse. That is the clear intent and plain letter of the statute. There can be no survivorship until a death has occurred. It follows logically, we think, that the law in force at the time the title vested should prevail as to the descent. The right of homestead and exemption is not beyond legislative control, but is the creature of the legislature, and can be limited according to the legislative will in any respect and at any time; and the law in force at the time of the death we think controls on the subject of homesteads and rights of survivors. Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176; Rich v. Tubbs, 41 Cal. 34; Johnston v. Savings Union, 16 Pac. Rep. 753; Smyth, Homest. §§ 28, 30, 38. "The homestead, in fact, of the deceased husband was the homestead subsisting according to the law in force at the date of his death." Section 543, Thomp. Homest. & Ex.

If the rights of the parties herein depended upon the proper construction of section 4 of the act of 1862, quoted above, we should doubtless follow the construction given to it in Watson v. His Creditors, 58 Cal. 556. The decision in that matter is based upon the act referred to. The court seems to have assumed that the act of 1862 determined the rights of the parties. That act left the homestead to the survivor, subject to forced sale for debts accruing after the death of the other spouse. Under it the homestead was not "subject to the payment of any debts * * * existing * * * previous to or at the time of the death." Presumably it was subject to all others. But that act was amended in 1874, to take effect July 1, 1874, and it is now provided (section 1265, Civil Code,) that the title "vests in the survivor, subject to no other liability than such as exists or has been created under the provisions of this title. * * * In no case shall it be held liable for the debts of the owner, except as provided in this title." It is not claimed that the debt due from Tyrrell to Porter is one of the debts for which the homestead could be taken on forced sale under this section. Section 1241, Id. Graham v. Stewart, 68 Cal. 376, 9 Pac. Rep. 555, and Herrold v. Reen, 58 Cal. 446, cited by appellant, were cases arising under the provisions of the act of 1862. It does not follow that, because the survivor can mortgage the property after the title vests in him, it is subject to sale under execution, or that, because the title vests absolutely in the survivor, the homestead is subject to forced sale. Such title is entirely consistent with the law of exemptions. Estate of Headen, 52 Cal. 294. The homestead is subject to sale under a judgment of foreclosure of mortgage executed and acknowledged by the husband and wife, yet is exempt from forced sale under execution on a money judgment like the judgment under which the property in controversy was sold. The question before us in this case is one of exemption, rather than one of title under the homestead laws. "It was not intended by the homestead enactments to create a new estate, but simply an exemption to protect the homestead within the statutory or constitutional limit from forced sale. * * * The right of homestead is the creature of statute, unknown to the common law. But it seems to partake of an interest or right in the home, indeterminate in its duration, which may continue for the joint lives of the possessor and his wife, and in some cases until the majority of their children." Smyth, Homest. §§ 55, 69; Bowman v. Norton, 16 Cal. 219. In Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472, Chief Justice FIELD said: "The wife, if surviving her husband, takes the homestead, not by virtue of any right of survivorship, arising from the alleged joint tenancy, but as property set apart by law from her husband's estate for her benefit and that of his children, if there be any. In the same way, other property exempt from forced sale is set apart to her."

The main object of the homestead laws is to protect the home of the wife and her children,—to provide a refuge for them which cannot be invaded. This is the beneficent feature, the humane character, of all laws on the subject, and the courts have held uniformly that they should receive as liberal construction as can fairly be given to them in favor of those for whose benefit the exemption was intended. "The death of one of the spouses does not alter in any way the estate or title of the homestead. * * * The statute of Texas (similar to section 1465, Code Civil Proc.) provides that all property exempt from execution (including the homestead) shall be set apart for the use of the widow and children. * * * Even if the probate court had not been by any law invested with authority to designate for the use of the widow of the deceased the property which in his life-time had been exempt from execution, yet such property would in the possession of the widow be exempt from execution or forced sale. During the existence of the marriage the husband was the head of the family, but on its dissolution by death the surviving wife was placed in that position, and in such position she has all the incidents, rights, and privileges. The same of the husband on the death of the wife. The right of either as the head of the family to retain the property exempt from execution is perfect, and the right of one is entirely equivalent to that of the other, and is neither of a higher or lower, or different, but of the same, grade, nature, and force. * * * They are co-equals in life, and at death the survivor, whether husband or wife, remains the head of the family." Smyth, Homest. § 331; Wood v. Wheeler, 7 Tex. 21.

Under section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure the court has no discretion. It must set aside the homestead selected from the community property. Estate of Ballentine, 45 Cal. 696. This provision seems to support the theory that the homestead is preserved for the benefit of the surviving spouse and the children, stamped with the same quality that characterized it during the life-time of the deceased spouse. That section provides that "the court may [shall] of its own motion, or on petition therefor, set apart for the use of the surviving husband or wife, or, in case of his or her death, to the minor children of the decedent, all the property exempt from execution, including the homestead selected, designated, and recorded," etc. Here the quality of the exemption is clearly impressed upon the homestead set aside. It would not be a homestead, it would be wanting in the main feature which recommends it to favor, if, upon the death of the head of the family, it were no longer protected by the law of exemption. There is greater necessity for such protection after the death of one of the spouses than before. Thomp. Homest. & Ex. § 541.

Upon principle and authority we think the sale of the land in controversy, under the execution issued in Porter v. Tyrrell, was void.

The court did not find whether Tyrrell and wife resided on the land up to the time of the death of the latter, unless the finding that they resided thereon at the time the declaration was filed establishes the fact by presumption. The findings, however, are as broad as the issues, and there is no finding of abandonment, either before or after the death of the wife. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: Beatty, C. J.; Works, J.

---

78 Cal. 493

Potter v. Fowzer, County Treasurer.

(No. 11,768.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1889.)

Highways—Taxes and Assessments—Authority of County Board.

Pol. Code Cal. § 2645, provides that road overseers must take charge of highways in their respective districts. Section 2 51 provides that the board of supervisors may establish a general county road fund out of all the road tax collected, from which they may assist weak districts, but shall not create a debt on such districts in excess of the estimated receipts therefrom for the current year, and renders void all contracts in violation of the Code. Section 2652 provides for levying an annual poll-tax, part of which shall be apportioned to the general road fund. Section 2653 provides for levying a highway property tax, which must not exceed a certain percentage. Section 2712 authorizes the board of supervisors to pay a portion of the cost of constructing bridges out of the county general fund. Held, that the board of supervisors had no authority to order a claim of a road overseer, for labor done and money expended for his district, paid out of the county general fund, where it was not alleged that the claim was for building bridges, and the entire legal highway taxes for the year had been collected and exhausted, though the county government act, § 25, subd. 20, authorizes the board of supervisors to "transfer moneys from one fund to another, as the public interest may require." Thornton, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. McGarvey, Judge.

Petition for mandamus by E. R. Potter against James Fowzer, county treasurer. Writ granted, and defendant appeals.

A. Yell and J. A. Cooper, for appellant. T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

Belcher, C. C. This is an appeal from a judgment awarding the petitioner a peremptory writ of mandate. The facts stated in the petition are as follows: There was due to the petitioner, as road overseer of Round Valley road-district, in Mendocino county, the sum of $2,045.23 for work and labor done, and for money expended by him for the district during the quarter year ending June 30, 1886. There was no money in the road-district fund, and only $494.61 in the general road fund of the county. A tax of 40 cents on each $100 of taxable property in the county was duly levied for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, but that money had all been exhausted for road purposes. On the 9th of July, 1886, the board of supervisors of the county, at a regular session, made an order that the county treasurer transfer from the surplus remaining in the general fund of the county for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, to the Round Valley road-district fund the sum of $1,552.62, for the purpose of paying the said indebtedness due the petitioner. Demand was made that the treasurer obey the order of the board, and transfer the money, but he refused, and has ever since refused, to do so. This proceeding was then commenced to enforce obedience to the order. The defendant demurred to the petition on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to show that petitioner was entitled to the relief demanded, or to any relief. The court overruled the demurrer, and thereupon, the defendant declining to answer, the judgment appealed from was entered. It is contended on behalf of appellant that, under the provisions of the Political Code, the board of supervisors had no power to make the order transferring the money, and that their action was therefore void. On the other hand, it is argued for respondent that subdivision 20, § 25 of the county government act (St. 1883, p. 299) fully authorized the action of the board, and is controlling in the matter.

Section 2645 of the Political Code provides that road overseers, pursuant to orders of the board of supervisors, must take charge of the highways within their respective districts, keep them clear from obstructions and in good repair, cause banks to be graded, bridges and causeways to be made where necessary, keep the same in good repair, and renew them when destroyed. Section 2651 provides that the board of supervisors may anually set apart from the property road tax, collected from all sources, a sum not exceeding 35 per cent. of the aggregate, for general county road purposes, to be known as the "general road fund of the county;" that from this fund, besides general road work for the county, the board may assist weak or impoverished districts, but shall have no power to create a debt on any district in excess of the estimated amount of receipts from said district for the current year. The section further provides that all contracts, authorizations, and liabilities made in violation of the provisions of the Code shall be absolutely void. Section 2652 provides for the annual levy on certain persons of $3 as a road poll-tax, and authorizes the board to apportion 35 per cent. of the amount collected to the general road fund. Section 2653 provides that the board of supervisors must each year, when they levy taxes for county purposes, also levy a property tax for highway purposes, "provided that said property tax for highway purposes shall not exceed the sum of 40 cents upon each $100 of assessable property in any one year." And section 2712 provides that "whenever it appears to the board of supervisors that any road-district is or would be unreasonably burdened by the expense of constructing, or of the maintenance and repair of any bridge, or the purchase of toll-roads, they may, in their discretion, cause a portion of the aggregate cost or expense to be paid out of the general road fund of the county; or by vote of two-thirds of the board of supervisors said board may, in their discretion, order a portion of the cost of construction of bridges only to be paid out of the county general fund, as well as the general road fund." By subdivision 20, § 25, of the county government act, boards of supervisors are given the power, under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law, "to establish a salary fund, and also such other county funds as they may deem necessary for the proper transaction of the business of the county, and to transfer moneys from one fund to another as the public interest may require."

It is clear from the foregoing provisions of the Code that all the money which can be used for road purposes, with a single exception, must come from the road poll-tax and a property tax of 40 cents on each $100 of assessable property, and that all contracts made and liabilities incurred in excess of the estimated receipts are void. In the excepted instance the supervisors are permitted by a two-thirds vote to order a portion of the cost of constructing bridges to be paid out of the county general fund. But this case does not come within the exception. It is not alleged that any of the labor performed or money expended by the petitioner was for the construction of bridges, and, pleadings being construed most strongly against the pleader, it must be assumed that the alleged indebtedness was created in some other way. This being so, and, assuming the petitioner's claim to be valid, it is clear that the board of supervisors had no authority to pay it with money taken from the general fund, the rule being that public moneys can be used only for the purposes and in the manner prescribed by law. The only question then is, did the provision of the county government act relied upon by respondent authorize the board to transfer the money temporarily from the general fund to the road-district fund? We do not think it did. We see no conflict or inconsistency between that provision and the sections of the Code cited. They do not relate to the same subject. Under that provision the supervisors may establish county funds, and may transfer money from one fund to another, when required by the public interest; but it cannot be construed to authorize the transfer to a fund established by law, and expressly limited in the amount of its receipts. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

THORNTON, J., dissents.

---

78 Cal. 498

FINNEY v. CURTIS. (No. 12,207.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1889.)

ANIMAL—VICIOUS HORSE—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for personal injuries, plaintiff alleging that defendant, knowing his horse to be vicious, induced plaintiff to assist him in hitching the horse to a wagon by falsely stating that the horse was gentle, the court charged that if the defendant represented the horse to be gentle, and thus induced plaintiff to take hold of him, and if the horse was not gentle, and if plaintiff was injured without negligence on his part, then defendant was responsible for the injuries sustained by the vice of the horse. Held error, in making defendant liable without reference to his knowledge of the viciousness of the horse, or to the intent with which the representation was made, and also as practically assuming that the horse was vicious.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

Action by Michael Finney against Forrest D. Curtis for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Geo. M. Gill and S. D. Woods, for appellant. J. C. Campbell and Terry, Campbell & Terry, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Action for damages for personal injuries done the plaintiff by defendant's horse. Trial by jury; verdict for plaintiff for $3,500; judgment accordingly; motion for new trial overruled; defendant appeals. The gist of the complaint is that the defendant, knowing his horse to be vicious, induced the plaintiff to assist him in an attempt to hitch the horse to a wagon by falsely stating to him that the horse was gentle; that plaintiff did attempt to assist him, whereupon the horse became unmanageable, knocked the plaintiff down and trampled upon him, breaking his leg, so that amputation became necessary. There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was properly overruled. The answer denied all of the material allegations of the complaint. Some questions are raised upon rulings relating to the admission and exclusion of evidence, but we have found no material errors in any of these rulings. The court, at the request of the plaintiff, gave the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant, Forrest Curtis, represented the horse which he had harnessed to be gentle, and by such representations induced the plaintiff to approach and take hold of the horse, and if they believed that the horse was not gentle, and the plaintiff was, without negligence on his part, injured by said horse, then the defendant is responsible for the injury sustained by the vice of the horse." The giving of this instruction is assigned as error. The question is elaborately discussed in the briefs. There appears to be some doubt in the mind of counsel whether the action is founded on fraud or negligence, and the elementary principles relating to each are learnedly discussed, and numerous authorities cited and quoted from at length. The appellant favors us with 23 printed pages on this question alone in his original brief, and his reply contains 14 additional pages on the same subject. We desire to give to the arguments of counsel a full and careful reading, but such a brief as this is wholly unnecessary and burdensome. What we need for the proper consideration of a case is a clear, brief statement of the points made, with a citation of authorities bearing directly upon them. Long quotations from authorities are unnecessary. We can read the original quite as conveniently Where the quotation contains a brief statement of the point relied upon it is proper, but not otherwise. We call attention here to what seems to be the growing tendency of attorneys to overburden us with long briefs to no purpose but to delay us in our work, and to weaken the presentation of their cases. The instruction is erroneous. It makes the defendant liable without reference to his knowledge of the vicious nature of the horse. The rule is well settled that the owner of an animal, not naturally vicious, is not liable for an injury done by such animal, unless it is affirmatively shown, not only that it was vicious, but that such owner had knowledge of the fact. Shear. & R. Neg. §§ 187, 188; 3 Suth. Dam. 53. This case differs from ordinary cases, in that the plaintiff was induced to put himself in a place of danger by the representation of the defendant that the horse was gentle. The defendant being the owner of the horse, he had a right to rely upon this statement, and act upon it. But the instruction was erroneous for another reason. It makes the defendant liable without reference to the question whether he had knowledge that the horse was vicious or not. The fact that the plaintiff was injured by the horse does not prove that the horse was vicious. The instruction practically assumes this by the closing words: "Then the defendant is responsible for the injury sustained by the vice of the horse." The instruction is also objectionable for the reason that it makes the defendant liable for the representation that the horse was gentle without any reference to the intent with which it was made. The defendant testifies that he told plaintiff the horse was gentle, and he did not need his assistance to hook him to the wagon.

The only other question necessary for us to determine is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. As to its insufficiency we entertain no doubt. In order to support a verdict for the plaintiff it was necessary to show, either that the horse was of a vicious disposition, or that he was so negligently handled by the defendant as to cause the injury. Neither is shown. There is nothing in the evidence even tending to show that the horse had ever shown an evil disposition before the time of the injury, or that he had ever done so since up to the time of the trial. It appears that the horse was young, and not broken to harness, which was known to plaintiff as well as defendant; that plaintiff attempted to assist the defendant to put him to a wagon with another horse; that while plaintiff was at his head he plunged, struck the plaintiff down, and trampled him under foot, breaking and mangling his leg, so that it had to be amputated soon after. It does not appear that the injury resulted from the negligence of either the plaintiff or the defendant. The mere fact that the horse became unmanageable on the occasion of the injury does not show that he was vicious or generally unsafe, nor does it prove that the statement of the defendant that the horse was gentle was untrue. Kennedy v. Mayor, 73 N. Y. 365. So far as the evidence shows the statement made by the defendant that the horse was gentle may have been entirely true. If so, there is no ground upon which the verdict can be upheld. There are other questions argued in the briefs, but the conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to consider them. Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the ground that the court below erred in giving the instruction quoted and commented on in the opinion of Justice WORKS. The instruction makes the defendant responsible if to his knowledge the horse was gentle and free from vice, provided the jury find that the horse was not gentle. This is equivalent to holding that the defendant guarantied that the horse was gentle, and was therefore bound to indemnify the plaintiff for any damage which he suffered by the vicious act of the horse. If the defendant knew that the horse was not gentle, and represented to the plaintiff that he was, and the plaintiff, relying on such representation, and induced by it, assisted defendant in hitching him, and while rendering this assistance suffered from the vicious conduct of the horse, he (the defendant) would be responsible. The defendant would also be responsible, if in ignorance of the fact whether the horse, which was an unbroken colt, was gentle or not, he carelessly represented to plaintiff that he was gentle, and the plaintiff relied on such representation and, acting on it, received an injury. I find no other error in the record.

BEATTY, C. J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the ground that the instruction commented upon was not sufficiently guarded. The jury should not have been told that the defendant was responsible if he induced the plaintiff to take hold of the horse by representing him as gentle, when, in fact, he was not gentle. The defendant was not liable unless, in addition to his representation contrary to the fact, he either knew the representation to be false, or had no reasonable ground for believing it to be true. Nor was the defendant liable, in my opinion, unless the representation was made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to act as he did; and the evidence is conflicting as to whether the defendant, at the time he made the statement that the horse was gentle, told the plaintiff that he desired his assistance, or desired him to keep away.

FANNING v. LEVISTON et al. (No. 11,426.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1889.)

STREET ASSESSMENTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to foreclose a street assessment, where the warrant, assessment, etc., have been introduced in evidence under St. Cal. 1871–72, p. 815, § 12, providing that the same shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment and all prior proceedings, it appeared that a certain street had been graded about 20 years before, and that the difference between the official grade and the existing grade nowhere exceeded 1¾ feet. Held, that this was not sufficient to overcome the presumption under Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, that official duty has been regularly performed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by E. Fanning against William Leviston and F. G. Gilman, to recover on a street assessment. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

J. M. Wood, for appellant. William Leviston, for respondents.

WORKS, J. This is an action to recover upon a street assessment, and involves the same question that is decided in the case of Fanning v. Bohme, 18 Pac. Rep. 158. The evidence here is the same in all material respects as in the case cited, and relates to the same question. Therefore upon the authority of that case, the order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.

(78 Cal. 504)

SOUTHWICK v. DAVIS et ux. (No. 12,796.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1889.)

HOMESTEAD.

1. Under the California statute requiring the declaration of a homestead to contain a description of the premises, and "an estimate of their actual cash value," a declaration stating that the property claimed "does not exceed in value the sum of $5,000" is sufficient.

2. The failure of the county recorder to note the recordation of the declaration in his index of recorded instruments does not affect the validity of the homestead.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Eldorado county; GEORGE E. WILLIAMS, Judge.

Action by Southwick against B. F. Davis and wife to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff defendants appeal.

Blanchard & Swisler, for appellants. Irwin & Irwin, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage on certain premises, executed to the plaintiff by the defendant B. F. Davis, on October 11, 1884. The defendant Mary S. Davis, wife of said B. F. Davis, answered, setting up that at and before the date of said mortgage the said premises were the homestead of her husband and herself. Defendant Jenks set up the same defense, alleging that after the execution of the mortgage said husband and wife conveyed the premises to him. The court below rendered judgment for plaintiff, and the said defendants who answered appeal from the judgment. The findings of the court show that on January 31, 1876, the said B. F. Davis and his said wife, Mary S. Davis, with several minor children, were residing on the premises, and that on said day the said B. F. Davis executed and filed for record with the county recorder a declaration of homestead upon said premises, and that the execution and recording of said declaration were perfectly valid, except in the particulars hereinafter mentioned.

1. It is found by the court, and argued by respondent, that the homestead was invalid because the statement in the declaration of the value of the property is that it "does not exceed in value the sum of $5,000;" the position being that the estimate of value should have been more specific, and that the consequence of this alleged defect is that the declaration is utterly void, and the whole structure of the homestead destroyed. We do not think that this position is tenable. The preservation of a homestead for the family is a marked feature of our law. It is enjoined by the state constitution itself. Of course it was necessary for the legislature to provide some manner by which one desiring to claim a homestead should make a public declaration of the fact, and designate the particular premises intended to be so claimed. But surely statutory provisions to that end should not be subjected to the rule of strict construction. Statutes for the purpose of carrying out the constitutional command are remedial, and should be liberally, or at least fairly and reasonably, construed. The homestead right is not one to be industriously pinched and circumscribed and circumvented and beaten back. If the facts of an honest homestead claim be present, a substantial compliance with statutory provisions about making the claim public should be deemed sufficient.

The Code provides, among other things, that the declaration must contain a description of the premises claimed, and "an estimate of their actual cash value." It is difficult to imagine the precise purpose of this provision. It is admitted on all hands that the correctness or incorrectness of the estimate has no effect whatever upon the validity of the claim. If the estimate were 10 times more than the actual value, or only one-tenth as much, the claim would not be bad on that account. There is, however, a difference in some respects between a homestead on land worth more than $5,000, and one on land not worth more than that amount, and it may be that the legislature merely intended to have an estimate with respect to that particular value. If so, then, of course, the estimate in the case at bar was sufficient. At all events, the provision is a very loose one,—too loose to have applied to it the rule of strict construction, even if that rule were not inapplicable for other reasons. In ordinary affairs, out of court, if a man were asked his estimate of the value of a certain piece of property, and he should answer "Not exceeding $5,000," the common inference would be that he thought it worth in the neighborhood of, but not more than, $5,000. Could it be fairly said that he had made no "estimate" at all? And so, in the case at bar, considering all the circumstances above alluded to, we do not think, to say the very least, that the language used in the declaration was such a total failure to comply with the statute as made the homestead void.

The authorities cited by respondent do not establish the law against the views above stated, while the very latest decision of this court upon the point seems to be exactly in accordance with those views. In Scuyler v. Broughton, 18 Pac. Rep. 437, where the opinion written by SEARLS, C. J., was concurred in by all the justices, (except one who was absent,) the language of the declaration of homestead was this: "And we do place the value of said land at a sum not to exceed sixteen hundred dollars." That language, for the purpose of the point at issue, cannot be distinguished from the language used in the case at bar; and yet in that case the language was held to be a sufficient compliance with the Code. The court, among other things, say: "The statute in reference to homesteads is a remedial measure, and, as such, is to be liberally construed. * * * Where these several acts have been substantially performed, and where the declaration contains the essence of the statutory requirements, the construction should be so liberal as to advance the object of the constitution and statute. By use of the language adopted by the declarants in this case we think it may be fairly inferred they estimated the value of the premises to be about $1,600. The phrase used, [repeating it,] though not precise, is such as is frequently used to convey the impression that the figures mentioned approximate the judgment of the speaker."

2. The court below held the homestead to be invalid solely upon the ground above stated. We shall not, therefore, discuss at length the other points made by respondent in support of the judgment. The failure of the county recorder to note the recordation of the declaration in his index of recorded instruments could not affect the validity of the homestead. We think that the form of the certificate of acknowledgment of the declaration was sufficient, and that the official character of the officer taking the acknowledgment sufficiently appears. Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment for the defendants who answered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 511

PEABODY v. PRINCE. (No. 11,922.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1889.)

PUBLIC LANDS—PATENTS—PLEADING—JUDGMENT.

1. In ejectment, plaintiff claiming under a patent from the state, and defendant contending that the patent was void, and asking that plaintiff be decreed to hold the legal title, and be required to convey to defendant, the validity of the patent need not be considered, as if it is valid defendant has no rights, and if invalid a conveyance to defendant would give no title.

2. A cross-complaint alleging that before defendant applied to purchase the land a third person applied, and he and plaintiff settled the contest between them in fraud of defendant, the third person receiving money from plaintiff, and withdrawing from the contest, must also allege, to entitle defendant to recover on the ground of fraud, that the application of the third person was invalid, and that defendant possesses the qualifications necessary to entitle him to become a purchaser.

3. The validity of a judgment in a contest between two applicants for purchase of public lands cannot be attacked by the defendant in ejectment brought by the applicant in whose favor the judgment was rendered.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

Ejectment by one Peabody against one Prince. A demurrer to the cross-complaint was sustained, and defendant appeals.

S. O. Houghton, for appellant. J. M. Lesser and J. H. Logan, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The complaint is ejectment in the usual form. The defendant pleaded, by way of cross-complaint, in substance, that the lands in controversy were properly listed, and on or about March 1, 1869, relinquished, and certified over to the state of California by the United States as lieu lands; that on the 21st day of March, 1870, the plaintiff made application to purchase the same from the state, which application was approved by the surveyor general, February 12, 1872; that plaintiff paid to the county treasurer of the proper county the amount required by law to be paid on the land, but did not pay the three dollars required to be paid for the certificate of purchase; that the surveyor general had no authority to accept any application for the purchase of said lands, because there was no law then in force authorizing the sale thereof; that on the 14th day of May, 1878, one Benjamin made application to purchase said land, and his application was approved July 27, 1878; that on the 30th of June, 1879, the plaintiff filed his protest and demanded that the contest between Benjamin and himself be certified to the proper court for trial, which was done on said day; that on August 28, 1879, the plaintiff brought his action against Benjamin to have said contest adjudicated and determined, to which action Benjamin appeared and answered. The cross-complaint then proceeds to allege such facts as were necessary to show that said lands were vacant and open to settlement and purchase; that on the 10th day of August, 1882, the defendant made and filed his application to purchase the land, stating therein the facts required by law; that on the 27th day of October, 1882, he filed in the office of the surveyor general the necessary proof that he was an actual settler, in good faith, on said land, and had resided thereon continuously; that in said month of October he filed his protest against any evidence of title being issued to either the plaintiff or said Benjamin, which protest the surveyor general refused to recognize, and refused to certify his said protest to any court. It is further alleged that the plaintiff, well knowing that his application was invalid, fraudulently confederated with said Benjamin, with the intent to defraud the defendant out of his rights, and in pursuance of that object paid to said Benjamin a sum of money, in consideration of which Benjamin executed to him a conveyance of said land, and withdrew his answer in the contest pending between them, and stipulated that plaintiff should be allowed to proceed in said action without any defense thereto; that plaintiff failed to record said deed, and concealed the same; that on the 12th day of April, 1884, the plaintiff presented said stipulation to the court, and procured a judgment by default, and, without offering any proof, procured a judgment entitling him to a patent for the land upon payment of the balance of the purchase money, and thereafter procured a patent vesting the legal title to said property in him; that neither the plaintiff nor Benjamin were ever in possession of said real estate, or any part of it; that plaintiff was not entitled to judgment in his favor in said contest under the allegations of his complaint, and only procured the same through said fraud and conspiracy; and that by said fraud the defendant was prevented from exercising the right given him by law of purchasing and acquiring the legal title to said land. The prayer of the complaint is that it be decreed that plaintiff holds the legal title to said land in trust for the defendant, and that he be required to convey to him.

The court below sustained the demurrer to this cross-complaint, and, the defendant declining to amend, judgment was rendered against him on the demurrer, and he appeals. The cross-complaint, so far as it attacks the plaintiff's patent, is based upon two grounds: (1) That the same was wholly void for want of authority in the surveyor general to accept any application for the purchase of lieu lands at the time the plaintiff made his application; (2) that the plaintiff procured the patent by a fraudulent arrangement with Benjamin, by which the latter withdrew from the contest, and allowed the plaintiff to take judgment by default.

1. As to the first of these we need not stop to inquire whether the surveyor general had authority to accept the application or not. The appellant contends that the patent was absolutely void for this reason. Conceding this to be true, it is fatal to the remedy sought to be enforced by the cross-complaint, the prayer of which is that it be declared that the plaintiff holds the legal title in trust for the defendant, and that he be required to convey to him. If the patent was void, as claimed, the plaintiff had no legal title to hold or convey, and certainly a trust cannot be founded upon a void patent from the state. Treating the patent as valid, the defendant, as we shall show in passing upon the second ground for relief, shows no right in the property to be enforced.

2. In order to recover on the ground of fraud, the defendant must show some interest in the property of which he was deprived by reason of the fraud. If he fails to do this, he shows no injury, and therefore no ground of complaint. In our judgment the cross-complaint wholly fails to show any right in the defendant. It will be seen, from the foregoing summary of the allegations of the cross-complaint, that the defendant made his application to purchase long after those of both the plaintiff and Benjamin. Conceding all that is claimed, as against the right of the plaintiff to purchase, it is neither alleged nor claimed that Benjamin's application, which stood in the way of the defendant's right to purchase, was not valid. If it was, the defendant's application gave him no vested right in the property as against the plaintiff or any one else. But, laying aside this impediment to his right to make application, he fails to show any right to purchase, or that any right could have vested in him by virtue of such application. The Code requires that in order to entitle a party to purchase he shall make affidavit to certain qualifications necessary to entitle him to become such purchaser. Pol. Code, § 3495. And it is held by this court that when he attempts to assert his right to the land, under an application to purchase the same, he must affirmatively allege and prove that he possesses the necessary qualifications. Burrell v. Haw, 40 Cal. 373; Christman v. Brainard, 51 Cal. 534; Wright v. Laugenour, 55 Cal. 280. If this is necessary in a contest between the parties, it must also be necessary where one of the parties has already procured the patent, as in this case. The cross-complaint does not allege these facts. It alleges that an application was made containing the facts, but this is not enough. It presents no issue as to the truth of the facts stated in the application, but only as to the fact of making it.

We do not regard the complaint as sufficiently alleging fraud. The only act averred is the purchase of Benjamin's interest in the property. If Benjamin's claim was valid, the defendant could not have been injured by its abandonment, as it stood directly in the way of his right to acquire the land. If invalid, its removal from the contest was unnecessary to the success of the plaintiff, and therefore the defendant could not be injured.

As to the claim that the judgment in plaintiff's favor in the contest was rendered without any evidence being given to support it, the judgment cannot be attacked for that reason in this collateral way. Burrell v. Haw, 48 Cal. 222. Again, conceding for the cross-complaint all that it is claimed for it, in other respects, the patent having issued, and being valid on its face, its validity could not be attacked by the defendant on any such ground. The right to set aside the patent rested in the state alone. People v. Stratton, 25 Cal. 242.

Other grounds might be stated in justification of the ruling of the court below, but it would extend this opinion unnecessarily. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: Beatty, C. J.; Paterson, J.

---

78 Cal. 517

Taylor v. Baldwin. (No. 11,639.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1889.)

Master and Servant—Injuries to Servant.

1. Plaintiff was employed as the superintendent of private gas-works owned by defendant, and operated only to supply his buildings. Plaintiff had sole charge and authority over the works, and no one else had power to direct their management. He had been employed by the contractor in their construction, and understood their arrangement; the defendant having no practical knowledge of the business. The works were well constructed. The gas ceasing to flow by an obstruction in the pipes, plaintiff, at the request of defendant's employé, undertook to remedy it. He was advised by the contractor (who had, however, ceased his connection with the works) to remove certain weights from the balance tub of the tank or receiver, in order to increase the pressure. He did so, knowing it to be dangerous, removing so much of the weight that the receiver overturned, causing an escape of gas, from which an explosion resulted, severely injuring plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff was not acting under the orders of his employer, but on his own responsibility, knowing the danger, and could not recover damages for his injuries.

2. The gravamen of the complaint being the stoppage of the pipe through defendant's alleged negligence, and the consequent resistance of the gas against the gasometer, whereby the explosion resulted, while the evidence shows that the resistance could not have produced the accident, and that the only effect the stoppage had was to cause the trial of the injudicious experiment of removing the weights, the complaint is not sustained, the stoppage not being a proximate cause of the injury.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. Sullivan, Judge.

Action by John H. Taylor against E. J. Baldwin, to recover for personal injuries alleged to result from defendant's negligence. Judgment for $1,500, and defendant appeals.

Lloyd & Wood, for appellant. Hall & Rodgers, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The defendant constructed gas-works in the city of San Francisco, and laid pipes therefrom to his hotel, theater, and market, to supply the same with gas. Everything worked well for a few weeks, but gradually the flow of gas decreased, and at the end of two months had almost entirely ceased. It was thought that the pressure was not sufficient, and plaintiff, who was superintendent of the works, acting upon the suggestions of others, was attempting to increase the pressure by taking the weights out of the buckets attached to the gasometer, when the latter tilted up on one side, allowing the gas confined within it to escape. The escaping gas, as soon as it reached the furnace, ignited, and, communicating with that in the gasometer, the whole exploded with great force and violence, throwing the plaintiff out of the building, and across the street, against the fence, burning his hands, face, neck, and other portions of his body in the most deplorable manner. Plaintiff seeks in this action to recover damages in the sum of $10,000 for the injuries sustained by him, alleging that in consequence of the explosion he was disabled from attending to any business for about nine weeks; that his hands and face have been permanently scarred and disfigured, the joints of his fingers permanently stiffened, and that his nerves have become permanently weakened in consequence of the shock. The gravamen of the complaint is that the defendant carelessly and negligently constructed and maintained the gas-works; that he negligently permitted a gunny sack to remain in one of the gas-pipes leading to the hotel, causing a stoppage of the flow of gas, and a consequent resistance against the gasometer, resulting in the explosion. It is also claimed in the complaint that the gasometer was not properly weighted, ballasted, or supported by timbers.

It is established by the evidence beyond all controversy that the accident was caused by taking the weights out of the bucket, thus removing the balance from the receiver, and permitting it to tip over. There is no evidence whatever to the contrary. One of the witnesses said: "The sack in the pipe would have no effect at all upon the holder. If you were to put a valve on the pipe, and shut the gas off absolutely, it would have no effect upon the holder. There is no such thing as a back pressure on the holder. * * * You cannot press anything back into the pipes and raise the holder. There is no back pressure to the gasometer, whether the pipe is stopped or whether it is open. It does not make any difference in the pressure of the gas. * * * If the outlet pipe is stopped, and the gas continues flowing into the receiver, it rises. * * * The fact that the gas receiver tipped up at the side where the outlet pipe is, was not the cause of any reaction from the outlet pipe. It is a matter of physical impossibility for the gas to come back through the outlet pipe." This evidence is nowhere contradicted. The evidence is equally conclusive in support of appellant's contention that the utmost care and caution was used by the defendant in the construction of the works. Nothing was spared to make them perfect in every respect. The defendant did not claim to know anything about the proper construction of the works, but it is undisputed that he employed the best mechanics and engineers and adopted the most approved methods.

The evidence does not show how the gunny sack came to be in the gas-pipe. The defendant claimed that it was put there by some enemy, maliciously to injure him. (There was great opposition to the construction of the works.) Plaintiff claimed that it was left there by the workmen who laid the pipe, it being the custom to stop up the open end of the pipe in the evening as the work progressed to prevent obstructions from entering it. But it is unnecessary to a determination of the rights of the parties here to inquire how it came in the pipe, it being clear, we think, that the stoppage of the pipe was not the proximate cause of the accident. A proximate cause must be one without which the accident would not have occurred, and, as shown by the uncontradicted evidence, the accident could not have occurred by the resistance of the gas upon the gasometer from the outlet pipe. The only sense in which it can be said the gunny sack caused the accident is that it led to the experiment which resulted in the accident. It simply led to a belief that a greater pressure was needed. If reasonable skill and care had been exercised in the attempt to secure a greater pressure, the accident would not have occurred, notwithstanding the presence in the pipe of the gunny sack.

But it is claimed by respondent that the plaintiff was merely obeying the orders of his superior in taking the weights out; that he (plaintiff) was acting under the directions of Condict, the engineer who built the works for defendant, and McAbee, to whom the defendant had referred the plaintiff, and who was Baldwin's representative; but there are two answers to this contention: (1) Plaintiff had sole charge and control of the works as superintendent,—no one had authority to order or direct him as to the manner of running the works; and (2) the plaintiff was fully aware of the danger attendant upon the removal of the weights from the balance tub.

The plaintiff was employed by Condict, the contractor, to assist in constructing the works and placing the machinery. He remained until the job was finished, and the works turned over to, and accepted by, Baldwin, in August, 1881, at which time Condict's connection with Baldwin ceased. Condict testified (and his testimony is not contradicted:) "I have nothing to do with Taylor or Mr. Baldwin after that. What I said to Mr. Taylor was a suggestion; it was merely advisory.

I had no power to discharge Mr. Taylor. I had nothing whatever to do with the works at the time. It was simply a matter of friendly advice. Because I put up the works, it was supposed I knew more about them. He was simply seeking information from me in relation to what suggestions I would make, and I made the suggestion to Mr. Taylor." The defendant testified that, after the works were turned over to him, Condict had nothing to do with them; that he never employed him after that, or authorized him to make any suggestions about the pressure on the gas. McAbee, according to plaintiff's own testimony, had authority simply to furnish him (plaintiff) anything which was "required to run the works." The evidence shows that McAbee was a general utility man about the hotel. He testified that all he had to do was simply to buy fuel and oil, or anything there was to buy when Mr. Taylor wanted it. He certainly had no power to hire or discharge the plaintiff. The plaintiff himself testified that he was turned over to Baldwin by Condict as superintendent to run the works. He testified: "I manufactured gas for Baldwin. I had sole charge of the building at the time, in the day-time only. I know how I was employed by Baldwin for that purpose. Mr. Condict turned me over to Mr. Baldwin when he turned the works over, as I understood, to run the works. * * * I never had any conversation about my qualities to take charge of the works. I knew Mr. Condict had turned the works over to him because he told me so, and he told me I was to continue on the same as I was, but in the employment of Mr. Baldwin, and in charge of the gas-works. * * * I continued as superintendent of the works regularly along down to the time of the explosion. I was not superintendent at night." The defendant testified that the plaintiff was turned over to him as a first-class man and engineer, capable of taking charge of the works, and that he paid him for that, and gave him full charge of the works during the day. He further testified that McAbee had no authority beyond the purchase of coal and oil and other materials whenever Mr. Taylor needed them as supplies for the gas-works.

That plaintiff was fully aware of the danger attendant upon the removal of the weights from the balance tub is apparent from his own testimony, wherein he says that he assisted in constructing the works, and that he took items as the works went up. He said: "I did not assist in putting in the tank or receiver. I saw the men putting the ropes on them, balancing them. It was balanced by the bucket or tub. The guys or ropes they put on ran through the pulleys under the cross-beams and attached to the tub. * * * I saw the men balancing it. They put the weights in the tub for the purpose of taking some of the pressure off the holder. The weights balanced the holder. * * * They put it up five or six sheets when it upset. * * * It could not tilt on either side when it was swung up by the guys. It could not swing either way when the guys were on it. If it did tilt, I would take up one of the guys. * * * I knew there was no supports around the holder, and that it was balanced by the guy-ropes. I knew it was balanced by the ropes and the weights in the tub. If the weights were taken out of the bucket or tub, the receiver would tip over. I had charge of them."

It is claimed by counsel for respondent that the witness, in making these statements, was speaking from information acquired after the accident occurred. It does not appear so from the language as printed in the transcript. On the contrary, it appears quite plain, we think, that the plaintiff was speaking of his knowledge of the workings of the gasometer and its attachments at the time the accident occurred; and we could not, without placing a strained construction upon the testimony, sustain the respondent in his contention. If we are right in our view of the evidence, the verdict of the jury is against the evidence, and contrary to the instructions of the court. As the case is presented to us, it appears that the plaintiff has no one to blame for the injuries he has sustained but himself. He took charge of the works knowing the dangers of the employment, and that the defendant relied upon his skill and knowledge in the business. He acted upon the suggestions of Condict and McAbee at his peril. They had no authority from the defendant to direct him in his work, and the defendant cannot be held responsible for the result of their conference with plaintiff.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.

---

78 Cal. 529

BRECKINRIDGE v. CROCKER. (No. 12,583.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1889.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—LANDS.

1. Defendant owned a tract of several hundred acres of land, on which a town was laid off. A map was made of the town, a portion of it containing 100 blocks, being specially designated on the map by a red line drawn round it. This map was not recorded, but a map of the 100 blocks was recorded, and portions of this smaller territory were sold, and the town built thereon, the tract outside of the red lines being used principally for farming. Plaintiff proposed to defendant's agent to buy the unsold property, whereupon the latter telegraphed to defendant that he was offered a certain sum for the "balance of the M. town property," on certain terms mentioned. Defendant replied, accepting the offer for the "M. property," and the agent telegraphed to plaintiff a copy of defendant's dispatch. Held that, it being impossible to determine from the telegrams just what property was intended to be included in the proposition and acceptance, plaintiff alleging that it referred to the unsold residue of the whole tract, while defendant insisted that it related only to the residue of the smaller tract, the contract was void under the statute of frauds.[1]

2. There being nothing in the telegrams showing by whom the offer was made, the contract was for that reason also incomplete and invalid.

Beatty, C. J., and Thornton, J., dissent.

In bank. Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; Charles H. Marks, Judge.

Action by J. W. Breckinridge against Charles Crocker for damages for breach of a contract to convey land. The plaintiff was nonsuited, and appeals.

D. M. Delmas, C. J. Swift, and J. K. Law, for appellant. P. D. Wiggington and L. D. McKisick, for respondent.

Belcher, C. C. This is an action to recover damages for the breach of an alleged contract to convey certain real property. In the court below a nonsuit was granted, and the appeal is from the judgment thereupon entered. It appears from the record that in 1871 the Contract & Finance Company, a corporation, was the owner of a tract of land in Merced county containing several hundred acres. On this tract a town was laid out called the town of "Merced," and a lithographic map of the town was made, showing the land to be divided into blocks and lots. On the map a red line was drawn around an oblong portion of the land, containing 100 blocks, and of this 100 blocks another map was made and recorded in the county recorder's office. The larger map was never recorded. Lots and blocks within the red line were sold from time to time, and on these lots has grown up the town of Merced. The land outside the red line has been used chiefly for farming purposes. In 1875 all of the property not then sold was conveyed to Charles Crocker, and he thereafter held the title for himself and as trustee for others. In 1883 the property was assessed to Crocker for $96,360. In due time he appeared by H. B. Underhill, his agent, before the county board of equalization, and asked to have the assessment reduced to $65,000. Underhill stated before the board that the property was not worth more than $65,000, and that Crocker had authorized him to offer it for sale at that sum to any one who desired to purchase it. This offer was heard by plaintiff, and after the adjournment of the board he informed Underhill that he would take the property at that figure if he could have time to make the payment. Underhill replied that his orders were to sell for cash. After some discussion plaintiff finally offered $70,000 for the property,—$5,000 payable the next Tuesday, and the balance in 30 days. It was then agreed that Underhill should telegraph Crocker for instructions, and upon receipt thereof should communicate with plaintiff by telegraph. Underhill thereupon sent to Crocker, at San Francisco, the following telegram: "July 19, 1883. Charles Crocker, San Francisco, Cal.: I am offered seventy thousand for balance of Merced town property,—five thousand on Tuesday next; balance in thirty days. This is according to your proposition. Telegraph me at Fresno your answer. H. B. Underhill." On the same day Crocker answered as follows: "San Francisco, July 19th. To H. B. Underhill: Accept the seventy thousand dollars offer for Merced property. Charles Crocker." On the next day Underhill sent to plaintiff the following telegram: "Fresno, July 20, 1883. J. W. Breckinridge: Mr. Crocker has telegraphed me as follows: Accept the seventy thousand dollars offered for the Merced town property. H. B. Underhill." On the Tuesday following plaintiff called at the office of Mr. Crocker, in San Francisco, and he relates what there transpired, as follows: "I walked into the office and spoke to Mr. Crocker, and told him that I had come down to make the first payment on this Merced property, and he replied: 'Go and see Judge Underhill about it. He is authorized to act for me in the matter;' and then I said, 'I suppose, Mr. Crocker, this is all a friendly business relation,—a business matter.' And he said, 'No; there has been a mistake. Judge Underhill will explain it. He will act for me in this matter;' and he directed me to Judge Underhill." Plaintiff then went away, but returned during the same afternoon with $5,000 in gold coin. When he returned, neither Mr. Crocker nor Judge Underhill was in the building, and plaintiff did not see either of them again that day. On the next day plaintiff went to Judge Underhill's office, and told him he had come to make the first payment on the contract for the Merced town property, and he thereupon tendered to him $5,000 in gold coin as and for such first payment. Underhill replied that he could not receive the money, and that he had been instructed by Mr. Crocker to decline any tender, on the grounds—First, that there was no contract; and, second, that the tender was not made in time. All negotiations then ceased, and thereafter plaintiff brought this action, claiming that he had a contract for the sale of all the land owned by Crocker, and represented on the larger map, and asked damages in the sum of $200,000.

---

[1] In general, as to what is a sufficient memorandum of an agreement relating to land to satisfy the statute of frauds, see Mellon v. Davison, (Pa.) 16 Atl. Rep. 431, and note; Johnston v. Jones, (Ala.) 4 South. Rep. 748, and note; Clampet v. Bells, (Minn.) 39 N. W. Rep. 495, and note.

The Code provides that "no agreement for the sale of real property, or of any interest therein, is valid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, or his agent thereunto authorized in writing." Civil Code, § 1741; and see Code Civil Proc. §§ 1971–1973. In order to take a contract for the sale of land out of the statute of frauds, it is not necessary that there be a formal contract, drawn up with technical exactness. A memorandum of the agreement is sufficient, and it may be found in one or more papers, some or all of which may be telegrams. But the memorandum must contain all the material elements of the contract; that is, it must show who is the seller, and who is the buyer, what the price is, and when it is to be paid, and must so describe the land that it can be identified. The law upon this subject is declared in Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 106, by Mr. Justice MILLER, as follows: "In an agreement of sale there can be no contract without both a vendor and vendee. There can be no purchaser without a seller. There must be a sufficient description of the thing sold, and of the price to be paid for it. It is therefore an essential element of a contract in writing that it shall contain within itself a description of the thing sold by which it can be known or identified, of the price to be paid for it, of the party who sells it, and the party who buys it." If the seller refuses to perform his contract, the buyer has two remedies,—he may bring an action for a specific performance of the contract, or for damages. In the latter case the rule as to the measure of damages is declared by the Civil Code as follows: "Sec. 3306. The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property is deemed to be the price paid and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon; but adding thereto, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed, at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land." But, to whatever form of action resort may be had, the burden is upon the plaintiff to show by the writings that a contract definite and certain in its terms was entered into between the parties, and, failing to do that, he must fail to obtain any relief.

In Association v. Phillips, 56 Cal. 546, it is said: "A court of equity will not specifically enforce any contract unless it be complete and certain. This rule applies as well to parties as to price, subject-matter, etc. Nor can the aid of a court of equity be had to specifically enforce that which is only the basis of an agreement, and not the agreement or contract itself." In Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal. 556, 12 Pac. Rep. 451, it is said that "the thing agreed to be done must be definite and certain in its terms and in itself, and the party who claims performance must make out by clear and satisfactory proof the existence of the contract as he alleges it." And see Burnett v. Kullak, 18 Pac. Rep. 401. In this case the only evidence of any contract between the parties is found in the three telegrams above quoted, and the question is, do they show such a contract as can be enforced by the courts? The court below thought they did not, and, in our opinion, its conclusions in this respect were warranted, and must be sustained, for two reasons.

1. It cannot be ascertained from the telegrams who the buyer was. There was an offer of $70,000, but by whom was it made? The third telegram was sent to the plaintiff, but that fact comes far short of indicating with definiteness and certainty that he was the man. It might have been sent for the information of some one else. Looking at all the papers, the answer to the question can rest only in conjecture, and that is not sufficient.

2. "A contract is an agreement to do or not to do a certain thing," (Civil Code, § 1549,) and, in order to constitute a valid contract, the minds of the contracting parties must meet, and agree to the same thing. "It is essential to the validity of a contract that the parties should have consented to the same subject-matter, in the same sense. They must have contracted ad idem." Utley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S. 48. "Where there is a misunderstanding as to the terms of a contract, neither party is liable in law or equity. Where a contract is a unit, and left uncertain in one particular, the whole will be regarded as only inchoate, because the parties have not been ad idem, and therefore neither is bound. A proposal to accept, or acceptance upon terms varying from those offered, is a rejection of the offer." Bank v. Hall, 101 U. S. 49. What was the subject-matter of the supposed contract here? The offer was for "balance of Merced town property," and the acceptance was of the "offer for Merced property." Mr. Crocker was in San Francisco, and had no knowledge of what had been said or done before the board of equalization at Merced. There were therefore no surrounding circumstances to be shown by parol. There were two maps of property at Merced. The large and unrecorded one was headed, "Town of Merced." The small one of 100 blocks was headed, "Official Map, Town of Merced, Merced County, Cal." A witness who had been county assessor since 1880 was called, and, pointing to the blocks surrounded by a red line on the large map, said: "Those I understood to constitute the official recorded plat of the town of Merced." Another witness, who was the county recorder, looking at the same map, said: "The portion delineated by the red line is the recorded map of the town of Merced. The map within the red lines is the only map recorded,—the only map of record in my office." It was also proved at the time the offer was made the value of the land owned by Mr. Crocker within the red lines was greater than the sum offered, and that the value of the land owned by him outside of the red lines was more than twice the sum offered. Now, in view of all these facts, what did Mr. Crocker understand the words "balance of Merced town property" to mean, and what did he intend to sell? If he understood the words to mean the balance of unsold property as shown by the recorded map, then it is clear that the minds of the parties never met; for the plaintiff claims that his offer and Mr. Crocker's acceptance was for the whole property as shown on the large map. It looks to us as if there might have been, and probably was, a misunderstanding as to what was the subject-matter of the proposed purchase and sale. Certainly the contract was left uncertain in this particular, and, being so, must be regarded as only inchoate. We, therefore, advise that the judgment be affirmed.

I concur: HAYNE, C.

FOOTE, C., took no part herein.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The three telegrams undoubtedly constitute a sufficient note or memorandum to satisfy the policy and letter of the statute of frauds; if taken together, they contain the necessary elements of a contract of sale. It is said that they do not designate the purchaser, or define the subject-matter of the sale. But I think there is abundant authority for holding that the communication of Crocker's acceptance of the $70,000 offer to Breckinbridge is sufficient to designate him as the purchaser, and, as to the subject-matter, that is clearly defined to be the balance of Merced town property, i. e., Crocker's remaining interest in the town of Merced. Whether there was any well-known and clearly defined tract of land answering to those terms of description was a question depending, as in all cases it must more or less depend, on evidence aliunde. The evidence introduced on the part of the plaintiff in this case certainly tended to show that there was a well-defined tract of land known as the "Town of Merced." It is true that there was some testimony tending to show that the name was applied to two different surveys,—a smaller one, and a larger one including the smaller. But this was not ground for a nonsuit, which is proper only where there is a total failure of proof on some material issue. The most that can be said is that there was a conflict of testimony as to whether "Town of Merced" was the name of one or two well-defined tracts of land. If the case had been tried by a jury instead of the court, it will scarcely be contended that under such circumstances a nonsuit would have been proper. It may be urged, however, that the decision of the whole matter resting with the court, the order sustaining the motion for nonsuit was the same thing in substance as a finding against the plaintiff upon one or more material issues, and that there is evidence to sustain such finding on the point under discussion. But the trouble with this position is that there are no findings, and we cannot know that the decision of the superior court was or would have been against the plaintiff on this point. We are asked to sustain, upon conflicting evidence, a finding that has not been made and must be implied. To do so is, in my opinion, to initiate a practice fraught with all the mischiefs which the statutory requirement of specific findings was designed to prevent. I think the judgment should be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

THORNTON, J I concur in the above opinion of BEATTY, C. J.

78 Cal. 483

In re SHARP'S ESTATE. (No. 12,532.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1889.)

HOMESTEADS—CONSTRUCTION OF ACTS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1465, authorizing a homestead to be set apart for the surviving wife of a deceased husband out of their common property, if any, and, if not, out of the separate property of the latter, premises suitable and proper for a homestead may be so designated, though they were not, at the husband's death, or at any time afterwards, used for a dwelling, but were used in part for a store, an office, and for storage purposes.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Upon the petition of Honora Sharp, widow of George F. Sharp, deceased, a homestead was assigned to her from the estate of her husband. John Hunt, executor of said Sharp's last will, appealed. Code Civil Proc. Cal. provides that a homestead shall be set apart to the surviving husband or wife from the common property, if any, and, if not, from the separate estate of the deceased wife or husband.

Matt. I. Sullivan, for appellant. Hall & Rodgers, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Appeal from an order setting aside a homestead to a widow, under section 1465, Code Civil Proc. The third specification made on the part of the appellant, why the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision and order, is that "the evidence fails to show that said premises so set aside as a homestead are now, or ever were, or can be, used as a dwelling-place." Conceding, without deciding, that the bill of exceptions contains any evidence upon the point involved, which it is permissible that the appellate court should consider on this appeal, nevertheless it is apparent that such evidence is insufficient to demand a reversal of the order.

Let it be admitted that the evidence shows the premises were not used as a dwelling-place at the time the homestead was set apart, and that they were used at the time of the death of the husband of the widow, and ever since had been used, as a store, in part as an office, and in part for storage purposes, and yet it may be that the premises were, as found by the court below, "suitable and proper for a homestead." If the premises, as we must presume them to have been, (there being no evidence to contradict the finding,) were suitable and proper for a homestead, they were properly set apart to the widow. In Re Bowman, 69 Cal. 245, 10 Pac. Rep. 412, which was a case where an insolvent had a homestead set apart to him, under the provisions of section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appellate court said: "The appellant contends that the court below erred in so doing, because the premises set apart to the insolvent never constituted his residence. The statute regulating this matter does not require that they should ever have constituted the residence. The finding of the court is that the property set apart is suitable and proper for a homestead, and that was a sufficient basis for the order setting it apart." It would seem, therefore, that a homestead, such as the one here set apart, "may be carved out of any property left by the decedent which is capable of being made a homestead." In re Bowman, supra, citing Estate of Busse, 35 Cal. 310. We do not understand the case of In re Noah, 73 Cal. 590, 15 Pac. Rep. 290, (in which the opinion was written by the learned judge who concurred in what was said in Re Bowman, supra,) to be in conflict with what is here said. It was there decided that premises could be set apart as a homestead if there was a house or "edifice" thereon "which could be used as a dwelling-house," even if not occupied as such at the time the order setting it apart was made. It is there said, also, that it must be property "which could have been selected as a homestead during the continuance of the marriage." But there is nothing in this record to show but what the premises here involved could have been selected as a homestead during the marriage, and could have been used as a dwelling-house. The appellant has abandoned all other contentions, except the one discussed above. We advise that the order be affirmed.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

HAYNE, C., took no part in the decision.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 543

SOUTER v. MAGUIRE et al. (No. 12,646.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1889.)

MINES AND MINING—QUIETING TITLE.

1. In an action to quiet title to a mining claim it is sufficient for plaintiff to allege that he is "the owner" in terms, without setting out the facts showing him to be such.

2. A finding that plaintiff's claim is valid disposes of an affirmative defense setting up the elements of defendant's claim, as a subsequent location would be invalid, no matter how correct in form the proceedings.

3. The fact that a notice of location is not recorded is immaterial, in the absence of evidence of a local rule or custom requiring it.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county; AARON BELL, Judge.

Action by John Souter against William W. Maguire and W. B. Espey, to recover possession of a quartz mining claim, with damages, and to restrain defendants from interfering with it. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

James E. Isaacs and J. Chadbourne, for appellants. Clay W. Taylor and Edward Sweeny, (McKune & George, of counsel,) for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to quiet title to a mining claim, and for an injunction. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. The appellants make a number of points in regard to the pleadings and findings, which are based upon the idea that it is not sufficient in cases of this character for the plaintiff to allege that he is "the owner" of the property, but that he must set out the facts showing him to be such. But ever since the case of Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 242, it has been held that the ownership is the ultimate fact, and that, as a general rule, it is sufficient to allege it in terms. Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 217; Ferrer v. Insurance Co., 47 Cal. 431; Miller v. Brigham, 50 Cal. 615. And this is true in actions to quiet title to mining claims. Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 534, 14 Pac. Rep. 182. The findings are more specific than the complaint. They set forth a number of secondary facts, from which it necessarily follows that the plaintiff's allegation as to ownership is true. It is well settled that this is proper. Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 555; Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 601, 14 Pac. Rep. 379. The appellants object that the findings do not dispose of certain issues raised by the pleadings. But the issue as to abandonment is sufficiently disposed of by the finding that when the claim was located the plaintiff "took possession of said claim, and constantly and continuously maintained such possession, and performed annually thereon the assessment work and labor required by law, to-wit, $100 per annum for each and every year down to and including the time of the commencement of this action." The affirmative defense, setting up the elements of the defendant's claim, is disposed of by the findings showing that the plaintiff's claim was valid; for if the plaintiff's claim was valid, a subsequent location by another, no matter how correct in form the proceedings may be, is invalid. Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 284. And the issue as to damages is immaterial, because the judgment did not give plaintiff any damages. The pleadings and findings seem to us to be sufficient. The appellants contend, however, that the findings are not supported by the evidence. It is expressly admitted that it must be held that the plaintiff performed the required amount of work. The respects in which it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient are the following: (1) It is said that there is no evidence that the plaintiff discovered a vein or lode; but we think there was sufficient evidence on this point. (2) It is contended that the plaintiff never put up a notice of location; but we think that the evidence shows that he did. The fact that the notice was not recorded is immaterial, there being no evidence of a local rule or custom requiring it to be recorded. Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 533, 14 Pac. Rep. 182. (3) It is urged that there was no evidence that the plaintiff marked off the location on the ground so that its boundaries could readily be traced; but the court finds that he did. And there is evidence that he marked the corners of the end lines, and placed a stake or blazed a tree at each corner of the claim, and in places "brushed out" the lines, so that a person could get through, and placed a notice in the center of the claim, defining its boundaries. This was sufficient under the circumstances. Cross Co. v. Europa Co., 15 Nev. 384; Du Prat v. James, 65 Cal. 558, 4 Pac. Rep. 562; Noonday Co. v. Orient Co., 6 Sawy. 310, 311, 1 Fed. Rep. 522. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 540

JEPSEN v. BECK. (No. 11,904.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1889.)

PARTNERSHIP—RIGHTS AND REMEDIES INTER SE.

1. Where, after the dissolution of a partnership, all its available assets were collected and applied to the payment of its debts, and plaintiff, one of the members, paid the balance of the indebtedness of the firm, he could maintain an action against the other member of the firm to charge him with his share of the indebtedness so paid, although no balance had been struck between them.

2. Evidence of what an agent of the plaintiff said to the wife of his copartner, on being sent to have the latter sign a notice of dissolution, was inadmissible to contradict the plaintiff.

Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; J K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Action by J. Jepsen against George P. Beck. The parties had been copartners, and the exclusion of evidence of what Johnson, an agent of the plaintiff, had said to the wife of the defendant, on being sent to have the latter sign a notice of dissolution, was assigned as error. Judgment was given for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

R. M. F. Soto, (Herrman & Soto, of counsel,) for appellant. S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. From the 1st day of June, 1883, to the 26th day January, 1885, plaintiff and defendant were partners doing business at Salinas city, under the firm name of Jepsen & Beck. On the last-mentioned date said partnership was dissolved by mutual consent, and an accounting had between the parties of all their partnership dealings and transactions, and it was agreed between them that all the debts owing by the partnership should be equally paid by them, and that all moneys owing to the partnership should be paid to and collected by the plaintiff, and by him be applied to the payment of the debts of the partnership. The partnership at that time owed $1,848.73, and there was owing to it $1,027.97. Of the amount due the firm plaintiff collected $664.51, and the residue of the debts owing to the firm is worthless, and of no value whatever. Plaintiff has paid all the indebtedness of said firm, which is $1,154.27 more than the sum realized from the debts owing to the firm. Plaintiff claims that one-half of such excess should be paid by defendant, who refuses to pay it, although requested so to do. Wherefore plaintiff brings this action, and demands judgment for the sum of $546.84, together with interest thereon from the 26th day of March, 1885. The defendant demurred to the complaint, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant interposed a general denial of all the allegations of the complaint. The issues were tried by a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount claimed in his complaint. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and from the judgment and said order this appeal is taken.

Appellant's contention here is that the court erred in overruling the demurrer and in denying a motion for a new trial. The objection urged against the complaint is that it does not show a complete settlement and accounting, and a balance struck between the parties. We think it does show a complete settlement and accounting, but does not show a balance struck between the parties. The rule is well settled that one partner cannot maintain an action against another, to recover an amount claimed by him by reason of partnership transactions, until there has been a final settlement of the affairs of the concern by discharging its liabilities, collecting its assets, and definitely ascertaining the surplus to a share of which he is entitled. Bates, Partn. 849. The reasons for this rule have been variously stated, but this case, as we view it, is not within any of them. The complaint shows that there are no outstanding demands against the partnership, and no outstanding debts to be collected, or that can be collected, so that the judgment to be rendered will be a final settlement between the partners. Under our system of procedure the defendant might have had in this action, had he desired, a discovery and accounting, which certainly obviates the principal objection to the maintenance of such an action in a case like this. The demurrer was properly overruled.

The evidence introduced by the plaintiff tended to prove all the material allegations of the complaint, and, although that of the defendant tended to disprove some of them, we cannot disturb the order denying the motion for a new trial, on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. The objection to the question put to Mrs. Beck by defendant's attorney for the purpose of contradicting Jepsen, the plaintiff, as stated by said attorney, was properly sustained. Evidence of what Johnson told her was inadmissible for that purpose. Our conclusion is that the judgment and order should be affirmed. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

78 Cal. 486

SESLER v. MONTGOMERY. (No. 11,359.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1889.)

SLANDER—PUBLICATION—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Words spoken by a husband to a wife, not in the presence of any other person, do not constitute a publication within the meaning of the law of slander.

In bank. On rehearing. For former opinion, see 19 Pac. Rep. 686.

Estee, Wilson & McCutchen, J. C. Martin, and W. F. Goad, for appellant. W. W. Allen, A. R. Cotton, and W. H. H. Hart, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Action for slander. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The evidence shows that the alleged slanderous words were spoken (if at all) in the house of the defendant in a conversation addressed exclusively to his wife; and the question to be determined is this: Did the speaking of the words, under these circumstances, to his wife alone, constitute a "publication" within the meaning of that word as used in the definition of slander? (The plaintiff was eavesdropping, and claims to have heard the alleged slanderous words from a point outside of the door of the room in which defendant and his wife were talking.)

The Codes of this state provide how marriages may be entered into and how divorces may be obtained, and they also have certain provisions, different from the rules of the common law, about the property of the spouses, and, to a limited extent, about their power to make contracts, etc. But in the Codes there is no attempt made to change the essential nature of marriage, or to state its manifold incidents and consequences, or to establish new rules for the solution of the various questions which arise out of those incidents and consequences. Moreover, although the Codes define slander as a "false and unprivileged publication" of certain matters, they do not declare what shall constitute "publication." For the determination of these questions, therefore,—as there are no provisions about them in the Codes,—we must look to the common law, which is the basis of our jurisprudence. Pol. Code, § 4468; Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 312. It is admitted to be the settled rule that there can be no publication within the meaning of the law of slander unless the words alleged to be slanderous are spoken to, and in the presence of, a third person; that is, a person other than the one who speaks and the one to whom the words are spoken. A man entirely alone cannot commit slander by talking aloud to himself. And the final question to be solved is whether a wife, when spoken to by her husband in the privacy of home, and not in the presence of others, is a "third person" within the meaning of the law under review, or whether, under those circumstances, there should be applied the doctrine that the husband and wife are, civilly, one person. There is no doubt of the general common-law rule that the civil existence of the wife is merged in that of her husband. Blackstone says that "by marriage the husband and wife are one person in law," and that "the legal existence of the woman is suspended during the marriage, or, at least, is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband." Volume 1, p. 442. Upon this principle of the legal union of husbands and wives most of their rights, duties, and disabilities depended. They could not be witnesses for or against each other because of the maxims, nemo in propria causa testis esse debet, and nemo tenetur se ipsum accusare. And upon this ground it has been always held that no prosecution for conspiracy can be maintained against a husband and wife only; because the crime of conspiracy cannot be committed by one person alone, and a husband and wife are but one person in law. Hawk. P. C. p. 448, § 8; 2 Russ. Crimes, 690; People v. Richards, 67 Cal. 412, 7 Pac. Rep. 828. It is said that this rule was a legal fiction, and that in the course of modern legislation and judicial decisions it has been exploded. But it is no more a fiction than any other general principle of law, and we have seen no authentic account of the explosion. There always were some exceptions to the rule, from the earliest history of the common law, and modern legislation and decision have merely created additional exceptions. The general rule still obtains, save where an exception has been legally established, and we have been referred to no decision establishing an exception as to the point involved in the case at bar. Indeed, the only case in point cited at all is from an inferior court of New York, (Trumbull v. Gibbons, 3 City H. Rec. 97,) in which it was directly held that the delivery of a defamatory manuscript by a husband to a wife was not a publication. And every sound consideration of public policy, every just regard for the integrity and inviolability of the marriage relation,—the most confidential relation known to the law,—should restrain a court from establishing the exception upon which the judgment in the case at bar rests. When husbands and wives talk to each other alone, the conversation differs but little from the process of talking to one's self, or, as it is sometimes called, "thinking aloud." There is no intention that the conversation shall be repeated to others, and no presumption that it will be. It would be strange, indeed, if a husband or wife could not safely say anything to the other about their neighbors or acquaintances which he or she would not feel warranted in saying to the world. Such a rule would destroy all opportunity for confidential conference, advice, or suggestion. To a curious person asking what had occurred between a husband and wife in the seclusion of their home, the appropriate answer would be, id est nullum tui negotii. It has been held in another state that there was a sufficient publication of a libel where a letter was sent to a wife containing defamatory matter about her husband; and it is argued that the court making the decision must have held the wife to be a third person. Scheneck v. Scheneck, 20 N. J. Law, 208. Whether or not that decision was a correct exposition of the law, it is clear, at least, that another principle was involved. As the court say in that case: "Such a communication, made directly to the wife, is an attempt to poison the fountain of domestic peace, conjugal affection, and filial obligation at their very sources." There the exception which was allowed to the general rule was in support of the confidential relation of marriage, while in the case at bar the exception sought to be established would be destructive of that relation. Our conclusion is that a communication from a husband to a wife, not in the presence of any other person, does not constitute a publication within the meaning of the law of slander. It follows from this conclusion that the judgment in the case at bar was erroneous. Judgment and order appealed from reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J

78 Cal. 546

DURFEE v. GARVEY. (No. 12,771.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1889.)

EASEMENTS—DRAINAGE—SERVIENT ESTATE.

The easement of a ditch for drainage purposes over the pasture land of another does not impose upon the owner of the servient estate any liability for damage done to the ditch by his cattle in crossing over it, and in caving in its sides while feeding near it. The burden of keeping the ditch clear rests upon the owner of the easement.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Action of trespass brought by James D. Durfee against Richard Garvey. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Smith & Clark and Shaw & Damron, for appellant. Bicknell & White and Barclay, Wilson & Redick, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff and defendant are owners of adjacent tracts of land in Los Angeles county, the defendant's land lying to the south-west of the plaintiff's. Plaintiff's land is nearly level, and a large portion of it is swampy and unfit for cultivation without artificial drainage. It has a slight inclination towards the south-west, and commencing on defendant's land about six or seven hundred yards from plaintiff's line is a well-defined channel, called the "Arroyo Honda," which leads off to the south-west. From plaintiff's line to this arroyo was a slight depression, through which, about the year 1870, the then owner of a part of plaintiff's land, with the consent of the then owner of defendant's land, constructed a ditch some three feet deep and three feet wide at the top. Leading to this ditch other ditches were constructed around and through plaintiff's land, and when all of these ditches were clear and unobstructed the land was drained, so that it could be cultivated, and good crops raised upon it. Grasses and weeds grew up quickly in the ditch leading to the arroyo, and up to 1882 plaintiff was accustomed to clean out this ditch at least twice every year, no one objecting to his doing so. Prior to 1882, a part of defendant's land was cultivated, but in that year he ceased to cultivate it, and has since used it only for pasturing stock. He has kept on it horses, mules, and cattle, and these animals, by feeding along the ditch, and frequently passing over it, have broken in its sides, and have thereby filled it up and obstructed the flow of water through it. This obstruction interfered with the drainage of plaintiff's land, and prevented his cultivating 20 to 25 acres of it on which he could otherwise have raised good crops. In 1885, and again in 1886, defendant's cattle broke into plaintiff's inclosure and damaged his growing crops.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the alleged wrongs above recited, and in the first count of his complaint he asked damages in the sum of $400, and in the second in the sum of $600. Under the instructions of the court, the jury found that the plaintiff was damaged by the obstruction of his drainage in the sum of $150, and by the trespasses of defendant's cattle in the sum of $210, and for these aggregate sums judgment was entered. The defendant moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion.

1. The theory of plaintiff, developed at the trial, in reference to his first cause of action, was that he had acquired a prescriptive right to the use of the ditch leading from his lower line to the arroyo, and that defendant had no right to make any use of his land which would cause an obstruction of the ditch, and that if he did so he must keep it cleared out, or be liable for any damages caused by the obstruction. On the other hand, the theory of defendant was that plaintiff had acquired no prescriptive right to the use of the ditch, and that, if he had, defendant had a right to use his land for any legitimate and ordinary purpose, and if, while so using it, the ditch was injured or obstructed the burden was upon the plaintiff to remove the obstructions and keep it in repair. In accordance with plaintiff's theory, and at his request, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that there was no natural channel over the lands of the defendant, or the lands occupied by him, at the place alleged in the complaint, except on the southwesterly side of the lower Garvey tract, but believe from the evidence that there was a natural depression there through which the plaintiff constructed a ditch for the purpose of carrying off the water from his own land, and did carry off said water through the same into a natural channel on defendant's land, and has used the same for such purpose openly, peaceably, continuously, notoriously, uninterruptedly, and adversely to the defendant and his predecessors for more than five years before the commencement of this action, and before the obstructions alleged in said complaint, you are instructed that the plaintiff thereby acquired a right to the use of such ditch, and the defendant is liable for any damages sustained by the plaintiff for the obstruction by defendant, or stock under his control, of said water-way." And the court refused to give to the jury the following instruction asked by defendant: "Even where one has, by adverse use, acquired a right to use a ditch over the land of another to carry water off of his own land he is bound to keep such ditch in repair himself. He has no right to call upon the land-owner to make any repairs unless such repairs are made necessary through the negligence of the land-owner. It is not negligence for the land-owner to use his land in the same manner and for the same purposes as similar land in the same vicinity is ordinarily used for, and for which it is naturally fitted. Any repairs made necessary by such ordinary use must be made by the ditch-owner, and not by the land-owner, and the land-owner is not liable for any damages caused by such ordinary use."

The question then presented for decision on this branch of the case, conceding that plaintiff had acquired an irrevocable right to have his ditch maintained over defendant's land, is, to what extent does that right interfere with and limit defendant's right to use his land? Must defendant, if he would use his land for the pasturage of stock, fence in the ditch, or cover it over so that the stock cannot tread down its sides? And, if he so uses it, is the burden cast upon him to keep the ditch clear and unobstructed, so that water will continuously flow through it? It must be admitted that the use of land for pasturage is a common and legitimate use of it, and there is no pretense that defendant did not exercise ordinary care over his stock. Plaintiff was a witness for himself, and testified: "I suppose that Garvey pastures the cattle in that field as people ordinarily pasture their cattle. He has a portion of the field fenced to the south-west, and I suppose he turns his cattle in there and lets them stay there, confined by the fence. I can't say that he has a herder; he has a man there to look after them; I don't know that he herds them. In order to keep the cattle from getting into that ditch he would have to protect it by fence, or build bridges across the ditch where those cattle go from one side to the other. Building bridges would prevent them from tramping the ditch to a great extent. The cattle feed along and up and down the ditch and cave it in. The soil is very soft, but the most serious damage is done in places where they cross. He would have to fence the ditch, or make a blind ditch, the same as I do, (cover it over,) in order to protect it from the cattle." Now, if the plaintiff's theory be correct, the defendant cannot use his land as a pasture, though that may be the best and perhaps only profitable use he can make of it, unless he employs men to patrol the ditch and keep the cattle away from it, or goes to the expense of fencing it in or covering it with bridges. It does not seem to us that the plaintiff's easement on the land can impose any such burden as that on the defendant. The general rule is that any man may use his own land in his own way, provided he does not use it negligently, so as to injure his neighbor; and the rule is, also, that, where one man has an easement over the land of another, the duty of keeping the easement in repair rests upon its owner, and when repairs are necessary he may enter on the servient tenement to make them. God. Easem. 285; Gale & W. Easem. 215; Prescott v. Williams, 5 Metc. 435. It does not appear that plaintiff was ever denied the privilege of making any repairs upon his ditch, and it would be going to an extreme and unwarranted length, as it seems to us, to hold that in a case like this defendant is made liable. In our opinion the court erred in giving the instruction above quoted for plaintiff and in refusing to give, without modification, that asked by defendant.

2. As to the second cause of action we see no error in the rulings of the court. There was testimony to sustain the verdict, and the judgment to the extent of $210 was proper. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, unless the plaintiff shall, within 30 days after the going down of the remittitur, file in the court below a release of $150, and his costs in that court, and if he does file such release that the judgment and order stand affirmed.

We concur: Foote, C.; Hayne, C.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, unless the plaintiff shall, within 30 days after the going down of the remittitur, file in the court below a release of $150, and his costs in that court, and if he does file such release that the judgment and order stand affirmed.

(78 Cal. 571)

STINSON v. CARPENTER. (No. 11,989.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 17, 1889.)

COSTS—FILING OF BOND.

Where, in an action for slander, no undertaking for costs is filed before the issuance of the summons, as required by act Cal. March 23, 1872, but a few days afterwards such an undertaking is filed, it is error to dismiss the complaint upon an objection being made, months after the filing of the undertaking, that it was not filed in time.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; Rodney J. Hudson, Judge.

E. W. Britt, for appellant. R. W. Crump, for respondent.

McFarland, J. This is an action to recover damages for alleged slander. The action was commenced August 27, 1886. No undertaking for costs was filed by plaintiff before the issuance of the summons, as provided in the act of March 23, 1872, (St. 1871–72, p. 533, § 1,) but four days later, on August 31, 1886, such a bond, in due form, was filed. Defendant appeared and demurred to the complaint. He afterwards withdrew the demurrer, and filed an answer. He once obtained a postponement of the trial on account of the illness of his counsel, and he consented that the trial be set for October 20, 1886. On October 20th, when a jury was in attendance for the trial of the case, defendant objected, for the first time, that an undertaking had not been filed in time, and moved to dismiss the action because the undertaking was not filed "for several days after filing the complaint and issuance and service of summons." Upon this ground the court granted the motion to dismiss the action, and entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Passing the question whether defendant had not waived any rights which he might have had in the premises, we think that the main question has been settled against him by this court in Dixon v. Allen, 69 Cal. 527, 11 Pac. Rep. 179. In that case the court, referring to the failure to file an undertaking at the commencement of the action in a case of libel or slander, say: "The statute (Acts 1871–72, p. 533, § 1) does not deprive the superior court of jurisdiction in case the undertaking is not filed. The object of the statute is accomplished if, when the objection is made, the undertaking is executed, and the defendant thus secured the costs and charges which may be awarded to him." In that case no undertaking was on file when the motion to dismiss was made; and the court held that it was proper to allow an undertaking to be then filed. In the case at bar an undertaking had been filed months before the objection was made. We think, therefore, that the court below erred in dismissing the action. This view of the case makes it unnecessary to examine the question whether the $100 counsel fee allowed by the statute to the prevailing party in a libel or slander suit should be put into the verified cost bill. Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to deny the motion to dismiss the action.

We concur. Thornton, J.; Sharpstein, J.

(78 Cal. 552)

UPPER SAN JOAQUIN CANAL CO. v ROACH. (No. 11,708.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 16, 1889.)

FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—RELEASE AND DISCHARGE.

1. In an action on a note given by the defendant to the plaintiff, a canal company, for some of its stock, alleged misrepresentations made by the plaintiff with regard to the amount of money required for the completion of the canal are not available to the defendant, where he has not elected to rescind the contract for the sale of stock, and has not set up any counter-claim for damages on account of such misrepresentations.

2. In such case, a resolution passed by the plaintiff's board of directors that they regarded the note as worthless, and that they would not take any proceedings to collect it, was held not to operate as a release of the obligation, because there was no consideration for it, and because it did not purport to be a release, within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 1541, which provides that an obligation is extinguished by a release thereof given to the debtor by the creditor in writing, with or without a new consideration.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John F. Finn, Judge.

Chas. J. Swift and Wright & McCormack, for appellant. Page & Eells, for respondent.

Hayne, C. Action upon a promissory note. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The material facts are as follows: The plaintiff, being in need of money to complete its canal, sent its president to New York to sell some of its stock. He sold some stock to the defendant's intestate, and took the note sued on in payment. It is claimed that at the time of the sale the president represented to the vendee that the canal could be completed for $50,000, when, as a matter of fact, more than $300,000 was required to complete it. The evidence shows that some sort of representation was made to the vendee. The president (whose testimony is relied on by the defendant to make out his case) so states. But he says in one place: "I expressed to him that in my opinion it would not cost over $50,000. I did not bind myself that it would not, and it was with the understanding that it would not cost $50,000 that he went into the enterprise." In another place he says: "We said it would cost probably less than $50,000." The representation was made in perfect good faith. Everybody supposed at that time that the canal could be completed for the sum mentioned. The increased cost resulted from unforeseen difficulties, arising from the nature of the soil. The position is that there was a misrepresentation as to a material matter. But if it be assumed in favor of the defendant, for the purposes of this opinion only, that there was such a misrepresentation as entitled the vendee to some relief, such relief could consist only in damages for the misrepresentation, or in the rescission of the contract. No question as to such damages arises in the case, because no counter-claim was set up. We do not intend by this to say that the relief could be had by way of counter-claim. It is sufficient for present purposes that nothing of the kind was attempted. And the vendee did not elect to rescind. He kept the stock after being informed of the true state of the case, and after it was sold for assessments his administrator brought an action to recover its value from the company, which action was pending at the time of the trial herein. It is perfectly clear that a misrepresentation does not enable the vendee to keep the thing sold, and avoid paying what he agreed to pay for it. If he wishes to avoid paying, he must rescind the contract, and return the property (if it have any value) within a reasonable time after becoming aware of the truth. Gifford v. Carvill, 29 Cal. 589; Fitz v. Bynum, 55 Cal. 459. It is contended, in the next place, that the plaintiff gave to the defendant a release of the obligation. What is claimed to constitute a release consists in the following: At a meeting of the plaintiff's board of directors the following resolution was passed, viz.: "Resolved, that in the opinion of this board the note of William Schley is worthless, and that no proceeding to collect the same by law shall be commenced or authorized by this company against the said Schley, and that he be notified of this action by the board." Upon the passage of this resolution, the secretary of the company sent the following telegram to Schley: "We got possession of the board yesterday, and passed resolution that no proceedings should be taken against you on your note. All trouble originated from Perrin refusing to betray you. Party leaves this week to look at Alta, Holland, and Pool mines. [Signed] B. B. MINOR." The argument is that the foregoing amounts to an agreement not to sue, and that an agreement not to sue operates as a release; but, assuming in favor of the defendant that the resolution is not the mere expression of the company's intention, but contains words of promise or obligation, it cannot operate as an agreement not to sue, because there was no consideration for it. The want of consideration is not obviated by section 1541 of the Civil Code. That section provides that "an obligation is extinguished by a release therefrom given to the debtor by the creditor, upon a new consideration, or in writing, with or without new consideration." We think that this provision applies to express releases, given with intent to extinguish the obligation, and not to things which might have that result in a roundabout way. In dispensing with a consideration, the legislature dispensed with the substance of the transaction, and we do not think it ought to be assumed, in the absence of language to that effect, that the intention was to dispense with both form and substance. The resolution, therefore, cannot operate as a release within the meaning of the section, because it does not purport to be a release, and, as above stated, it cannot operate as a covenant not to sue, because there was no consideration. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 573

WASHBURN v. HUNTINGTON et al. (No. 12,666.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 17, 1889.)

INSOLVENCY—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE.

1. The California insolvent act of 1880, § 55, which provides that if a transfer of property by a debtor is not made in the usual course of business it shall be prima facie evidence of fraud, means fraud on the provisions of the insolvent act; and where a debtor transfers property out of the usual and ordinary course of business it is prima facie evidence that the transferee had reasonable cause to believe that the transfer was made by the debtor with a view to prevent his property from coming to his assignee in insolvency, and to prevent it from being distributed ratably among his creditors.

2. In an action brought under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 667, providing that in an action brought to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession of the property, or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had, an omission to find whether or not plaintiff is entitled to recover the property sued for, and a judgment simply awarding the plaintiff the value of the property, constitute cause for reversal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; JOHN W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

Albert M. Johnson, for appellants. W. J. Herrin, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This action is brought by the plaintiff, as assignee in insolvency of one Jones, to recover certain book-accounts transferred by Jones to the defendants on the 27th of July, 1886. The transfer was made by orders drawn by Jones on his debtors in favor of defendants. Within less than one month after the transfer, viz., on the 23d day of August, 1886, Jones filed his petition in insolvency, and on the same day was declared an insolvent. The ground on which a recovery in the action was urged is that the defendants, when they received and accepted the transfer above mentioned, had reasonable cause to believe that the transferrer was insolvent, and that such transfer was made with a view to prevent the property of the transferrer from coming to his assignee in insolvency, or from being distributed ratably among the creditors of the transferrer, and to defeat the object of, and hinder, impede, and delay the operation and to evade the provisions of, the act of insolvency of April 18, 1880, by preventing the property of the assignor from being subjected to the payment of the debts of the transferrer other than the debt due to the defendants.

It is urged that the evidence is insufficient to show that Jones was insolvent on the 27th of July, 1886. We do not think this contention maintainable. The evidence of the witnesses of Jones, Sheets and Hinkle, all tended to show that Jones was then insolvent, and justify the court in so finding. We will remark here in relation to the evidence of Hinkle, which attorneys for defendants (appellants here) contend was improperly admitted in the court below, that in our view it was admissible as relevant to the issue of Jones' insolvency on the 27th of July, 1886. It is further contended that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the defendants had reasonable cause to believe Jones insolvent on the 27th of July, 1886, or that they had any cause to believe that the assignment was made with a view to prevent the property of Jones from coming into the hands of the plaintiff as assignee, or to evade any of the provisions of the insolvent act, or to impede its provisions. We think that the facts deposed to by Jones and Sheets were sufficient to put defendants on inquiry as to Jones' solvency, which inquiry, if prosecuted by defendants, would have disclosed to them that Jones was, when he made the transfer above mentioned, unable to pay his debts from his own means as they became due. When this is the condition of a debtor, he is, within the meaning of the act of 1880, insolvent. The definition of insolvency, given above, is that stated in the title of the Civil Code in regard to assignments for the benefit of creditors, (Civil Code, § 3450,) and we can see no reason why this is not correct under the insolvent act of 1880. That the defendants were aware that Jones' financial condition was precarious is shown by their application for the transfer made to them as security. If the defendants had pursued the inquiry, they would have found a state of things existing such as was disclosed by Jones' testimony, in which a statement of his assets and liabilities appear, and this statement, in our judgment, shows that Jones was, on the day when he made the transfer, insolvent. We entertain no doubt that the finding that when the defendants accepted the transfer of the accounts from Jones they had reasonable cause to believe that he was insolvent is sustained by the evidence. We think that the court correctly found that the assignment to defendants was out of the usual and ordinary course of business of the debtor, Jones, and there is no evidence to the contrary. By the last clause of section 55 of the insolvent act of 1880, (constituting article 8, and relating to fraudulent preferences and transfers,) in reference to such assignment as is spoken of above, it is provided that if such assignment "is not made in the usual course of business of the debtor, that fact shall be prima facie evidence of fraud." The same clause will be found in section 35 of the late United States bankrupt act. And fraud mentioned in this clause has been construed to mean fraud on the provisions of the bankrupt act. See the following cases in which it was so held: In re Meyer, 2 N. B. R. 422; In re Hunt, Id. 542; In re Dean, Id. 91; Collins v. Bell, 3 N B. R. 587; Martin v. Toof, 4 N. B. R. 492, 493. And we think this construction should be adopted here, that the fraud mentioned in the clause of the fifty-fifth section above cited means fraud on the provisions of the insolvent act. In this view, the transfer to the defendants being out of the usual and ordinary course of business of the debtor, it is prima facie evidence that the defendants had reasonable cause to believe when such assignment was made and accepted by them that it was made with a view to prevent the debtor's property assigned to defendants from coming to his assignee in insolvency, and to prevent the property of the debtor from being distributed ratably among his creditors. There being no evidence to rebut the prima facie case of fraud so established, it must be held to be conclusively established that the assignment to defendants was made with the view above stated. See Ohleyer v Bunce, 65 Cal. 544, 4 Pac. Rep. 549. The action was brought to recover possession of the orders mentioned above, or the value thereof, stated to be $383, in case delivery of the orders could not be had. The court below held as a conclusion of law from the facts found that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for $250, and ordered that judgment be entered accordingly, which was done; but the court did not find as a conclusion of law that he was entitled to a recovery of the orders sued for. It is provided by section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure that in an action to recover the possession of personal property judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession, or the value thereof in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention. Thus a clear and statutory rule is laid down as to the judgment which shall be entered, and we cannot perceive that a judgment can be entered for the alternative value unless it is found that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the property sued for. This omission to find whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to recover the orders sued for was error. The judgment as entered is also erroneous. If the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the property sued for, we cannot see that he is entitled to a judgment. If he is entitled to recover such property, the judgment must be as prescribed in section 667, Code Civil Proc. Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 552. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to find on the facts found whether or not, as a conclusion of law, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the orders sued for, and to enter judgment in accordance with such finding; that is to say, if it is determined on the facts found that plaintiff is entitled to recover the orders (the value of which have been found to be $150) that judgment be entered as provided in section 667, Code Civil Proc. If it is determined that plaintiff is not entitled to recover the orders, judgment should be entered for defendants. Ordered accordingly.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.

---

78 Cal. 556

GREEN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 20,514.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 16, 1889.)

STATE COURTS—JURISDICTION.

1. Const. Cal. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 13, vests the judicial power in superior and other enumerated courts, "and in such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county," and gives the superior courts jurisdiction of felonies, and of all "misdemeanors not otherwise provided for," and further provides that the legislature may fix the jurisdiction of any inferior courts so established. St. 1871–72, p. 84, and other statutes, create the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, and give it jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $1,000, and imprisonment for one year, or both. Held, that the effect of these acts was to deprive the superior court of jurisdiction over the offense of conspiring to extort money, that being among the misdemeanors "otherwise provided for" by the acts.

2. It is immaterial whether such conspiracy is an offense known to the common law as an "infamous crime," and hence punishable only by indictment or information, and that no such procedure is provided for in such inferior courts, as no such class of misdemeanors is recognized under the law of California.

Application for a writ of prohibition.

J. C. Green was indicted in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for conspiring with others to extort money. He applies for a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from proceeding therein, alleging that it had no jurisdiction of the offense.

J. M. Lesser and Davis Louderback, for petitioner. Jas. D. Page, Dist. Atty., W. A. Nygh, and J. H. Durst, for defendant.

WORKS, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco from proceeding further in an action of the people against the petitioner, upon a charge of conspiracy. The ground upon which the jurisdiction of the superior court is contested is that conspiracy is punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $1,000, or by both, and that jurisdiction in such cases is exclusive in the police court of said city and county. The judicial power of this state is vested in the senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a supreme court, superior courts, justices of the peace, and such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county. Const. art. 6, § 1. The constitution provides that the superior courts shall have jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for. Id. § 5. It is further provided that the legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior courts which may be established in pursuance of section 1 of this article, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the judges thereof. In pursuance of these constitutional provisions the legislature of the state has, by what is known as the "Consolidation Act," as amended in 1872, prescribed the jurisdiction of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, and among other things it is provided that said court shall have jurisdiction of misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, which necessarily includes the offense charged in this case, and of which the superior court has assumed jurisdiction. The point made and relied upon in this application is that, under the provisions of the constitution, the legislature has the power to establish inferior courts, and to confer upon such courts jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor, and that, when such jurisdiction is so provided for, the jurisdiction in that class of cases is taken away from the superior courts, for the reason that they become misdemeanors "otherwise provided for," within the meaning of the constitution.

Conspiracy is punishable by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, and imprisonment for one year, or by both, and jurisdiction in this class of cases is clearly conferred on the police judge's court. St. 1871–72, p. 84. And this statute is still in force under the present

Code. Ex parte Simpson, 47 Cal. 127. This jurisdiction has been reaffirmed by legislation subsequent to the adoption of the present constitution. St. 1881, p. 75, (act to create an additional police judge's court for the city and county of San Francisco, approved March 7, 1881.) These acts expressly exclude jurisdiction of justices' courts from this class of cases. It seems to us, therefore, that the only question that can arise here is whether the jurisdiction conferred upon police courts in this class of cases is exclusive, or concurrent with that of the superior courts. The evident object and purpose of the constitution in providing for the jurisdiction of superior courts, in cases of misdemeanor of the lower grades, was to leave it to the legislature to provide inferior courts in cities and towns, with jurisdiction to try the same, and that such jurisdiction should vest in the superior courts only until such inferior courts should be provided for. The language of the constitution can bear no other construction. It vests this jurisdiction in the superior court, if not otherwise provided for. Just so soon as the jurisdiction is otherwise provided for, the authority of the superior court to act ceases. This has been held in the case of the justices' courts. Ex parte Wallingford, 60 Cal. 103; Gafford v. Bush, Id. 149. In Ex parte Wallingford, the court says: "It is thus seen that by the express terms of the constitution the legislature is empowered to establish justices' courts, and to confer upon them such powers as to it shall seem proper, provided such powers shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several courts of record, with the exceptions already noticed. The limitation as to trenching upon the jurisdiction of the several courts of record obviously refers to the jurisdiction conferred upon those courts by the constitution itself. For example, as the constitution confers upon the superior court jurisdiction in all cases of felony, the legislature could not confer on the justices' court jurisdiction in such a case. But while the constitution also confers on the superior court jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor, it is of misdemeanors that are not otherwise provided for. When the legislature, pursuant to the power conferred by section 11, art. 6, 'to otherwise provide for' certain or all misdemeanors, does otherwise provide for certain of them, and confers upon the justice's court jurisdiction in certain cases of misdemeanor, the jurisdiction so conferred becomes exclusive, for they then become cases of misdemeanor 'otherwise provided for,' over which, according to the express language of the constitution, the superior court has no jurisdiction."

The only conceivable difference between the cases cited, and the one at bar is that the justices' courts are expressly created by the constitution, while the police court is one created by the legislature, under the authority of the constitution. We regard this difference as of no importance as affecting the question before us. Taking the several constitutional provisions together, they vest in the inferior courts such jurisdiction as may be given them, so long as the jurisdiction thus conferred upon them does not infringe upon the jurisdiction expressly conferred upon some other court by the constitution itself. Section 1, art. 6, vests jurisdiction in such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county. This must be held to apply to the city and county of San Francisco, as it is the only consolidated city and county in the state. Section 13 of the same article provides: "The legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior courts which may be established in pursuance of section 1 of this article, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the judges thereof." Taking these constitutional provisions, together with the act creating the police court, and defining its jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction may be said to be vested in the court by the constitution. We find nothing in the constitution or the statute indicating an intention to make the jurisdiction concurrent in the two courts.

In opposition to this view, counsel for the respondent lay down this proposition: "In order that a jurisdiction may 'be otherwise provided for,' within the meaning of section 5, art. 6, of the constitution, that jurisdiction must be vested by the legislature throughout the state in a system of courts, whose aggregate territorial jurisdiction will be coextensive with the aggregate territorial jurisdiction of the system of superior courts; in other words, it must be taken from the superior courts as a system, and vested in some other courts as a system." And enlarging upon this proposition, they say further: "The constitution uses the term 'the superior court,' (article 6, § 5.) That term is a collective term. The constitution is dealing, not with individual superior courts, as separate and distinct courts, and as county establishments, but with the superior courts, as a state system of courts. It is organizing a branch of the judicial department of the state government. It is engaged in creating a state institution,—a state establishment. The superior court, as a system of courts, is the subject-matter with which it is at work. It delimits the jurisdiction of that system. It gives that system as a unit the jurisdiction over misdemeanors. It declares a subtraction in a certain event from the jurisdiction, not of one distinct superior court, but from the jurisdiction of the entire system." In support of this contention counsel cite Water Co. v. Vallejo, 48 Cal. 72; In re Marks, 45 Cal. 217. But these cases do not sustain the position assumed. This course of reasoning is plausible and ingenious, but not convincing. It goes to the expediency of the constitutional provision under consideration, and the statutes enacted under it, rather than to their construction. But we fail to recognize the force of the argument as affecting the expediency of the law. In counties like San Francisco, or other counties in which large cities are situated, where the superior court in all its departments is necessarily crowded with business, the necessity may exist for the transfer of misdemeanors and petty offenses to inferior courts, with a view of relieving the higher courts of the burden of trying the same, while in other counties no such necessity exists. And it may be for this very reason than the constitution provides for the establishment of inferior courts in cities, towns, and cities and counties, and not generally throughout the state. It is further insisted by the respondents that, if jurisdiction is conferred upon the police courts, it is concurrent with the superior courts, and not exclusive; and in support of this position counsel cite Courtwright v. Mining Co., 30 Cal. 574; Ex parte McCarthy, 53 Cal. 412; Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 395. We have carefully examined the cases cited, and find that they lay down the well-established rule that where jurisdiction is given, either by the constitution or by statute, to two different courts, not indicating whether such jurisdiction shall be exclusive or concurrent, the same may be regarded as concurrent in both courts. But these cases do not reach the question presented here, for the simple reason that in our judgment the constitutional provision we are considering does indicate in plain terms that the jurisdiction of inferior courts, thereafter to be created, shall be exclusive, and not concurrent. The evident purpose of the constitutional provision, as evidenced by its language, is that the jurisdiction of the superior court shall be conditioned upon the establishment of other courts upon which the same jurisdiction shall be conferred, and when that condition happens and the jurisdiction is by the legislature conferred upon such inferior courts, from that time the constitution itself transfers such jurisdiction from the superior court and vests it in the inferior courts. From that time the jurisdiction is "otherwise provided for," and the jurisdiction of the superior court at once ceases.

Again, it is contended that the jurisdiction in this case could not constitutionally be conferred upon the police court, for the reason that the offense is one that must be prosecuted by indictment or information, and that no such practice is provided for in case of such inferior courts. What has been said upon the other points made is decisive of this question, and for the very same reasons. The distinction between high and low misdemeanors is one that has never been recognized in this state. The constitution and statutes relate exclusively to felonies and misdemeanors. The dividing line between the two is clearly marked and defined. The common-law distinction between high and low misdemeanors, depending upon the question whether the offense charged was infamous or not, was more imaginary than real, and calculated to lead to great confusion and uncertainty in the administration of justice. To attempt, in this state, to perpetuate such a distinction, would necessarily increase the avenues through which criminals too often escape justice. It is contended that the offense charged here was a high misdemeanor, and always prosecuted by indictment prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1879, and that justices' courts never had jurisdiction of such offenses. But this is a mere assertion without authority to support it, and this court has expressly held that under the present constitution the legislature is empowered to establish justices' courts, and confer upon them such powers as to it shall seem proper, and that under this provision the legislature may confer jurisdiction in the justices' courts over misdemeanors, and that such jurisdiction is exclusive. Ex parte Wallingford, 60 Cal. 104; Gafford v. Bush, Id. 149. The power given the legislature by the constitution is not limited to any class of misdemeanors, high or low, but extends to such offenses generally. Const. art. 6, § 13. Therefore, to hold that it is unconstitutional to try a misdemeanor of the kind here charged in a justices' or police court is to hold that the provision of the constitution referred to is itself unconstitutional. That it was the intent that such jurisdiction might be conferred upon inferior courts is manifest from the fact that the jurisdiction had already been conferred upon the police court by an act which was in force at the time the present constitution was adopted. St. 1871-72, p. 84. The jurisdiction, so far as it relates to this particular court, has not been changed since the constitution was adopted. It was a misdemeanor "already provided for," and strictly within the letter of the constitution. The point made that this class of cases cannot be prosecuted in inferior courts because they must be presented by indictment or information does not affect the question of jurisdiction. As was said in Ex parte Wallingford, supra: "But counsel entirely overlook the all-important fact that the jurisdiction of the offense is not determined by the form of procedure by which it is prosecuted, but by the nature of the offense itself. And since, as already shown, the superior court has no jurisdiction of such misdemeanors as have been committed by the legislature to the justice's court, and since the legislature has committed to the last-named court all cases of petit larceny, a conclusion quite the reverse of that drawn by respondent's counsel would seem to follow from section 976 of the Penal Code." Section 13, art. 6, Const. provides: "The legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior courts which may be established in pursuance of section 1 of this article, and shall fix by law the power, duties, and responsibilities of the judges thereof." Under this section the legislature has power to confer upon such courts jurisdiction in all cases not vested in some other court by the constitution. Gafford v. Bush, supra. That all misdemeanors are included in this power is clearly apparent from the fact that jurisdiction of such offenses is, by the constitution itself, withheld from the higher courts upon provision being made by the legislature vesting it in such inferior courts. These cases could only be "otherwise provided for" by vesting the jurisdiction in such inferior courts as the legislature might establish, for the reason that power to create other courts, and to confer jurisdiction upon them, is confined to such inferior courts. The legislature has acted upon this provision by conferring jurisdiction upon police courts in cities having a population of not less than 30,000, nor more than 100,000, inhabitants, in all misdemeanors. St. 1885, p. 213. If counsel are right that only low misdemeanors can be prosecuted in such courts, so much of this act as includes high misdemeanors is unconstitutional, and the court in which the action is commenced must, in every case, in order to fix its jurisdiction, determine whether the offense charged belongs to one or the other of the two classes of misdemeanors. We find nothing in the constitution which leads us into this labyrinth of uncertainty. Its provisions are plain and direct. If one misdemeanor is within its terms, all must be. That it does confer the power to vest exclusive jurisdiction of some misdemeanors in inferior courts has been decided by this court, as we have seen, in two well-considered cases. That it relates, in terms, to all misdemeanors is equally clear to our minds. The questions of law involved are raised by demurrer, but counsel have discussed the whole case in their briefs in such manner as to indicate to us that there was no dispute as to the facts, and we have considered the case fully with that understanding. If, however, it is desired, the respondent is allowed 10 days within which to file an answer. If no answer is filed within the time limited, a peremptory writ of prohibition will issue as prayed for.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

(79 Cal. 34)

BAKER et ux. v. FIREMEN'S FUND INS. CO. et al. (No. 12,803.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1889.)

MORTGAGES—REDEMPTION.

1. Plaintiffs, whose property had been sold under a mortgage foreclosure, induced B. to advance the money to redeem it, and they executed a deed absolute in form to him, an agreement being simultaneously executed by him to sell, and by plaintiffs to buy, the land for a certain sum, if paid at a certain time; it being stipulated that, on the failure of plaintiffs to comply with its terms, B. should be released from all obligations in law or in equity to convey the property, and should be entitled to the immediate possession, and to a strict foreclosure of the contract. The deed and agreement were recorded. Held, that the deed was in effect a mortgage, and subsequent purchasers from B. were charged with notice of and took subject to plaintiffs' right to a reconveyance.[1]

2. Parol evidence as to whether the deed was in fact a mortgage, though unnecessary in the view stated, was admissible.

3. B. obtained insurance on the property as owner to an amount equal to that advanced by him to redeem the property and his expenses. He had also taken a bill of sale of plaintiffs' growing crops, and received the proceeds of their sale. Upon the destruction of the premises by fire, the adjuster, finding plaintiffs in possession, objected to paying the insurance, but it was finally settled between B. and the company by the latter paying B. the amount he had advanced, less the amount he had received from the crops, and B. transferred his interest under his contract with plaintiffs, and made a deed to the property to the company. Held that, the company having notice of plaintiffs' rights, this operated as a payment of the insurance, and upon a bill to enforce their agreement they are entitled to a credit of the full amount of the policies.

4. As the bill is in effect an action to quiet title, the failure of the plaintiffs to tender enough money to pay the debt in time did not divest them of their title to the land, but, being in possession, they could bring their action to redeem within any time.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

Action by Peter Baker and wife against the Firemen's Fund Insurance Company. C. R. Browne, having purchased the property from defendant, intervened. Defendants appeal.

W. C. Belcher and J. W. Mastick, for appellants. J. C. Campbell, (C. H. Clement, of counsel,) for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiffs were the owners of a certain tract of land in San Joaquin county. They had mortgaged the property to persons not parties to this action, the mortgage had been foreclosed, and the land sold, and the time for redemption was about to expire. In this emergency they applied to H. Barnhart to help them out of their difficulty by advancing the money necessary to satisfy the purchasers under the sale. This Barnhart did, and an instrument which is a deed absolute in form was executed to him by the plaintiffs, and simultaneously an agreement in writing was entered into by the parties. Both the deed and agreement were duly recorded. The agreement recited that for a certain sum of money, if paid in a certain time, Barnhart would sell the lands to plaintiffs, and they agreed thus to purchase them, and to pay the amount named in the agreement. The following is a clause of that instrument, (the words italicized being so marked by the writer of this opinion:) "Time is hereby especially made the essence of this contract, and, in the event of the failure to comply with the terms hereof by said parties of the second part, the said parties of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said property, and shall be entitled to the immediate possession of the same, said parties of the second part shall forfeit all rights thereto, and said parties of the first part shall be entitled to a strict foreclosure of this contract; and the said parties of the first part, on receiving such payment at the time and in the manner above mentioned, agree to execute and to deliver to the said parties of the second part or to their assigns a good and sufficient deed." It was not provided that in any contingency the plaintiffs were to be released from their obligation to pay. "And it is understood that the stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties," etc. At the same time Barnhart obtained from the defendant corporation two policies of insurance, one for $2,500 on the house upon said land, and another for $1,000 upon the barn thereon. These policies were issued to Barnhart as the owner of the property, and not as mortgagee. The sum of money mentioned in the agreement above referred to was made up of the amount paid by Barnhart upon the redemption of the land from the foreclosure sale, the expenses of preparing the deed, agreement, and other papers, the premiums on the policies of insurance, and $500 in addition, which last sum we surmise to have been as compensation to Barnhart for laying out of the use of his money for the time specified in the agreement, at the expiration of which the plaintiffs were to purchase back their land. There was also executed upon the same day with the other instruments heretofore mentioned a bill of sale of the crop growing upon the land of the plaintiffs. After all these agreements were made the plaintiffs still continued to remain, reside upon, and apparently control the premises; Barnhart in the meanwhile receiving money from the proceeds of the crop. On the 18th of September, and before the maturity of the agreement, the house on the premises was destroyed by fire, and shortly afterwards the barn. The adjuster for the defendant corporation appeared on the scene, visited the premises, saw the plaintiffs in possession, and objected to paying the insurance money. Then it appears that, by an arrangement between him and Barnhart, Barnhart received from the insurance company all the money which he claimed the plaintiffs had agreed in their contract to pay him, less what he had admitted he had already received from them, transferred all his interest under the contract to the corporation, and made it a deed to the property. After this suit was commenced they made a conveyance of it to the intervenor. The plaintiffs before suit brought, and before the time stated in the agreement, when their right to purchase the land would expire, tendered to the defendant corporation the money which the plaintiffs claimed to be due under the terms of their contract with Barnhart, and demanded a deed. Defendant offered to receive the money as so much on account, but refused to execute a deed. The money thus tendered was then deposited in a bank, and was thereafter so kept, ready to be paid the defendant on demand. On December 17, 1886, a few days after the tender and refusal, plaintiffs filed their complaint herein, alleging that the deed from them to Barnhart was intended to be and was a mortgage, and prayed for a reconveyance of the land by the defendant to them, upon the payment of $1,000.20, which they had tendered. Upon leave being given to intervenor to file his complaint of intervention, plaintiffs answered that pleading, and filed a cross-complaint. To the cross-complaint the intervenor demurred, the demurrer was overruled, and the intervenor answered the cross-complaint. A trial by jury was had upon certain specific issues. The court below afterwards adopted the findings of the jury upon them, and filed other findings, which sustained the contention of the plaintiffs that the deed which they had executed to Barnhart was a mortgage, and adjudged that the intervenor should execute and deliver to the plaintiffs a deed to the premises, upon the payment to him of the amount of their tender and deposit in bank. A motion for a new trial was made by the defendant and intervenor, and refused. From the judgment and order this appeal is taken.

---

[1] In general, as to what constitutes a mortgage, see Booth v. Hoskins, (Cal.) 17 Pac. Rep. 225, and note; Strong v. Strong, (Ill.) 18 N. E. Rep. 665, and note; Norris v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. Supp. 558; Chandler v. Chandler, (Iowa,) 41 N. W. Rep. 319, and note.

We perceive no error in impaneling the jury before framing the special issues to be submitted to them. The issues could not be tried by a jury until it was impaneled. Nor can we perceive any error in the finding that the deed to Barnhart was executed to secure a debt due from the plaintiffs to him. Looking at the deed and the contract in the nature of a defeasance irrespective of the oral testimony in the record, it is apparent from the clause which we have italicized that it was intended that the deed should be a mortgage, securing the payment of a debt. It appears therefrom that there was a sum of money to be paid, and the grantee in the supposed deed was not to be entitled to the possession of the property until there was a failure to pay said sum. This is inconsistent with the theory of an absolute deed. Moreover this provision is supplemented with language about the "foreclosure" of the plaintiffs' rights. This seems to us sufficiently to indicate the nature of the transaction, and to put subsequent purchasers upon inquiry. This being so, and both instruments having been duly placed upon record, the defendant and the whole world were charged with notice of these facts. Therefore the transaction must be held to be a mortgage upon the face of the papers themselves, and, inasmuch as the papers were recorded, the insurance company is conclusively presumed to have had notice of the real nature of the transaction. The parol evidence upon the question of mortgage or no mortgage, although unnecessary in the view just stated, was nevertheless admissible, and, taken in connection with the papers, leaves no doubt in our minds upon the question.

The appellant makes a strenuous and forcible argument that the evidence, as to the matter of the settlement by Barnhart with the insurance company's adjuster, shows without any conflict that there was no payment of the losses under the policies of insurance. It is claimed that Barnhart and the agent both positively swear that the policies were canceled by the payment of one dollar each, and that no settlement was made for the losses occasioned by the fire. Let it be admitted that the only oral testimony upon the subject, that of Barnhart and the adjuster, is to that effect, and yet the circumstances surrounding the whole matter leave a most decided impression that these two witnesses are mistaken as to their recollection of the facts of the actual transaction. As was said by BALDWIN, J., in Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 646: "We do not understand that the credulity of a court must necessarily correspond with the vigor and positiveness with which a witness swears. A court may reject the most positive testimony, though the witness be not discredited by direct testimony impeaching him or contradicting his statements. The inherent improbability of a statement may deny to it all claims to belief." The court below was in possession of all the peculiar facts surrounding this affair, saw the witnesses, and heard them testify, and we cannot say that its determination as to the real truth of the matter was unwarranted. We concur with appellant in its reply brief: "It is entirely true, as respondents contend, that an actual payment of the policies by defendant, at least with notice of the facts concerning the ownership, would have estopped defendant from relying on the clause avoiding the policies in case of untrue representation on that point." And we think that the defendant did pay the policies with notice of the ownership, and is now estopped to claim the benefit of the forfeiture clause. If it voluntarily paid the loss, it makes no difference whether Barnhart was the owner, or only, as the court and jury found here, a mortgagee.

It was agreed by an oral agreement that any insurance money which should be received by Barnhart should be credited against the amount due him. Therefore when such money was received it operated as a payment of the indebtedness pro tanto. The insurance company knew of this payment to Barnhart, for it made the payment itself; and, inasmuch as it had notice that the transaction was a mortgage, it was put upon inquiry as to whether the mortgage was paid or not. As said heretofore by the appellate court, this action to redeem is in effect merely an action to remove a cloud from the title, and the failure, if there was a failure, to tender enough money to pay the debt in time, did not divest the mortgagors of title to the land, and, being in possession of the land, they could bring the action to redeem at any time. Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 311, 13 Pac. Rep. 866. Of course the plaintiffs cannot have their title quieted unless they have paid or shall pay all the money which they owe by their agreement. The tender of the sum of money offered was refused, as not being sufficient in amount, as it is stated that the defendant would only receive it on account. This we think was a sufficient specification of the reasons why the tender was not considered sufficient under section 2076 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and 1501 of the Civil Code.

But we do not agree with the court below as to the amount due from the plaintiffs. We have endeavored, without success, to ascertain definitely upon what arithmetical calculation, based upon the evidence in the record, the finding can be supported in relation to the exact sum of money which was paid to Barnhart on account of the proceeds of the crop of grain and hay. The amount in the finding is different from that claimed in the complaint. All the money which Barnhart actually received was $350.81. What went with some of the hay or the money it brought, if sold, does not appear satisfactorily, and it is uncertain what its value was. We think upon the whole case that the transaction between the plaintiffs and Barnhart was a mortgage, and that the recording of the writings gave the insurance company sufficient notice thereof; that the title remains in the plaintiffs, but that they are entitled to relief in the nature of the removal of a cloud upon condition of payment of what was due; that upon the question of what was due they are entitled to be credited with the sum of $3,500, received from the insurance company by Barnhart, and with whatever sums were realized from the crops, and be charged with whatever sums they owe on account of taxes paid for them, and the sums due under the contract with Barnhart. And we advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the principles of the opinion.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the principles of the opinion.

(79 Cal. 23)

COWARD v. CLANTON. (No. 12,813.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1889.)

PARTNERSHIP—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT—ACCOUNTING.

1. Where plaintiff and defendant formed a partnership to deal in real estate, the profits to be equally divided between them, and sales were made and profits realized, the defendant could not, in an action brought by the plaintiff for his share of the profits, and for an accounting, object that the partnership agreement was in parol, and void under the statute of frauds.

2. In such case, where the defendant furnished the money to buy a tract of land, and the plaintiff was to furnish the skill in selling the same, but the entire tract was not sold, and the amount received for the portion sold was less than the amount paid by defendant for the entire tract, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, although a profit may have been realized on the portion sold.

3. Where a pleading by a party is offered in evidence against him, and it appears that it was not signed by such party, but by his attorney, but no objection is made to its admission on that ground, the appellate court will not presume that the attorney was acting without authority.

4. A pleading filed in another action is admissible against the party filing it as containing an admission by him, though it was superseded by another pleading.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; C. H. GAROUTTE, Judge.

George P. Harding, for appellant. R. Clark, W. H. Grant, and E. R. Bush, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The plaintiff and respondent brought his action in the court below against the appellant, upon a contract which he avers in his complaint was one of partnership, by which the defendant was to furnish the capital to purchase real estate, and the plaintiff to furnish the necessary skill and labor in reselling the same, and to pay certain expenses connected therewith, the parties to share equally the profits realized from such resales; that a certain tract of land was purchased in pursuance of the contract in the name of the defendant; that there was a net profit resulting from such resale, which the defendant had received and failed to account for. The prayer of the complaint was for a dissolution of the partnership, an accounting, and judgment for plaintiff for the share of the profits found to be due him. The defendant denied the partnership, and alleged that he had, by the contract, employed the plaintiff to sell the real estate as his agent, upon terms similar to those set up by plaintiff. The contract is alleged to have been in parol, and it is so found by the court. The matter of accounting was referred to a commissioner, who found that the tract of land was purchased for $20,000, and was sold in parcels for an amount aggregating $24,156.50; that the net profits amounted to $3,420.66, and that respondent was entitled to recover $1,710.33; and judgment was rendered accordingly. Upon a motion for a new trial, the court below found that the findings of the commissioner that the whole of the tract had been sold were not sustained by the evidence. The decision was as follows: "The motion for a new trial in this action having been submitted and considered by the court, the court, being fully advised, decides that the findings herein to the effect that the plaintiff and defendant, or either of them, sold to Jeans Brothers twenty acres of land for $3,000 is not sustained by the evidence; and that the finding herein to the effect that plaintiff and defendant, or either of them, sold to J. I. Eaton thirty acres of land for $4,500 is not sustained by the evidence; and that the findings that the plaintiff and defendant, or either of them, sold to H. D. Rodgers five acres of land for $1,050 is not sustained by the evidence; and the court in this decision finds and decides that none of said sales were made by plaintiff and defendant, or either of them; and the court further adjudges and decrees that by reason of said sales not being made, the amount of the judgment heretofore rendered herein is too large by $812.50; and it is ordered that unless the plaintiff, within five days from the filing of this order, consents that said judgment be reduced to the sum of $1,500, a new trial of said cause be granted, and that it be so ordered." Upon this finding the court ordered that a new trial be granted, unless the plaintiff remit the said sum of $812.50, which was done, and the new trial was thereupon denied. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying him a new trial, but the appeal from the judgment was taken more than one year after its rendition, and cannot be considered.

We think, however, that the material questions raised in the case are presented by the appeal from the order denying a new trial. As we have seen, the plaintiff contended that the contract between the parties was one of partnership; the object being to buy and sell real estate, the net profits to be divided equally; while the defendant contended that the contract was one of agency, the plaintiff to have a share of the profits as his commissions for the sale of the tract of land described in the complaint. Upon this question the court below found for the plaintiff. The defendant contends in this court that, conceding that the contract was one of partnership, as it was in parol, it was within the statute of frauds, and cannot, for that reason, be enforced. It was held by this court, in an early case, that a partnership, the object of which was to deal in real estate, could not be formed by a contract resting in parol. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616, 639. The question seems not to have been very thoroughly considered, and the case is clearly against the great weight of authority. York v. Clemens, 41 Iowa, 95, 101; Sherwood v. Railway Co., 21 Minn. 127; Snyder v. Wolford, 33 Minn. 175, 22 N. W. Rep. 254; Bunnel v. Taintor, 4 Conn. 568; Holmes v. McCray, 51 Ind. 358; Dale v. Hamilton, 5 Hare, 369; Hunter v. Whitehead, 42 Mo. 524; Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1.

The contract, as between the parties to it, does not in any way affect the title to real estate, nor does the present controversy between the parties involve any such question. The subject-matter of the contract was the profits to be realized from sales made, and the controversy here is as to such profits, and the adjustment of accounts as between the partners. This is a matter over which a court of equity has complete jurisdiction, and the defendant cannot, after the contract has been executed, and the profits have gone into his hands, be heard to say that the contract under which the profits were realized was void under the statute of frauds.

But, admitting the contract to have been one of partnership, it is conceded that to entitle the respondent to recover, it must appear that profits were made by the purchase and sale of the lands. This was shown by the findings of the commissioner, which were adopted by the court. By the specifications of particulars, in which the findings were not sustained by the evidence, the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings that certain sales of the property were made, are brought in question. The court below found that such findings were not sustained by the evidence, and that some of the alleged sales had not been made. It is conceded that before the respondent could recover the purchase money paid for the real estate, with interest, certain expenses must be paid, or enough be realized to pay the same. The findings of the commissioner are to the effect that the purchase money for the tract of land was $20,000. If the amounts of the supposed sales which the court found on the hearing of the motion for a new trial were not made are deducted from the gross amount found by the commissioner, there was not sufficient realized to repay the purchase money, to say nothing about interest and expenses. This being the case, we are unable to see upon what theory the court below could have found that the respondent was entitled to recover the sum of $1,500, or any other amount. When these amounts were deducted it clearly appeared that the respondent was not entitled to recover, for the plain reason that no profits were proved. Instead of requiring the respondent to remit a part of his judgment, and then denying a new trial, the new trial should have been granted. The respondent contends that it was sufficient for him to show that for that portion of the entire tract sold a profit had resulted, but we are not inclined to give the contract such a construction. There would be no justice or equity in giving the respondent a share of the purchase money of the part sold, and leaving the appellant with the remainder of the tract on his hands, upon the sale of which a loss might occur. As we view the contract and the evidence, the whole tract must have been sold at a profit to entitle the respondent to recover a money judgment. If a part of the property remains unsold, and it is shown to be partnership property, it may be disposed of as other partnership assets are disposed of in closing up the business; but a court of equity cannot say that one of the partners shall take the money, and the other the land, under the circumstances of this case.

There is another question presented by the record which may arise upon another trial, and we, for that reason, find it necessary to pass upon it. The appellant offered in evidence an answer of the respondent in another action between the parties here, in which he alleged an indebtedness from the appellant to him for commissions for the sale of a part of this tract of land as appellant's agent. As the appellant was contending in this case that these sales were made by respondent as his agent, and not as a partner, it will be seen that the answer contained a material admission. But the respondent objected to the admission of the answer on the ground that it was superseded by the filing of another answer in the case. This was no reason for excluding it as evidence. No matter if it had ceased to exist as a pleading in the cause, it was still binding upon the respondent as an admission. It is urged here that the answer was not verified, and was not signed by the respondent, but by his attorney. It is enough to say that this objection to its admission was not made in the court below, and this court will not presume, under such circumstances, that the attorney was acting without authority. There is some confusion in the cases as to the right to introduce a pleading in evidence, where the same is signed by an attorney, without first proving that it was pleaded with the knowledge and by the authority of the party. Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 521, 12 Pac. Rep. 570; Cook v. Barr, 44 N. Y. 156; Kamm v. Bank, 74 Cal. 191, 15 Pac. Rep. 765. In our judgment it should be presumed, where a pleading is filed by the attorney of the party, that such attorney was acting within his authority, and that the pleading should be regarded as the admission of the party, subject to his right to show that as a matter of fact the pleading was not authorized by him. But as the point is not directly raised here, and a decision of the question is not necessary, we do not pass upon it. Under the objection made to it the answer should have been admitted. The appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order denying a new trial reversed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I think the contract sued on was wholly invalid, and therefore concur in the judgment.

---

79 Cal. 51

MAULDIN v. CLARK et al. (No. 12,754.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

JUDGMENT—RES ADJUDICATA.

1. In an action for damages for the conversion of a number of cords of wood, it appeared that prior to such action plaintiff had brought suit against the defendant for the possession of certain real estate, and for rents and profits, and for damages for waste in selling timber on said real estate; and it was alleged that the timber the sale of which was alleged to be waste was identical with the wood alleged to have been converted. Held that, as so much of the former action as was based on the allegation of waste was for an injury to real property, a judgment in such action could not be a bar to the subsequent action for the conversion of the wood, which was personalty.

2. And, where there was no other evidence that plaintiff was the owner of the wood alleged to have been converted than the judgment in the former action for the possession of the real estate, a nonsuit was proper.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

Action by Millicent R. Mauldin against C. W. Clark and others. Judgment was given for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Thornton & Merzbach and Grove L. Johnson, for appellant. A. L. Hart, for respondents.

WORKS, J. This is an action for damages for the conversion of 3,000 cords of wood. The complaint was not verified. The defendant pleads the general denial, and, as a separate defense, that prior to the bringing of this action the plaintiff brought a suit in the court below for the possession of certain real estate, describing it, and to recover the rents and profits, and for $6,000 damages, for waste in knowingly, willfully, and maliciously cutting off and selling the timber on said real estate; and that judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in said action for the recovery of said real estate, and against her as to the alleged damages for detention thereof and waste. It is averred that the wood and the value thereof, described in the complaint in this action, constituted the rents and profits of the said land during the time that defendants were in the possession of the same as aforesaid, and is identical with that described in the complaint of plaintiff in the former action above named, as having been cut and sold by defendants during their said possession of said property, and as constituting waste thereon. "And the defendants aver that the said judgment in the said former action is now in full force, and is a bar to the recovery of the plaintiff in this action." Upon the trial the plaintiff commenced her case by an attempt to prove the defense. The judgment roll of the case referred to was introduced in evidence, and proof made that while the defendants were in possession of the property they cut down timber, converted it into wood, and sold the wood. The value of the wood was proved, and the issuance of a writ of restitution and its service. The defendant moved for a nonsuit on several grounds, among others that there was no proof that plaintiff owned the property sued for, and that her cause of action was barred by the former action.

Counsel on both sides have elaborately argued the question whether the former action was a bar or not, and, incidentally, whether there was such a finding and judgment upon the question of waste as could bind the plaintiff under any circumstances. Without going into a discussion of these questions, it is sufficient to say that the judgment could not bar this action, for the plain reason that the issues in the two cases were essentially and entirely different. Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367. So much of the former action as was based upon the allegation of waste was an action for injury to real estate. The case at bar is one for the conversion of personal property. But the nonsuit was rightly granted on the other ground mentioned. There was no proof that the plaintiff owned any cord-wood. Appellant contends that by proving the judgment for the possession of the real estate she proved her ownership of the timber thereon. But she is not suing for injury to the timber, which would be a part of the real estate, but for the conversion of personal property, which has no connection with the realty. To hold with the appellant on this ground would compel us to hold that the judgment pleaded was a bar. If the former judgment concluded the respondents as to the ownership of the wood, it must be equally binding upon the appellant as to the right to recover damages therefor. We think the former judgment was totally immaterial to either of the parties in this action. The case should therefore be treated as if no such judgment had been pleaded or proved. So treating it, the plaintiff failed to prove her case, and the nonsuit was properly granted. Judgment and order affirmed.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment

THORNTON, J. I concur on the ground that the judgment in the former action of Mauldin v. Clark & Cox constituted a bar to this action.

BEATTY, C. J. I cannot agree that there was no evidence of a conversion by the defendants of the cord-wood belonging to the plaintiff. But I concur in the judgment on the ground that the evidence introduced by plaintiff to show her title in this action would have sustained a judgment in her favor for the damages claimed in her former action against the same defendants, and, consequently, that the judgment in that action—which was, in legal effect, a judgment against her on her claim for damages for cutting the same wood—is a bar to the present action

I concur: PATERSON, J.

SHARPSTEIN, J. I concur in the judgment.

(78 Cal. 490)

RISER v. WALTON. (No. 11,858.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1889.)

PLEADING—HARMLESS ERROR.

A complaint in an action for fraudulent representations in the sale of land was demurred to because it did not contain a formal allegation of damages sustained, but the demurrer was overruled. The complaint prayed for a certain sum and costs, and defendant answered, and the cause proceeded precisely as if the complaint had contained the allegation. Held, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 475, requiring the court at every stage of the proceedings to disregard errors and defects not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, that a judgment for plaintiff would not be reversed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

Action by Frank A. Riser against Jesse Walton. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Hall & Rodgers, for appellant. Mesick & Maxwell, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action is for a fraudulent representation by the defendant in the quantity of land sold by him to the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that said tract contained 60 acres of land, whereas it actually contained no more than 46 acres. The complaint was demurred to on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and appellant contends that the order is erroneous, because there is no averment that the plaintiff sustained any damage.

The complaint states facts sufficient to sustain a judgment for damages; and, while it does not contain a formal allegation of the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff, it concludes with a prayer for judgment for $1,400 and costs. We think that the equivalent of a statement of the amount of damage which he had sustained. The defendant answered, denying the material allegations of the complaint; and the trial, so far as we can observe, proceeded precisely as it would had the complaint contained the allegation which it is claimed it should have contained. And the court must, in every stage of an action, disregard an error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Code Civil Proc. § 475. We perceive no good ground for reversing the judgment on the alleged defect in the complaint.

The findings of the court are sufficient to sustain the judgment, but the appellant claims that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings. That the defendant's agent who negotiated the sale on behalf of defendant to plaintiff represented to plaintiff that the tract contained 60 acres is clearly proved, and it is clear that plaintiff believed that representation. It is quite clear, too, that defendant at the time knew that the tract did not contain that number of acres. The evidence shows beyond doubt that the plaintiff was deceived, and the defendant has adopted the sale made by the deception, and received the benefits of it. Under such circumstances he takes the sale with all its burdens. Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 134; Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129. There is evidence tending to prove that the defendant personally participated in the misrepresentation. He was present when plaintiff, defendant, and defendant's agent were examining an abstract of title to the tract, and came across a map, and defendant made a diagram on it with a lead pencil, with the remark, "My sixty acres lie there." The record in our opinion discloses no error, and the judgment must be affirmed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

(78 Cal. 593; 3 Cal. Unrep. 70)

WHITE et al. v. LEE et al. (No. 12, 814.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

MINES AND MINING—LOCATION.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, providing that upon entering a mining claim "the location must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced," requires the boundaries of a placer claim to be thus marked, though the claim is co-extensive with a legal subdivision of land surveyed under the government system; and though sections 2329 and 2331 provide that the entry of land so surveyed shall, as to its exterior limits, conform to legal subdivisions, and that, where placer claims are upon surveyed lands, and conform to the legal subdivisions, no further survey or plat shall be required.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

Action by Lincoln White and William Singer, Jr., against George Lee and Jesse S. Wall, to determine the right to a gold-bearing placer mine known as the "Scott Placer Mine." The mine was located on, and was co-extensive with, the S. W. ¼ of the N. W. ¼, section 22, township 11 N., range 7 E. of the Mount Diablo meridian, in Placer county. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

William Singer, Jr., and Hale & Craig, for appellants. C. A. & F. P. Tuttle, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action to determine the right to a mining claim. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal. In 1885 the grantors of the plaintiffs located the land, marked off the boundaries, and did all the other acts required of them by law, and therefore they acquired a valid claim, if there was no prior right in the grantors of the defendants. The latter posted and recorded notice of location, but failed to mark off the boundaries. The statute requires that "the location must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced." Rev. St. § 2324. And it is well settled that a failure to comply with this requirement invalidates the claim. It is contended for the respondents, however, that the requirement does not apply where the public surveys have been extended over the land, and the claim is for the whole of a legal subdivision; and this is the only question to be determined. The learned counsel for the respondents expressly says: "The one point to be passed upon by the court in this case is whether in locating a placer mining claim by legal subdivisions on surveyed ground it is necessary to mark the lines of the location." The position is that this exception to the general requirement follows from other provisions of the Revised Statutes. But we do not think that this position can be maintained. Section 2329 provides, among other things, that "where the lands have been previously surveyed by the United States the entry in its exterior limits shall conform to the legal subdivision of the public lands." This, however, simply provides where the claimant shall run the lines of his claim. It does not at all dispense with the requirement as to how the lines shall be marked or evidenced. Section 2331 provides that "where placer claims are upon surveyed lands, and conform to legal subdivisions, no further survey or plat shall be required," etc. This provision does not refer to the marking by the claimant of the boundaries of his claim upon the ground, but to the plat and survey which are to be filed upon the application for the patent. Nor do we see any provision which dispenses with the general requirement that the boundaries shall be marked.

The construction contended for does not seem to us to be in harmony with the general purpose of the act. The purpose of the requirement that the claimant shall mark the boundaries of his claim is to inform other miners as to what portion of the ground is already occupied. The men for whose information the boundaries are required to be marked wander over the mountains with a very small outfit. They do not take surveyors with them to ascertain where the section lines run, and ordinarily it would do them no good to be informed that a quarter section of a particular number had been taken up. For this reason it is required that the boundaries shall be "distinctly marked upon the ground." The construction contended for by the respondents would, in our opinion, defeat the purpose of the requirement. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

3 Cal. Unrep. 72

WELSH, Road Overseer, v. GOULD. (No. 12,434.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

A finding of the court will be affirmed, where it cannot be said upon the record that the decision was erroneous.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON D. FREER, Judge.

Action by Columbus Welsh, as road overseer, against E. H. Gould, to abate a nuisance. Defendant had built a fence across one of the public roads running through plaintiff's district, and the latter had removed it, only to find it rebuilt by defendant, who threatened to rebuild it as often as it was removed. On the trial defendant claimed that there never was a road there, and also, if there had ever been one, it had been closed by a decree of the superior court in an action wherein this defendant was plaintiff and the county of Butte defendant, to quiet plaintiff's title to certain land therein described. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

John C. Gray, Dist. Atty., for appellant. P. O. Hundley, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The question upon which this case turns is whether there was a public road through the land of defendant. The court below found that there was not. And we cannot say upon the record before us that its action should be disturbed. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

78 Cal. 588

CHOPE v. CITY OF EUREKA. (No. 11,739.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DEFECTIVE STREETS.

A municipal corporation is not liable, in the absence of statutory provision, for personal injuries to one who fell into a sewer which was in process of construction, and was negligently left insufficiently guarded by the officers of the corporation.

BEATTY, C. J., and WORKS, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

S. M. Buck, for appellant. John A. McQuaid, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover damages for alleged personal injuries, caused by the plaintiff falling into an excavation for a sewer within the corporate limits of defendant, a municipal corporation. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, a motion for nonsuit was denied, and the jury found a verdict for plaintiff. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The defendant was incorporated by a special charter in 1874. St. 1873–74, p. 91. Its legislative body is a common council, consisting of five members. The charter also provides for a marshal and certain other officers. The common council is given the powers enumerated in section 4408 of the Political Code, and also certain other special powers, but it is nowhere provided that the corporation shall be liable for injuries suffered by individuals through the neglect of the officers of the corporation to properly perform their duties. The facts upon which the judgment rests are these: The records of the proceedings of the common council, introduced in evidence, show the following, and no more: "In regard to certain alleyway nuisances, more particularly that of the sewer leading down the alley from the Western Hotel, and forming a cess-pool at the end of said alley-way, the matter was, on motion, left in the hands of the committee on streets; they to take prompt action thereon." After this the city marshal, for the purpose of removing said cess-pool nuisance, commenced the construction of a sewer; and the jury had, perhaps, the right to find from the evidence that in doing so he acted under the direction of one or more members of said committee on streets. The sewer, while in process of construction, was left open, with a 12-inch plank across it, and without the protection of guards or lights. On a dark night the plaintiff fell into the sewer and was hurt, and for the damages thus received he recovered the judgment. Without noticing any of the other points made by appellant, it is sufficient to say that it has long been the settled law of this state that a municipal corporation is not liable for personal injuries to individuals, such as that claimed to have been sustained by plaintiff, where there is no statutory provision declaring such liability. There is, no doubt, some conflict of decisions on the question in other states, although it is to be observed that in the New England and some other states there are statutory declarations of the liability. But in California the doctrine above stated has been clearly and continuously adopted, and, if any change in the law is desirable, that change must be made by the legislature. And so far, at least, the legislature has shown no disposition to make the change. Winbigler v. City of Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 36; Tranter v. City of Sacramento, 61 Cal. 275; Barnett v. Contra Costa Co., 67 Cal. 77, 7 Pac. Rep. 177; Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 315; Huffman v. San Joaquin Co., 21 Cal. 430. The nonsuit, therefore, should have been granted, and the verdict and judgment were against the law and the evidence. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.

WORKS, J., (dissenting.) I cannot concur in the conclusion reached, or the doctrine announced, in the foregoing opinion, that a city cannot be held liable for damages for injuries resulting under the circumstances of this case. The obstruction of the street was the direct act of the city. The work being done, which resulted in such obstruction, was the work of the city, and not of a contractor. To deny all remedy, as against a city, under such circumstances, is, in many cases, a practical denial of justice. It may be that some of the cases cited in the prevailing opinion are broad enough to cover this case, and justify the conclusion reached, but if so they should, in my judgment, be modified. Most of the cases are for mere negligence of the corporation to keep public highways in repair, or perform some other duty devolving upon its officers. Huffman v. San Joaquin Co., 21 Cal. 427; Sherbourne v. Yuba Co., 21 Cal. 113; Winbigler v. City of Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 36; Tranter v. City of Sacramento, 61 Cal. 271; Moore v. City of Los Angeles, 72 Cal. 287, 13 Pac. Rep. 855; Barnett v. Contra Costa Co., 67 Cal. 77, 7 Pac. Rep. 177. Whether these cases state the law correctly or not it is not necessary to determine. It is enough to say that they differ materially from the case under consideration. Two of the cases cited may be fairly construed as broad enough to cover this case. Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 313; Howard v. San Francisco, 51 Cal. 52. But so construed they cannot, in my judgment, be supported either by reason or authority. Mr. Dillon, in his valuable work on Municipal Corporations, states the rule thus: "Where streets have been rendered unsafe by the direct act, order, or authority of the municipal corporation, (not acting through independent contractors, the effect of which will be considered presently,) no question has been made or can reasonably exist as to the liability of the corporation for injuries thus produced, where the person suffering them is without contributory fault, or was using due care. Even in those states in which a municipality is not held impliedly liable to a private action for neglecting to keep its streets in repair, it is yet held to be liable if it, or its officers under its authority, by positive acts, place obstructions on the streets or by such acts otherwise render them unsafe, whereby travelers are injured. Where the duty to keep its streets in safe condition rests upon the corporation, it is liable for injuries caused by its neglect or omission to keep the streets in repair, as well as for those caused by defects occasioned by the wrongful acts of others; but, as in such case the basis of the action is negligence, notice to the corporation of the defect which caused the injury, or facts from which notice thereof may reasonably be inferred, or proof of circumstances from which it appears that the defect ought to have been known and remedied by it, is essential to liability." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 1024. I take this to be a correct statement of the law, and one that is supported by an overwhelming weight of authority. 1 Shear. & R. Neg. §§ 273, 288, 289, 291; Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 118; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 541; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264; Nelson v. Canisteo, 100 N. Y. 89, 2 N. E. Rep. 473; Thomp. Neg. 735, 736, notes; Maxmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160; Harper v. City of Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365, 372; Barton v. City of Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 294; City of Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554, 562, 13 Pac. Rep. 729. Innumerable cases might be cited to the same effect, but to do so would unnecessarily extend this opinion. Many of them will be found cited in the text-books above referred to. For the reasons stated I am of the opinion that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the foregoing opinion of Justice WORKS.

---

78 Cal. 600

SWAIN v. STOCKTON SAV. & LOAN SOC.

(No. 12,716.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1889.)

SUBROGATION—PARTIES—FINDINGS.

1. A judgment creditor, after purchasing his debtor's land at a sale under his judgment, and before the statutory period of redemption expires, has a lien on the land, giving him the right to be subrogated to the benefits of a trust-deed prior to his judgment, under Civil Code Cal. § 2904, providing that a junior lienholder may, upon satisfying the claim secured by a superior lien, be subrogated to all the rights thereunder, when necessary to protect his interest.

2. Neither the trustees in the deed of trust nor the grantors are necessary parties to a suit for such subrogation, as they cannot be affected by the judgment therein.

3. A finding that the cestui que trust is unwilling to allow the plaintiff (the judgment creditor) to be subrogated to its rights, but that it was always, and is still, willing to receive the amount of its debt, and to procure the trustees to reconvey to the grantors, is consistent with and supports a judgment allowing plaintiff to be so subrogated.

In bank. Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

Action by Cornelius Swain against the Stockton Savings & Loan Society, to be sub rogated to a lien held by defendant on certain land of Thomas Cornwall and Sarah E. Cornwall. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The plaintiff's action is based upon Civil Code Cal. § 2904, which reads as follows: "One who has a lien inferior to another upon the same property has a right (1) to redeem the property in the same manner as its owner might from the superior lien; and (2) to be subrogated to all the benefits of the superior lien, when necessary for the protection of his interest, upon satisfying the claim secured thereby."

W. L. Dudley, for appellant. J. H. Budd, Aug. Muenter, and W. B. Nutter, for respondent.

Foote, C. This action was brought under section 2904 of the Civil Code, to subrogate the plaintiff to certain superior lien rights of the defendant. The defendant demurred to the complaint, which was overruled. Upon answer filed a trial was had, and a judgment as prayed for passed for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

1. It is contended by the appellant that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

2. That there is a non-joinder of parties defendant.

3. That the findings do not support the judgment.

a. The first point made by the defendant as to the insufficiency of the complaint rests upon the assumption that the plaintiff has no lien which would entitle him to subrogation under the section of the Civil Code supra. The argument is made that after a sale of real property under a judgment to the plaintiff, a judgment creditor, but before the deed is made by the sheriff, and before the time of redemption has passed, the judgment creditor, who has purchased at the sale, has no lien; that it ceased when the sale was made. This is fallacious and is in opposition to the plainly expressed views of the appellate court in People v. Mayhew, 26 Cal. 661, where it is said: "If the right or interest that the purchaser or redemptioner holds prior to the execution of the sheriff's deed is not a mere lien, and with the qualification only of a mere lien, we are unable to give it a legal designation. See Vaughn v. Ely, 4 Barb. 159, and cases there cited."

b. It was necessary to the protection of the plaintiff's interests that he should redeem the property he had purchased at sheriff's sale from a superior lien, and hold the lien himself, which the defendant held as a cestui que trust, under a trust-deed in the nature of a mortgage, which secured a debt from the Cornwalls, who were also the judgment debtors of the plaintiff, and other junior judgment creditors. The plaintiff had become a mere lienholder until the execution of the sheriff's deed should be had. The Cornwalls were insolvent, other junior judgment creditors had a right to redeem the property from the plaintiff, and he could not look to them to repay what he might pay to the defendant, unless he could make it evident that he had paid the superior lien debt of the former, and held the lien. If the defendant, as it wished to do, was permitted (upon the plaintiff's paying to them their debt) to reconvey the property to the mortgagors, the Cornwalls, non constat but what the junior judgment creditors, without further proof that the plaintiff had paid the debt to protect his lien, might claim that the mortgage debt was canceled, the property revested in the Cornwalls, and that the plaintiff did not hold the superior lien given by the trust-deed in the nature of a mortgage. To prevent any such embarrassment it was to the plaintiff's interest to be subrogated to the defendant's rights, and have satisfactory proof thereof.

c. What the plaintiff sought in this action was that he might be placed in the same situation as the defendant in relation to the trustees under the trust-deed, and to the judgment debtors, who were the mortgagors in that instrument. This could only affect the defendant. It did not in any way impinge upon the rights of the trustees or the mortgagors, who were also judgment debtors of the plaintiff. So far as the mortgagors are concerned, it could not fix the amount of their indebtedness. They could have been heard to resist the payment of a greater sum than they owed, under the trust-deed, when an attempt should be made to execute the trust. The trustees could act, under the terms of the deed in trust, as well for one beneficiary as another. It could make no possible difference to them whether the plaintiff or defendant was their cestui que trust. In so far as the subrogation prayed for was concerned, if granted, it could not alter the relations of the parties any more than if the plaintiff had by agreement purchased the debt of the defendant, and had it and the lien securing it transferred to himself.

d. The finding complained of (as to what the defendant was willing to do; that is, to accept the payment of the money it claimed as due under the deed in trust, and procure the trustees to deed the property back to the mortgagors, yet still refusing to subrogate the plaintiff) is entirely consistent with and supports the judgment. Perceiving no prejudicial error, we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: Belcher, C. C.; Hayne, C.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

(78 Cal. 611)

Grandona v. Lovdal. (No. 12,443.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1889.)

Nuisance—What Constitutes.

1. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 731, defines an actionable nuisance as anything which is inter alia obstruction to the free use of property." "Such action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by the nuisance." In an action where the nuisance complained of was a line of cottonwood trees growing near the line of plaintiff's land, it appeared that his land was used for raising vegetables and alfalfa, and that the effect of the branches and shade of the cottonwoods would be injurious to the growing of fruit trees upon that part of his land shaded, but he had never planted any fruit trees adjacent to or anywhere near the cottonwoods, and there was no evidence that he ever intended to do so. Held, that his land was not "injuriously affected," nor his personal enjoyment lessened, by the maintenance of the alleged nuisance.[1]

2. It appeared that the trunks of the trees had grown so large that they extended over and upon plaintiff's land, and crowded the division fence over in like manner; but did not prevent him from plowing his land as close to the division line as he could have done if the trees had not been there. Held, that his personal enjoyment was not lessened by the crowding. So far as the trees and overhanging branches were on or over his land, they belonged to him, and he could have cut them off or trimmed them, as he chose.

3. The fact that defendant maintained the trees for the purpose of supplying himself with fuel and hop-poles, did not entitle plaintiff to maintain the action. The fuel and hop-poles growing over plaintiff's land were his, and could have been claimed by him as against defendant; and the fact that the balance of the limbs and branches were useful to defendant in no way harmed plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

Action to abate a nuisance, brought by Andrea Grandona against Ole Olson Lovdal. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

A. P. Catlin and Henry Starr, for appellant. Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to abate a nuisance, and for damages. The case was tried by the court, and judgment given for defendant, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff has appealed. The plaintiff owns a tract of land in Sacramento county, containing about 15½ acres, and the alleged nuisance is a line of cottonwood trees standing about 8 feet apart along his southern boundary for a distance of about 534 feet. The defendant owns the adjoining land, and the trees were planted by his grantor in 1865, from 8 to 12 inches south of the dividing line. The complaint alleges that the branches of the trees extend over and upon plaintiff's land, and shade the same, and thereby destroy the crops upon about an acre of his land; that the roots of the trees extend upon plaintiff's land for the distance of about 30 feet all along the line of the trees, so near the surface of the ground as to prevent him from plowing and cultivating the land; that the trees, and the branches and roots thereof, destroy the substance of plaintiff's land for a space of about 60 feet wide along the whole line of the trees, and so impoverish the same as to make it wholly unproductive; that the trunks of many of the trees have grown so that a large part of the trunks are extended over and upon plaintiff's land, and have crowded out and pushed down his fences erected upon the dividing line. It is then further alleged that the plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of $500 by reason of the aforesaid wrongs and injuries; that the further continuance of the same will cause him irreparable damage, and that the trees are of no use or value to defendant, and are a permanent and irreparable injury to plaintiff. The answer denies that the trees have destroyed or will destroy any portion of plaintiff's crops; that the roots of the trees, or any of them, extend into plaintiff's land further than five or six feet at any point; that such roots prevent the plaintiff from plowing or cultivating any portion of his land; that the trees, or the branches or roots thereof destroy the substance of any part of plaintiff's land or impoverish such land, or any part thereof; that the trunks of the trees have crowded out or pushed down plaintiff's fence, or any part thereof; that the plaintiff has suffered any damage by reason of the trees, or any of them, or will suffer any damage by their continuance, or that the trees, or any of them, are an injury to plaintiff. And the answer alleges that the trees are useful and very desirable along the boundary line, to mark such boundary, to fasten fences upon, and to anchor them in time of flood, and prevent their being swept away and lost; that the limbs of the trees are valuable and useful for fuel, and the trees are an ornament to both plaintiff's and defendant's lands, and enhance their beauty and value; that defendant has kept the tops of the trees trimmed, to prevent their injuriously shading or otherwise injuring the adjacent lands; that plaintiff can now plow and cultivate as near his boundary as he could if only a common fence, instead of the trees, were along his boundary; and that all of such trees were standing and growing on or near said boundary line long prior to the purchase of their lands by either plaintiff or defendant, and that defendant has not planted or placed any trees in or near such line, and has done nothing to such trees or towards their maintenance other than to trim their tops, to prevent their casting any large or injurious shade, and to fasten a fence thereto, to maintain it in place, and prevent its removal by floods or other cause. The court found upon the issues presented as follows: "That said trees described in the complaint have not destroyed any portion of plaintiff's crop. The roots thereof have not prevented plaintiff from plowing or cultivating any portion of his lands, and plaintiff can now plow and cultivate as near his boundary line as he could if a common or ordinary fence, instead of such trees, were along such boundary. Plaintiff's lands have not been destroyed, nor has the substance of any part been destroyed or impoverished, by said trees, nor by the roots or branches thereof. That said trees have not pushed down plaintiff's fence, or any part thereof, though they have crowded the same over upon plaintiff's land a few inches in places where the bodies of the trees extend across the dividing line. The portion of the fence along such line near said trees has always been maintained by defendant and his grantor, they having, by an understanding with plaintiff, constructed and kept up that part of the fence, while the latter has maintained another portion of the line fence between plaintiff and defendant. In maintaining said fence in place during times of flood the defendant has been very materially aided by such trees; and, but for the use of said trees at such times as an anchorage, said fence would have floated away and been lost on at least two occasions when the levees between said lands and the Sacramento river broke and permitted said lands to be swept by floods. That the limbs and tops of said trees have been cut off by defendant at intervals of about three years apart for use as hop-poles and fuel, and to prevent them casting too great a shade. All of said trees, except 8 or 9, were cut off about 20 feet from the ground and trimmed in the fall of 1885, and their limbs do not extend over plaintiff's line more than 6 or 7 feet. The remaining 8 or 9 trees are by the side of defendant's barn and corral, and their shade is desirable for his stock. They are now about 40 feet high, and their limbs overhang plaintiff's land about 15 or 20 feet. That the defendant has not done any act with respect to said trees other than to cut and trim off their tops and branches, and to fasten fences to such trees in times of flood. That the plaintiff has not suffered any damage by reason of said trees, or any of them, nor will he suffer damage by their continuance, nor are they, or any of them, an injury to him."

---

[1] As to what constitutes a nuisance, see Medford v. Levy, (W. Va.) 8 S. E. Rep. 302, and note; Gas Co. v. Pebley, (Fla.) 5 South Rep. 593.

The Code of Civil Procedure (section 731) defines an actionable nuisance as follows: "Anything which is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, is a nuisance, and the subject of an action. Such action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by the nuisance; and by the judgment the nuisance may be enjoined or abated, as well as damages recovered." In order to maintain his action, it was necessary, therefore, for the plaintiff to prove that the trees complained of constituted a nuisance within the definition above given. The court, as we have seen, found that the plaintiff's proofs were not sufficient, and the only question is, were the findings justified by the evidence?

In the bill of exceptions found in the transcript the evidence is not set out, but it is stated that "there was a conflict of testimony as to whether either the shade or roots of the trees injured plaintiff's land, and as to whether said roots prevented plaintiff from plowing his lands as near said fence as he otherwise could, and as to whether either the shade or roots of said trees had an injurious effect upon the crops of alfalfa which plaintiff was in the habit of growing upon that part of the land where said line of trees partly shaded them." It is also stated that it appeared from the evidence, without conflict, that plaintiff's land was rich and valuable, and was used for raising vegetables and alfalfa, and that the effect of the branches and shade would be injurious to the growing of fruit trees upon that part of his land which was overhung by the branches and shaded by the trees. It is also stated that "the plaintiff had never planted any fruit trees adjacent to the line of trees in controversy, nor anywhere near them," and it is not stated that he ever proposed or intended to do so. It is urged for appellant that the trees were a nuisance, because they interfered with and prevented his enjoying the free and full use of his land for growing fruit trees. But we are unable to see how it can be said that land is injuriously affected, or that its owner's personal enjoyment is lessened, because he cannot use it for a purpose which he has never attempted or wished to use it for. The cases cited in support of this point do not sustain it. In Meyer v. Metzler, 51 Cal. 142, the court said: "It is found as a fact that the projection of the defendant's west wall prevents the plaintiff from raising and repairing his own building, which improvement it is also found that he is desirous of making." And it was held that this amounted to an obstruction of the free use of the plaintiff's property, and was therefore a nuisance. In Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. Rep. 623, the complaint alleged direct and positive damage done to the plaintiff's land by the supposed nuisance, and the court held that it was not subject to a general demurrer. In Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, it was held that "one who maintained a vault so that with his knowledge filthy water habitually filters from it, whether above or below the surface of the ground, into land of a neighbor, where it injures a cellar and well, is liable in damages for the injury, without other proof of negligence." In Com. v. Blaisdell, 107 Mass. 234, it was simply held that steps projecting from a house into a highway, so as to obstruct it, are a nuisance at common law and under the statute of Massachusetts.

It is specified that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision because it appeared that the trunks had crowded the division fence over and upon plaintiff's land, and thereby ousted him from a part of his land. But the plaintiff had never been called upon to repair that part of the fence, and had never been prevented from plowing and cultivating his land as near the line as he could if the trees had not been there. His property was therefore not injuriously affected, nor his personal enjoyment lessened, by the crowding. Besides, the trees and the overhanging branches, in so far as they were on or over his land, belonged to the plaintiff, and he could have cut them off, or trimmed them, at his pleasure. This being so, we do not see how the fact that the trees had grown so that a small part of them was on plaintiff's land could give him any cause of action.

It is further specified that the decision was contrary to the evidence, for the reason that defendant maintained the trees for the purpose of supplying himself with fuel and hop-poles, and thereby using plaintiff's land for his own profit and advantage. But how can this maintain plaintiff's contention? The fuel and hop-poles growing over plaintiff's land were his, and could have been claimed by him as against the defendant. And the fact that the balance of the limbs and branches were useful to defendant in no way harmed the plaintiff, or gave him cause for complaint. We conclude that the judgment cannot be reversed on the ground that the decision was contrary to the evidence or the law; and, as no errors of law are specified or relied upon, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment and order are affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 606

GREENLEAF v. STOCKTON COMBINED HARVESTER & AGRICULTURAL WORKS. (No. 12,741.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1889.)

DAMAGES—LIQUIDATED.

1. Civil Code Cal. §§ 1670, 1671, provide that every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid in case of a breach of an obligation is determined in anticipation thereof is void to that extent, except where, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. A manufacturer agreed to deliver a harvester to plaintiff, with contract of warranty, in exchange for a machine belonging to plaintiff, the latter agreeing to pay in addition thereto a named sum, and, in case the harvester should not do good work, the plaintiff was not to pay any money in consideration of the exchange. Held, that such contract did not come within the exception of the above statute, and that evidence was admissible of the actual damage sustained by plaintiff from a breach of the warranty.

2. A practical machinist who had examined machines manufactured by the vendor similar to the one sold to the plaintiff, was properly permitted to testify to the general design of such machine, and as to whether it was so made as to do the work it was intended to accomplish.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; E. A. BRIDGFORD, Judge.

W. L. Dudley and Geo. A. Blanchard, (Joseph H. Budd, of counsel,) for appellant. Jackson Hatch and H. M. Albery, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover damages for breach of warranty of a harvesting machine, and the appeal is taken by defendant from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. In 1884 the defendant was engaged at Stockton in manufacturing and selling a harvesting machine known as the "Shippee Combined Harvester." The plaintiff, a farmer in Colusa county, purchased and used during that year one of these machines. In 1885 the defendant continued to manufacture the same machine, but with certain improvements. In May, 1885, the parties entered into a written agreement for an exchange of machines. The agreement stated that the party of the first part "agrees to deliver to said party of the second part, at their works, on or before June 3d, one 12-foot Shippee combined harvester, No. 23, as improved for 1885, and warrants the same to do good work when properly handled, and to furnish a man to help set up and start the machine. In consideration of which said party of the second party agrees to deliver to said party of the first part, on or before June 15, 1885, one No. 1 12-foot Shippee combined harvester, purchased last year, and to pay to said party $423 in gold coin on October 1, 1885; $423, with interest from maturity at the rate of 1 per cent per month until paid. It is further agreed that if the harvester should not do good work, that the party of the second part shall so inform the party of the first part; and, if said party fail to make the harvester do good work within a reasonable length of time, it is hereby mutually agreed that the party of the second part is not to pay any money in consideration for the exchange." The new harvester arrived at plaintiff's farm and was set up and started in the field by an employé of defendant on the 5th of June, but it choked up, and would not do good work. Subsequently, at different times, defendant sent three other employés, one of them being the foreman of its works, to adjust and rearrange certain defective parts of the machine, so as to make it do good work, if possible. The plaintiff continued to use, or try to use, the harvester until the 18th of July, when he sent it back to the defendant at Stockton. As explanatory of his reasons for sending it back, plaintiff wrote to defendant, under date of July 22d as follows: "Inclosed find shipping receipt for one of your machines, No. 23, which I shipped to-day to you. The gearing is not right, nor never was. It heats, binds, and cuts all the time, and, as Mr. Southworth said he could not fit it unless it was at the shop, I ship early, so you can have your own time to fix it. The header draper would clog occasionally, and also the feeder. The passage for the straw to the cylinder is too narrow, and don't allow the feed to pass. The drop is too flat. It allows it to move off in bunches and clog. The distance from the grain drag to the sieve is too short, and don't allow the grain to separate from the chaff. The fan don't give wind enough. The steering rig is much out of line; requires too much steering; is hard on man and beast. Had to get another machine to help finish our harvest." A correspondence in reference to the matter was then kept up between the parties for about a year, when this action was brought, and damages asked in the sum of $2,738.85. The verdict on which judgment was entered was for $1,428.

It is contended for appellant that the damages which respondent could claim in case the new harvester should fail to do good work, when properly handled, were liquidated and fixed by the contract of exchange at $423, and that evidence of the damages actually sustained in consequence of a breach of the warranty was therefore inadmissible. It will be observed that the language of the contract in this respect is not very clear or explicit. The contract does not call the $423 "liquidated damages," or say that it shall be treated as the measure of damages, but only that that sum is to be paid for the exchange; and that if the harvester does not do good work, and if appellant, on being so informed, does not make it do good work within a reasonable time, then the money referred to is not to be paid. Did the parties intend by this provision of the contract to liquidate the damages, or to fix a penalty, to be paid in case of a breach of the warranty? We do not think it necessary to answer the question, for the reason that, in any event, the following sections of the Civil Code seem to be controlling in the matter. "Sec. 1670. Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made, for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section. Sec. 1671. The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage."

The rule as to the measure of damages in cases of this kind is declared in sections 3313 and 3314 of the same Code, and under that rule we are unable to see that it was impracticable or difficult to fix the damages which respondent had sustained. We therefore conclude that the court did not err in its rulings on this point.

It is said the verdict was not justified by the evidence, but was manifestly the result of prejudice. There was testimony tending to show that the damages were as great, if not greater, than the amount found; and, while there was a conflict in the evidence upon this subject, and it is impossible to tell how the jury determined upon the exact amount returned, we cannot say that a new trial should be granted on this ground.

It is objected that one Perkins was improperly allowed to testify as an expert. It was clearly shown that the witness was a practical machinist, and was familiar with the requirements of a machine like that in question. He had examined other similar machines manufactured by appellant in 1884 and 1885, and understood the principles applied in their construction. His testimony was as to the general design of the machine, and as to whether it was so made as to successfully do the work it was intended to accomplish. Under all the circumstances shown, we see no error in the rulings of the court as to the admissibility of the testimony of this witness.

It is further claimed that the court erred in modifying certain instructions, and in refusing to give other instructions asked for appellant. After carefully reading all of the instructions requested, we think the law of the case was very fully and fairly given to the jury, and that no error was committed by the modifications and refusals complained of. The other matters discussed by counsel do not require special notice. Looking at the whole case as presented by the record, we see nothing calling for a reversal of the judgment, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

I concur: Foote, C.

Hayne, C. I concur on the ground that I do not think the contract purports to be for liquidated damages.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

(78 Cal. 619)

Curtin v. Phenix Ins. Co. (No. 12,698.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1889.)

Insurance—Conditions—Waiver.

A fire insurance policy issued to the plaintiff provided that, in case the assured should fail to pay the premium note at maturity, the policy should be and remain null and void, but that this should not prevent the company from collecting by suit or otherwise the note, nor should such attempt at collection be construed to revive the policy, but the same should remain null and void until payment of the note, when the policy should be revived. Held that, as the failure of the plaintiff to pay the note at maturity only operated to suspend the policy until payment should be made, the acceptance of a part of the premium after such maturity was entirely consistent with the terms of the policy, and did not operate as a waiver of any rights of the company growing out of the fact that the entire premium was not paid before the occurrence of a loss.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. Rooney, Judge.

Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, for appellant. F. D. & G. W. Nicol, for respondent.

Works, J. Action on a policy of fire insurance. Defense that all of the premium had not been paid. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

The policy was issued on June 30, 1884, and was for a term of five years. No part of the premium was required to be paid in cash on the issuance of the policy. It provided for the giving of a promissory note, which was given as follows: "$190. On the 1st day of December, 1884, for value received, I promise to pay to the Phenix In surance Company of Brooklyn, New York, (at their office in San Francisco, California,) one hundred and ninety dollars and 50-100ths in payment of premiums on policy No. C 3,652 of said company, with seven per cent interest from maturity until paid. If this note is not paid at maturity said policy shall then cease and determine, and be null and void, and so remain until the same shall be fully paid and revived by said company. In case of loss under said policy this note shall immediately become due and payable, and shall be deducted from the amount of said loss. If this note be paid sixty days prior to maturity, all interest shall be waived. It is understood and agreed that this note is not negotiable."

The policy referred to in the note contained the following clause: "In case the assured shall fail or refuse to pay the premium note or notes, or order or orders, above described, when due, this policy shall then and thenceforward be and remain null and void, and the same cannot be revived without the written consent of the company; but this shall not prevent this company collecting, by suit or otherwise, the premium note or notes, order or orders, above described, nor shall such attempt or suit be construed to revive this policy; but the same shall be and remain null and void during such default, and until said assured shall pay such premium note, interest and fees and costs, and until this company shall receive the same, and return said promissory note to said assured, and in such case this policy shall be revived." The policy also contained the following clause: "No agent of this company has power or authority to waive or alter any of the terms or conditions of this policy, except only the general agents at San Francisco, and any waiver or alteration by them must be in writing."

At the time the policy was issued there was due from the company to the assured the sum of $44, on account of return of premium on a surrendered policy, and this sum was credited on the note. The note was not paid at maturity, and some correspondence passed between the parties, consisting mainly of demands by the company for the amount. On June 5, 1885, which was about seven months after the maturity of the note, the plaintiff sent to the general agents of the company at San Francisco the sum of $100 on account of the note, and this sum was accepted and retained. After this the general agents wrote to the plaintiff as follows: "We must have your note settled without further delay. Please close up this small balance." Plaintiff paid no further attention to the matter, for the alleged reason that he had sold some lumber to the local agent of the company upon the agreement that the price was to be paid to the company on account of the balance of the premium, and supposed that the matter would be settled in this way. Nothing further was done on either side, and on April 25, 1887, the property was destroyed by fire.

It clearly appears from the evidence that if the plaintiff furnished lumber to the local agent upon his promise that he would pay the company the premium, the local agent failed to make such payment, and that plaintiff was notified of that fact long before the loss occurred, and payment of the balance was demanded of him. There can be no controversy as to the effect of the provisions in the note and policy. The failure on the part of the assured to pay the amount due did not work a forfeiture of his rights under the policy, but suspended the same until payment was made. In the mean time the company had the right to collect the balance due by suit or otherwise. Upon the collection of the whole amount due, the policy would have revived, but this could not be the effect of the collection of a part of the amount only. In order to obtain the benefit of the insurance the assured was bound to pay the whole amount due by the express terms of his contract. As the company had the right to collect the money notwithstanding the suspension of the policy, the fact that it received a part of the amount could not amount to a waiver. It simply showed an intention to carry out the terms of the policy by collecting the premium, and thereby reviving the same upon full payment being made. This case differs widely from one in which the failure to pay at maturity works an absolute forfeiture of the policy. There the acceptance of the premium after forfeiture is inconsistent with the terms of the policy, and therefore it is properly held that such acceptance is a waiver of the forfeiture. But there is no analogy between such a case and the one at bar. Here the acceptance of the premium, after the maturity of the note, was entirely consistent with the right on the part of the company to hold the policy suspended until the whole amount was paid. It was not a case of forfeiture, in any sense of the term. The right of the assured to avail himself of the benefits of the policy still remained. He could have paid the balance due at any time before the loss occurred, and procured the writing provided for in the policy, and his insurance would have been as valid as in the beginning. Having failed to pay, thus extending the suspension until the loss occurred, he has no reason to complain. To hold otherwise in this case would be to set aside absolutely the plain and unequivocal terms of the contract. This should not be done, however hard the case may seem. As to the alleged payment to the local agent, if such payment was made it was in direct violation of the express terms of the note given by the plaintiff, which provided that payment should be made at the company's office in San Francisco, Cal., and the policy provided that no agent of the company had power or authority to waive or alter any of the terms or conditions of the policy, except the general agent at San Francisco. But it does not appear that payment was in fact made. For these reasons we think the court below should have granted the defendant a new trial. The failure to pay the premium was fatal to the plaintiff's cause of action. Judgment and order appealed from reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(78 Cal. 624)

DREXLER v. SEAL ROCK TOBACCO CO.

(No. 11,022.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1889.)

APPEAL—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE.

Where an appeal was taken in February, 1885, and a brief filed by respondent in 1888, but none has ever been filed by appellant, and the case has never been orally argued, but is submitted in January, 1889, on the briefs on file, the judgment will be affirmed without looking into the record.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMUNDS, Judge.

James L. Crittenden and Ben Morgan, for appellant. McAllister & Bergin and W. H. Sharp, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. In this case the appeal was taken in February, 1885, and points and authorities on behalf of the respondent were filed in September, 1888. The case has never been orally argued, and no brief has ever been filed on behalf of appellant. In January, 1889, the case was submitted on the briefs on file. Under these circumstances the settled rule of this court is that the judgment will be affirmed without looking into the record. Hickinbotham v. Monroe, 28 Cal. 489; Brewster v. Johnson, 51 Cal. 222; Faris v. Lampson, 73 Cal. 191, 14 Pac. Rep. 674; Peek v. Peek, 75 Cal. 298, 17 Pac. Rep. 213. We advise, therefore, that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(75 Cal. 650)

HODGDON v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. et al.

(No. 11,357.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1888.)[1]

APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence of accident or mistake, on a motion to correct a notice of intention to move for new trial, and to insert omitted names of parties, is conflicting, the decision of the lower court will be affirmed.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

McAllister & Bergin, for appellants. D. W. Douthitt, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. There were several defendants in this action, and judgment went in the court below for plaintiff. A notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed by all of the defendants except Leland Stanford and C. P. Huntington, whose names were omitted from the notice. Afterwards, and after the statutory time for filing such notice had expired, the defendants moved the court to correct said notice by inserting therein the names of said defendants Stanford and Huntington, on the ground of accident, inadvertence, etc. Affidavits were filed on the motion by both sides, and the court denied the motion to correct. From the order denying this motion defendants appeal. Whether or not a notice of intention to move for a new trial could, under any circumstances, be amended by inserting the name of a party whose time for giving such notice had expired, it is not necessary here to determine. It is sufficient to say that the evidence before the court below was conflicting as to the point whether the omission of said two defendants from the notice was through inadvertence and mistake, or whether it was intentional, and the motion the result of an after-thought. Under these circumstances, the court had to pass upon the evidence, and find the fact, and we see no reason for interfering with its judgment in the matter. Order affirmed.

SEARLS, C. J., and SHARPSTEIN, PATERSON, THORNTON, and McKINSTRY, JJ., concurred.

(78 Cal. 597)

KERTCHEM v. GEORGE. (No. 12,501.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1889.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALES—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

An administrator's sale of land on a petition which merely describes the land sought to be sold, and states that it is an unperfected claim under the homestead laws, and does not state its value, or whether improved or unimproved, productive or unproductive, occupied or vacant, and the like, is void for want of jurisdiction, where, in the order of sale, there is no recital that proofs of the necessity for the sale for any of the statutory purposes were had at the hearing, nor any recital tending to show the existence of any general facts creating such necessity. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1537, requires the petition to give a general description of all decedent's realty, and the condition and value thereof, but declares that a failure to set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary will not invalidate subsequent proceedings if the defect be supplied by proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity be stated in the decree. The purchaser at such sale cannot be compelled to pay the price.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; PHILLIP W. KEYSER, Judge.

Action by D. J. Kertchem, administrator, against P. George. Defendant appeals. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1537, requires a petition for the sale of a decedent's realty to set forth inter alia "a general description of all the real property of which the decedent died seised, or in which he had any interest, or in which the estate has acquired any interest, and the condition and value thereof, and whether the same be community or separate property," and contains a further provision, which appears in the opinion.

---

[1] Publication delayed by late receipt of copy of opinion.

William G. Murphy, for appellant. J. H. Craddock, for respondent.

Foote, C. This is an action to enforce the specific performance of a contract, by which, as alleged, the defendant became liable to pay the purchase price bid by him at an administrator's sale of the land of a decedent. The answer filed by the defendant alleged, among other things, in paragraph 11 thereof, that the order for the sale of the land "was made upon a defective petition, a copy of which petition is hereto attached and made part of this answer, marked 'Exhibit A,' which did not set forth the amount of personal estate that had come to the hands of the administrator, nor contain a general description of all the real property of which the decedent died seised, or in which the estate has acquired any interest, nor the condition or value of any such property, nor any other facts showing the sale to be necessary; nor were such defects supplied by proofs at the hearing, nor the general facts showing such necessity stated in the said order of sale or decree, a copy of which said decree is hereto attached and made part of this answer, marked 'Exhibit B;' nor was there any other decree order for such sale, or any other foundation therefor than said defective petition." A demurrer to the answer as to that paragraph, as being insufficient in its statement of facts and denials of those of the complaint, to constitute a defense in whole or part to the action, was sustained. Certain other allegations of the answer were stricken out, and upon the remaining issues made by the pleadings the plaintiff had judgment, from which this appeal is taken.

The important question in the case is as to whether the sale of the land was absolutely void, and could not give to the defendant even the title which the decedent may have had to the land. If the sale was absolutely void, and the defendant could get nothing whatever for his money, it does not seem as though the contract attempted to be enforced is so fair and just that a court of equity would force him, without any consideration whatever, to pay over the price for which he endeavored to buy the decedent's interest in the land, and through no fault on his (the defendant's) part failed to obtain it. Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 302; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 353. An examination of the petition for the sale, and Schedule D, to which it refers, shows a description of the land sought to be sold, and discloses the fact that the only recital upon the subject of the condition and value of the land is that it was an "unperfected claim under the homestead laws of congress to S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of E. $\frac{1}{2}$, and lot 4 of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 30, township 16 N., range 5 E., in Long Bar township, Yuba county, Cal." It is not stated what it was worth, whether it was improved or unimproved, productive or unproductive, occupied or vacant, and the like. Nor is any other information given by which the court could intelligently have exercised its judgment that this portion of the property of the estate could be most advantageously sold, so that, unless the decree of sale is of such a character (under section 1537, Code Civil Proc.) as to cure the defects of the petition, the sale was void for the want of jurisdiction in the court to order it. Fitch v. Miller, 20 Cal. 385; Estate of Smith, 51 Cal. 563; Estate of Boland, 55 Cal. 315. The portion of section 1537, supra, applicable here is, "but a failure to set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings, if the defect be supplied by the proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity be stated in the decree." In the order of sale there is an entire absence of any recital that proofs of the necessity for the sale of the land for any of the statutory purposes were had at the hearing, or any proof at all, nor is there anything in the decree which even tends to show the existence of any "general facts" which would create such a necessity for the sale of the land as the law requires. This being so, the sale was void, and the defendant ought not to be compelled to pay a sum of money for absolutely nothing. The demurrer to the answer was improperly sustained, and the judgment should be reversed.

I concur: Hayne, C.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

(78 Cal. 629)

Alta Silver Min. Co. v. Alta Placer Min. Co. et al. (No. 12,812.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1889.)

Corporations—Mortgages—Principal and Agent—Pleading.

1. Under Civil Code Cal. § 2309, providing that authority to execute an instrument required by law to be in writing can only be conferred by writing, a mortgage of real property of a corporation, executed by an agent whose only authority is verbal, is void.

2. Under section 305, declaring that the powers of a corporation must be exercised, and its property controlled, by its board of directors, and section 308, providing that the decision of a majority of the directors, "made when duly assembled," is valid as a corporate act, such a mortgage, executed by the president and secretary without a resolution of the board of directors, is void, though ratified by the holders of two-thirds of the stock. Action by the board is not dispensed with, in the case of a mining corporation, by act 1880, § 1, providing that it is unlawful for the directors of such corporation to sell, mortgage, etc., unless the act be ratified by the holders of at least two-thirds of the stock.

3. A levy of an assessment by the directors, to pay the debt secured by the mortgage, does not render the mortgage valid.

4. Where amendments to a complaint in foreclosure of a mortgage allege its execution, and it is stipulated that for all the purposes of the trial and determination of the rights of the parties the amended answer shall be deemed as a special denial and traverse of the amendments to the complaint the same as if a new and additional answer had been made, etc., denying the same specifically as required by law, the execution of the mortgage by the corporation is put in issue.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. Myres, Judge.

Mortgage foreclosure by the Alta Silver Mining Company against the Alta Placer Mining Company and others. Defendants, except the mining company, appeal.

G. H. Colby and J. M. Fulweiler, for appellants. Wallace & Prewett, for respondent.

Hayne, C. Suit to foreclose a mortgage alleged to have been executed by the Alta Placer Mining Company. This defendant made default. The other defendants had judgment liens upon the mine. The property was sold under one of these judgments to certain of the defendants, to whom a sheriff's deed was issued in due course. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and all the defendants except the company appeal. The points made relate to the validity of the mortgage. The final clause of the mortgage and the signatures are as follows: "In witness whereof the said party of the first part has caused these presents to be subscribed by Robert Rauhut, its agent for that purpose, thereunto duly authorized by resolution and order of its board of directors, and the private seal of said Robert Rauhut, hereby adopted for that purpose as the seal of said corporation, to be hereunto affixed this the day herein first above written. [Seal] Robert Rauhut, Agent. Witness: J. E. Prewett, Auburn. Witness our hands and seals this 2d day of March, A. D. 1886. [Seal] E. D. Boyle, President Alta Placer Mining Company. [Seal] John S. Orndorff, Secretary Alta Placer Mining Company. [Seal] Anton Boegle, Stockholder. [Seal] J. W. Parrish, Stockholder. Witness: P. E. Shannon." Then follows a certificate of acknowledgment by Rauhut before a notary. And then comes the following: "We, the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Alta Placer Mining Company, hereby ratify the foregoing mortgage. Witness our hands this February 12, 1886. Robert Rauhut, Anton Boegle, John S. Orndorff, E. D. Boyle, J. W. Parrish." And then follows a certificate by the secretary that the persons who signed the ratification were the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock. The ratification was acknowledged before a proper officer.

It affirmatively appears that the recital in the clause of the mortgage above quoted, as to a resolution of the board of directors, is untrue. The secretary, who was a witness for the plaintiff, testified as follows: "I was secretary at the time, and Robert Rauhut was authorized by the mortgagor to execute said mortgage; also, so were the president and secretary authorized to execute it. The authority was verbal. There was no resolution of the board of directors authorizing any one, either the president or secretary, or both, or said Robert Rauhut, to execute or deliver the mortgage; neither was the authorization in writing." And there is no evidence to the contrary. Such being the case, it seems clear that, even if it be assumed in favor of the respondent (for the purposes of this opinion only) that the execution was sufficient in form, the mortgage was void for want of authority from the company to execute it. Rauhut was not an officer of the corporation, and authority to execute an instrument required by law to be in writing could only be conferred upon him by a writing. Civil Code, § 2309. His signature, therefore, may be dismissed from consideration. And even if his signature and the final clause of the mortgage can be rejected as surplusage, and the signatures of the president and secretary be taken as the signatures of the mortgage, the difficulty as to the want of authority still meets us.

There is no corporate seal, and it affirmatively appears that there was no resolution of the board of directors. The president has not the power by virtue of his office to mortgage the property of the company. See, generally, Bliss v. Irrigation Co., 65 Cal. 502, 4 Pac. Rep. 507. Nor has the secretary such power by virtue of his office. Blood v. Marcuse, 38 Cal. 594. Nor have both together the power which neither has separately, nor have the stockholders such power. Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 12. The powers of a corporation must be exercised, and its property controlled, by its board of directors, (Civil Code, § 305,) the decision of a majority of the directors, "made when duly assembled," being valid as a corporate act, (Id. § 308.) The board must be "duly assembled." Harding v. Vandewater, 40 Cal. 78. And their transactions should be recorded. Civil Code, § 377; Association v. Bustamente, 52 Cal. 192. The directors, when not acting as a board, have not the necessary power. Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 18. The absence of a resolution of the board renders the instrument invalid. Association v. Bustamente, supra. There is nothing to the contrary in the act of 1880, in relation to mining companies. Section 1 of that act provides that "it shall not be lawful for the directors of any mining corporation to sell, lease, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of the whole or any part of the mining ground owned or held by such corporation, nor to purchase or obtain in any way any additional mining ground, unless such act be ratified by the holders of at least two-thirds of the capital stock of such corporation. Such ratification may be made either in writing, signed and acknowledged by such stockholders, or by resolution duly passed at a stockholders' meeting called for the purpose." Laws 1880, p. 131. This provision does not dispense with action by the board. It requires such action, but requires in addition the consent of the holders of two-thirds of the capital stock.

We do not think that the subsequent levy by the directors of an assessment to pay the debt secured by the mortgage had the effect of rendering the latter valid.

The respondent makes some criticism upon the denials of the answer. But plaintiff filed amendments to its complaint, alleging, among other things, the execution and delivery by the corporation of the mortgage; and the parties entered into a stipulation that, "for all the purposes of the trial and determination of the rights of said parties in this action, the said amended answer shall be deemed, taken, and treated as a special denial and traverse of the said amendments to said complaint the same as if a new and an additional answer had been made and served and filed, denying the same specifically, as required by law." This was sufficient to put in issue the execution by the corporation of the said mortgage. These views render it unnecessary to consider the other points made. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(79 Cal. 7)

BOLLINGER v. MANNING et al. (No. 12,867.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—MORTGAGES—HOMESTEAD—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. Under Civil Code Cal. § 1186, providing that the acknowledgment of a married woman must not be taken unless she is made acquainted with the contents of the instrument on an examination without the hearing of the husband, etc., a certificate of acknowledgment of a mortgage, that she was first made acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and thereafter duly acknowledged, upon examination apart from and without the hearing of her husband, that she executed the same, etc.,—is insufficient, and the mortgage, as to her, is void.

2. After the execution of the mortgage the husband filed a declaration of homestead on the property included in it. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1475 provides that claims secured by incumbrances on the homestead "must be presented and allowed as other claims," and by section 1500 an action cannot be maintained on a claim not presented. Section 1502 provides that if an action is pending against decedent at the time of his death plaintiff must present his claim as in other cases, and no recovery shall be had unless proof be made of the presentation. Held, that foreclosure, pending when the husband died, could not be maintained without a presentation of the claim against the estate, though there were no other assets that could be charged with payment of the mortgage debt, and that it was immaterial that notice of pendency had been filed before the husband's death, or that the homestead was set apart "for the use of the family," it being community property.

3. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1490, requires executors, etc., to publish a notice to creditors, requiring them to present their claims to the executor, etc., "at the place of his residence or business, to be specified in the notice." A notice specified the office of the administrator's attorneys as the place for presentation of claims. The administrator resided and had a place of business in the same town, which was a small one. Held, that the notice was sufficient, knowledge of it not being denied.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; WILLIAM O. MINOR, Judge.

Mortgage foreclosure by Andrew J. Bollinger, executor, against Patrick Manning and others. The certificate of the acknowledgment of the mortgage by Ellen Manning stated "that she was by me first made acquainted with the contents of said instrument, and thereafter she duly acknowledged to me, upon examination, separately, apart from and without the hearing of her husband, that she executed the same freely and voluntarily, for the use and purposes therein mentioned, without fear or compulsion, or undue influence of her said husband, and that she does not wish to retract the execution of the same." Plaintiff appeals. Civil Code Cal. § 1186, provides that "the acknowledgment of a married woman * * * must not be taken unless she is made acquainted by the officer with the contents of the instrument, on an examination without the hearing of her husband." Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1475 provides that "if there be subsisting liens or incumbrances on the homestead, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate." By section 1493 "all claims arising upon contracts, whether the same be due, not due, or contingent, must be presented within the time limited in the notice, and any claim not so presented is barred forever," except in certain cases, where the claimant had no notice. Section 1500 declares that "no holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon unless the claim is first presented," etc.

Archer & Bowden and Schell, Bond & Eastin, for appellant. Wright & Hazen and Stonesifer & Minor, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. Action to foreclose a mortgage. The court below gave judgment for defendants, and the plaintiff appeals. The mortgage in suit was executed by Patrick Manning in December, 1883, and was signed, but not properly acknowledged, by Ellen Manning, his wife. The property mortgaged consisted of 80 acres of land, with the improvements thereon, and was community property. Manning resided upon the property with his family, and in December, 1885, filed a declaration of homestead in proper form thereon, in which he declared, among other things, that he estimated its actual cash value to be $4,000. Plaintiff commenced this action in February, 1886, making Patrick Manning, Ellen Manning, and certain subsequent incumbrancers parties defendant, and at the same time filed a notice of lis pendens. Patrick Manning died intestate in March, 1886, and thereafter Henry Lewis was duly appointed administrator of his estate, and was substituted as defendant in his place. Notice to the creditors of the decedent was published, requiring all persons having claims against him to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication, "to the said administrator at the office of Wright & Hazen, in the city of Modesto; the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate, in the county of Stanislaus, state of California." An inventory of the estate was filed, in which the real property was appraised at $4,000, and the personal property at $1,243.50. In September, 1886, the court, by an order duly made, set apart "for the use of the family of said P. Manning, deceased," the land described in the declaration of homestead, together with the dwelling-house thereon, and its appurtenances, and ordered that the same be not subject to administration. No claim was presented by plaintiff within the time limited in the notice, but about a year thereafter, in October, 1887, plaintiff presented his claim, duly verified, and the same was rejected by the administrator. Thereupon plaintiff amended his complaint, setting up the presentation of the claim as aforesaid, and expressly waiving all recourse against any property of the estate other than that described in the mortgage. The defendants, by their answer, pleaded in bar of the action sections 1475, 1493, 1500 and 1502, Code Civil Proc. The court below held that the action was barred by the sections named, and rendered judgment accordingly.

1. The action cannot be maintained against Mrs. Manning on the ground that she executed the mortgage, and so the title to the mortgaged premises, which vested in her on the death of her husband, fed the security, and inured to the benefit of the mortgagee. The certificate of her acknowledgment had the same defects as the certificate which was held insufficient in Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 63 Cal. 286. And it is well settled that a deed or mortgage of a married woman is void unless it be properly acknowledged by her. McLeran v. Benton, 43 Cal. 467; Leonis v. Lazzarovich, 55 Cal. 52.

2. The case comes fully within the rule declared in Camp v. Grider, 62 Cal. 20. The correctness of that decision has not since been questioned, and the case was cited with approval in Wise v. Williams, 72 Cal. 547, 14 Pac. Rep. 204. The distinctions between that case and this are immaterial. It is true, the action here was pending, and a notice of its pendency had been filed, when Manning died; but that fact did not release the plaintiff from the necessity of presenting his claim. The Code declares that in such case the claim must be presented for allowance or rejection, and that "no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of the presentation required." Section 1502, Code Civil Proc. So the fact that the court by its order set aside the property on which the homestead had been declared "for the use of the family," and not expressly to Mrs. Manning, is of no consequence. The property was community property, and on the death of the husband the title vested absolutely in the surviving wife. Section 1474, Code Civil Proc. The form of the order was therefore immaterial, as it did not and could not change or affect in any way the widow's rights, but simply excluded the property from administration. The court found "that there are not now, nor were there ever, any assets * * * that could be charged with or subjected to the payment of said note and mortgage, or any part thereof, except said land and premises" mortgaged. In Camp v. Grider it is said: "The purpose of the legislature in providing by section 1475 that, if there be subsisting liens or incumbrances on the homestead, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate, was undoubtedly to preserve the homestead, if possible." This being so, it is argued that section 1475 does not apply here. But it does not appear what was the condition of the Grider estate, nor, if it had appeared, do we see how the decision could have been thereby affected. The provision of the section is general, that claims secured by liens or incumbrances on the homestead, selected and recorded prior to the death of the decedent, must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate. The whole matter was under the control of the legislature, and we are not authorized to nullify the plain letter of the law because we can see no good reason for making it applicable to a case like this. As well might any mortgagee claim under section 1500 that he could maintain his action without presenting his claim, and without waiving all recourse against the other property of the estate, if he could show that there was no other property belonging to the estate. It is next earnestly insisted that the decision in Camp v. Grider is not sound law, and ought to be overruled. But, after carefully reading the able argument of counsel, we are unable to reach their conclusion. It seems to us that the decision is a correct exposition of the sections of the Code under review, and that it must therefore be upheld and followed.

3. It is contended that the notice to creditors was insufficient, and that plaintiff lost none of his rights by his failure to present his claim within the time limited. This contention is based upon the fact that the notice specified the office of his attorneys in the city of Modesto as the place where claims were to be presented to the administrator, "the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate." The Code declares that every executor or administrator must cause to be published a notice to the creditors of the decedent, requiring them to present their claims to the executor or administrator "at the place of his residence or business, to be specified in the notice." Section 1490, Code Civil Proc. The administrator resided and was engaged in the business of cabinet making at Modesto, and his attorneys, Wright & Hazen, had their office there. Modesto was a small town or city, and it is not pretended that plaintiff did not know of the notice, or that he could not readily have found the administrator and presented his claim, if he had chosen to do so. The simple question, then, is: Did the fact that the office of the administrator's attorneys, instead of his own workshop or dwelling-house, was designated as the place for the presentation of claims, destroy the effect of the notice, or, in other words, make it no notice? We do not think it did. It seems to us that the words "place of his business" should be construed to include the place where the administrator transacts the business of the estate, though he may be engaged in transacting some kind of business elsewhere. To hold otherwise would often render it quite inconvenient for creditors to present their claims at all. For example, the administrator may live and be carrying on a farm many miles distant from the county-seat, where most or all of the creditors reside, or he may live and be employed in a work-shop in some obscure part of a city, not easily accessible. No authorities are cited upon this point by either side, and we are not aware that any can be found. The language of the Code should therefore be liberally construed, so as to promote justice and subserve the convenience and best interests of all parties concerned. In our opinion, the notice involved in this case was sufficient, and it results that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment and order are affirmed.

(79 Cal. 6)

HEINTZEN v. BINNINGER. (No. 12,794.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

WATERS AND WATER-COURSES—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

An allegation that plaintiff has for 10 years had "the undisputed usufructuary right to the use of all the waters" of a creek does not show an exclusive right to the water, acquired by adverse possession.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; PHIL. W. KEYSER, Judge.

Wm. G. Murphy, for appellant. Forbes & Dinsmore, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This was an action brought for the purpose of restraining the defendant from interfering with the flow of the waters of a stream, a part of which ran into the plaintiff's water ditch, and for damages for such interference. The plaintiff alleged that he "for more than five years immediately prior to the diversion of said water as hereinafter stated, to-wit, for ten years, had the undisputed usufructuary right to the use of all the waters of Little Dry creek, above plaintiff's said land, to the extent of the full capacity of a certain ditch holding about 200 inches of water measured under a four-inch pressure, and running to plaintiff's said lands, across lands now owned by August Schultz, and taking water from said Little Dry creek, about 200 yards due south from the Marysville and Camptonville road." It is then alleged that the defendant erected a dam above the said ditch, and diverted the water from the ditch of plaintiff, etc. Damages are claimed, an abatement of the dam as a nuisance is prayed for, and an injunction preventing its maintenance or erection. A demurrer was filed to the complaint upon the ground, among others, that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, the defendant answered, and judgment was had for the plaintiff for $75 damages, from which this appeal is taken. As a reason why the judgment should be reversed, the defendant claims, among other matters, that, although the plaintiff attempted to allege in his complaint that the defendant had interfered with water-rights obtained by prescription, the language of that pleading would not bear such a construction. In this we agree. What is an "undisputed usufructuary right to the use" of water had by an individual for 10 years? It is not necessarily a right acquired by adverse possession, which element must exist in order that the complaint should be held to have stated a cause of action. A tenant may have from his landlord an undisputed right to use water belonging to the latter, and may do so by his license, in an undisputed manner for 10 years, but this possession of the use is not necessarily adverse, because undisputed. A usufructuary right is the right of using and enjoying the profits of a thing belonging to another, without impairing the substance. Webst. Dict. This amounts to nothing more, at best, than the right to use the water of another, but is not an allegation of a continued adverse usage or exercise of a right. The plaintiff might have claimed such a right for 20 years, but, if he did not exercise it adversely, he could not have set the statute of limitations in motion to protect him. We think the demurrer should have been sustained. For the reasons above stated we advise that the judgment be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed.

---

78 Cal. 640

DUNN v. DALY. (No. 12,601.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE.

The defendant agreed that during a certain period of time he would give to the plaintiff all his freight to haul at a certain rate, and the plaintiff agreed to give defendant's freight preference of all other freight. Held, that payment by the defendant for freight hauled in accordance with the contract, after a violation of the agreement to give his freight the preference, would not operate as a condonation of the breach, so as to prevent defendant from refusing to go on with the contract.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by H. S. Dunn against John Daly. Judgment was given for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Hundley & Gale and F. B. Whiting, for appellant. Goodwin & Goodwin, for respondent.

Foote, C. Daly and Dunn entered into the following written contract: "This agreement, made this 5th day of May, 1885, between John Daly, of Eureka Hill, Plumas county, Cal., and Henry S. Dunn, of Johnsville, same county and state, wherein said John Daly agrees for the term of one year to give said Henry S. Dunn the hauling of all his freight from the junction of Long Valley to Eureka Hill, or Johnsville, at the rate of 75-100 dollars per one hundred pounds, and for the next two years to give 5-100 dollars more than the Plumas Eureka gives for the hauling of their freight. And the said Henry S. Dunn agrees to haul all of said John Daly's freight from the junction in Long Valley to Eureka Hill, or Johnsville, for the term of one year, for the sum of 75–100 dollars for one hundred pounds, and for the next two years at 5–100 dollars per one hundred pounds more than the Plumas Eureka pay for their freight during the season of the year that freight teams are running and the roads are passable. And furthermore agrees to give said Daly's freight the preference of all other freight. [Signed] John Daly. H. S. Dunn." From the findings it appears that during the first year provided for in this contract Daly, the defendant, furnished to Dunn, the plaintiff, for carriage 40 tons of freight, which, being delivered, the price for its hauling, as by the contract stipulated, was paid. The plaintiff did not, during this time, comply with his contract in always giving the defendant's freight the preference in being hauled, which resulted in damage to the defendant to the amount of $50. In the beginning of the freighting season of the next year, 1886, the defendant notified the plaintiff he had sold his mercantile establishment at Eureka Hill, and that he had no more freight for him. In July of that year the plaintiff, at the place from which he was to have hauled it under the contract, demanded the freight of the defendant, and the warehouseman refused to comply with the demand,—the plaintiff being ready and willing to comply with his part of the contract; the defendant, however, refusing to give him any freight to haul, although he still in reality continued his business, as his alleged sale thereof was simulated and fraudulent, and made with the intent to avoid the contract with the plaintiff. The plaintiff teamed with six horses and two wagons, his expenses per day being $6.50. He hauled at a trip five tons of freight, which took him six and a half days to make. The hauling season at that place was between the last day of May and the 1st of November of each year. For the year 1886 the current rate of freight between the points mentioned in the contract was $15 per ton. During the year 1886 the defendant had for hauling, which he could have given to the plaintiff, but did not, 30 tons of freight. The plaintiff during that year hauled for himself 30 tons of freight, and for other parties 34 tons of freight, and his team was not idle during any part of the freighting season of that year; that for such season the plaintiff hired two teamsters,—one for three months, at $35 per month; another for two months, at $50 per month. Under these findings of fact the court declared as conclusions of law that the plaintiff had sustained damage by reason of the defendant's refusal to comply with his contract as to the giving his freight to the plaintiff to be hauled during the year 1886 in the sum of $176.51; that although the plaintiff was guilty of a breach of the contract for the year 1885, in not giving the defendant's freight preference, yet that the latter had condoned and waived the breach by paying the plaintiff for the freight hauled in accordance with the contract for that year; that the defendant was guilty of a breach of the contract for the year 1886, by reason of which the damage above set forth was recoverable by the plaintiff. The defendant claims that upon the findings the judgment should have been for him.

The contract in a sense seems to be separable, so far as the time when the payments for the freight to be hauled was concerned, and the price to be paid, but, as to the time during which the contract was to continue, and the preference to be given the defendant's freight, it was an entire contract. Conceding that any damages would be recoverable by the plaintiff, resulting from the defendant's repudiating the contract, after the plaintiff's breach of it, it then becomes a question what the plaintiff should recover. The expense which the plaintiff was at (his teams being fully employed) could have been no greater if he had hauled 30 tons of the defendant's freight, rather than 30 tons for some one else, which he did haul. He would have been compelled, had he hauled the defendant's 30 tons of freight, to have declined to haul 30 tons which he did haul. His damage, then, if any, must be measured by the the difference between the price he was to receive for hauling the defendant's freight and that which he actually received for hauling the same number of tons of freight for others. The defendant had 30 tons of freight which, if the contract existed, was to be hauled at $16 per ton. In lieu thereof the plaintiff hauled 30 tons for others at $15 per ton. His damage, then, if entitled to any, could not be more than $30. But we do not think he is entitled to anything. He first broke the contract which he had made. The defendant paid him for what he had done, as the conduct of the former evidently shows, in order that he might end the whole matter without further trouble; and the refusal afterwards to go on with the contract, was, we think, optional with the defendant. He had found, as he thought, that the plaintiff would not keep his contract. He paid him what was claimed, not as a waiver of his own rights, or condonation for the breach of the contract by the plaintiff, but with a view to leave no question about his own right to refuse to give the plaintiff further freight. Upon the whole case we think that on the findings the judgment should be reversed, and so advise.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

HAYNE, C. I concur in the second ground stated in the opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion of Mr. Commissioner FOOTE, the judgment is reversed.

We dissent: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.

(79 Cal. 1)

GREENWADE v. DE CAMP. (No. 12,822.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

PUBLIC LANDS—CONTEST—EVIDENCE.

The fact that plaintiff, who filed application to purchase a tract of land belonging to the public domain for which a certificate of purchase had been issued to the defendant, did not commence his action within 60 days after the order of reference of the contest was made, as required by Pol. Code Cal. § 3417, did not, on a subsequent application being made by the plaintiff, and on his bringing his action within the required time, preclude him from giving evidence of acts of actual settlement performed by him upon the land prior to the time when the right to bring his action under the first order of reference terminated.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Paris, Goodcell & Fox, for appellant. Byron Waters and Harris & Gregg, (William G. Webb, of counsel,) for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was instituted upon an order of reference from the state land-office to the superior court of San Bernardino county, to annul a certificate of purchase to the defendant, and have an adjudication that the plaintiff was entitled to purchase of the state the land involved in the controversy. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals from that, and an order denying a new trial. The main contention for a reversal of the judgment is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. From the evidence the court was warranted in believing that the plaintiff settled upon the land in dispute with the intention of making it his home, and of residing there in the capacity of an actual settler with his wife and family; that he was prevented from maintaining his constant residence there by the necessity of seeking relief for his sick wife at various points, but that he never ceased to consider the land his home and residence, exercised all the care he could over it, left some of his household goods in the house he had built, and nothing in his conduct intimated that he intended to abandon the settlement he had thus actually made. The court found "that the said defendant was not at the time of filing his application, and never has been, an actual settler upon or in occupation of any portion of said land." We cannot say that the evidence does not sustain the finding.

Another feature in the case, which it is claimed ought to have determined the controversy against the plaintiff, is that he did not, under a prior application he had made to purchase the land, comply with the provisions of section 3417 of the Political Code; that is, that he did not bring his action as a contestant within 60 days after the order of reference was made, on the first application. And this being so, and "his rights in the premises and under the application" having ceased, it is claimed that he was not entitled in this action, under his second application and order of reference, to introduce evidence of acts of actual settlement upon the land which had been been performed by him prior to the 6th of September, 1885, the date when the 60 days expired within which he should have instituted his action under the first order of reference. If the statute means to declare that all evidence of bona fide actual settlement, made prior to the date when a suit could be brought on an order of reference, shall go for naught, be it ever so clear and satisfactory, and is absolutely of no avail to a settler under any state of facts, unless within 60 days after the making of the order of reference he shall bring his action to determine a contest, perhaps the contention of the appellant is maintainable. In this case the proposition contended for amounts to this: that no evidence of acts of settlement is admissible, if they occurred at any time prior to the day on which, under the rule of law laid down in the section of the Political Code, supra, the right to bring the action on the first order of reference ceased. We do not think the law in question should be given so narrow a construction. It is a provision intended to compel one claiming to be an actual settler upon and a proposed purchaser of state land to have determined his contested right to purchase the land within a certain period of time. But it is not intended or declared that such acts shall not be admissible in evidence in an action upon a second application to purchase, and order of reference, to show actual settlement upon the land in controversy. The claimant had no right to purchase the premises under the first application, because he did not bring his action in time. He is not precluded thereby from bringing an action upon a subsequent application to purchase and order of reference. He stands in the action brought as he did before the first order of reference. His residence could avail him nothing under his first application, because he did not bring his action as the law required, in time. But he brings this action as if the first application had never been made. He stands like any other person, as if he had never been given a first order of reference. Greenwade v. De Camp, 72 Cal. 449, 14 Pac. Rep. 177. There is no obliteration of the existence of his prior acts of settlement, although it has resulted from his failure to bring an action in time that he could not have maintained it under the first application to purchase and order of reference. It would seem, therefore, that in this proceeding, no prior action having been brought, that he was entitled to show any acts of settlement which he performed prior to the 6th of September, 1885. We perceive no sufficient evidence of any occupancy of the land adverse to the plaintiff which would render his affidavit susceptible to the charge made that it is false in that particular. No prevailing reason has been advanced which should cause the judgment and order to be reversed, and we advise that they be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(79 Cal. 14)

STAPLES v. CONNOR. (No. 12,415.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALES—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

By Laws Cal. 1861, p. 481, and Hitt. Gen. Laws § 4735, a public administrator, before entering on the duties of his office, was required to execute a bond and take the oath of office. One appointed as public administrator did not take oath or give bond, but undertook the administration of an estate, and continued therein, and made a sale of land after the election of a public administrator. Held, that he did not represent the interests of minor heirs, and that, the sale being void, ejectment by such an heir was not barred by probate act Cal. § 190, providing that no action for the recovery of any estate sold by an administrator shall be maintained by any heir unless commenced within three years after the sale, or by the corresponding provision of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1573.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county; A. J. BUCKLES, Judge.

Action by Marshall Staples against J. M. Connor. Defendant appeals. Probate act Cal. § 190, provided that "no action for the recovery of any estate sold by an executor or administrator under the provisions of this chapter shall be maintained by any heir or other person claiming under the deceased testator or intestate, unless it be commenced within three years next after the sale."

J. F. Wendell and George A. Lamont, for appellant. John F. Ellison, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Ejectment. The respondent, who was a minor until within a year from the commencement of the action, claims as heir of the former owner. The appellant claims as the purchaser at an administrator's sale made in 1870. It is virtually conceded that the sale was void, and we think there can be no doubt on the subject. The position of the appellant is that the action was barred by section 190 of the probate act, and the corresponding section of the Code of Civil Procedure, (section 1573;) and except for the reason stated below we should be inclined to think that this is so. See Meeks v. Vassault, 3 Sawy. 206; Meeks v. Olpherts, 100 U. S. 564; McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 342, 343, 14 Pac. Rep. 879. These cases proceed upon the principle that the administrator represents the heirs, (minors as well as others,) and that, when he is barred by limitation, they are also. But it is manifest that if there was no administrator the principle upon which the above decisions rest has no application.

Now, in the present case (which comes up without any of the evidence) the sale was by one who assumed to act as administrator, but who was not such. He had not taken out letters of administration upon the estate, and he was not entitled to act as public administrator. If he had been really the public administrator it would not have been necessary for him to take out letters upon the particular estate; for the statute in force at that time provided, in relation to counties other than San Francisco and Sacramento, that he "shall not be required to obtain letters of administration therefor, but may proceed to the performance of the same by virtue of his office." Laws 1860, p. 105, § 3. But it is also provided that before entering upon the duties of his office he shall execute a bond in a large sum of money, (Laws 1861, p. 481,) and shall take the usual oath of office. See Hitt. Gen. Laws, § 4735. The person who assumed to sell the property involved here did neither of these things. It is found that in 1866 there was a vacancy in the office of public administrator, and that the board of supervisors appointed Joseph Hewitt to fill the same, but that he "did not qualify as such public administrator in that he did not take or subscribe to any oath of office, and did not execute any bonds as such." It is further found that a public administrator was elected in 1868, but that Hewitt kept on with the estates which he had taken in charge, and in 1870 made the sale in question here. It is not necessary to say that none of the acts of Hewitt can be sustained as acts of an officer de facto. But we think that a man who has not given the official bond required by law, and who is not even under the sanction of an oath of office, cannot be said to represent the interests of the minors, within the meaning of the cases above cited, so as to raise the bar of the statute of limitations against them. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

(79 Cal. 30)

AH FONG v. STERNES. (No. 12,740.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1889.)

FALSE IMPRISONMENT—VENUE.

1. A complaint averred that plaintiff was unlawfully confined and restrained of his liberty by the defendant; that a writ of habeas corpus was duly issued to defendant to produce the body of plaintiff at a specified time and place, which was served upon defendant while he had plaintiff in his custody, but that defendant refused and still refuses to obey said writ; and that by reason thereof plaintiff "has been unlawfully imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the defendant," and has suffered damages in the sum of $5,000. Held, that the complaint states a cause of action for false imprisonment, and must be brought in the county of the defendant's residence. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

2. If the complaint can be regarded as stating a cause of action under Pen. Code Cal. § 1505, providing for the recovery of a penalty for refusal to obey a writ of habeas corpus, which by Code Civil Proc. § 393, must be tried in the county where the cause of action arose, it presents a double aspect, and the ambiguity must be resolved against the pleader.

3. If the complaint be regarded as stating two separate causes of action, one of which is removable to the county of defendant's residence, and the other not, this fact cannot deprive defendant of the right to a change of venue.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

Action by Ah Fong against George H. Sternes.

Charles W. Kitts and A. L. Hart, for appellant. Cross & Simonds, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Appeal from an order refusing a change of venue. The complaint avers, in substance, that the plaintiff was unlawfully confined and restrained of his liberty by the defendant at Nevada township, Nevada county, Cal.; that a writ of habeas corpus was duly issued to the defendant by the superior court of Nevada county, commanding him to produce the body of the plaintiff at a specified time and place; that said writ was served upon the defendant while he had the plaintiff in his custody and under his control, but that defendant refused and still refuses to obey the said writ; and that "by reason of the aforesaid acts and doings of said defendant plaintiff has been unlawfully imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the defendant for the period of five days, and has suffered damages and injury in the sum of $5,000." The prayer was for judgment for that sum and costs. The motion was for change of venue to Sutter county, on the ground that that was the residence of the defendant.

If the action is to be regarded as an action for false imprisonment, the defendant was entitled to have the case sent to Sutter county. If, however, it is to be regarded as an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty under section 1505, Pen. Code, which provides in relation to writs of habeas corpus that, "if the officer or person to whom such writ may be directed refuse obedience to the command thereof, he shall forfeit and pay to the person aggrieved a sum not exceeding $5,000, to be recovered by an action in any court of competent jurisdiction," then the retention of the case in Nevada county was proper, under section 393, Code Civil Proc., which provides that actions "for the recovery of a penalty or forfeiture imposed by statute" must be tried in the county where the cause of action or some part thereof arose, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial in proper cases.

We think that the complaint states a good cause of action for false imprisonment. The allegation that the plaintiff was "confined and restrained of his liberty by the defendant" is an allegation of physical and bodily restraint, which would serve as a foundation for the old action of trespass vi et armis. In such an action it is not necessary to aver, as would be necessary in an action for malicious prosecution, that the imprisonment was malicious or without probable cause. Colter v. Lower, 35 Ind. 286; Carey v. Sheets, 60 Ind. 20, 21; Akin v. Newell, 32 Ark. 605. It is not even necessary to allege that the imprisonment was unlawful, (though that is alleged here.) If matter of justification exists, it must be pleaded by the defendant. "Whoever assaults or imprisons another (except in some cases under particular statutes * * *) must justify himself by showing specially to the court that the act was lawful." 1 Chit. Pl. (16th Amer. Ed.) *635; Gallimore v. Ammerman, 39 Ind. 318; Carey v. Sheets, supra; People v. McGrew, 20 Pac. Rep. 92. We do not regard the expressions in the opinion in Hirsch v. Rand, 39 Cal. 318, as intended to assert a different rule. The allegation of imprisonment, coupled with the averment of damage above quoted, constitutes a cause of action for false imprisonment

And we are inclined to doubt whether the complaint can be regarded as stating a cause of action for a penalty, under section 1505, Pen. Code, for the reason that the complaint makes no reference to that section, or indicates in any way that it is for the violation of a statute. But, assuming that it can be so regarded, it is evident that it was framed with a double aspect. In one aspect it is a good complaint for false imprisonment; in another aspect it may be assumed to be a good complaint for a penalty imposed by statute. Now, we do not think that the plaintiff by so framing his complaint can deprive the defendant of his right to have the case tried in the county of his residence. The rule is that ambiguities must be resolved against the pleader, and we think that this is a proper case for its application.

Even if the complaint be regarded as stating two separate causes of action, upon one of which the defendant would be entitled to a change of venue, but not upon the other, the result would be the same. It is the plaintiff's own doing if the complaint be so drawn. He cannot deprive the defendant of his right to a change of venue by the addition of something to the complaint. If this were not the rule, it would be very easy for a plaintiff to defeat the defendant's right in the matter. All that plaintiff would have to do would be to add another cause of action to his complaint. It need not be a genuine cause of action, and it would not matter whether the two causes of action were properly united or not. For the defendant could not compel their separation by demurrer before moving for a change of venue, because he is required to take his proceedings for such change at the time of answering or demurring. Code Civil Proc. § 396. And the "right is to be determined by the condition of things existing at the time the parties claiming it first appeared in the action." Machine Co. v. Cole, 62 Cal. 318; Buell v. Dodge, 57 Cal. 645. And even if this were not so, and the court had power to postpone the hearing of the motion until after the hearing of the demurrer, it would deprive the defendant of his right to have the demurrer heard in the county of his residence. Heald v Hendy, 65 Cal. 321, 4 Pac. Rep. 27.

In any view that can be taken, therefore, the order refusing a change of venue was erroneous. The other propositions do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be reversed, with directions to the court below to make an order transferring the case to Sutter county.

We concur: Belcher, C. C.; Foote, C.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to make an order transferring the case to Sutter county.

McFarland, J. I dissent. The complaint either states a cause of action under the provisions of the Code about habeas corpus, or it states no cause of action at all. There is no averment of any liability of defendant under the original arrest. The averred liability is upon his refusal to obey the writ of habeas corpus. I think, therefore, that the motion for a change of venue was properly denied.

Thornton, J. I dissent.

79 Cal. 105

PEOPLE ex rel. DAVIDSON v. PERRY. (No. 12,537.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

BOARD OF HEALTH—TERM OF OFFICE—APPEAL—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The proceeding under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 802–810, to determine conflicting claims to an office, is substantially equivalent to quo warranto, and is therefore a "case at law," within the meaning of Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4, relating to the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court.

2. Where in such proceeding there is a prayer that the court impose a fine of $5,000, as it is by Code Civil Proc. § 809, authorized to do in any action for the usurpation of an office, in case of a decision adverse to the defendant, the proceeding is a case at law, embracing a money demand amounting, exclusive of interest, to more than $300, and the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction.

3. Pol. Code, § 909, requires the oath "of all officers, whose authority is not limited to any particular county," to be filed in the office of the secretary of state; and that of all county officers to be filed in the offices of the clerks of their respective counties. Section 996 provides that an office becomes vacant on the officer's "refusal or neglect to file his official oath or bond within the time prescribed." Id. § 3005, declares that the board of health for the city and county of San Francisco consists of the mayor and four physicians residing in such city and county, appointed by the governor, and holding their offices for the term of five years. By section 3007 the board has authority to appoint a health officer, not only for the city and county, but also for the port, of San Francisco; and, by section 3009, a quarantine officer for the quarantine grounds, which are fixed at the anchorage of Sausalito, in Marin county. All vessels coming into the harbor with cholera, smallpox, etc., must report to the quarantine officer. By section 3022 the board may provide and maintain suitable hospitals at Sausalito. Held, that the members of the board of health are both county officers and officers "whose authority is not confined to any county," and that, as the statute (section 909) makes no provision for such a contingency, their failure to file their oath in the office of the clerk of the county, after filing it in the office of the secretary of state, cannot be regarded as a "refusal or neglect" to file it, so as to work a forfeiture.

4. Const. Cal. art. 20, § 16, provides that, "when the term of any officer or commissioner is not provided for in this constitution, the term of such officer," etc., "may be declared by law; and, if not so declared, such officer," etc., "shall hold his position * * * during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment, but in no case shall such term exceed four years." The members of the board of health for San Francisco, whose terms of office are by statute fixed at five years, have power to appoint subordinate officers, exercise a general supervision over the sanitary affairs, etc., control the landing of passengers and freight, control burials, abate nuisances, etc. Held, that they are "officers," within the meaning of the constitution, and hence the attempt to make their term of office five years is invalid.

5. The clause relating to the term of office, being invalid, must be regarded as out of the statute entirely; thus leaving the term of office at the pleasure of the governor, the appointing power. The court cannot hold it unconstitutional, only as to the excess over four years.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WILLIAM T. WALLACE, Judge.

Garrett W. McEnerney and David McClure, (R. S. Mesick and M. M. Estee, of counsel,) for appellant. Wilson & Wilson, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action instituted by the attorney general under the provisions of chapter 5, tit. 10, pt. 2, Code Civil Proc. §§ 802–810, to determine the respective claims of the relator and the defendant to the office of member of the board of health of the city and county of San Francisco. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the superior court, and judgment thereupon rendered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals. It appears from the complaint that the defendant was appointed a member of the board of health by the late Gov. Bartlett on the 14th day of April, 1887. He was notified of his appointment on the following day, and six days later—April 21, 1887—assumed the office. He took and subscribed the official oath, and filed the same with the secretary of state in due time, but he has never filed it in the office of the county clerk of San Francisco. In this state of the case, Gov. Waterman on the 23d day of November, 1887, appointed and commissioned the relator a member of the board in the place and stead of the defendant. Relator thereupon, and within 10 days after being notified of his appointment, took and subscribed the oath of office and filed the same with the clerk of San Francisco. But the defendant, after notice of relator's appointment and qualification, refused, and was sustained by the board in refusing, to admit him to the office. These allegations of the complaint, confessed by the demurrer to be true, present the two questions upon which the decision of the controversy depends.

It is conceded that if there was a vacancy in the office at the date of relator's appointment, or if the tenure of the incumbent was during the pleasure of the governor, the title of the relator is valid. And in his behalf it is contended—First, that there was a vacancy in the office by reason of the failure of defendant to file his official oath in the office of the clerk of San Francisco; and, second, that, whether such vacancy existed or not, the tenure of the office is, under the law and the constitution, at the pleasure of the governor.

But, before entering upon a discussion of these questions, it will be necessary to dispose of a preliminary objection of the respondent to the jurisdiction of this court to entertain the appeal. He claims that the jurisdiction of this court is derived from the constitution alone, and can neither be enlarged nor restricted by the legislature, and he contends that cases of this character are not comprehended in the constitutional enumeration of cases in which this court has jurisdiction. Section 4 of article 6 of the constitution provides as follows: "The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity, except such as arise in justices' courts; also in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to $300; also in cases of forcible entry and detainer, and in proceedings in insolvency, and in actions to prevent or abate a nuisance, and in all such probate matters as may be provided by law; also in all criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or information in a court of record, on questions of law alone."

We understand the argument to be that this is not a case in equity, nor a case at law, but that it is an action in a particular case,—a special statutory proceeding similar to that under consideration in Houghton's Appeal, 42 Cal. 36. We cannot assent to this view. There is no analogy between this case and the proceeding which the court was asked to review in Houghton's Appeal. That was an assessment of damages and benefits resulting from the change of grade of certain streets. This is a proceeding substantially equivalent to that by quo warranto. It is the same as quo warranto, with something added. Quo warranto was a case at law. It afforded the legal remedy for the usurpation of an office. And we think this court retains jurisdiction of the case, notwithstanding the legislature may have changed the procedure, enlarged the remedy, and given it a new name. To hold otherwise would be to admit a power in the legislature to abridge our jurisdiction, and take from parties the right of appeal, by the easy device of a change of procedure, in many cases where the right and jurisdiction are unquestioned.

This case also sustains the other test of jurisdiction. It embraces a money demand amounting, exclusive of interest, to more than $300. The office, it is true, is purely honorary, the incumbent being entitled to no salary or other pecuniary reward. But the court may, in its discretion, in any action for the usurpation of an office, in case of a decision adverse to the defendant, impose, as part of the judgment, a fine of $5,000, (Code Civil Proc. § 809;) and in this case such judgment is prayed. Without reference, therefore, to the numerous "particular cases" in which this court has assumed and exercised appellate jurisdiction, or the cases (such as Palache v. Hunt, 64 Cal. 474, 2 Pac. Rep. 245) in which it has been held that a meaning must be attributed to the section of the constitution above quoted broader than is contained in its express terms, we feel fully warranted in holding that we have jurisdiction of this appeal, as a case at law in which there is a demand, exclusive of interest, exceeding $300.

Coming then, to the merits of the controversy, we will consider, first, whether there was a vacancy in the office, caused by defendant's failure to file his official oath with the county clerk. Section 3 of article 20 of the the constitution provides the form of official oath to be taken and subscribed by all officers before entering upon the duties of their respective offices. Section 904 of the Political Code contains a similar provision. Sections 907 and 909 are as follows: "Sec. 907 Whenever a different time is not prescribed by law, the oath of office must be taken, subscribed, and filed within ten days after the officer has notice of his election or appointment, or before the expiration of fifteen days from the commencement of his term of office, when no such notice has been given." "Sec. 909. Every oath of office certified by the officer before whom the same was taken must be filed within the time required by law, except when otherwise specially provided, as follows: (1) The oath of all officers whose authority is not limited to any particular county, in the office of the secretary of state; (2) the oath of all officers elected or appointed for any county, and of all officers whose duties are local, or whose residence in any particular county is prescribed by law, in the offices of the clerks of their respective counties; (3) each judge of a superior court and county clerk must, so soon as he has taken and subscribed his official oath, file a copy thereof, signed with his own proper signature, in the office of the secretary of state."

If the defendant was such an officer as is described in the first subdivision of section 909, he was clearly right in filing his oath of office with the secretary of state. If he was such an officer as is described in the second subdivision, he would have been as clearly right in filing his official oath with the county clerk. It happens, as we construe the act creating the office, that it is embraced by both subdivisions. The authority of the board is not limited to any particular county, but residence of the members in a particular county is prescribed by law. "The board of health for the city and county of San Francisco consists of the mayor of the city and county, and four physicians in good standing, residing in the city and county of San Francisco, appointed by the governor, and holding their offices for the term of five years." Pol. Code, § 3005. But the board has authority to appoint a health officer, not only for the city and county, but for the port, of San Francisco. Section 3007. The quarantine grounds of the bay and harbor of San Francisco are fixed at the anchorage of Sausalito, in Marin county. Section 3004. The board appoints a quarantine officer. Section 3009. All vessels coming into the harbor with cholera, small-pox, etc., must report to the quarantine officer. Section 3013, and see sections 3014-3017. The board may provide and maintain suitable hospitals at Sausalito. Section 3022. In short, they may exercise authority, not only in San Francisco, but in all the counties including any part of the bay of San Francisco, and especially in Marin.

Was it, then, the intention of the legislature that these officers should file their official oath in two places,—one with the secretary of state, and another with the county clerk?

Or was it sufficient to file in one place, with the clerk or the secretary, as they might choose? We have little doubt that in framing the provisions of section 909 of the Political Code it was intended and understood that subdivisions 1 and 2 should embrace distinct categories, mutually exclusive, and that the case of an office embraced under each was never contemplated, and consequently that it was not in fact intended that the oath should be filed in both places; but, at the same time, it is no doubt true that an officer whose residence in San Francisco is prescribed, but whose authority extends to other counties, does not fully and literally comply with the directions of the statute unless he files his oath of office with both the county clerk and the secretary of state. The question, however, still remains, does a failure to comply with this improvident exigency of the law in its literal terms work a forfeiture of the office? By section 996 of the Political Code it is provided that "an office becomes vacant on the happening of either of the following events: * * * (9) His refusal or neglect to file his official oath or bond within the time prescribed." Independent of this provision of the Code, the requirement as to filing the oath within a certain time might well be treated as merely directory, not working a forfeiture in case of non-compliance, and we are not prepared to hold that an officer who by the first subdivision of section 909 is directed to file his official oath with the secretary of state, and by the second subdivision is directed to file the same oath with the county clerk, has, within the meaning of the section denouncing a forfeiture of the office, (996,) refused or neglected to file his official oath, when he has, in fact, filed it with the secretary of state. Provisions for forfeiture of vested rights, whether in statutes or contracts, are not favored, and are, as they ought to be, construed as strictly or as liberally as possible against the forfeiture. In this case it is not literally true that the officer has neglected or refused to file his oath of office. The most that can be said is that he has neglected to file it in one of the two offices where, by apparent inadvertence, the legislature has, upon a doubtful construction, directed it to be filed. Having complied with the constitutional requirement of taking and subscribing the oath, and satisfied the object and policy of the statute by filing it in the office where state officers (to which class he belongs,—Pol. Code, §§ 343, 360, 3005) generally are required to file their official oaths, we think he is protected against the forfeiture, and that, if the relator is entitled to the office, it is only because the members of the board of health hold at the pleasure of the appointing power.

The act creating the board of health was passed April 4, 1870, and was entitled: "An act to establish a quarantine for the bay and harbor of San Francisco, and sanitary laws for the city and county of San Francisco." St. 1869-70, p. 716. Its main provisions were subsequently incorporated into the Political Code, § 3004 et seq., and it was afterwards supplemented by several statutes, all passed prior to the adoption of the new constitution. By section 2 of the act corresponding to section 3004 of the Political Code, the membership of the board is prescribed, and the term of its members, other than the mayor of San Francisco, who is ex officio a member, is fixed at five years. The authority conferred upon the board embraces the power to appoint subordinate executive officers, to exercise a general supervision over all matters appertaining to the sanitary condition of the city, to control the landing of passengers and freight, to seclude persons affected with contagious diseases, control burials, and abate nuisances. There can be no doubt, we think, that this constitutes the members of the board "officers," within the meaning of that term as used in article 11, § 7, of the old constitution. Unlike the commissioners of the funded debt, who in People v. Middleton, 28 Cal. 605, were held not to be officers within the meaning of the section referred to, the members of this board exercise important police powers pertaining to the administration of the state government, and are officers according to the strictest definition of the term. So much of the act, therefore, as fixed the duration of their office at five years, was in direct conflict with the section cited from the constitution of 1862, then in force, which reads as follows: "Sec. 7. When the duration of any office is not provided for by this constitution, it may be declared by law; and, if not so declared, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; nor shall the duration of any office not fixed by this constitution ever exceed four years." And we think it is equally in conflict with the corresponding provision of the new constitution, which reads as follows: "When the term of any officer or commissioner is not provided for in this constitution, the term of such officer or commissioner may be declared by law; and, if not so declared, such officer or commissioner shall hold his position as such officer or commissioner during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; but in no case shall such term exceed four years." Article 20, § 16, Const.

The argument of counsel for respondent, that this section of the new constitution refers exclusively to officers mentioned in the constitution itself, and not to officers of statutory creation, is ingenious, but not convincing. In its terms the section embraces all classes of officers, statutory as well as constitutional, and no considerations of policy are suggested requiring any abridgment of its apparent meaning. The words "such term," in the last clause, evidently refer, as their antecedent, to the term to be declared by law when not provided in the constitution. And it is contrary to the whole tenor and spirit of the constitution to suppose that, while its framers carefully limited the terms of all executive officers by them created within the period of four years, they would give unlimited power to the legislature to create offices with terms extending indefinitely beyond that period. We must hold, therefore, that the clause of the act fixing the term at five years is unconstitutional; and unless we can at the same time hold, in accordance with the contention of respondent, that it is only unconstitutional as to the excess of the term attempted to be fixed over that permitted by the constitution, it follows that no term has been declared by law, and consequently that the defendant held at the pleasure of the governor, and that the relator's title is valid. It is, of course, a familiar doctrine that an entire legislative act will not be declared invalid merely because some single section or isolated provision is in conflict with the constitution. If this were not so, it would follow that the attempt of the legislature in the act under consideration to make the term of the members of the board of health five years had the effect of destroying the entire statute. It is clear, we think, under the authorities, that no such effect follows, and that, on the contrary, the act is in other respects valid and in force. But we know of no precedent for holding that a clause of a statute, which as enacted is unconstitutional, may be changed in meaning in order to give it some operation, when admittedly it cannot operate as the legislature intended. This would, it seems to us, be making a law, and not merely correcting an excess of authority. Our conclusion is that the legislature has failed to fix the term of the members of the board of health; that the term of the office is at the pleasure of the governor; and that on the case presented by this record relator is entitled to the office. For these reasons the judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to said court to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

79 Cal. xix

PEOPLE v. CLINTON. (No. 13,045.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

In bank.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in People v. Perry, ante, 423, (opinion this day filed,) the judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views therein expressed.

---

79 Cal. xix

PEOPLE v. ROSENSTIRN. (No. 13,046.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

In bank.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in People v. Perry, ante, 423, (opinion this day filed,) the judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views therein expressed.

---

79 Cal. xix

PEOPLE v. MCCARTHY. (No. 13,047.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

In bank.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in People v. Perry, ante, 423, (opinion this day filed,) the judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views therein expressed.

---

78 Cal. 581

In re ALLEN'S ESTATE. (No. 12839.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

EXECUTORS—RESIGNATION.

1. A paper signed by the executrix of her deceased husband's will, after her second marriage, reciting the fact of her marriage, and that she has thereby become incompetent to act as executrix, and requesting the court to confer upon a person mentioned therein the appointment of an administrator, is the equivalent of a resignation, within Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1427, providing that an executor may resign by filing a writing to that effect in the superior court, having first settled his accounts, and delivered up the estate to the person appointed by the court to receive it; and, there being no evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed, after the court has appointed her successor, that she has settled her accounts, and paid over the funds.

2. Such an executrix is not within Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1365, subd. 1, authorizing a surviving wife, though a non-resident of the state, to nominate her deceased husband's administrator, as by her subsequent marriage she loses her status as surviving wife, and becomes only an heir or legatee.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

O'Brien, Morrison & Daingerfield and Davis Louderback, for appellants. Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. James Allen, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, died in the month of October, 1887, leaving a will, which was admitted to probate in December of that year. Margaret Allen, the widow of deceased, was appointed executrix of the will, and duly qualified as such. On the 2d day of April, 1888, Mrs. Allen married one John F. Von Muegge, and has ever since been his wife. Four days later, on the 6th of April, Frederick Eulert filed in court a petition asking to be appointed administrator of the estate of deceased with the will annexed, and with his petition he also filed a paper, subscribed by Margaret Von Muegge, which reads as follows: "Superior Court, San Francisco, Department Nine. In the Matter of the Estate of James Allen, deceased. I, the undersigned, surviving wife of the above-named deceased, hereby request Dr. Frederick Eulert to accept the office of administrator with the will annexed of said deceased, to serve in my place and stead, as I became the wife of John F. Von Muegge on the 2d of April, 1888, and am no longer authorized to be or act as executrix of the last will and testament of said deceased; and I hereby request the above-named court to appoint said Eulert as administrator with the will annexed." On the 20th of April, William Allen, the eldest son of deceased, filed a petition asking that letters of administration on the estate be issued to him, and on the same day, upon his motion, James C. Pennie, the public administrator of the city and county of San Francisco, was appointed special administrator of the estate, "whereupon," as stated in the bill of exceptions, "said Eulert and Margaret Von Muegge excepted." On the 3d of May, William Allen renounced his right to letters, and nominated Pennie for the office, and thereupon on the same day Pennie filed his petition asking to be appointed administrator of the estate with the will annexed. Notices of the several applications were posted as required by law, but no citation to show cause why her letters testamentary should not be revoked was ever issued or served upon Mrs. Von Muegge, nor did she ever consent to any revocation thereof, or resign her office as executrix, except as hereinbefore stated. When the applications came on to be heard, the court denied the petition of Eulert, and granted that of Pennie, and letters were issued to him on the 29th of May, 1888. From this last order Eulert and Mrs. Von Muegge have appealed.

In support of the appeal two points are made by the appellants: First, that the court had no authority to direct that special or general letters be issued to Pennie until an order had been made, after notice and hearing, revoking the letters issued to the executrix; and, second, that Mrs. Von Muegge had a right to nominate her successor.

In support of the first point, the case of Schroeder v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 343, 11 Pac. Rep. 651, is cited and relied upon. In that case the petitioner was appointed executrix of the will of her deceased husband, and afterwards married. Special letters of administration upon the estate were then issued, the executrix never having resigned her trust, or been suspended or removed, or notified to appear and show cause why her letters should not be revoked, and it was held that, under the circumstances shown, the superior court had no power to make the order appointing a special administrator; the decision, it would seem, resting mainly upon the fact that when section 1352, Code Civil Proc., is read in connection with other sections, the words, "her authority is extinguished," used in that section, must be construed as only the equivalent of "she ceases to be competent."

That case differs from this in an important particular. Here the court finds that the executrix, after her appointment, married and became the wife of Von Muegge, and that the paper signed by her, and reciting the fact of her marriage, and that she was "no longer authorized to be or act as executrix," and asking the court to appoint Eulert administrator of the estate, has been filed in court. That paper was the equivalent of an express resignation of her trust, and the court had the right to receive and act upon it as such. "Any executor or administrator may, at any time, by writing filed in the superior court, resign his appointment, having first settled his accounts, and delivered up all the estate to the person whom the court shall appoint to receive the same." Section 1427, Code Civil Proc. It is true it does not appear that the executrix had settled her accounts or turned over the estate, nor does the contrary appear. It must be presumed, therefore, in support of the action of the court, that the law in this respect was fully complied with. It is suggested that the executrix should have had an opportunity to appear in court, and contest the averment of her marriage and the genuineness of the paper asking for Eulert's appointment; but she was in court when the special administrator was appointed, and excepted to the order. She did this under the name of Margaret Von Muegge, and, so far as the record shows, no question was then or ever made in that court as to the fact of her marriage, or the genuineness of the paper referred to. Our conclusion is that the case of Schroeder v. Superior Court, supra, is not in point, and that, under the circumstances shown by the record here, the court below had jurisdiction to make the orders appointing both the special and general administrator, and that its action in this regard must be upheld.

As to the second point: When Mrs. Von Muegge requested the court to appoint Eulert as administrator, she had ceased, by reason of her second marriage, to be the widow, or in any strict sense the surviving wife, of the deceased. She had become incompetent to be appointed or to serve as executrix of the will. In Estate of Cotter, 54 Cal. 215, and in Estate of Stevenson, 72 Cal. 164, 13 Pac. Rep. 404, it was held that, under subdivision 1, § 1365, Code Civil Proc., a surviving wife, though a non-resident of the state, might nominate a person to act as administrator of her deceased husband's estate. But the subdivision referred to does not meet the case in hand. Here the trouble is not that the surviving wife was a non-resident, but that she had lost her status as such, and become only an heir or legatee of the decedent. The rule declared in the Estate of Morgan, 53 Cal. 243, seems, therefore, to be applicable. In that case the nomination was made by the heirs and next of kin of deceased, and it was held that, as they were married women, and therefore incapable of administering upon the estate, their expressed preferences for the appointment of the administrator "were of no legal consequence whatever." It was further held that in any event the nominations were addressed to the mere discretion of the court, and were not controlling. See, also, Estate of Beech, 63 Cal. 458. It results, in our opinion, that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

78 Cal. 578

Higgins v. Deeney et al. (No. 11,632.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

Contributory Negligence—Province of Jury.

A woman, carrying one child, and leading another, saw a wagon driven with the horse on a trot on the other side of the street, and started to get into the street for the purpose of crossing. Feeling the child slipping from her arms, she let go the hand of the other child, which ran ahead and was struck and injured by the wagon. The wagon was being driven at a greater speed than was allowed by city ordinance. Held, that the question of contributory negligence of the woman was for the jury, and judgment for damages will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision, Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John F. Finn, Judge.

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for appellant. F. M. Hulsted and Walter Gallagher, for respondent.

Foote, C. Action for damages. The plaintiff alleged that his child, two years and five months old, had been run over, knocked down, and injured by the team of horses and wagon of the defendant William Deeney, driven by Philip Deeney, the servant and agent of William; that the team was being driven at an unlawful rate of speed, and in violation of a city ordinance. Judgment was had for the plaintiff in the sum of $500, from which, and an order denying a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The point is made here for the first time that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, no demurrer having been filed. We think that the complaint, after the verdict of the jury, does state a sufficient cause of action to sustain the judgment. Further, it is said that the evidence of the child's mother, a witness for the plaintiff, shows that the injuries to the child were caused by the mother crossing the street when she saw the team coming up at a trot, and that she knew she would expose herself and children to the reception of injury. That her conduct, according to her own statement, put her in the position of one taking the chances of getting herself or children seriously hurt, and that this evidence is uncontroverted, and therefore the verdict of the jury cannot be upheld. Upon an examination of the evidence which the defendant claims shows that the negligence of the mother was the proximate cause of the injury to the child, we find that the mother had in her arms an infant, and was leading by the hand another small child, and had just gotten onto the crossing of the street, when she saw coming upon the other side of the highway the wagon of the defendant, the horses drawing it on a trot. It does not appear that she attempted to cross in front of the team, but that she was getting into the street for the purpose of crossing at some time, perhaps after the team had passed. At that instant, absorbed in the care of her two little ones, she felt her infant slipping from her arms, and to save it a fall upon the stones beneath, perhaps, she let go her hold upon the other child's hand, and it ran ahead, and near the horses thus going at a trot, and was injured. The team being driven at that place upon a crossing in the midst of a city, and on a much used thoroughfare, at an unlawful rate of speed under a city ordinance (Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 420; Jessen v. Sweigert, 66 Cal. 182, 4 Pac. Rep. 1188,) it may well have happened that the jury thought that if the team had been driven at a lawful rate of speed the child would not have been hurt at all, and that the mother, under all the circumstances, could not be expected to have foreseen the child running on ahead of her, and that the team would not go at a walk on the crossing, where she was properly preventing the infant from falling on the street, and that she was not guilty of carelessness in letting go the child's hand for a moment, but the driver of the wagon was negligent. This being the state of the facts, we cannot say the evidence shows without conflict that the mother was guilty of contributory negligence. Such being the case, it was for the jury to determine the issue, and we do not feel warranted in stating that they have found improperly. The instructions given were proper and suitable, and the amount of damages awarded is not excessive under all the evidence. Perceiving no prejudicial error, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: Belcher, C. C.; Hayne, C.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 73

Stover v. Baker. (Nos. 11,993, 12,355.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

Trial—Sufficiency of Finding to Support Judgment.

In an action to recover money alleged to have been received by the defendant as the agent of the plaintiff on the sale of certain property of plaintiff, the latter alleging that the agent had falsely represented the amount received, and had thereby induced him to settle for a sum much less than he was entitled to, findings that the agent had agreed with the plaintiff on the amount due him, that no false representations had been made, and that the amount agreed upon had been paid, are sufficient to support a judgment for defendant.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. Rearden, Judge.

John Gale and T. M. Osment, for appellant. Van Clief & Gear, for respondent.

Sharpstein, J. This action is for the recovery of money alleged to have been received by the defendant as the agent of the plaintiff, on account of a sale by the defendant, under the authority of the plaintiff, of his interest in a water-right, for which, it is alleged, defendant received $15,000, and fraudulently concealed the fact from the plaintiff, who was induced by the false representations of the plaintiff to settle with him for $1,000. The court found that the defendant sold the interest of the plaintiff in the water-right, together with other interests therein, and afterwards settled with plaintiff for his interest in said water-right. That defendant made no false representations in connection with said settlement, and paid to plaintiff the amount then agreed upon. Judgment was entered for the defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial. Appellant insists that the findings do not support the judgment, and that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings. We think the finding that the defendant settled with plaintiff for his interest in said water right, and made no false representation in connection therewith, and paid plaintiff the amount agreed upon in said settlement, fully supports the judgment. The evidence upon the material issues is conflicting, and we cannot disturb the findings, without violating an old and well-established rule of this court. Judgment in cause No. 11,993 and order in cause No. 12,355 affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

79 Cal. 55

SNODGRASS et al. v. PARKS et al. (No. 12,841.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

VENDOR AND VENDEE—QUIETING TITLE—PARTIES—EVIDENCE—RECEIPT.

1. Where the vendee of land voluntarily abandons his contract of purchase, and becomes the tenant of the vendor, the latter may maintain an action against the former to quiet his title, and to cancel a mortgage given by the vendee to a third person, without first rescinding the contract, and delivering up the vendee's notes for the purchase money.

2. By accepting the abandonment of the contract the vendor waived his lien, and it cannot be contended that his only remedy is by a bill in equity to enforce his lien.

3. The fact that the vendor has contracted to convey it to another does not prevent his bringing the action, as he is still the owner of the legal title, and has the right to defend it.

4. The fact that the vendee has had a homestead declared upon the property is no defense to the action. Conceding that a homestead may be declared upon land held under contract of purchase, such declaration does not give any new title or strengthen the old.

5. The vendee having failed to allege the fact that he was a tenant of the vendor, and therefore entitled to possession, cannot contend on appeal that for that reason a judgment in favor of the vendor is erroneous.

6. The recital in the receipt given for rent paid by the vendee, that the money was paid on the original contract, is not conclusive, and the vendor may show a parol agreement by the vendee, after the abandonment, to pay rent.

7. The mortgagee of the vendee is not a necessary party, for, if the vendee is asserting an unfounded claim, he cannot defend on the ground that some one else is also asserting one.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. T. WILLIAMS, Judge.

Blackstock & Shepherd, (McKinley & Williams, of counsel,) for appellants. J. Hamer, J. M. Brooks, E. S. Hall, and Fred Hall, (W. H. Wilde, of counsel,) for respondents.

WORKS, J. This action was commenced by Larkin Snodgrass, Charles L. Cooper, and J. Marion Brooks against S. B. Parks, N. S. Dunlap, and Alice Dunlap, his wife, to quiet title to real estate, and to have canceled a mortgage given by the defendants Dunlap and wife to Parks upon the property. Dunlap and wife answered that they held the property under a contract from Snodgrass for the conveyance of the lands to Mrs. Dunlap and one Susan A. Watkins, her daughter, deed to be made upon payment of certain sums of money, and the performance of other conditions; that Snodgrass was, at the time of entering into the contract, the sole owner of the property; that Mrs. Watkins had conveyed her interest in the property to Mrs. Dunlap; that the latter had declared a homestead on the property in due form; that she and her husband had executed the mortgage to the defendant Parks, and had subsequently conveyed the land to W. G. Adams and John McElvea; and that the conditions of the contract had been fully performed on the part of said Dunlap and Watkins. The action was dismissed, before trial, as to the defendant Parks, and the said Adams and McElvea were allowed to intervene and set up their interest in the property substantially as in the answer of the Dunlaps. It was also set up by both the Dunlaps and the intervenors that the plaintiffs had, before the bringing of the action, contracted to convey the property to one Redrup, and were for that reason not the real parties in interest. The findings of the court are to the effect that the plaintiffs are the owners of the property; that Snodgrass made the contract to convey as alleged; that the other conveyances between the defendants and Mrs. Watkins were made and the homestead declared by Mrs. Dunlap, as alleged in the answer; but that the defendants had wholly failed to pay the purchase money, or comply with the other conditions of the contract with Snodgrass, and had voluntarily abandoned the same, and become tenants of his, and paid rent for the property. It was also found that the plaintiffs had entered into a contract with said Redrup, agreeing to convey the property to her on certain payments to be made in the future. Under these findings judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and a motion for a new trial by the defendants denied. The defendants appeal.

Many questions are presented by counsel for appellants and argued at great length. We hope to be able to notice all of them. It is contended that Parks, who held the mortgage of Dunlap and wife, was a necessary party to the action. We do not think so. If the defendants are asserting an unfounded claim to the property, they cannot defend an action of this kind on the ground that some one else is doing the same thing.

The claim made that the fact that plaintiffs had contracted to sell and convey the property to another was sufficient to prevent them from bringing the action is equally unfounded. Notwithstanding such contract they were still the owners of the legal title to the property, and had the right to protect and defend the same. The very fact that they had contracted to convey the property and make a good title to their vendee might have rendered it absolutely necessary to remove the adverse claim of the defendants to the land.

Again, it is claimed that as Snodgrass had agreed to convey the property to Dunlap and Watkins, and held their obligation to pay certain sums of money, the plaintiffs, who claim under him, could not maintain the action, at least until he had rescinded the contract and delivered up such obligation. There might be some force in this position, but for the fact that the court finds, upon sufficient evidence, that the defendants acknowledged their inability to pay for the land, and voluntarily abandoned the contract. This court has held in a similar case that, where the vendee has refused to comply with his contract, the vendor may maintain ejectment and recover the land. Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 14. This is a stronger case than the one cited, as the vendees have in this case not only failed to pay, but have expressly abandoned their contract. Having done so, they cannot now be heard to assert any rights under it.

It is further urged that because a homestead was declared upon the property by Mrs. Dunlap the action cannot be maintained. This cannot be so. Conceding, as claimed by the appellants, that a homestead may be declared upon land held under a mere contract to convey, such declaration did not give any new title, or tend in any way to strengthen or enlarge the one then existing. Therefore, when the equitable title created by the contract, and possession under it, was lost in the manner stated, the homestead fell with it. It would be a marvelous doctrine that the filing of a declaration of homestead could create a new title, or render a bad title good.

It is further contended that the evidence and findings of the court show that the defendants Dunlap and wife had an estate in the lands as tenants, and having such estate they were entitled to possession under it, and therefore the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs is erroneous. This might have been so if the defendants had set up any such estate, and claimed under it, but, unfortunately for them, they asserted no such claim in the pleadings, and positively denied in their evidence, given at the trial, that they were such tenants. It is asking too much of this court to protect them from the consequences of such a defense in the manner indicated by counsel. So far as the findings tend to establish any such right in the defendants, or any of them, they are outside of the issues in the case, and must be disregarded. The evidence on the part of the plaintiffs that they had consented to become their tenants was competent, as tending to prove the ultimate fact that they had abandoned the contract of purchase, but in the findings it was a mere recital of a part of the evidence, and should have been omitted.

The court finds that no part of the purchase money named in the contract to sell was paid. It is contended that this is not so, because the defendants delivered to Brooks, for Snodgrass, certain property in payment of the amounts due. The answer to this contention is that the court found, on sufficient evidence, that Brooks was not authorized to receive the property, and that the defendants knew of his refusal to accept the same as payment.

The appellants contend, also, that the contract to sell was never rescinded. What we have said above disposes of this question, but it is due to counsel for appellant to say that their contention is that, even if any agreement was made with Snodgrass which would, if made by Mrs. Dunlap, have amounted to an abandonment of the contract, it appears that such arrangement was made by her husband, and there is no evidence of his authority to act for her. But the court finds that he had such authority, and we think the evidence supports the finding. It is shown that all of the transactions between Snodgrass and Mrs. Dunlap were carried on, on her part, through her husband, and his authority to act for her throughout is not denied by either of the defendants. Again, it is claimed that, if Dunlap had authority to act, the abandonment was without consideration. But this does not appear to have been the case. The abandonment was mutual. Mrs. Dunlap, by stipulation of both parties, ceased to be a purchaser, and became the tenant of Snodgrass. It does not appear that the contract was surrendered, but what took place would bar a recovery upon it, which amounted to the same thing.

In making this second arrangement the parol evidence shows that Dunlap agreed to and did pay $81 as rent. There was a receipt given for the money, which recited the fact that this money was paid on the original contract. Appellants contend that the recital in the receipt was conclusive, and that it was error to allow parol proof to show for what the money was paid. In this counsel are in error. The receipt was not conclusive, and evidence to show for what the money was paid was proper. Winans v. Hassey, 48 Cal. 637; Pereira v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 92, 4 Pac. Rep. 988; Bergson v. Insurance Co., 38 Cal. 541. It will be seen by the authorities cited that a receipt is not a written instrument, the terms of which cannot be contradicted by parol, unless it also contains an agreement binding upon the parties as such.

It is claimed that Snodgrass waived any forfeiture that might have been enforced, for failure to comply with the contract, by extending time of payment. There are two answers to this contention: First, it does not appear that there was any extension of the time of payment; second, there was no forfeiture, but a voluntary abandonment of the contract.

The contention that the only remedy of Snodgrass was by a bill in equity to enforce his vendor's lien is answered by the fact that by the agreement by which the purchase was abandoned, and the defendants became his tenants, Snodgrass waived and abandoned his vendor's lien, if he had one.

It is earnestly contended that there was no forfeiture of the rights of the defendants under the contract of sale. This may be admitted. There was no forfeiture, but an abandonment and surrender of their rights, which was quite another thing. We do not agree with counsel that the conduct of Snodgrass was such as to bind him by the acts of Brooks, on the ground that he had held him out as his agent, and was estopped to deny his authority.

Counsel contend, with much earnestness, and with apparent feeling, that the findings are contradictory and inconsistent, and that one of the issues was not found upon. They say: "It has never been our fortune to examine findings that were so contradictory and inconsistent." We have carefully compared the findings, and find in them no material contradictions or inconsistencies. The findings are subject to criticism, however. They contain much of the evidence, instead of finding the facts proved by such evidence. This very fact has given rise to the alleged contradictions and inconsistencies attempted to be pointed out by the appellants, but, in order to show that such inconsistencies exist, counsel have been compelled to misconstrue or place a wrong construction upon the evidence thus improperly brought into the findings. The court below might have avoided this difficulty by making proper findings. The issue that it is claimed was not found upon was as to the rescission of the contract of sale. The conclusive answer to this is that there was no such issue presented by the pleadings. The court found all of the facts and a great part of the evidence. It could not have done more unless the portion of the evidence omitted had been inserted in the findings. We are not inclined to reverse the case because this was not done. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

85 Cal. 1

EVERSDON v. MAYHEW. (No. 12,517.

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1889.)

TRUSTS—PLEADING—NOTICE—EVIDENCE.

1. Plaintiff's mother, a widow, purchased town lots from one in possession, taking the title in an assumed name, entered into possession, and lived upon the property until her second marriage, when her husband lived with her. The mother died intestate, leaving as her heirs her husband and plaintiff. Prior to her second marriage the United States issued a patent to the town-site to the county judge, in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants, according to their respective interests. After her death the husband applied for and obtained a certificate of title to the whole of the property in his own name, which title by conveyances became vested in defendant. Plaintiff commenced ejectment, claiming the entire property; the complaint alleging that the husband had obtained the title by fraud. On the first appeal the court held that the complaint stated a cause of action in ejectment. On the second appeal the husband was held to have taken the title in trust for plaintiff to the extent of her interest, by virtue of the relationship between them as co-heirs, and decreed to plaintiff a half interest therein. Held, that the sufficiency of the complaint, as stating a cause of action for the enforcement of a trust, was established by that appeal, and, no specific objection having been raised as to misjoinder of causes or variance, the objection will not be considered on the third appeal.

2. On the second appeal the defendant was held to have had constructive notice of plaintiff's rights, but that the answer failed to present the defense. On the third trial the answer was amended, and, while the record introduced failed to show the husband's application, it contained the certificate of title, which recited that the husband duly made claim and application in writing. Held, that the defendant had notice that an application had been filed, and that it would be presumed that it was on file when defendant purchased, and that it set forth the only title the husband had, which was a claim through the wife. BEATTY, C. J., dissenting.

3. It is not error to admit in evidence a copy of a deed without producing the original, where only a general objection is made to its admissibility.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAINARD, Judge.

John F. Ellison and J. Chadbourne, for appellant. Chipman & Garter, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The material facts of this case are as follows: The property in controversy consists of several lots in the town of Red Bluff. For several years before 1865 one Stafford was in possession of these lots. In 1865 he made a deed purporting to convey them to a woman who was then known by the name of Ann Watson, but whose real name was Idonia Eversdon. It does not appear that there was any legal change of name. It would seem that the name of Ann Watson was one which she chose to assume, and it was the name by which she was known. After the conveyance from Stafford she lived upon the property up to the time of her death, in 1867. The plaintiff, who was her child, lived upon the property with her mother. These facts appear clearly and without contradiction. The assertions of counsel as to the insufficiency of evidence appear to us to be based mainly on the difference between the names Idonia Eversdon and Ann Watson. But, inasmuch as the identity of the person bearing or known by these two names is clearly established, we think that the difference of name is unimportant.

It appears, therefore, that the mother of of the plaintiff was an inhabitant of the town of Red Bluff, and was in possession of the property under color of title. She was therefore one of the class for whose benefit the town-site acts were passed. In December, 1866, she married one Henry Wasson. After this marriage she and her child and Wasson lived upon the property until her death, in 1867. She is not shown to have left any will or any other heirs than the plaintiff and Wasson. Before her marriage with Wasson, viz., in September, 1866, the United States government issued a patent for the lands in the town to the county judge, "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants of said town-site according to their respective interests;" and after her death Wasson applied for and obtained a certificate of title to the whole of the property in his own name. He conveyed to one Bryant, and he conveyed to the defendant, who paid valuable consideration for the property, and who had no notice of the rights of the plaintiff other than was given by the public records.

This is the third appeal. The first trial resulted in a judgment for the defendant. This was reversed; the court holding, among other things, that the complaint stated a good cause of action in ejectment. Nothing was said concerning the rest of the complaint. 57 Cal. 144. The second trial also resulted in a judgment for the defendant, and the judgment also was reversed. 65 Cal. 163, 3 Pac. Rep. 641. Upon this second appeal the court held that the plaintiff and Wasson were tenants in common, and that the title acquired by him under the county judge's certificate inured to the benefit of the plaintiff; in other words, that Wasson was a trustee for the plaintiff to the extent of her interest in the property. This was not put upon the ground of any false representation by Wasson in his application for title, but upon the ground of the relation which existed between him and his co-heir. The court further held that the records were sufficient to give notice to the defendant of the plaintiff's rights. The third trial resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendant appeals. There are several matters which the appellant claims were not disposed of by the second appeal.

1. It is contended that, while the complaint states a cause of action in ejectment, as was held upon the first appeal, it does not state a cause of action for the establishment of a trust. The complaint, however, contains more than a cause of action in ejectment. It attempts to show that the certificate of the county judge was obtained by fraud, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the whole property instead of one-half thereof, which was the portion which the court held upon the second appeal that she was entitled to. Now, whatever may be its defects, we think that its sufficiency as a complaint to establish the trust must be held to have been passed upon on the second appeal. We have looked into the transcript and briefs upon that appeal, as it is permissible to do in order to ascertain what is the law of the case, (see McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 576,) and we find that the complaint here is the same as that then before the court, and that the same argument was made against it then that is made now. The court did not say in express terms that it was sufficient, but treated it as stating a cause of action for the enforcement of a trust; for it would not have adjudged that upon the record before it the plaintiff was entitled to the beneficial interest in one-half of the property, if the only cause of action stated in the complaint was in ejectment. The sufficiency of the complaint in this regard, therefore, was not only argued, but was necessarily involved in the decision. Reclamation Dist. v. Goldman, 65 Cal. 636, 4 Pac. Rep. 676. It results that the complaint must now be regarded as stating two causes of action,—one in ejectment, and one for the establishment of a trust. But there was no demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action or on any other ground, and the matter could not be presented by a motion to strike out part of the pleading. And if it be true that the cause of action shown by the evidence was somewhat, but not radically, different from that stated in the complaint, the objection should have been presented either by a specific objection to evidence, or by a motion for nonsuit on that particular ground. The precise ground should have been indicated, which was not done.

2. It is contended that there is nothing to show that the defendant had notice of the plaintiff's rights at the time he purchased. On the second appeal the question of notice was disposed of on two grounds. It was held, in the first place, that the records were such as to give defendant constructive notice of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry; and, in the second place, that the answer was not such as to present the defense. The answer having been amended in the particulars indicated by the court, the question is whether the records were such as to put the defendant upon inquiry. The decision of the court in this regard was rested upon the fact that the record of the deed from Stafford to Ann Watson gave notice that she had a claim, and that the written application of Wasson for the certificate of title showed that he claimed as her heir. The court, in addition, stated that the defendant had examined the records, but whether he had or not is certainly immaterial. Besides this, the defendant expressly admits that he had the records examined. If the record before us shows these two facts, the decision upon the former appeal is conclusive. The written application, however, is omitted from the record, the respondent says, through inadvertence; but, as a matter of course, we must take the record as we find it. In this regard it might, perhaps, be argued that the burden of proof to show that he had no notice is on the defendant. It was held on the second appeal that he must plead the want of notice; and it has been said that the burden of proof of want of notice is on the party setting it up. See Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 227. But, while this is certainly true as to the payment of value, we are not sure whether it is true as to the want of notice, (see Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 419,) and we express no opinion in regard to it; for we think that, upon the record before us, the fact must be taken to be that the defendant had notice that Wasson claimed as the heir of his wife. The county judge's certificate, which conveyed the legal title, and under which the defendant claims, contains the following recital: "Henry Wasson, having duly made claim and application in writing by his oath to me under the last-named act," etc. The defendant, therefore, had notice that a written application was in fact filed by Wasson; and, having been once filed, it will be presumed to have been on file at the time the defendant purchased. Now the law under which the application was made requires that it shall state "the facts constituting the possession or right of possession of the claimant," (Laws 1867-68 p. 489, § 7;) and, inasmuch as the judge granted the application, it must be presumed to have been regular in form, and consequently to have stated the facts constituting Wasson's right of possession. But the only right of possession which he had, and apparently the only one which he claimed, was as the heir of his wife. And it must be presumed that he stated the one which he had, and not some one which he did not have or claim; for if he did not state the facts truly he would have been guilty of perjury, which will not be presumed. The presumption of innocence is strong, and has been held to overcome even the presumption of life. Montgomery v. Bevans, 1 Sawy. 653. It is rather to be presumed that the county judge mistook the law than that Wasson committed perjury in stating the facts. If he stated the facts truly, the application on file showed that he claimed as heir of his wife. And hence it must be held upon the record before us that the defendant had notice that Wasson claimed through his wife. This brings the case within the decision upon the second appeal, which is the law of the case.

3. It is contended that the court erred in admitting in evidence the copy of the deed from Stafford to the mother of the plaintiff without accounting for the original. The exclusion of such a document would have to be placed upon the ground that the copy was not the best evidence. But the objection was not made upon this ground, and a general objection is insufficient. Braly v. Reese, 51 Cal. 462. If a specific objection had been made, the defendant might have accounted for the original. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

WORKS, J. I concur in the judgment.

BEATTY, C. J., (dissenting.) I dissent from the conclusion that the defendant had notice, actual or constructive, of plaintiff's equity at the time of his purchase. Upon this point the evidence in the record before us differs materially from that presented on the second appeal. 65 Cal. 167, 3 Pac. Rep. 641. And I do not understand it to have been held in that case that constructive notice of the deed to plaintiff's mother, and of Wasson's application for patent, was imputed to defendant by reason merely of their existence as records. It was, as I understand the opinion, decided that he had actual knowledge of these records, and that this was sufficient to put him on inquiry which would have informed him of plaintiff's rights. In this record evidence of actual notice of the deed and application is wanting. The judgment and order should, in my opinion, be reversed.

---

78 Cal. 625

PAINTER v. PAINTER et al. (Nos. 11,731, 11,795.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1889.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—COMPENSATION.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1510, providing for the appointment of an attorney to defend an action on a claim presented against an estate by the personal representative thereof, and that, if the plaintiff recover no judgment, he shall pay all costs, including reasonable attorney's fees to be fixed by the court, a charge for services rendered by an attorney so appointed, for his services in the supreme court in the successful defense in such an action, included by him in his bill of costs presented to the trial court after the record has been remitted, should be stricken out, as such a fee is no part of a bill of costs, but should be fixed by the court.

2. The allowance of the fee can only be made after termination of the action, and should be fixed by the trial court.

3. The claim sued upon being for the sum of $57,000, an allowance to the attorney of $1,000 for services in the supreme court is reasonable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeals from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F W. LAWLER, Judge.

Theodore P. Painter, one of the executors of the will of J. B. Painter, deceased, presented a claim against said estate for more than $57,000, which was rejected, and he brought suit thereon. Warren Olney, Esq., an attorney, was appointed to defend the action, and did so, final judgment being rendered on demurrer to the complaint against the plaintiff. The court allowed Mr. Olney $250 for his services, and, the judgment having been appealed from, it was affirmed by the supreme court. 9 Pac. Rep. 450. The other facts appear in the opinion.

C. H. Parker, (Edward J. Pringle, of counsel,) for plaintiff. Warren Olney, pro se, (Jas. K. Byrne with him.)

Foote, C. An attorney was appointed by the superior court to resist a claim against an estate, under section 1510 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He did so successfully in the superior court, and was allowed $250 for such service. The case was then heard upon appeal in the supreme court, and the judgment affirmed. 68 Cal. 396, 9 Pac. Rep. 450. Upon the going down of the remittitur, the attorney presented for allowance in the court below a cost-bill including a fee of $1,000 for his services in the appellate court. A motion was made to strike out the fee from the cost-bill. The motion was granted, and from it an appeal was taken by the attorney, the matter in the appellate court being numbered 11,731. Apprehending, perhaps, that this was not the proper way in which to have the court fix his fees, the attorney then moved, upon notice, that the superior court fix a reasonable fee for services performed by him in the appellate court. The court below granted the motion, and fixed the fee at $1,000. From that order an appeal is taken by T. P. Painter, the plaintiff, and the cause is numbered 11,795. Both appeals were argued and submitted together.

With reference to the first contention, it is clear that the fee was no part of the cost-bill. It was not for the attorney, but for the proper court, to fix the fee for his services. In a case concerning a similar matter the supreme court entertained the view just expressed. Rapp v. Gold Co., 74 Cal. 533, 16 Pac. Rep. 325.

The portion of the section of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, pertinent to the second matter of controversy is: "If the claimant recover no judgment he must pay all costs, including defendant's reasonable attorney's fees, to be fixed by the court." It was not positively ascertained that the plaintiff did recover "no judgment" until the appellate court acted on his appeal. Then it was finally declared that he could have no judgment. The estate stood as much in need of an attorney in the appellate as in the lower court. Under that statute no attorney's fee could be fixed or allowed by any tribunal for services performed before the appellate court by the attorney appointed by the superior court, until the court of last resort had made it a finality that the plaintiff was entitled to "no judgment." The language of the section cited certainly indicates that the same court which was to allow the costs was to fix the "reasonable fees" for the attorney so appointed. This authority given the court could only be exercised when the fee now in dispute was to be allowed by an order made after final judgment, and the allowance is necessarily an incident to such judgment when given against the claimant as plaintiff in the action. A reasonable attorney's fee was as just and proper for services in the upper as in the lower court. The amount fixed by the latter tribunal is not objected to. The superior court was familiar with the condition of the estate, the services already performed under its supervision, and was fully competent in the light of such knowledge to declare what was a reasonable fee for services rendered in the appellate court. If the supreme court had in all cases the burden thrown upon it of determining such matters, where oral testimony would often have to be heard as to the proper fee to be fixed, including such facts as the value of the estate, its condition, and the amount of service performed, it would be very inconvenient, and perhaps not so easy of ascertainment as in the court where the estate is held in charge and the proceedings are first begun. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended to leave as a matter of original jurisdiction the fixing of all fees contemplated by the section, supra, to the superior court. Its discretion has been fairly exercised, and in a manner very similar to what was done in the case of Ex parte Winter, 70 Cal. 291, 11 Pac. Rep. 630, approved in Larkin v. Larkin, 71 Cal. 330, 12 Pac. Rep. 227. We therefore advise that both orders appealed from be affirmed.

I concur: Belcher, C. C. Hayne, C., took no part in this decision.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the orders are affirmed.

---

79 Cal. 50

McAulay v. Truckee Ice Co. (No. 12,-919.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

Appeal—Record.

As, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 397, a court has power in certain cases to change the place of trial of an action, it will be presumed, on appeal from an order making such change, when the record does not contain the "papers used on the hearing in the court below," as required by section 951, that they were sufficient.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. Walling, Judge.

Action by Thomas McAulay against the Truckee Ice Company, a corporation, to recover for labor performed and money advanced. On motion of defendant, an order changing the place of trial to the city and county of San Francisco was made, from which plaintiff appeals.

Fred Searls, for appellant. George A. Knight, for respondent.

Foote, C. An appeal from an order changing the place of trial of the cause. The appellant in such case "must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, of the * * * order appealed from, and of papers used on the hearing in the court below." Section 951, Code Civil Proc. A copy of the notice of appeal and of the order appealed from is in the record, but there are no papers identified as having been used on the hearing of the motion to change the place of trial. The court below had the power in certain contingencies to make the order. Section 397, Code Civil Proc. "There being no showing to the contrary," it must be presumed to have exercised "its power properly, and within the rules prescribed by law." Pardy v. Montgomery, 19 Pac. Rep. 530. We therefore advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

---

78 Cal. 586

INGRAM'S ESTATE v. CLOUGH et al. (No. 12,869.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

DESCENTS AND DISTRIBUTIONS—AMENDMENT.

1. Under Civil Code Cal. § 1386, par. 5, providing that if a decedent left a surviving husband or wife, and neither issue, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the whole estate shall go to the surviving husband or wife, a surviving husband of an intestate wife, who left no issue or any of the relatives mentioned, is her sole distributee, though the children and grandchildren of a deceased sister of the intestate survive her; as paragraph 2 of said section, enacting that the children of a deceased brother or sister of the intestate shall take their parent's share, applies only to cases in which there is a surviving brother or sister.

2. A decree awarding only half of the estate of the intestate in such case to the husband's assignee may, on motion of the latter, after notice, be amended so as to distribute to him the whole estate.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

J. M. Seawell, for appellants. M. C. Baum and Henry I. Kowalsky, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. Hannah G. Ingram died intestate, and left surviving her John W. Ingram, her husband, but left no issue, and no surviving father or mother, brother or sister. There were living, however, at the time of her death, certain children and grandchildren of a deceased sister, who are the appellants herein. A decree of distribution was rendered May 10, 1888, in the court below, by which one-half of the estate was distributed to the said surviving husband, (or rather to his assignee, Kowalsky,) and the other half to the said children of the deceased sister. Afterwards, upon due notice and hearing, on July 18, 1888, the decree was amended so as to distribute the whole of the estate to the said assignee of said surviving husband. From this amendment of the decree the appeal herein is taken.

It is entirely beyond doubt that the whole of the estate should have been distributed to the surviving husband. Paragraph 5 of section 1386 of the Civil Code is too clear to present any difficulty of construction whatever. It is as follows: "If the decedent leave a surviving husband or wife, and neither issue, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the whole estate goes to the surviving husband or wife." Paragraph 2 of said section refers to the case where there is a surviving brother or sister, and provides that in such case, if there be also children of the deceased brother or sister, they shall take their parents' share by right of representation. It is vain to argue against the injustice of the rule, or to contend that in a case like the one at bar the children of a deceased sister ought to have a share in the estate when there is not any surviving brother or sister, as well as when there is. Succession to estates is purely a matter of statutory regulation, which cannot be changed by courts.

We think the court had power to modify the decree upon the ground stated in the motion to amend, and that the power was properly exercised. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

79 Cal. 90

HUTSON v. WOODBRIDGE PROTECTION DIST. et al. (No. 12,342.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1889.)

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Act Cal. April 15, 1880, providing for the protection of lands from overflow by a system of works under direction of boards of trustees appointed for certain protection districts, the expense to be assessed upon the lands benefited, by commissioners, whose report shall be subject to review by the supervisors of the county at a meeting to be held after advertisement thereof in a newspaper, the decision upon the report, when made by said supervisors, to be final, and to constitute the basis of assessment within the district, and further providing that the collection of the tax so assessed may be enforced by sale of the land, is unconstitutional for authorizing property to be taken without due process of law, no opportunity being given to land-owners to be heard as to the validity of the assessment. Following 16 Pac. Rep. 549.

In bank. On rehearing. For statement of facts, see former opinion by department 2, 16 Pac. Rep. 549.

J. H. Budd, for appellants. J. B. Hall, (Dunlap & Vischer, of counsel,) for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed for the reasons stated in the opinion of department 2, (16 Pac. Rep. 549,) which opinion is approved and adopted as the opinion of the court in bank.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 75

DORLAND v. BERNAL et al. (No. 11,928.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1889.)

APPEAL—RECORD.

An appeal from a judgment, and from an order discharging a rule requiring plaintiff to show cause, etc., will be dismissed when the transcript does not contain a copy of the judgment roll.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

For opinion on former appeal, see 4 Pac. Rep. 1065.

Moses G. Cobb, for appellants. J. M.

Wood, (J. C. Bates, of counsel,) for respondent.

Per Curiam. As stated in the notice of appeal, this appeal is from a judgment entered June 1, 1886, and from the order discharging the order upon the plaintiff to show cause, etc., made on the 23d day of July, 1886. The transcript does not contain a copy of the judgment roll, and is fatally defective in that respect. There is no order of July 23, 1886, in the transcript, and this appeal was taken more than 60 days after that date. Appeal dismissed.

3 Cal. Unrep. 75

Powell v. Sutro. (No. 11,728.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1889.)

Change of Venue.

Where the defendant in an action commenced in a justice's court asks to have the cause transferred to the superior court of the county where he is sued, for the reason that the cause involves the legality of a tax, there is no authority, upon the transfer being made, to transfer the cause to another county for trial.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Edmund Tausky, for appellant. Moore & Reed, for respondent.

Thornton, J. This action was commenced in a justice's court in the county of Alameda. The defendant set up in his answer facts going to show that the determination of the cause would necessarily involve the legality of a tax, and therefore, on his motion, the cause was transferred to the superior court of the county of Alameda for trial. The defendant then claimed in that court that he was, and had been for many years, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, and demanded that the place of trial be changed to the superior court of the city and county above mentioned. This demand was denied, and thereupon he prosecuted an appeal to this court. We find no power vested in the superior court to change the place of trial in this case. The defendant, having been sued in a justice's court, asks that the cause be transferred to the superior court of the county where he is sued, for the reason mentioned above, and his request is granted. When the cause gets to such superior court the defendant must try his cause in that court. The law makes no provision for its removal to any other court. Order affirmed.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Sharpstein, J.

79 Cal. 137

Doland v. Mooney et al. (No. 12,762.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

Taxation.

1. It will not be adjudged that a tax-sale was made for a sum exceeding the amount of the tax and legal costs, and is therefore void, because the recitals of the amount in the certificate and deed differ.

2. The certificate recited that M. was "the bidder who offered to take the least quantity of said property, or the smallest portion of interest therein." A certificate of tax sale and the deed stated that "said least quantity of said property, or smallest portion of interest therein, is situated in said county of S., and is described as follows, to-wit: All of the above-described property." Held, that the "least quantity," and not only "the smallest portion of interest," was offered for sale and sold.

3. The certificate and deed recited that "said taxes, with 5 per cent. and the cost of publication, and other costs, not having been paid," etc.; but also recited that the purchaser offered to take the least quantity, and pay the taxes and costs due thereon. Held, that it did not appear that the amount for which the sale was made included anything for costs of publication, and the sale was not on that account void.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; John W. Armstrong, Judge.

Action by F. F. Doland against John E. Mooney and another. For opinion on former appeal, see 13 Pac. Rep. 71. Plaintiff appeals. Pol. Code Cal. § 3776, requires the certificate of tax-sale to state, when known, "the name of the person assessed; a description of the land sold; the amount paid therefor; that it was sold for taxes, giving the amount and year of the assessment, and specifying the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed." By section 3786, "the matters recited in the certificate of sale must be recited in the deed. * * *" Section 3773 provides that the owner or possessor may designate the part to be sold, and, if he does not, the collector may; "and the person who will take the least quantity of the land, or, in case an undivided interest is assessed, then the smallest portion of the interest, and pay the taxes and costs due, including 50 cents to the collector for the duplicate certificate of sale, is the purchaser."

D. E. Alexander, for appellant.

Grove L. Johnson, C. L. White, and Lincoln White, for respondents.

The proceedings in tax sales are strictissimi juris. Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 249; Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 632; Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609; Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 131; Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637; Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233; Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522; Blackw. Tax-Titles, (4th Ed.) 36–38. The motto de minimis non curat lex does not apply. Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637.

Paterson, J. Action to quiet title. At the trial plaintiff offered in evidence to support his claim of title a certificate of tax-sale and a tax-deed. The certificate was admitted; the deed was excluded. The ruling of the court in excluding the deed is assigned as error. Respondent contends that the deed is void because it does not recite the matters recited in the certificate. We have examined the particulars in which the deed differs from the certificate, and are of the opinion that none of them are material.

In the certificate it is stated that the taxes and costs amount in all to the sum of $35.71. In the deed the amount recited is $35.21. The authorities cited hold that, if a sale of land for a delinquent tax is made for a sum in excess of the tax and legal costs, the sale is void unless the excess is less than the smallest fractional coin authorized by law. We cannot say that because the certificate and deed differ in such recitals the sale was for a sum in excess of the tax and legal costs. If an excessive amount was demanded, and the property sold therefor, it would invalidate the sale, and that fact may be shown, but the presumption is in favor of the regularity of official action.

In the certificate it is recited that Mayo was "the bidder who offered to take the least quantity of said property, or the smallest portion of interest therein." The point is made that only the "least quantity" should have been offered for sale or sold. We think it clear that such was the fact. The certificate and deed both define what is meant by "least quantity" and "smallest portion of interest," as follows: "Said least quantity of said property or smallest portion of interest therein is situated in said county of Sacramento, and is described as follows, to-wit: All of the above-described property." Quantity was offered, and only quantity was sold.

It is contended that the certificate and deed both show that a portion of the costs for which the property was sold was "costs of publication;" that, although it does not appear how much was collected by the tax collector as costs of publication, yet the recitals make it clear that something was collected; and that, as the law nowhere provides that any costs of publication may be collected, the sale must have been for a sum in excess of the taxes and legal costs due, and was therefore void. There are in the certificate and deed preliminary statements that "said taxes, with 5 per cent. and the cost of publication and other costs not having been paid," etc.; but they both recite that Mayo was the bidder who offered to take the least quantity and pay the taxes and costs due thereon, including 50 cents for the certificate, and it does not appear that the amount for which the property was actually sold included anything for "costs of publication." We think that the certificate and deed conform substantially to sections 3776 and 3786, Pol. Code, and that the court erred in refusing to admit the deed in evidence. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

I dissent: MCFARLAND, J.

---

79 Cal. 97

FAGUNDES v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 12,660.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1889.)

WHO ARE FELLOW-SERVANTS.

1. A laborer, employed by a railroad company to remove snow and other obstructions, is a fellow-servant, within the law of negligence, with the track-walker, whose duty it is to see that the track is clear, and with a conductor of a train.[1] PATERSON and THORNTON, JJ., dissenting.

2. Defendant was properly allowed, after introducing his evidence, to renew a motion for nonsuit, first made immediately after plaintiff's evidence was introduced.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F MYRES, Judge.

Hale & Craig, for appellant. T. H. Laine and Wallace & Prewett, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the death of his son, caused by the alleged carelessness of the defendant. After the introduction of the evidence on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was refused. It then introduced evidence in its own behalf, after the conclusion of which a motion for a nonsuit was again made and granted. The plaintiff then moved for a new trial, which the court allowed, from which the defendant appeals.

There is no conflict in the evidence. The deceased was a laborer employed by the defendant to remove snow and other obstructions from its track, and was under the immediate control of a road-master. He had directed the former to take his place in the car having sleeping accommodations, in company with other laborers, to be transported by an expected train to another part of the road, in order that he might perform certain work which had to be done in clearing the track of snow. The laborers were asleep in the car on a side track, when a train, which had to get upon that track in order to permit a passenger train to pass, collided with the car in such a way as to cause a snow-shed to fall upon it, whereby the deceased was killed. The accident was primarily caused by a track-walker by the name of Joe Rabbitt, who interfered with a switch with which he had no concern, turning the car-wheels in the wrong direction, and of the conductor of the train, perhaps, in not being sufficiently on the alert to prevent the intermeddling of Rabbitt.

Conceding, without deciding, that the evidence was responsive to the issues made by the pleadings, the question to be determined is whether or not the Central Pacific Railroad Company is responsible for the carelessness of the conductor and track-walker. If they are to be held as the fellow-servants of the deceased, and engaged about the business of their common master, in the same general employment, then the company would not be responsible, unless the record shows that the defendant neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the conductor and track-walker. Civil Code, § 1970; Stephens v. Doe, 73 Cal. 28, 14 Pac. Rep. 378; McLean v. Mining Co., 51 Cal. 257; Fisk v. Railroad Co., 72 Cal. 42, 13 Pac. Rep. 144; Brown v. Railroad Co., 72 Cal. 523, 14 Pac. Rep. 138. There is nothing in the evidence which tends to show any negligence on the part of the defendant in the selection of the employés whose carelessness caused the casualty. Neither the conductor nor track-walker is shown to have had anything to do with the selection of employés for the company, nor is it made evident that either of them was in any sense managing assistant for it in the conduct of its general business as a railroad company. They had with the laborer who was killed certain duties to perform as employés of the company, in the same general business. The conductor ran the train; the track-walker was to see that the track was clear of obstructions, and to signal when they existed; the laborer was engaged on his part in helping to keep the track in good order, so that the trains might run upon it in safety. They all must have known the dangers incident to their employment. They were fellow-servants of the same employer, and employed by it in the same general business. The deceased met his death through the negligence of the conductor and track-walker, and not that of the railroad company, which, therefore, is not responsible.

---

[1] As to who are fellow-servants within the rule exempting the master from liability to one for injuries caused by the negligence of the other, see Sullivan v. Railroad Co., (N. Y.) 20 N. E. Rep. 569; Slatterly v. Railroad Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. —; Wolcott v. Studebaker, 34 Fed. Rep. 8, and note; Railroad Co. v. O'Brien, (Wash. T.) 21 Pac. Rep. 32, and note.

The exception taken to the order permitting the defendant to renew its motion for a nonsuit after introducing its evidence is not well taken, for if the motion had been denied, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, it would have been the duty of the court to have set aside the verdict as not supported by the evidence. Vanderford v. Foster, 65 Cal. 49, 2 Pac. Rep. 736. In cases where the facts are undisputed, the question of negligence is a question of law, to be passed on by the court. Glascock v. Railroad Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. Rep. 518, and cases cited. The judgment of nonsuit was correct, and the order granting a new trial should have been refused. For these reasons we advise that the order appealed from be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed.

PATERSON, J., (dissenting.) I am unable to distinguish this case from McKune v. Railroad Co., and other recent cases, in which it has been held here that an employé in one department of a business, like railroading or mining, is not a fellow-servant of an employé in another and different department of the business. In McKune v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 302, 5 Pac. Rep. 482, it was held that a train-dispatcher and material-man was not a fellow-servant of an ordinary track-laborer. Mr. Justice FIELD, in a recent case, said: "The question in all cases, therefore, is, what is essential to render the service in which different persons are engaged a common employment? And this question has caused much conflict of opinion between different courts, and often much vacillation of opinion in the same court. * * * There is, in our judgment, a clear distinction to be made in their relation to their common principal between servants of a corporation, exercising no supervision over others engaged with them in the same employment, and agents of the corporation, clothed with the control and management of a distinct department, in which their duty is entirely that of direction and superintendence. A conductor, having the entire control and management of a railway train, occupies a very different position from the brakemen, the porters, and other subordinates employed. He is, in fact, and should be treated, as the personal representative of the corporation, for whose negligence it is responsible to subordinate servants. * * * In no proper sense of the terms is he a fellow-servant with the firemen, the brakemen, the porters, and the engineer. The latter are fellow-servants in the running of the train under his direction; as to them and the train, he stands in the place of, and represents, the corporation. As observed by Mr. Wharton, in his valuable treatise on the Law of Negligence: * * * 'The true view is that, as corporations can act only through superintending officers, the negligences of those officers with respect to other servants are the negligences of the corporation.' Section 232*a*." A large number of cases are cited and reviewed in support of the principle of law enunciated therein.

In that case the plaintiff, an engineer, received injuries through the negligence of the conductor of his train, and it was held that the relation of fellow-servant did not exist, and the company was liable. Railroad Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184.

But the exigencies of this case do not require us to say that the engineer of a train is not a fellow-servant with any other of the employés on the same train with him. We have held that a conductor and brakeman are fellow-servants. Baughman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 573, 14 Pac. Rep. 207. The case before us is a much stronger case against the company than the one above referred to,—Railroad Co. v. Ross. The relationship between those who caused the accident here and the deceased was not nearly so close as that of employés on the same train. The deceased was a laborer employed by defendant to remove snow and other obstructions from its track, and was under the immediate control of a road-master. There was no contributory negligence on his part in sleeping in the car on a side-track under directions of the road-master. McKune v. Railroad Co., supra. It is admitted that the accident was primarily caused through the negligence of a track-walker, named Rabbitt, and the conductor of the train which collided with the car in which the laborers were sleeping.

The case before us is very much like Railroad Co. v. Weaver, 11 Pac. Rep. 408. The question there was whether a section boss was a fellow-servant of an engineer, and it was held that he was not. The court said: "The division road-master and the section foreman, and his assistants, were in one line of duty, while the trainmen were in another and a different line of duty, and each set within its own line of employment represented the master as to the other set, and the members of one set were not the near fellow-servants with the members of the other set." In the same volume of the Pacific Reporter, at page 545, another somewhat similar case is reported (Hobson v. Railroad Co.,) in which the court held that a teamster engaged in hauling ties for the construction of a railroad was not consociated with the engineer of the train on which the teamsters and other workmen were in the habit of riding back and forth from their headquarters to the place of work, so as to defeat the recovery against their common master for injuries received through the negligence of the engineer.

I concur: THORNTON, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 76

MALLOY v. HIBERNIA SAV. & LOAN SOC. et al. (No. 11,726.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PREMISES—PLEADING.

A complaint alleged that defendants were the owners of a certain lot in San Francisco; that on or about a certain day they did unlawfully, wrongfully, and negligently maintain thereon, and about 10 feet from a public traveled street, a privy-vault, filled to the surface with the contents thereof, and of the depth of 10 feet, without any guard or protection, and without any inclosure to separate it from the public street; that prior thereto they did unlawfully and negligently remove the fences inclosing the privy-vault, and all the covering around the same, and removed the building adjoining same, and prior thereto had commenced grading said lot and removing the earth therefrom, the premises being then open and accessible for teams and workmen; that by reason of their negligent acts in leaving the vault thus exposed and unprotected, without any fence or inclosure separating it from the street, plaintiff's minor child, three years of age, without any fault of plaintiff, fell into the same, and was drowned; wherefore he prayed damages. Held, that it stated a cause of action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

Action by Daniel Malloy against the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, John Grant, Julius Platshek, and Samuel Platshek, for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's minor child. The second amended complaint was as follows:

"The plaintiff complains of the defendants and alleges in this, his second amended complaint: (1) That on and prior to the 16th day of August, 1876, he was, and still is, the father of William Malloy, a minor child of the age of three years and ten months, now deceased. (2) That the defendant, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, was on and prior to the said 16th day of August, 1876, and is now, a corporation under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California. (3) That on the said 16th day of August, A. D. 1876, the said defendants were the owners of, and had possession, management, and control of, certain real estate, being a lot about 175x200 feet, more or less, on the south-east corner of Bryant and Second streets in the city and county of San Francisco, and were the owners of, and in the possession, management, and control of, the buildings on said real estate, and all improvements connected therewith and pertaining thereto. (4) That the said defendants, on the said 16th day of August, 1876, while the owners of said real estate and the buildings thereon and improvements connected therewith, and while in the possession thereof and having the care, control, and management thereof, did unlawfully, wrongfully, and negligently keep and maintain, and suffer and permit to be and remain, upon said real estate, (at and near the buildings and improvements thereon,) and connected therewith, and about eight or ten feet from the sidewalk of Bryant street,—a public traveled street in said city and county aforesaid,—a certain privy-vault, pit, sink, cess-pool, or vault, filled to the surface of the earth with the contents thereof, and of the depth of about ten (10) feet, and (9) feet long by six and a half (6½) feet in width, without any guard, wiring, or protection whatever over or around the same, and without any inclosure to separate the same from the sidewalk of Bryant street aforesaid, and in an unguarded, negligent, and dangerous condition. (5) That the said defendants, on or about the 10th day of August, 1876, as plaintiff is informed and believes, being as aforesaid the owners of, and in the possession, control, and management of, the said real estate and the buildings and improvements thereon and pertaining thereto, and of an inclosure and fence (separating said Bryant street from said privy-vault, pit, and sink) then upon the same, did unlawfully, wrongfully, and negligently remove the fences inclosing the said privy-vault, sink, cess-pool, pit, or vault from Bryant street as aforesaid, and all the covering over and around the same connected therewith, and removed a portion of the building adjoining the same, and raised a portion thereof two or three feet from the ground for the purpose of removing the same, and previous thereto had commenced the work of grading said lot of land and of hauling and removing the earth therefrom, (said premises,) then open and uninclosed, and accessible for teams and conveyances then employed by said defendants, their agents and servants, in removing the earth therefrom, and in hauling and removing the improvements and material thereof; by reason of which said wrongful, unlawful, and negligent acts and omissions of said defendants, their agents and servants, in suffering and permitting the said privy-vault, sink, cess-pool, or vault to be and remain at and upon their said premises and property, and in removing the inclosure and covering thereof, and permitting the same to be and remain in said open, uncovered, and dangerous condition as aforesaid, and for want of a sufficient guard, covering, and protection over or around the same, or a fence or inclosure separating it from said Bryant street aforesaid, or any guard, covering, or protection whatever, the plaintiff's minor child, without any fault or want of care on the part of plaintiff, fell into the same, and was, on said 16th day of August, A. D. 1876, drowned therein, and was taken out of the same dead, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $25,000. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against the said defendants for the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars damages, and the costs of this action."

Defendants demurred to the complaint for failure to state a cause of action, which demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff appeals.

Edward P. Cole, for appellant.

The charge of negligence against defendants is sufficient. Bliss, Code Pl. § 211. The jury must pass on the question of negligence of the child or parent and that of defendant. Railroad Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657; Railroad Co. v. Styron, 66 Tex. 421, 1 S. W. Rep. 161; Birkett v. Ice Co., 110 N. Y. 507, 18 N. E. Rep. 108; Ihl v. Railroad Co., 47 N. Y. 317; Thurber v. Railroad Co., 60 N. Y. 335. Great caution is required of persons having dangerous premises exposed near a public street. Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 107 Mass. 104; Birge v. Gardner, 19 Conn. 507; Powers v. Harlow, 19 N. W. Rep. 259; Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. St. 336; Railroad Co. v. Allen, 22 Kan. 285. Persons carrying on excavations where there are small children, must take measures to keep them away. Fink v. Furnace Co., 10 Mo. App. 69. The court cannot determine when it is negligence in the parent to permit his child to run in the street. Bliss v. South Hadley, 145 Mass. 91, 13 N. E. Rep. 352; Kline v. Railroad Co., 37 Cal. 406; Karr v. Parks, 40 Cal. 193; Schierhold v. Railroad Co., Id. 455; Largan v. Railroad Co., Id. 273; Roller v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 231, 5 Pac. Rep. 108; Nehrbas v. Railroad Co., 62 Cal. 321.

Tobin & Barry, for respondents.

Where the facts are uncontradicted, the question is for the court. Flemming v. Railroad Co., 49 Cal. 253. If defendants were making such use of his property as a reasonable man would, and the complaint shows this to be true, he is not guilty of negligence. If the person drowned had been an adult, it will not be claimed that damages could have been recovered from defendants. Nor could the father of a child of years of discretion have recovered under the facts here. Shear. & R. Neg. (3d Ed.) § 505, p. 599; Hardcastle v. Railway Co., 4 Hurl. & N. 67; Binks v. Railway Co., 3 Best & S. 244; Howland v. Vincent, 10 Metc. 371. The mere killing or injury of a child non sui juris is not proof of defendants' negligence. Railroad Co. v. Lammert, 12 Ill. App. 408; Railroad Co. v. Stumps, 69 Ill. 409. A person is not responsible for injuries resulting from lack of discretion on part of child or from childish indiscretion. Shear. & Neg. (3d Ed.) § 49, p. 64; Burke v. Railroad Co., 49 Barb. 529; Lumsden v. Russel, 18 Ct. Sess. Cas. 468; McMahon v. Railway Co., 39 Md. 438; Cram v. Railroad Co., 112 Mass. 38. Nor is it his duty to guard against the possibility of accident from such cause. Railroad Co. v. McLaughlin, 47 Ill. 265. The age of the child here should cut no figure in the case. The issue is, was it negligent to take away the fence from the cistern under the circumstances of this case? "This issue must be determined by the test whether such an exposure is consistent with the mode of action of a prudent and skillful business man. In applying this test we must necessarily consider the community as a mass." Whart. Neg. § 315, p. 287; City of Chester v. Porter, 47 Ill. 66; Brown v. Railway Co., 58 Me. 384. To hold that on a well-traveled street in San Francisco a man shall not remove fences, etc., to improve and alter his property because by a possibility an unguarded infant may stray 12 feet away from the street, and be injured, is to put a bar to public improvements. There is no allegation that defendants owed a duty to the deceased child, nor that he was rightfully upon the premises. The exposure of defendants' premises not being hazardous or negligent, plaintiff cannot recover. Hughes v. Macfie, 2 Hurl. & C. 744; Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 239; Zoebisch v. Tarbell, 10 Allen, 385; Severy v. Nickerson, 120 Mass. 306; Roulston v. Clark, 3 E. D. Smith, 366. It has been held that where there is a bare license there is no duty, and an infant trespasser can be in no better position than a licensee. 1 Shear. & R. Neg., (4th Ed.) § 97, p. 157. The New York doctrine of contributory negligence of infants has been adopted in this state, and bars plaintiff's recovery. Meeks v. Railroad Co., 52 Cal. 602.

Frank Eisner & Platshek, for respondents.

The deceased was a bare trespasser, and, it not appearing that he was invited or induced to come upon the premises, defendants owed him no duty, and plaintiff cannot recover. Hughes v. Macfie, 2 Hurl. & C. 744; Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 239; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 136; Wood v. School-Dist., 44 Iowa, 27; Kohn v. Lovett, 44 Ga. 251; Singleton v. Railway Co., 7 C. B. (N. S.) 289; Larmore v. Iron Co., 101 N. Y. 391, 4 N. E. Rep. 752: Wright v. Railroad, 129 Mass. 440; McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 127; Howland v. Vincent, 10 Metc. 371; Duff v. Railroad Co., 91 Pa. St. 458; Cauley v. Railway Co., 95 Pa. St. 398; Moore v. Railroad Co., 99 Pa. St. 301; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; McDonald v. Railway Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 38.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought by the father against the defendants for negligently causing the death of his minor child. The complaint was demurred to on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained. This ruling on the demurrer presents the only point for consideration. We have examined the complaint and are of opinion that the court erred in its ruling on the demurrer. The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint. So ordered.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

(79 Cal. 140)

GAGE et al. v. DOWNEY et al. (No. 12,377.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

JUDGMENT—PLEADING—CHAMPERTY—PAYMENT—NEW TRIAL—APPEAL.

1. A judgment in favor of the widow, in an action by her against her deceased husband's administrators and heirs for land which she alleges was acquired by the husband under a mortage taken by him to secure her money, is conclusive of her title, though the husband also claimed under another source of title.

2. Reference in the complaint to the grant under which the mortgagor claimed, and to the homestead set off to him in a suit to foreclose a former mortgage, which homestead was the tract included in the second mortgage, and to the mortgagor's "right" in connection with "property," will not be construed as a deraignment of title on plaintiff's part, the evident intention being to describe the land, and to state that the right claimed is the right to the tract set apart as a homestead, and the decree and deed executed thereunder conforming to such intention.

3. Where a cause is transferred, because of the disqualification of the judge, to an adjoining judicial district, under authority of statute, the judgment therein is not void or subject to collateral attack because the county to which the cause was transferred was not the nearest one, as required by the statute.

4. An agreement by plaintiff, in an action to recover land, to convey part of it to his attorneys when recovered in compensation for services is not a defense to the action, whether the agreement is void or not.

5. Where a part of the tract included in a mortgage is set apart as a homestead on foreclosure, and the residue is directed to be sold, but it does not appear that the latter ever was sold, it will be presumed, after the lapse of 30 years, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the debt was paid, and such residue was not sold.

6. The express requirement of a former statute, that the notice of intention to move for a new trial be made part of the record on appeal, having been omitted from Code Civil Proc. Cal., and there being no provision for bringing it up in any manner, such notice need not be presented on appeal, and its absence from the record is not ground for dismissal of the appeal. Following Pico v. Cohn, 20 Pac. Rep. 706.

In bank. On rehearing. 19 Pac. Rep. 113.

Glassell, Smith & Patton and Henry T. Gage, for appellants. Levi Chase, Bicknell & White, and O'Brien & Morrison, for respondents.

THORNTON, J The motion to dismiss the appeals herein is denied on the authority of Pico v. Cohn, 20 Pac. Rep. 706, (opinion filed March 13, 1889.)

The plaintiffs in this cause are Henry T. Gage and Cornelia Rains de Foley, and the defendants are John G. Downey and the Merchants' Exchange Bank of San Francisco. The action is ejectment to recover possession of an undivided one-half of a tract of land situated in San Diego county, known as the "Rancho Valle de San José," for which a patent was issued by the United States on the 10th of January, 1880, to Sylvestre de la Portilla, and also an undivided twelve twenty-fifths of a tract of land situate in the same county, known as the "Rancho Valle de San José," for which a patent was, on January 16, 1880, issued by the United States to J. J. Warner. Judgment was rendered for the defendants. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was denied. The latter prosecute the appeals herein from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

On the 16th of April, 1836, a grant was made to Sylvestre de la Portilla by N. Guiterrez, political chief, of the place called "Valle de San José," containing four square leagues. On the 8th day of June, 1840, a grant was made to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of California, of the place called "Agua Caliente," to the extent mentioned in the plan accompanying the expediente. On the 28th day of November, 1841, a grant was made to J. J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor of California, of the place called "Valle de San José," containing six square leagues, more or less. The grants to Portilla and Warner were confirmed, and patents were issued to them severally, as above set forth. The grant to Pico was rejected. On the 6th of November, 1858, Portilla conveyed all his interest in the rancho to one Vicente S. de Carillo. Some time prior to 1856, say in 1854, J. J. Warner mortgaged his rancho Valley of San José to J. Mora Moss. Suit was brought to foreclose this mortgage in the district court for San Diego county. In this action a homestead was set apart by the court to Warner and wife. This homestead tract is described in the decree. A tract of a league in extent was set apart and directed to be sold under the Moss mortgage. This latter tract is described in the decree. It does not appear that the league was ever sold. This decree seems to have been entered in 1856. Surely, in the absence of proof, it may be conclusively presumed that Moss' debt was paid by Warner, and that this league was never sold. The homestead set apart included the whole of Warner's ranch, except the league above mentioned. This is manifest from the report of the commissioners, who set apart the homestead, and the order of the court confirming it.

On the 20th of November, 1858, the above-named Warner and his wife, Anita Warner, executed a mortgage to John Rains of all their interest in the land granted to him. The description of the land included in this mortgage is as follows: "All the right, title, and interest of the parties of the first part in and to that certain tract of land lying, being, and situate in the county of San Diego, California, known as the 'Valley of San José and Agua Caliente,' and being the lands granted to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of the department of the Californias, by deed of grant of date of June 8, 1840, and to John J Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor as aforesaid, by deed of grant of date of November 28, 1844, reference being had for a more particular description to the several grants, expedientes, maps, and other papers on file in the office of the surveyor general of the United States for California, in the city of San Francisco, and in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States for the Southern district of California, in the city of Los Angeles, forming the record of case No. 254 on the docket of the United States land commission, and of case No. 218 on the land docket of said district court: Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining." On the 5th of July, 1861, the above-named Carillo conveyed to John Rains the undivided one-half of the (Portilla) rancho, previously conveyed to him by Portilla. The mortgage of Warner and wife to Rains was subsequently foreclosed, and the mortgaged premises sold under the decree of foreclosure by George Lyons, sheriff of the county of San Diego, to Rains; and on the 18th of November, 1861, the sheriff aforesaid, in pursuance of the decree and sale to Rains, executed to him a deed of the mortgaged premises above mentioned. The description in the sheriff's deed of the property conveyed is as follows: "All the right, title, and interest of said defendants of, in, and to that certain tract of land lying and being situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, known as the 'Valle de San José and Agua Caliente,' and being the land granted to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of department of the Californias, by deed of grant of date January 8, 1840, and to John J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor, as aforesaid, by deed of grant of date November 28, 1844; reference being had for a more particular description to the several grants, expedientes, maps, and other papers on file in the office of the surveyor general of the United States for California, in the city of San Francisco, and in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States for the Southern district of California, in the city of Los Angeles, forming the record of case No. 254 on the docket of the late United States land commission, and of case No. 218 on the land docket of said district court; together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, * * *"

The mortgage of Warner and wife to Rains included the whole ranch granted to Warner; and Rains, under the decree of foreclosure, acquired title to the whole of it, and of this we have no doubt. The decree directs the whole to be sold and conveyed by the sheriff. The descriptions in the mortgage and sheriff's deed are given above. By the deed from Carillo and wife he was invested with the title to the undivided one-half of the Portilla ranch, and the legal title to Warner's ranch and the above one-half of the Portilla grant was in him when he died in November, 1862. These interests descended to his wife and children, unless the latter were divested of them by proceedings which will be hereafter referred to. Before Rains took the mortgage above mentioned from Warner and wife, he had, on the 16th of September, 1856, intermarried with Maria Merced de Williams. He died on the 17th of November, 1862, leaving surviving him his wife, above named, and five children, named Cornelia, (who is one of the plaintiffs,) Isaac, Robert, John, and Francisca,—the latter born after the death of her father. Isaac died in 1877, intestate, unmarried, and without issue. On the 21st of February, 1863, Maria Merced, the above-named widow of John Rains, commenced an action in the district court of the county of San Bernardino against E. K. Dunlap, administrator of John Rains, deceased, and her children above named, and others, in which she set forth her marriage with John Rains on the 16th of September, 1856; that Rains then had but an inconsiderable amount of property, which he afterwards expended; that Rains acquired money by the sale of her separate property; that on the 29th of November, 1858, he lent to J. J. Warner the sum of $1,800, to secure the payment of which he received from Warner and his wife a mortgage of certain property, describing it as follows: "All their right, title, and interest in and to that certain tract of land lying and being situate in the county of San Diego, Cal., known as the 'Valle de San José and Agua Caliente,' and being the lands granted to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of the department of the Californias, by deed of grant of June 8, 1840, and to John J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor as aforesaid, by deed of grant of date November 28, 1844." The property and right included in said mortgage being all that part of said rancho "Valle de San José and Agua Caliente" lying to the north and east of the east and west and north and south lines drawn from the tree marked "W," mentioned in the complaint, instead of the one square league lying to the south and west of said two lines. The tree referred to, marked "W," is described as an oak, standing on the east and in contact with the rocks, forming the first rocky point on the south side of the meadow valley, which extends eastwardly from the rocky hill at San José Indian village to Buena Vista. (The above description is combined from the original and amended complaint, in accordance with what appears in the transcript.) Other property is mentioned in the complaint which it is not necessary to describe.

The complaint further avers that Rains proceeded in due course of law to foreclose this mortgage against Warner and the heirs of his wife, then deceased; that at the sale under the decree of foreclosure Rains became the purchaser, and thereafter in due time received the sheriff's deed for such premises. It was further averred that the money lent by Rains to Warner, and for which the mortgage was taken from Warner and wife, was the separate property of the then plaintiff, Maria M. Williams de Rains; that Rains paid no money for the property purchased at the sheriff's sale above mentioned, and that the amount paid was the amount found by the court due on the mortgage foreclosed; that no part of this money had ever been given to Rains by the plaintiff, his then widow, nor did it belong to him in any way; that she was informed by Rains that the sheriff's deed for the mortgaged property aforesaid had been executed to her as grantee. She avers that the property became her separate property, and asks that the court decree the property included in the aforesaid deed of the sheriff of San Diego county to be hers, as against the defendants, with the common general prayer for all other and further relief to which she may be entitled.

The district court of San Bernardino county found the facts as alleged by plaintiff in regard to this property, and decreed it to be her separate property; and it was further adjudged by same decree that defendant E. K. Dunlap, administrator of John Rains, deceased, execute and deliver to the plaintiff all necessary deeds, etc., to carry the decree into full effect. This decree was entered and filed on the 12th of March, 1863. On the next day the deed of the property described in the complaint was executed to plaintiff

Maria Merced, by the administrator, as required by the decree. On the 14th of March, 1863, the above-named Maria Merced conveyed to her children, Cornelia, Isaac, Robert, John Scott, and Francisca Rains, by deed, all of the estate above mentioned conveyed to her by deed of Dunlap, administrator, just above set forth. On the 2d of April, 1864, the aforesaid Maria Merced, widow of John Rains, commenced an action in the district court for the county of Los Angeles against Dunlap, in his individual capacity and also as administrator of John Rains, deceased, Robert S. Carlisle, individually and as trustee, Cornelia Rains, Isaac Rains, Robert Rains, John Scott Rains, Francisca V. Rains, and others as defendants. On the 26th day of November, 1864, on the affidavit of plaintiff's attorneys that the judge of the district court for the First judicial district, of which the county of Los Angeles formed a part, was disqualified from acting in the case by reason of consanguinity, on motion of said attorney the cause was removed for trial to the district court of the Third judicial district of Santa Clara county. No objection was made to this order. The papers in the cause were thereafter transmitted to the district court for the county last named, and filed therein on the 4th of January, 1865. No motion was made to remand this cause to the district court of Los Angeles county, and it remained for trial, and was tried in the court to which it had been by the order transferred.

On the 9th of May, 1865, an amended complaint was filed by the plaintiff, who had, since the commencement of the action, intermarried with José C. Carillo. The object of this suit was to have set aside the conveyance to her children as having been procured from her by fraud and undue influence, and also to set aside a power of attorney executed to Robert S. Carlisle, which she had revoked, and for an account from Carlisle, etc., and for general relief. The property averred to have been conveyed by the deed sought to be set aside by this suit is set forth in the complaint, and is described in full. It consists: First, of the Cucamonga ranch, situate in the county of San Bernardino; second, the Bella Union Hotel, situate in the city of Los Angeles; third, a lot in the city just mentioned, which was conveyed to Rains by Alice Flashner, by deed dated August 11, 1862; and, fourth, (we here insert the description in same words as in complaint:) "All that certain tract of land situate in the county of San Diego, state aforesaid, known as the 'San José del Valle and Agua Caliente,' same set apart as a homestead for Jonathan J. Warner and wife by decree of the district court of San Diego county on September 24, 1856, and known also as 'Warner's Rancho;'" fifth, certain personal property. The above is alleged in the complaint to have been decreed to be her separate property by the decree in the San Bernardino action. Dunlap, Carlisle, and the infant children of said plaintiff, by their guardian ad litem, all answered the complaint. The case was tried, and on the 27th day of May, 1867, a decree was made and entered setting aside the deed above mentioned made by plaintiff to her children as having been obtained by fraud, and it was ordered that the same should be delivered up and canceled; also setting aside the power of attorney to Carlisle. The decree then proceeds to distribute the property in the action between the plaintiff and her children, defendants above named. Certain property is distributed to the children, and adjudged to belong to them, and certain other property to the plaintiff as hers. The respective interests are clearly designated and described in the decree, and possession is awarded to each of the parcels so decreed to them. Among other parcels of land awarded to the plaintiff is one designated in the decree in words following: "Second. And also all that tract of land situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, and known as the 'Rancho San José del Valle,' (or Warner's ranch,) being the same rancho finally confirmed to J. J. Warner, and surveyed under instructions from the United States surveyor general of California by John C. Hayes, in July, 1859, and said survey was approved March 3, 1860, by T. W. Mandeville, United States surveyor general of California." On the 3d of December, 1868, Maria Merced Williams de Carillo executed to C. V. Howard, P. Beaudry, M. F. Coronel, J. G. Downey, and J. S. Garcia a deed of "all that certain tract of land or rancho situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, known by the name of 'San José del Valle' or 'Warner Ranch,' and also known by the name of 'San José o Tagui,' and being the same tract of land or rancho confirmed by the United States land commission and United States district court to J. J. Warner, in the case of J. J. Warner v. the United States, to the papers in which case reference is made for a more particular description." It is admitted that defendants succeeded to an undivided half of the Portilla grant by deed of V. S. de Carillo, executed on the 20th of February, 1869, to C. V. Howard et al., and is not involved in this suit. Of the children of Maria M. W. de Rains, above mentioned, Isaac died in 1877, intestate, unmarried, and without issue. It is said by counsel for plaintiffs that the interests of Robert, John, and Francisca, who married the plaintiff Gage, if any they had, became vested before the beginning of this action in the plaintiff just above named. Defendants claim title under the decrees above set forth, rendered in the San Bernardino and Santa Clara cases, and conveyances subsequently made.

It is averred by plaintiffs that the title under the Portilla grant was not embraced in the San Bernardino case. In this contention we cannot concur as to that portion of the Portilla grant which conflicted with the grant to Warner. The claim preferred by Mrs. Rains in this suit was for the whole of the Warner ranch, except the Moss league, which league in the final survey was not awarded to Warner. The reference to the grant to Warner, and the homestead set off to him in the action of Moss v. Warner and wife, was mere matter of description to identify the land which she claimed. There was no intention to do what is most unusual and entirely unnecessary to deraign and set forth her chain of title in the complaint. The complaint means that John Rains bought this land with money which was part of plaintiff's separate estate; that it belonged to her in fee and should be conveyed to her. It states that the property included in the mortgage to John Rains is a certain part, viz., that set off as a homestead in the action of Moss v. Warner. That is the tract claimed by her in the action and so declared in the complaint. The word "right" connected with "property" in the complaint does not give a different meaning to what is claimed by the complaint. The language used amounts to stating that the right involved and claimed here is the right to the tract set apart as a homestead described in the pleading. The decree of the court and the deed of Dunlap, administrator, accord with this view, as will be seen by the reference to them. The complaint intended to challenge John Rains' right and title to this land, and to bring them to judicature, and this, we think, was done by the pleader. So that the parties claiming under Rains might deny by their answer her right to the land, and offer in evidence any title, whether derived from Portilla or any one else, to the land which would show the land to be a part of his estate. The title to the land was in controversy in this suit as between the personal representative and the children of John Rains on the one hand, and his widow on the other, and it was determined in favor of the widow, (plaintiff.) John Rains acquired his interest in the Portilla grant after his foreclosure at the sheriff's sale under the decree of foreclosure in the action to foreclose his mortgage taken from Warner and wife: and if, after Mrs. Rains obtained the deed of the administrator under the decree in the San Bernardino case, she had brought an action against John Rains to recover the land embraced in the decree, and he had set up against her his Portilla title, she might have defeated it, if not by the decree just above mentioned, by showing that the Portilla interest was acquired by him with money belonging to her as her separate estate.

In our judgment the decree under consideration conclusively determined that the land embraced in it belonged to Mrs. Rains, and that the estate of Rains had no title to it acquired from any source, whether Portilla, or Pico, or any one else. Under this decree in Mrs. Rains' favor she executed the deed to her children, under which plaintiffs herein claim. It is contended on their part that the judgment in the case tried in Santa Clara, setting aside this deed, is void for want of jurisdiction in the district court of Santa Clara county. This contention we propose now to consider. The objection made to the jurisdiction of the court is put on the ground that the judge had transferred the cause to the district court of a county—Santa Clara—which court was not the nearest court to Los Angeles county, where the like cause or objection for making the order did not exist. The same cause and objection here existed as to every county in the First judicial district; therefore it would have been error to transfer it to a court in a county in that district. The judge, then, had to select a court of a county not of the First district. The nearest district courts then were in the Third judicial district, at that time composed of the counties of Monterey, Santa Cruz, Santa Clara, and Alameda. Conceding that the county-seats of Monterey and Santa Cruz were nearer to Los Angeles county in a straight course than that of Santa Clara county, still, as the county-seat of the latter was nearer by the usually traveled route, or more accessible, might it not be reasonably concluded that the district court of Santa Clara was the nearest?

But, waiving this, we are of opinion that, conceding that the county-seat of Monterey or Santa Cruz was nearer than that of Santa Clara to Los Angeles county, the order sending it to the district court of the latter county was only error. We cannot see how it can be law that a judgment can be impeached collaterally and held void, because a judge has made an inconsiderable mistake in computing distances, or had selected a county-seat more readily accessible than the other in coming from Los Angeles, and holding it to be really the nearer on that account. The judge had jurisdiction to make this order under the statute then in force. He must determine what is the nearest court in administering the law. This determination was undoubtedly within his power, (St. May 6, 1854; St. 1864, p. 153; Hitt. Gen. Laws, par. 5600,) and if he sent it to a county some distance further than another by error of a miscalculation of distances it would be nothing more than an error, and should not render the judgment void. Conceding that this judgment might have been reversed on appeal, still it would not be void on collateral attack. The cases cited by the counsel for plaintiffs, (appellants here,) Burton v. Covarrubias, decided at the April term, 1865, (not reported;) People v. De la Guerra, 24 Cal. 73; Livermore v. Brundage, 64 Cal. 299, and People v. McGarvey, 56 Cal. 327,—are not at all in point. They are all on appeal or direct attack. No collateral attack was attempted in either case, and in every case except People v. McGarvey they were orders, not of transfer, but orders in the cause, involving judicial action of different kind than that of transfer, which the judge was expressly forbidden by statute from making. People v. McGarvey related to a criminal case transferred under a state of facts not allowed by the statute relating to such cases,—a statute entirely different from the act under which the judge proceeded in this case, as is apparent from the opinion in the case.

There was no appeal in the Santa Clara case. In fact, the adverse parties therein did not object to the order, did not move to vacate it, nor to remand the cause in the Santa Clara court, but acquiesced in the judgment. We do not think the contention of the appellants is sustainable. The judgment is not open to attack for the reason urged by them. The plaintiff in the case tried in Santa Clara county relied on the judgment recovered in the San Bernardino case, which, as we have seen, determined that the whole of the Warner ranch, except the Moss league, was hers, as against any title derived from any source, or any one else; and the decree in the Santa Clara case set aside the deed to her children, and determined certain land to belong in fee to the plaintiff therein, Mrs. Carillo, formerly Rains. It makes no difference that the decree assumed the form of a partition of the property involved in the cause between the plaintiff and her children. It set aside the deed to the children; and, conceding that the decree in other respects was void, it was not void so far as it set aside this deed. The Warner ranch, except the Moss league, then remained in her under the San Bernardino decree and the administrator's deed made in pursuance thereof. We do not think that it is averred in the complaint in the Santa Clara cause that the judgment in the San Bernardino cause was obtained and entered by collusion of any kind. The arrangement between Scott and Dunlap had relation to the deed executed after the judgment in the San Bernardino case to Mrs. Rains' children and the power of attorney to Carlisle, and not to the judgment. The findings in the Santa Clara case, if there were any, are not in the transcript, and the judgment therein makes no reference to any agreement between Scott and Dunlap. The point that this was averred to have been a collusive judgment is not well taken. The defendants acquired, before the commencement of the action, the title to an undivided one-half of the land patented to Portilla. This does not include the half conveyed to John Rains by Carillo and wife, by deed dated July 5, 1861. The above appears by stipulation. It was admitted on the trial that there is a league (the Moss league) of the land patented to Portilla, which is not included in the patent to Warner. Such is the meaning of the stipulation on page 362 of the transcript. All the land set apart as a homestead to Warner and wife with other land is included in the patent to Warner. As to the land included in the Warner patent, the defendants are entitled to recover it. This follows from what has been stated above.

The question as to that part of the land sued for outside of the patent to Warner, and embraced in the Portilla patent, demands further consideration. The Moss league, it is admitted by stipulation, is not included in the patent to Warner. The defendants acquired one-half of the land granted and afterwards patented to Portilla. The other half belonged to John Rains. He died intestate. This half was acquired during the coverture with his wife, Maria Merced; was therefore community property, and on his death passed, subject to the payment of the debts of the community, one-half to Maria Merced, his relict, and the other half to his children. Rains left five children, above named, one of whom, Isaac, died in 1877, then under age, intestate, unmarried, and without issue. Isaac's portion, inherited from his father, passed under the statute, share and share alike, to his brothers and sisters. The title to one-fourth of the land embraced in the Portilla patent thus vested in the surviving children of John Rains. This one-fourth passed to the plaintiffs prior to the commencement of this suit, and they are entitled to recover it.

Conceding that the contracts between Glassell, Smith & Patton and the plaintiffs (which are found by the court) are void, they are of no material significance in this action. If they were void, they cannot and have no effect on the title of plaintiffs. The plaintiffs may set them up against Glassell, Smith & Patton, if they should so elect when the former make any claim against them. We cannot see that defendants' rights are in any way enlarged by these contracts. If such contracts are void, they are no more than so much blank paper between the parties. They take away nothing from the plaintiffs, and add nothing to the rights of defendants. The contention of defendants on this point need not be further considered. It is dismissed from further notice as untenable.

For the foregoing views the judgment and order are erroneous as to the one-fourth the land included in the Portilla patent. They are therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial as to the one-fourth interest above mentioned. So ordered.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

In re GRIDER'S ESTATE. (No. 12,840.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—REMEDIES—LIMITATIONS.

1. A decree of distribution of a decedent's estate, entered by a probate court, is a nullity as to distributees not served with process, or appearing in the action, though it falsely recites such service.

2. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against an action by distributees of an estate against the devisees and legatees under the decedent's will, brought to determine the claims of all persons interested in the estate, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1664, until a final distribution is made.

3. The plaintiffs have five years after attaining their majorities to institute such an action.

[1] Reversed in banc. See 22 Pac. 908, 81 Cal. 571.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; RODNEY J. HUDSON, Judge.

Action by N. J. Grider and others, heirs and distributees of Henry C. Grider, deceased, against Sallie Gage, (née Grider,) widow and sole devisee and legatee of said decedent, and R. D. Merritt, who was alleged to claim some portion of the estate as the vendee of said widow, to determine the interests of all persons claiming to share in the estate. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

McGee & Barnham, for appellants. J. C. Bates, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. On the 28th day of May, 1872, Henry C. Grider died seised of the lands which are involved in this proceeding. The deceased died testate, and his will was proved thereafter, in 1872, in the probate court, for the county of Lake. Grider left surviving him his widow, Sarah Grider, known as Sallie Grider, and three children, the plaintiffs herein, aged, respectively, at the time of his death, 14, 12, and 8 years. By this will the testator devised and bequeathed to his widow all his property, both real and personal, but made no mention therein of his children. This action is brought by the above-named children of the testator under section 1664, Code Civil Proc., to determine the interests of all the parties to the property of the estate. The petition or complaint alleged the foregoing facts, and further averred that one R. D. Merritt claims some interest in the estate. Merritt answered the petition or complaint, and set up a purchase from Sallie Grider of a certain parcel of land, which was a part of the property of the estate, and a conveyance to him of said parcel of land, a decree of partial distribution setting apart this land to him, and also set up the statute of limitations as a bar to the proceeding. The court heard the evidence, and found the following facts: "That the said Henry C. Grider died in the county of Lake, state of California, on or about the 28th day of May, 1872, of which county he was then, and had been for a long time prior thereto, a resident, leaving an estate therein of the value of $2,300, or thereabouts; that afterwards, to-wit, on or about the 24th day of June, 1872, a paper, purporting to be the last will and testament of the said H. C. Grider, which, upon the application and petition of Sallie Grider, widow of the said deceased, was admitted to probate by the honorable the probate court of said Lake county; that under said will the said Sallie Grider was duly appointed executrix thereof, and thereafter, on the 25th day of June, 1872, qualified as such executrix; that said last will of said deceased, by its terms, bequeaths and devises the whole of the property, both real and personal, of deceased to said Sallie Grider, but that in said last will and testament of said testator said testator wholly omits to provide therein for any or either of these plaintiffs, and that it does not appear therefrom that such omission, or that the omission of either of the plaintiffs, was intentional, and the plaintiffs allege that they, and each of them, are entitled to succeed and have the same share in said estate of the said testator as if he had died intestate, and plaintiffs aver that such omission was unintentional; that said deceased died seised and possessed of the following real estate, and the same formed, and now forms, a part of the said estate of the deceased, to-wit: The south ½ of the south-west ¼ of section 11, township 13 north, range 9 west, Mount Diablo meridian, containing eighty acres, also the following real estate, to-wit: Commencing at the south-west corner of said section 11, and running thence north twenty-five rods, (25;) thence west six and one-half (6½) rods; thence south twenty-five rods; thence east six and one-half (6½) rods to the point of beginning, one acre, 3½ rods." The court further found that by a decree entered in the probate court of Lake county, which is clearly a decree of partial distribution, the land involved herein was set apart to the above-named R. D. Merritt, and that this proceeding against Merritt was barred by his adverse possession of the above-named tract of land. It appears that the above decree was entered on the petition of said Merritt to the probate court.

We are of opinion that this decree is a nullity. It was entered without notice of the proceeding to the plaintiffs here, and for that reason is void as to them. It makes no difference that the court recites in its decree that notice was given to all parties. Such a recital, in the absence of notice, cannot give jurisdiction to the court. The court cannot, by declaring it has jurisdiction, invest itself with jurisdiction. It does not appear that there has been any final distribution of the estate of Grider. The statute of limitations does not commence running until there has been such a distribution. It further appears that this proceeding was commenced within five years after the plaintiffs herein attained their majority, and for this reason Merritt's possession, conceding it to have been adverse, invested him with no right to the land claimed by him The appeal from the judgment in this cause was entered too late, and such appeal is dismissed. The order denying a new trial is reversed, the judgment vacated, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion. So ordered.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J

---

81 Cal. 540

FELTON v. MILLARD. (No. 11,696.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. In the California statutory action of unlawful detainer, evidence of title is inadmissible, though it is offered as having some weight on the question of the existence of a lease.

2. A notice to quit, purporting to be signed by the landlord by attorney, is good, where the attorney had authority to sign it; no written authority being necessary, under Civil Code Cal. § 2309. The tenant in such case questions the attorney's authority at his own risk.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Action by C. N. Felton against T. W. Millard. Defendant appeals.

Mich. Mullany, for appellant. H. G. Platt, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action of unlawful detainer. The verdict and judgment were for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

1. Counsel for appellant argues very strenuously and ingeniously that the evidence was not sufficient to establish the existence of a lease between plaintiff and defendant. But there certainly was evidence going directly to that point, and the question was fairly put to the jury. The nonsuit was properly denied.

2. Appellant objects to the validity of the notice to quit, because it was not signed by respondent personally; the signature being "C. W. FELTON, by H. G. PLATT, Att'y." But the notice purported to come from respondent. It was proven at the trial that Platt had authority to sign it; no written authorization was necessary, (Civil Code, § 2309;) and appellant questioned the authority (if he did question it) at his own risk.

3. The most important point in the case arises upon the refusal of the court to allow the introduction of certain evidence offered by defendant. It is averred in the complaint that from February 1, 1883, to November 10, 1885, defendant held the premises in controversy from year to year under a verbal lease from plaintiff; and that on said November 10, 1885, the said lease was terminated by mutual agreement of the parties. The answer denied that there ever had been any lease. This denial raised the main question of fact before the jury, and it was determined by them against the defendant. Defendant when on the stand, as a witness for himself, after denying the existence of any lease, testified that he had been in possession of the land since 1854. He then offered to prove certain affirmative matters set up in his answer, the gist or substance of which was that he was the owner of the land, and had been for over 29 years, and that plaintiff was merely a mortgagee under a deed from defendant absolute on its face, but intended as a mortgage. Objection to this evidence was sustained, and defendant excepted. Waiving the question whether defendant offered to prove the facts which he sought to get before the court by appropriate evidence, (Bostwick v. Mahoney, 73 Cal. 239, 14 Pac. Rep. 832,) still it is evident that what he wanted to prove was title, and title is not an issue in the statutory action of unlawful detainer. Mason v. Wolff, 40 Cal. 250; Reay v. Cotter, 29 Cal. 170; Fish v. Benson, 71 Cal. 437, 12 Pac. Rep. 454. Counsel for appellant contends very ingeniously (in substance) that he did not want to prove title for the purpose of proving title, but for the purpose of proving a fact which might have some weight in determining the question, Was there a lease? But the rule cannot be overcome in this indirect way. The position could be as well taken in any case of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, under the pretense that the fact of title might influence the determination of some other disputed fact, and thus the whole question of title be litigated in such an action. If a thing cannot be done, it matters not why one wishes to do it. We think that the court was right in excluding the evidence. Had it been admitted, plaintiff would no doubt have offered evidence tending to disprove defendant's alleged title. There are no other questions necessary to be noticed. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

79 Cal. 17

CHAMPION v. WOODS. (No. 12,922.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

MISTAKE OF LAW.

Plaintiff, in an action for divorce from her husband, alleged in her complaint that there was no common property, and the decree made no reference to any. For 16 months prior thereto she had not lived with him. Three years and a half later, and after his death, she brought this action against his estate to recover her share of the community property, alleging that she was ignorant of the law, and had always relied upon her husband's statements, and that he had "systematically and persistently, during all the time of their residence in California, continuously represented, declared, and asserted to plaintiff that the property he owned, and had acquired since said marriage, was his sole and separate property." Held, that equity would give her no relief.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

F. H. Black, for appellant. J. B. Lamar and Walter A. Lamar, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. On February 4, 1886, the plaintiff herein commenced an action in the superior court of Santa Clara county for a divorce. She alleged in her complaint that there was no common property. On February 18, 1886, a decree was entered therein dissolving the bonds of matrimony then existing between the plaintiff and her husband, Henry B. Champion, but the court made no reference in its decree to the property. This action was commenced May 16, 1888. Defendant is executor of the last will of Henry B. Champion.

The complaint alleges, in substance, that plaintiff and H. B. Champion intermarried in the state of Illinois on the 18th day of August, 1873; that her husband was intelligent, and well knew what was common and what was separate property in this state; that plaintiff, during all the time of her residence in this state, up to January, 1888, was ignorant of what was common and what was separate property, and of the fact that there existed any common property by reason of the marriage relation; that she always loved her husband, wholly trusted him, looked to him for instruction, believed him honest, reposed unbounded confidence in his integrity; that she and her husband came to the county of Santa Clara in the year 1877, where both parties continued to reside until his death, which occurred August 2, 1887; that they ceased to live together as man and wife on the 11th day of October, 1884, but in all business matters plaintiff retained full confidence in her husband's integrity, which confidence continued until his death; that in consequence of such confidence she wholly believed all he said concerning the property and property rights acquired by them after marriage; that her husband "systematically and persistently, and during all the time of their residence in California, continuously represented * * * to plaintiff that the property he owned and had acquired since said marriage was his sole and separate property and estate, and that there was no community property of said marriage;" that plaintiff had no interest therein; that all the property owned by him at the time of his death was acquired subsequent to the marriage, and is community property; that all of the representations aforesaid were false, and known by said deceased when made to be false, and they were made to plaintiff from time to time for the express purpose of causing her to believe the same, and she did believe them to be true; that when she filed her complaint she was wholly ignorant of the facts, and fully believed the property was the separate property of her husband; that in consequence of said false statements and confidence aforesaid, she caused to be inserted in the complaint an allegation that there was no common property; that the decree was entered February 18, 1886, but that the property rights of plaintiff were omitted from the decree wholly by reason of said false and fraudulent representations; that Henry B. died August 2, 1887, and left all the property to H. F. Woods, the defendant, as trustee, who has since been duly appointed executor of the last will and testament. The complaint then gives a description of the property claimed to be the community property, and concludes with a prayer for a decree canceling the decree in the divorce case so far as the same affects the property rights of plaintiff, for an adjudication that she is the owner of one-half of the property described, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from delivering said one-half to any other person than plaintiff, and for general relief. The defendant had judgment in the court below, a general demurrer to the complaint having been sustained, and plaintiff having declined further to amend her complaint. The question before us on this appeal is whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

It is not claimed in the complaint that any misrepresentations were made as to the amount of property which had been acquired during the marriage. They were misrepresentations as to the rights of the parties with respect to the property,—misrepresentations of law. Generally speaking, deception as to matters of law affords no ground of redress or relief. There are exceptions. The rule does not apply to transactions between parties holding fiduciary or confidential relations; and where one who has had superior means of information possesses a knowledge of the law, and thereby obtains an unconscionable advantage of another, who is ignorant, and has not been in a situation to become informed, the injured party is entitled to relief, as well as if the matters represented were matters of fact. It is not sufficient, under any circumstances, that the party complaining was ignorant of the truth of the matter concerning which the representation was made, and that he believed it to be true. His situation may be such that he will be deemed in law to have knowledge of the facts, and barred from making complaint, though actually ignorant of the true state of facts. It is a general principle that if the means of knowledge be at hand, and equally available to both parties, and the subject-matter be open to inspection of both alike, and there be no fiduciary or confidential relation and no warranty of the facts, the injured party must show that he has availed himself of the means of information existing at the time of the transaction before he will be heard to say that he was deceived by the misrepresentations of the other party. The fraud must have been practiced under such circumstances as to leave a reasonable inference that the injured party was deceived, and if the circumstances attending the transaction are such as to put a reasonable person upon inquiry, there can be no presumption of deceit.

It seems quite incredible that the plaintiff, while engaged in a hostile action against her husband, could cherish such unbounded love and confidence in him as is set forth in the complaint. For a period of 16 months before she commenced her action for a divorce she was unable to live with him. His conduct had been such—he had so far forgotten his marriage vows—that she not only could not live with him, but she demanded that the bonds existing between them should be severed. With the improbability of the truth of plaintiff's statements, however, we have little to do in determining whether the facts are sufficient on demurrer; but a stale demand, under such circumstances, does not commend itself to a court of equity. The plaintiff severed all connection with her husband on October 11, 1884. This action was not commenced until about three years and a half thereafter. It is clear that the question of property was not overlooked in the divorce suit. There was inserted in the complaint an allegation "that there was no common property." It is not at all probable that the plaintiff drew her own complaint, and conducted her own case. The general rule is that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, having jurisdiction of the subject and the parties, is conclusive upon the same parties in any other proceeding in law or in equity, unless reversed or set aside in some mode prescribed by law. Judgment may be attacked on the ground of fraud and misrepresentation, it is true, but relief will not be granted unless the party seeking the same has been free from negligence. If the judgment has been brought about through the carelessness of the injured party, he will not be relieved therefrom. Quinn v. Wetherbee, 41 Cal. 250. The relations of the plaintiff here with her husband were such that it was negligence, we think, on her part to rely upon him in a matter of so much importance as her property rights. Having determined that the bonds of matrimony must be dissolved, the first thought which would naturally occur to a person of ordinary caution and care would relate to the children, if there were any, and to the property. Plaintiff's failure to obtain independent advice and information was inexcusable carelessness. Something must have been said to her attorney about the property when drawing the complaint. That was the time and the occasion for consultation with her legal adviser as to her property rights. A simple question, propounded at that time, would have led to a different result. The fact alleged "that her husband systematically and persistently, during all the time of their residence in California, continuously represented, declared, and asserted to plaintiff that the property he owned and had acquired since said marriage was his sole and separate property," etc., was sufficient of itself to create suspicion in the mind of plaintiff, as a prudent person, and, when continued for several years after separation and divorce, to lead her to make some inquiry on the subject. We agree with the court below that "the complaint fails to show any equities entitling the plaintiff to relief." Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

(78 Cal. 634)

FULMORE v. JENNINGS et al. (No. 11,788.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

Below plaintiff's land, which borders on a river, there is an island, which by accretions has been extended up the river opposite plaintiff's land, so that with the accretion to the latter a narrow channel only separates them, and plaintiff's land is separated from the main channel by the narrow one and the island. Civil Code Cal. § 1014, declares that land formed by imperceptible degrees on the bank of a stream belongs to the owner of the bank. Held, that plaintiff is not entitled to extend his boundaries across the narrow channel and the accretion to the island to the main channel, but that the owner of the island is entitled to the accretion to it.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; JOHN J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

Action by Smith Fulmore against L. P. Jennings and others. Plaintiff appeals. Civil Code Cal. § 1014, provides that "where, from natural causes, land forms by imperceptible degrees upon the bank of a river or stream, navigable or not navigable, either by accumulation of material or by the recession of the stream, such land belongs to the owner of the bank."

P. F. Hart and J. D. H. Chamberlin, for appellant. S. M. Buck and George D. Murray, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action to recover land formed by accretion. Defendants had judgment in the superior court, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff appeals. The essential facts out of which the controversy arises, and upon which its solution depends, are these: Eel river flows westerly. Before reaching the ocean it divides into two channels, the main channel being on the north, and the smaller channel, known as "Eastlake's Slough," being on the south. Between these two channels is a body of swamp land of several hundred acres, called "Cock Robin Island." When the township embracing this portion of the river and Cock Robin island was surveyed by the United States surveyor, the south bank of Eastlake slough was meandered for some distance to the west of the eastern extremity of the island, to a point where it entered the swamp land. The north bank of the main river was also meandered. On the official plat of the township both channels of the river were delineated, and Cock Robin island was shown as swamp land. After this survey the grantors of plaintiff acquired from the United States land on the south bank of Eel river, a short distance east of the eastern extremity of Cock Robin island, the northern boundary of the subdivision so acquired being, of course, Eel river. The grantors of the defendants acquired from the state of California, as swamp land, Cock Robin island, their southern and northeastern boundaries being the two channels of Eel river, the main channel on the north and Eastlake slough on the south. In the course of years changes have occurred in these channels. The main channel of Eel river, from a point some distance above the lands of plaintiff, now flows considerably to the northward of plaintiff's lands, which, on the eastern side, have been correspondingly extended by accretion. But at the same time that this change has occurred Eastlake slough has been wearing away its south bank, and the point at which it divides from the main channel has been (gradually, as we understand the testimony) moving to the eastward; or, in other words, the eastern extremity of Cock Robin island, which like a wedge divides the two channels, has been gradually pushing up stream, as the result of natural accretion, until at the commencement of this action it covered the whole northern front of plaintiff's lands, interposing between them and the main channel of Eel river. It also appears that Eastlake slough has gradually diminished in size, and has become unnavigable for small boats, except at high tide, but at the same time there is evidence that it has at all times continued to be a distinct channel, conveying more or less water, and constituting Cock Robin island a real island. Upon this state of facts plaintiff contends that he is entitled to extend his east and west boundary lines northward across the narrow channel of Eastlake slough, and the eastern extremity of Cock Robin island, to the present bank of the main channel of Eel river, and to hold the land so included as accretion to his lands. The defendants, on the contrary, claim everything between the two channels, notwithstanding the insignificant size to which Eastlake slough has been reduced, as accretion belonging to them as owners of Cock Robin island. This is the entire controversy. We think that the superior court decided it correctly in favor of the defendants. The case falls exactly within the terms of section 1014 of the Civil Code, which is merely declaratory of the law as it has always been. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

78 Cal. 637

DORLAND v. BERGSON. (No. 11,452.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

ASSESSMENTS FOR STREET GRADING.

1. The certificate of a county surveyor that he "has examined the work of curbs and macadam done on" certain streets, "and finds curbs to official grade and line," is insufficient to prove the establishment of an official grade.

2. The fixing of a definite height of a street in the city of San Francisco, at two points, does not establish the official grade between such points on an arbitrary straight line drawn between them.

3. The amount due for curbing cannot be segregated from the total amount assessed in gross against a lot for street improvements, so as to recover for that item alone.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; CHARLES HALSEY, Judge.

J. M. Wood, for appellant. Craig & Meredith, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Action to foreclose the lien of a street assessment. The assessment was for redwood curbs, furnished and laid on Eighteenth street, from the easterly line of Castro street to Diamond street, and for the macadamizing of the road-way thereof. The defendant relied upon the defense stated in his answer, that the grade of the street had never been officially established. The court found that the grade of that portion of Eighteenth street which forms the crossing of Eighteenth and Castro streets had been duly established, but that the grade of Eighteenth street, from the westerly line of Castro street to Diamond street, had never been officially determined or established. Plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $36.33, being the amount due for work done on the crossing, together with costs, and the land described in the complaint was adjudged to be subject to the lien in favor of the plaintiff for the amount due. It was further adjudged that as to the remainder of the sum demanded in the complaint, namely, for the work done on Eighteenth street, between Castro and Diamond streets, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any portion thereof. To sustain the allegations of her complaint the plaintiff read in evidence the original assessment, diagram, warrant, and affidavit of demand and non-payment mentioned in the complaint, together with the indorsements thereon, showing that the same had been recorded. These documents were sufficient in form, and made a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff. The plaintiff then rested her case. The defendants offered evidence "tending to show that the grade of Eighteenth street, from Castro to Diamond street, had never been officially or otherwise established." The clerk of the board of supervisors testified that he had made diligent search among the records of the board, and could find no order or ordinance of the board fixing or establishing the grade of the crossing of Eighteenth and Sherman streets, and that Sherman street, according to the assessor's books, is a street forming one of the boundaries of a block. Order No. 684, passed January 30, 1866, was produced by the witness, (this order established the official grade of the crossing of Eighteenth and Castro streets) and order No. 972, approved November 9, 1870, establishing the official grade of the crossing of Eighteenth and Diamond streets. The distance between Diamond street and Castro street is two blocks, Sherman street cutting Eighteenth street, midway between Diamond and Castro. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the official grade of the crossing of Eighteenth and Sherman streets has ever been established. The certificate of the county surveyor, upon which appellant relies in part, is dated August 5, 1876, and certifies that he "has examined the work of curbs and macadam done on Eighteenth street, from Castro to Diamond street, and finds curbs to official grade and line." This certificate manifestly is insufficient to prove the establishment of an official grade. It speaks only of curbs, and there is nothing in the record to connect it with the assessment upon which plaintiff relies. If it could be considered as evidence tending to show the establishment of a grade for curbs it would avail the plaintiff nothing, because the lot was assessed for two amounts only: First, "the sum of $105.26 rated at $0.84208 per foot fronting on said Eighteenth street for said work done in front thereof, and the further sum of $23.80, rated at $0.119 for its proportion of said work done on the crossing of Eighteenth and Castro streets." Demands were made for "payment of the said several sums so assessed thereon." The amount due for curbing, therefore, cannot be segregated from the total amount assessed against the lot. There is attached to the statement what purports to be an original profile from the office of the surveyor of the city and county of San Francisco, showing the profile of Eighteenth street, between Diamond and Castro streets. Counsel for appellant says that the blue line on the profile shows the elevation of the surface of the soil of the center line of the street, and that the red line shows the official grade. There is nothing upon the face of the profile to indicate this, and there is nothing in the testimony to explain the meaning of the lines appearing on the profile. Sherman street is not named in the profile. It is claimed by counsel for appellant that "the fixing of a definite height of a street at two points itself fixes the official grade between such two points to be an arbitrary straight line drawn between such points so established." But manifestly this cannot be correct. There is nothing in the record to sustain the contention, and any one familiar with the topography of the city and county of San Francisco must see at a glance that such a rule would be inapplicable to the streets thereof. It devolves upon the appellant to show error. No error is shown here. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.

---

79 Cal. 166

PEOPLE v. DAVIDSON. (No. 12,414.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 8, 1889.)

HIGHWAYS—DEDICATION—TOLL-ROADS.

1. One who lays out a road over his land, and permits the public to use it on payment of tolls, under Civil Code Cal. § 523, thereby dedicates it as a public highway.[1]

2. No formal acceptance by the public of a dedicated highway is necessary; it is enough that the public travel over it.

3. Under Pol. Code Cal. § 2619, where a franchise to keep a toll-road has expired, the road thereupon becomes a free public highway, and the owner has no claim to compensation for the land covered by it.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, El Dorado county; before Justice PATERSON.

Blanchard & Swisler and A. P. Catlin, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., M. P. Bennett, S. C. Denson, and C. F. Irwin, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought by the attorney general, on complaint of El Dorado county, to have a road claimed by defendant adjudged to be a public highway, and to enjoin the defendant from demanding or taking toll from travelers thereon, or in any manner interfering with or obstructing travel over the same by the public. The case was tried by the court, and the findings and judgment were in favor of plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order. The material facts of the case are as follows: In 1861 the defendant constructed, in El Dorado county, a road about one and a half miles long, upon land of which he then had possession, and of which he subsequently acquired the title in fee. He constructed and has ever since maintained this road wholly at his own expense, for the purpose of using it as a toll-road; and after its construction up to the time of commencing this action the road was continuously used for public travel by foot passengers and passengers with animals and vehicles, without interference by defendant, except that he always claimed the right to demand and receive, and did demand and receive, tolls for the privilege of passing over it. In 1864 defendant became the owner of, and thereafter resided in, a house standing by the side of the road, on the front side of which the words "Toll House" were painted. Near the house he erected a sign on which there was an inscription headed, "Rates of Toll," and followed by a schedule of charges. That sign was kept up until July 8, 1878, and until that time defendant demanded and received from persons passing over the road tolls according to the rates shown on the sign. On the 8th of July, 1878, defendant made application to have the board of auditors of El Dorado county fix the rates of toll on his road, and thereupon the board made an order which reads as follows: "Now comes Thomas Davidson and asks the board that the rates of toll for his toll-road, commencing at the old mountain house and running to Buckeye flat, being about one and one-half miles in length, be fixed; whereupon the board fixes his rates of toll as follows," etc. After the making of this order defendant demanded and collected tolls from all persons passing over his road in accordance with the rates so fixed. No other order in reference to this road was made until the 2d day of February, 1886, when the board of supervisors of the county passed an order rescinding the aforesaid order of the board of auditors. For more than 25 years the road has been assessed to the defendant, and he has annually paid all state and county taxes levied thereon.

Upon these facts two questions arise: First, did the defendant dedicate his road to a public use? and, second, when his franchise expired, and he ceased to have a right to collect tolls on it, did it become a free public highway?

1. Since the adoption of the Codes, individuals have had the same right to construct and operate toll-roads as corporations. Civil Code, § 523. That defendant constructed his road for the use of the public is clear from his own statements. He testified: "The road was built by me for the purpose of accommodating travel and taking toll for such accommodation; that is, for the travel of the road. It was called 'toll,' and the road we called a 'toll-road.' I allowed everybody to travel who would pay me toll. I never refused to allow travelers to travel on the road who would pay me toll." It is not necessary to inquire what was the status of the road, or what right defendant had to collect tolls thereon prior to July, 1878, when he obtained the order from the board of auditors fixing his rates; but after he obtained that order he undoubtedly did have the right to demand and receive tolls from all persons passing over the road. This right was a franchise, and made the road a legalized toll-road or turnpike. Such roads are public highways. They are constructed, like other public highways, for the convenience of the public, in the hope of profit to their proprietors, it is true, yet for a public purpose; and travelers have a right to use them on paying the specified toll. The law upon this subject is declared by the supreme court of Massachusetts as follows: "We think that a turnpike road is a public highway, established by public authority for public use, and is to be regarded as a public easement, and not as private property. The only difference between this and a common highway is that, instead of being made at the public expense in the first instance, it is authorized and laid out by public authority, and made at the expense of individuals in the first instance; and the cost of construction and maintenance is reimbursed by a toll levied by public authority for the purpose. Every traveler has the same right to use it, paying the toll established by law, as he would have to use any other public highway." Com. v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. 175. Now, whether the road was dedicated by defendant to the use of the public was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court in view of all the evidence. The defendant testified: "It has never been my intention to dedicate it to the public as a highway, unless they indemnify me. I never did dedicate it to the public, unless permitting persons to travel over it by paying me a compensation was a dedication." Speaking of a plank-road, the supreme court of Illinois has said: "By the act of constructing it and opening it for use, and being used on payment of tolls, it was as emphatically dedicated to the public as it could have been by deed or dedication acknowledged and recorded. The elements of a complete dedication are found in the permitted use of the road by the public, and building it for such purpose, and the subsequent use of it by the public without denial or interruption." Craig v. People, 47 Ill. 487. This language is as applicable to toll-roads as plank-roads, and we think it is a correct statement of the law. It is claimed that the evidence must not only show a dedication or abandonment of the road, but also an acceptance of it by the public as a public highway. But no formal acceptance was necessary; it was enough that the public used the road for the purpose of travel. The finding, therefore, that there was a dedication, was authorized, and must be sustained.

---

[1] As to what constitutes a dedication of land to public use as a street, see City of Eureka v. Croghan, (Cal.) 19 Pac. Rep. 485, and note; In re Wayne Ave., (Pa.) 16 Atl. Rep. 631, and note; Town of Edenville v. Railway Co., (Iowa,) 41 N. W. Rep. 568, and note; Pierce v. Roberts, (Conn.) 17 Atl. Rep. 275, and note.

2. The Political Code, § 2619, provides that "whenever the franchise for any toll-bridge, trail, turnpike, plank or common wagon road has expired by limitation or non-user, such bridge, trail, turnpike, plank or common wagon road becomes a free public highway, and no claim shall be valid against the public for right of way, or for the land or material comprising such bridge, trail, turnpike, plank or common wagon road." As we have seen, the defendant had a franchise and was authorized to collect tolls on his road until February, 1886, when the board of supervisors made the order rescinding the order of the board of auditors. Then his franchise "expired by limitation," and his road became a free public highway. It is claimed for appellant that before his road can be declared a free public highway he must be paid an equitable sum for his interest in it. But by his own acts, and presumably with full knowledge of the law, appellant turned over to the public the use of his land for a road, and vested in the public an irrevocable easement. It is not a case, therefore, where private property is sought to be taken for public use without just compensation. In some of the states compensation is made to toll-road owners upon the expiration of their franchises, but in those states it is expressly provided by law that such compensation shall be made. In this state there is no such provision, and section 2619, supra, expressly declares to the contrary. We think that section conclusive upon this question.

3. The action was properly brought on complaint of the county, the complaint stated a cause of action, and the findings were justified by the evidence. We advise, therefore, that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

Mr. Justice PATERSON did not participate in the decision of the above cause.

---

79 Cal. 171

PEOPLE v. O'KEEFE. (No. 12,398.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 8, 1889.)

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, El Dorado county; before Justice PATERSON.

Blanchard & Swisler and A. P. Catlin, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., M. P. Bennett, S. C. Denson, and C. F. Irwin, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action, like People v. Davidson, ante, 538, (No. 12,414, this day decided,) was brought to have a road adjudged a public highway, and to enjoin the defendant from collecting tolls thereon, or in any way interfering with travel over the same. The road is in El Dorado county, and about six miles long. It was constructed on public land in 1860 by a corporation which was duly organized for that purpose, and was named the "Placerville Turnpike Company." The time fixed by the corporation for the continuance of its existence was 19 years and 5 months, commencing August 1, 1860, and ending January 1, 1880. The road was known as the "Placerville Turnpike," and on the 3d day of December, 1860, the board of supervisors of the county made an order fixing the rates of toll to be charged for passing over it. Similar orders were afterwards made in November, 1863, in November, 1864, in November, 1865, in May, 1873, in June, 1878, and in July, 1879. On the 2d day of February, 1886, an order was made by the board of supervisors rescinding all orders theretofore made, and fixing rates of toll on the road. From the time the road was completed until the making of the last-named order the road was continuously used by the public and tolls were collected thereon according to the rates fixed by the board. In 1873 the defendant became the owner of a majority of the stock of the Placerville Turnpike Company, and thereafter he had the whole management and control of the road. The road continued to be assessed to the company, but the defendant paid the taxes levied thereon. Since 1873 the defendant has obtained the title in fee to a strip of land 40 feet wide, and a mile long, over which the road passes. Upon these facts the appellant makes the same points as were made in People v. Davidson. That case is decisive of this, and upon its authority the judgment and order here appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Mr. Justice PATERSON did not participate in the decision of the above cause.

---

78 Cal. 645

PEOPLE ex rel. DUNN, State Comptroller, v. BURNS et al. (No. 12,705.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1889.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

1. Where, pending an appeal, a stipulation is filed in the appellate court, from which it appears that the judgment has been satisfied, the appeal will be dismissed, and it is immaterial that the appeal is from an order denying a motion for a new trial, as well as from the judgment, as a reversal of the order would cause a reversal of the judgment.

2. Such a stipulation, being made in the appellate court, will be considered on a motion to dismiss the appeal, though it is not in the transcript of the record.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; C. H. GAROUTE, Judge.

Action by the people of the state of California ex rel. John P. Dunn, state comptroller, against D. M. Burns and others, upon the official bond of said Burns as secretary of state. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., Langhorne & Miller, and E. R. Bush, for appellant. F. E. Baker and Joseph Hutchinson, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff had judgment, but moved for a new trial, which was refused. From the order made in the premises this appeal is taken.

It appears, among other things, from a stipulation filed by the attorneys in the cause in the appellate court, "that on the 31st day of January, 1888, the defendants Freeman and Schardin paid into court the amount of the judgment for principal, interest, and costs entered on said 31st day of January, 1888, set out in the transcript; that thereafter, on the 12th day of March, 1888, plaintiff's attorneys of record received said moneys from the clerk of said court, and receipted therefor, and satisfied said judgment by indorsement of satisfaction upon the margin of the record thereof." Upon this it is now claimed by the respondents that the appeal must be dismissed. The attorneys for the appellant in opposition to that argue that the stipulation cannot be considered, because it is no part of the transcript on appeal. This view might have force if the stipulation had been made in the court below, and not in the supreme court. The admission being made, as it is, in the appellate court, we see no reason why it should be disregarded. The judgment, being satisfied, "has passed beyond review," for the satisfaction thereof "is the last act and end of the proceeding." Morton v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 496, 4 Pac. Rep. 489. The fact that the appeal is taken from the order denying a new trial makes no difference, as a reversal of that order would necessarily carry with it a new trial and reversal of the judgment, which cannot be had after it is satisfied by the party in whose favor it was rendered. If, as we gather from the briefs of counsel for appellant, they have relied solely upon the point that the appeal could not be dismissed from anything appearing in the stipulation, and have, therefore, not availed themselves of the presentation of facts which they might otherwise have done, and which might perchance place the matter in a different light, it may be that upon a proper showing, before the going down of the remittitur an opportunity might be afforded to relieve them of the force of the stipulation. As the case now stands, we advise that the appeal be dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reason given in the foregoing opinion the appeal is dismissed.

---

79 Cal. 44

AHERN v. MCGEARY et al. (No. 11,669.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

NEGLIGENCE—WHO LIABLE—APPEAL.

Where action is brought against the owner of a building and an independent contractor for damages alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the latter in doing some work on the building at the instance of the owner, the contractor cannot complain of the granting of a nonsuit to the owner.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Action by Catherine Ahern, administratrix of the estate of John Ahern, deceased, against John McGeary, Thomas Adam, and Millard Kibbe, to recover damages for the death of the deceased, caused, as it was alleged, by the negligence of the defendants in removing a flag-pole from a building, owned by Adam & Kibbe. Judgment was given against McGeary, and he appeals.

Robert Ash, for appellant. Sullivan & Cole, and McAllister & Bergin, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. The nonsuit was properly refused as to McGeary. The evidence shows clearly that he was an independent contractor to take down the flag pole or staff; that it was carelessly taken down, in consequence of which it fell on John Ahern, who was on the street, and killed him. The appellant, McGeary, has no concern with the nonsuit which was granted as to the defendants, Adam & Kibbe, and cannot urge such ruling as error. If there was any error at all in this ruling, it did not affect him. We find no error in the record. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

78 Cal. 556

GREEN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 20,514.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

Dissenting opinion. For opinion of the court, see 21 Pac. Rep. 307.

PATERSON, J. (dissenting.) It seems to me that my brothers have fallen into error in assuming that the offense with which this petitioner stands charged is not an "infamous offense" within the meaning of our constitution, simply because it is a misdemeanor. The question whether an offense is an "infamous offense" or not does not depend upon the nature or extent of the punishment. It is the nature of the crime, not the punishment, which makes it infamous. At common law persons convicted of petty larceny, and whipped, were held incompetent witnesses because infamous, but, no matter how infamous the punishment, unless it was inflicted for a capital offense, a crime against nature, or for forgery, perjury, or some other species of crimen falsi, infamy did not attach. Pendock v. Mackinder, Willes, 665; Co. Litt. 6*b*, note 1; U. S. v. Porter, 2 Cranch, C. C. 63; State v. Gardner, 1 Root, 485; People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. 708. There are no authorities to the contrary, and there is no doubt that at common law a conspiracy to "falsely and maliciously indict another for any crime, or to procure another to be charged or arrested for any crime," which is the charge against this petitioner, was an infamous offense. It is infamous in fact, infamous in law. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373, note and cases cited therein. In New York and some other states the term "infamous crime," when used in any statute, is defined by statute to include only such offenses as are punishable with death, or by imprisonment in the state-prison. No such construction has ever been put upon the term in this state. We are therefore bound to presume that it is used in the constitution and in the laws in the same sense that it was used at common law. Pol. Code, § 4468; U. S. v. Block, 4 Sawy. 214; Lyford v. Farrar, 31 N. H. 315. The constitution of 1862 provides that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, except in cases of * * * petty larceny, * * * unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury." That rule is referred to, and is re-enacted, by the new constitution, with the exception that prosecutions may now be had by information. Article 1, § 8. The constitution of the United States is almost identical in language with our own on this subject. It provides: "No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except," etc. Article 5, Amendments. It has been decided by the national courts that this "amendment to the constitution of the United States prohibits any proceeding other than by indictment in all cases of infamous crimes, whether they are misdemeanors or not." U. S. v. Block, supra. In that case Judge DEADY said: "The word 'infamous,' as used in the fifth amendment, must be taken in the sense in which it was used and understood at the common law from which it was taken. That is the sense in which it was used and understood by those who made and adopted the constitution and the amendments to it. Bains v. The Schooner, 1 Baldw. 558. As has been shown at common law, this term was only applicable to certain crimes, which from their nature implied a total want of truth in the person committing them, without reference to the fact of whether they were otherwise distinguished as felonies or misdemeanors. Neither was it the punishment, but the nature of the act constituting the crime, which made it infamous. Ex delicto non ex supplicio emergit infamio. * * * The following have been determined to be such crimes: 'Forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, suppression of testimony by bribery, or conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness or other conspiracy to accuse one of a crime, and barratry.'" But it is useless to examine the authorities upon the question whether the distinction between crimes infamous and those which are not infamous depends upon the grade of the offense—whether a misdemeanor or a felony. The provision of the constitution of 1862, which we have quoted above, expressly excepts from the class of offenses designated as infamous crimes "cases of petty larceny." Here is a clear recognition of the fact that there were infamous offenses in this state which were misdemeanors, for petty larceny itself, one of the cases excepted, is a misdemeanor; and this provision is re-enacted in section 8, art. 1, of our present constitution.

If I am correct in saying that the infamy of the crime with which this petitioner stands charged does not depend upon the question whether it is a felony or a misdemeanor, and that it is to be considered as it was at common law, an infamous offense,—and such seems to me to be the clear letter of the constitution in the bill of rights,—then there is no machinery by which a prosecution can be had in the police court, and that court has no jurisdiction. A statute conferring jurisdiction upon an inferior court without making provision for a procedure therein consistent with the constitutional rights of the citizen is abortive and void. Thomas v. Bibb, 44 Ala. 723. If it be conceded that the legislature might provide for prosecutions in police courts by indictment or information, it is sufficient to say that it has not done so. If this court has ever said that the form of procedure by which an offense is prosecuted is immaterial, (i. e., with or without a preliminary examination by magistrate or grand jury,) such decision is to be regretted, and should be overruled; for it not only violates the plain letter of the constitution, but deprives the citizen of one of the most valuable rights guarantied to him by the constitution itself. It was never intended by those who framed the constitution, or by those who adopted it, to give to inferior courts the power to try a citizen for an offense of so grave a nature simply upon an affidavit. The right to be free from prosecutions for such offenses, except after an examination by a grand jury, or a committing magistrate, after opportunity to be heard before the latter, is a valuable right, and one that the framers of all constitutions have preserved to the citizen. A judgment of conviction in cases like the one before us not only subjects the defendant to a heavy fine and imprisonment, but deprives him forever of "the privileges of an elector in this state." Const. art. 2, § 1. But I cannot read Ex parte Wallingford, 60 Cal. 103; or Gafford v. Bush, Id. 149, so as to construe it as it is construed in the leading opinion. The question before the court in Ex parte Wallingford was whether the superior court had jurisdiction in cases of petit larceny. It was held that it had not. As we have shown above, cases of petit larceny are expressly excepted from the operation of article 1, § 8, of the constitution, and this is what was decided in Ex parte Wallingford, nothing more. That case does not sustain the contention of the petitioner here, but, as I read it, it is by implication an authority directly to the contrary; for the court there said: "Whether or not there are any misdemeanors included within the provisions of section 115, which are required by the provisions of the constitution to be prosecuted by indictment or information, need not be determined in this case. But it is clear that there is nothing in the constitution which prohibits the legislature from requiring the crime of petit larceny to be otherwise prosecuted. * * * It will thus be seen that cases of petit larceny are expressly excepted from the constitutional provision prescribing the mode of prosecution, and are left to the regulation of the legislature." Here is a clear intimation that there are classes of misdemeanors for which the constitution has prescribed the mode of prosecution. In Gafford v. Bush the question was whether the superior court had jurisdiction of an indictment charging a person with keeping open a saloon on Sunday. No one contended in that case that the crime charged was an infamous offense, and, of course, as the penalty was a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, it was held that the legislature had properly invested the justice's court with jurisdiction. In that case the questions considered and decided by the court in Ex parte Wallingford were affirmed, and the court there, too, seems to intimate that it was not intended to be left to the legislature to vest jurisdiction in other courts than the superior courts in all misdemeanors, but only "in a certain class or classes of minor offenses, * * * for by it the superior courts would be left to attend to cases of a more important character, and they would not consume time in trying persons charged with petty offenses, to the neglect of matters of a graver nature." With the expediency of the constitutional provision under consideration we have nothing to do. It may be true that it will be difficult in some cases to determine whether the offense charged is an infamous offense or not; but that is a matter for future consideration. It is often difficult to tell whether a given matter is a matter of law or of fact, but the difficulty in determining the matter does not affect the distinction.

It is claimed that the justice's court has heretofore been given jurisdiction of these offenses. I have been unable to find any statute in support of this contention. It is true, as claimed, the legislature has attempted to confer upon the police court, by the act of 1871–72, jurisdiction in all misdemeanors where the penalty is a fine of $1,000, or imprisonment for one year, or both fine and imprisonment; but such an attempt cannot override a plain constitutional provision. The language of the constitution is: "Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted," etc. Prior to the adoption of that provision, as we have shown, the constitution of 1862 required all infamous crimes, except petit larceny, to be prosecuted by presentment or indictment. Without considering any other of the points made by the respondent, it seems to me clear that the jurisdiction to try the offense with which the petitioner stands charged must rest in the superior court, at least until some machinery is provided for a prosecution by indictment or information in the police court.

MILLER et al. v. BUTTERFIELD. (No. 8,617.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

1. Plaintiffs and defendant entered into the following contract: "We, the undersigned, agree to share equal in any mine we may buy or find from this date. I [defendant] offset my time against my board with" plaintiffs. Signed, etc. Held, that under the contract plaintiffs were to board defendant while prospecting, and that, as to any mines discovered and located by him pending the agreement, all were to be equal tenants in common; also as to mines bought; but this only on condition that all should contribute equally to the purchase price. Where plaintiffs soon after the date of the contract became insolvent, and were unable to board defendant, who thereafter purchased certain mining property with his own funds, and without any offer of contribution from plaintiffs, they were not entitled to any interest in such property.

2. Parol evidence was inadmissible to enlarge, extend, or otherwise vary the contract; and any subsequent contract, whether written or parol, with respect to the management or disposal of the property to be acquired, was wholly immaterial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mono county; MARCUS P. WIGGIN, Judge.

P. Reddy, (McAllister & Bergin, of counsel,) for appellant. Robert M. Clark, Kittrell & Owen, and T. W. W. Davies, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. September 24, 1879, the parties to this action entered into the following agreement in writing "We, the undersigned, agree to share equal in any mine that we may buy or find from this date. I, G. W. Butterfield, offset my time against my board with O. Miller and J. M. Miller. G. W. BUTTERFIELD, J. M. MILLER, ORRIN MILLER." At the time of the execution of this agreement plaintiffs were keeping a hotel in Bodie, a mining town, and defendant was a miner and prospector. The plaintiffs were in financial difficulties, and in less than three weeks their hotel was closed, and their business broken up, by the action of their creditors. They did not and could not thereafter board the defendant, and no mines had been discovered or located up to the time their hotel was closed. Meantime, however, defendant had commenced negotiations for the purchase of the mining properties, or some of them, which are in controversy here, and he did subsequently effect purchases with money procured upon his own individual credit, and advanced by him alone. The plaintiffs did not and could not contribute, and never offered to contribute anything towards the fund with which these interests were purchased. The conveyances were made to the defendant, and he claimed to be the sole owner. The plaintiffs thereupon commenced this action, alleging the formation of a partnership between them and defendant on the 24th of September, 1879, to locate, buy, and sell mines on joint account, and praying dissolution, accounting, and conveyance to them of their interest in the mines acquired by defendant in his own name subsequent to the date mentioned. The findings and decree of the superior court were in favor of plaintiffs, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. On the trial in the superior court plaintiffs introduced in evidence the written agreement above quoted, and also, against the objection of defendant, parol testimony, not only as to the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of the execution of the written agreement, but also as to what the parties understood or intended it to mean, and as to the subsequent conversations between the parties to the effect that they would sell and share the proceeds of the mines acquired in pursuance of the agreement.

Whether the finding of the superior court that there was a partnership was based upon a construction of the writing, read in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of the execution, or upon the parol testimony as to the real meaning of the parties, and their subsequent talk about selling the mines, does not clearly appear, but we think that in any view the finding was erroneous. The true construction of the contract appears to be this: that the Millers were to board Butterfield while he employed his time prospecting, and that as to any mines discovered and located by him (found) pending the agreement, and while it was performed by them, all were to be tenants in common with equal shares. As to mines bought, the parties were also to be tenants in common, with the like interest, but this only upon the condition (necessarily implied) that they should contribute equally to the purchase fund. Neither was obliged by the agreement to contribute to the purchase of any particular mine, selected by one or both of the others, though each may have been entitled to the opportunity to so contribute, and to share in the purchase. Certainly they could not, one or more of them, allow another to make a purchase with his own funds, and at his own risk, and, without being obliged to reimburse him in case of loss, claim the advantages of the bargain in case of gain. This being the proper construction of the written contract, parol evidence was inadmissible for the purpose of enlarging, extending, or otherwise varying it; and any subsequent contract with respect to the management or disposal of the property to be acquired, whether in writing or by parol, was wholly immaterial. Conceding, without deciding, that a subsequent parol contract to sell the property acquired in pursuance of the written contract, and to divide the proceeds in stipulated proportions, might have bound the parties, the question, and the only material question in this case, still remains, what property was so acquired? We think that the fact that the defendant alone provided the funds for the purchase of the properties in controversy; that the plaintiffs not only did not, but could not, and were in no wise bound to, contribute any share of the purchase money,—is fatal to their claim to an interest in such properties. Ordered therefore, that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: Works, J.; Paterson, J.; McFarland, J.; Thornton, J.; Sharpstein, J.

(79 Cal. 45)

Oakland Paving Co. v. Barstow et al.

(No. 11,972.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

Street Contracts—Time of the Essence.

1. A contract for street work, entered into prior to January 1, 1880, when the new constitution of California went into effect, could lawfully be extended as to the time of completion after that date.

2. Section 6 of the Oakland "street law" (St. Cal. 1863-64, p. 333) provides the city marshal "shall fix the time for the commencement of the work under all contracts entered into by him, which work shall be prosecuted with due diligence from day to day thereafter to completion, and may extend the time so fixed from time to time under the direction of the city council." Held, that this does not, under the principle of expressio unius, etc., deny the power of extending the time of completion of such contracts.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior court, Alameda county; E. M. Gibson, Judge.

J. H. Brewer, (A. L. Rhodes, of counsel,) for appellants. J. C. Martin and C. T. H. Palmer, for respondent.

McFarland, J. This is an action brought by a contractor to enforce a lien for street work done in the city of Oakland. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the city marshal in December, 1879. A time for the completion of the work was mentioned in the contract. This time was extended, or attempted to be extended, twice during the year 1880 by the city council and marshal. The work was completed within the time as extended, but not within the time originally mentioned in the contract. Appellants' main contentions are: First, that after January 1, 1880, when the new constitution went into full effect, there was no power in the city, or any of its officers, to extend the time for the completion of street work; second, that, under the city charter itself, neither the city council, nor marshal, nor both, had power to grant such extension; and, third, that no such extension was ever actually given.

1. As the contract was made before January, 1880, it was not impaired or affected by the new constitution. The granting of the extension of time was not a novation or new contract; it was merely a pursuance of the original contract under rights existing by virtue of the law under which it was made. The extensions were made before the original time, or the time given in the first extention, had elapsed. The case of Bank v. County of Franklin, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159, cited by appellants, differs in many respects from the case at bar.

2. The contention that the charter gives no power to extend the time for the completion of a contract rests (in addition to the claim that Conlin v. Seamen, 22 Cal. 547, and Houston v. McKenna, Id. 551, were wrongly decided) on the attempted application of the maxim expressio unius, etc., to the latter clause of the first sentence of section 6 of the Oakland street law. St. 1863-64, p. 333. Said clause is as follows: "Said marshal shall fix the time for the commencement of the work under all contracts entered into by him, which work shall be prosecuted with due diligence from day to day thereafter to completion, and may extend the time so fixed from time to time under the direction of the city council." It is argued that the words "so fixed" refer only to "commencement;" and that, as the power to extend the time for the commencement of the work is expressed, therefore the power to extend its completion must be held to be excluded. But, in the first place, it is not entirely clear that the construction contended for is the correct one. It would, no doubt, be the strict, grammatical construction; but the language undoubtedly leaves the impression that the law-maker, when using it, had the intent to do something more than to merely give power to extend the commencement of the work. If that had been his sole purpose, the words concerning the extension of time would naturally have immediately followed those about the commencement of the work; whereas they are placed after the clause requiring the prosecution of the work with due diligence from day to day thereafter to "completion." The last two lines of the sentence seem to contemplate a condition of things existing after the work had been commenced, and a time when it would be folly to speak of extending the "commencement" of that work. At all events, the true construction of the clause is so doubtful that if the power to extend the completion of the work can be fairly gathered from other parts of the statute, then it would be straining a rule beyond its breaking point to hold such power to be excluded by said clause by virtue of the said maxim invoked by appellants. And we think that the power to extend the time for the completion is clearly given in other parts of the statute. It is to be observed that the statute does not provide that there shall be inserted in the contract any stated time for the completion of the work. The provision is merely that the work "shall be prosecuted with due diligence from day to day thereafter to completion," and must be done "under the direction, and to the satisfaction, of the marshal." Section 6. The marshal, therefore, (at least with the concurrence of the council,) had full control of the time within which the work should be completed. He need not have inserted in the contract any definite time at all for the completion of the work; and, to say that this power did not include the power to extend the time when he had inserted a definite period, is to say that the greater does not include the less. Throughout the statute the council and marshal are given the most plenary general powers over all matters relating to street work, and it is expressly provided that "the marshal of said city is hereby authorized, in his official capacity, to make all written contracts, and receive all bonds authorized by this act, and to do any other act, either expressed or implied, that pertains to the street department under this act." Section 6. Moreover, the general power to extend the time for the completion of the work was settled and declared in the two cases of Conlin v. Seamen and Houston v. McKenna, above noted. The statutory provisions before the court in those cases, with respect to the point under discussion, were almost identical with those of the Oakland street law, except that they did not include the clause above quoted about the extension of time.

3. The third contention of appellants is that the resolutions adopted by the council, and the indorsements made on the contract by the marshal, do not contain sufficiently apt language to create extensions of the time to complete the work. We think, however, that this view is over critical, and that the language used clearly expresses the intention to grant the extensions, and is amply sufficient to work that result. We do not see anything more in the points made that requires special notice. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

79 Cal. 65

In re DOLAN'S ESTATE. (No. 12,968.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1889.)

EXPRESS TRUSTS—VALIDITY.

Testatrix devised land in trust to pay certain debts and legacies out of the income therefrom, and directed that after they were so paid the whole income should be given to her son J., for life. At his death the land was to vest in the trustee in fee. Civil Code Cal. § 857, provides for an express trust to receive the rents and profits of land, and to apply them to the use of any person for life, under certain legal rules. Section 863 provides that every valid trust in real property shall vest the whole estate in the trustee, subject only to the execution of the trust, but that the beneficiaries may enforce the performance of the trust. Held, under said sections, that the devise created a valid trust, vesting no estate in J. except the right to receive the income of the land, and that it was error to decree that he was entitled to the possession of the land for life.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Petition by Michael Dolan and John Quale, executors, etc., of Margaret Dolan, deceased, for distribution and settlement of the estate. There was a decree ordering certain real estate to be delivered to one James Dolan for life, the will being construed to entitle him thereto. Michael Dolan appeals.

Matt I. Sullivan, for appellant. Taylor & Craig, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. Margaret Dolan executed her last will in April, 1877, and died in December following. The will was duly admitted to probate, and in it is found the following language: "First. I give, devise, and bequeath to my son Michael Dolan, in trust for the following purposes, that certain house and lot, No. 317 Stockton street, in the city and county of San Francisco, etc. (1) I direct that my said son Michael shall, from the rents, issues and profits of said house and lot, pay and discharge the mortgage now on the same, as soon after my death as the income will justify. (2) That as soon as said mortgage shall have been paid and satisfied, as aforesaid, I desire and intend that from the rents and profits of the said property each of my daughters, Celia Jordan, wife of John Jordan, and Margaret Platt, of Australia, British Colonies, shall receive the sum of four hundred dollars ($400.) (3) Also, from the same source, the sum of one hundred dollars ($100) to Sister Frances McEnnis, for the use and benefit of the orphans under her charge. (4) After the aforesaid application of the emoluments of the said property shall have been made, I direct that the whole of the income of said lot and building be given to my son James Dolan during the term of his natural life, and after his death the same to vest in my son Michael Dolan, in fee." In due time the executors of the will filed their petition for a decree of distribution of the property of the estate. The court acted on the petition, and by its decree distributed the whole income of the house and lot mentioned to James P. Dolan, who is admitted to be the James Dolan named in the will, during the term of his natural life; and it then "ordered that a life-estate in said real property vest in said James P. Dolan, and that said executors transfer the possession of said real estate forthwith, to said James P. Dolan, and that he retain possession of the same, free from the control of said John F. Quale and Michael Dolan, or either, as executors or trustees, for and during the term of his natural life." From this decree Michael Dolan has appealed, and the only questions presented relate to that part of the decree which gives to his brother, James P., a life-estate in and a right to the possession of the said property.

As we read the will, it gave the property to Michael Dolan in trust to collect and receive the rents and profits thereof and to use them—First, to pay the mortgage on the property; second, to pay the legacies to Celia Jordan and Margaret Platt; third, to pay the legacy to Sister Frances McEnnis; and, fourth, to pay all the residue thereof to James Dolan during his natural life. This was an express trust, and was authorized by law. See section 857, Civil Code, which provides as follows: "Express trusts may be created for any of the following purposes: * * * (3) To receive the rents and profits of real property, and pay them to or apply them to the use of, any person, whether ascertained at the time of the creation of the trust or not, for himself or for his family during the life of such person, or for any shorter term, subject to the rules of title 2 of this part." If we rightly construe the will, James Dolan did not take a life-estate in the property or right to its possession. This is shown by section 863, Civil Code, which declares that "except as hereinafter otherwise provided, every express trust in real property, valid as such in its creation, vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust. The beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property, but may enforce the performance of the trust." And see Estate of Delaney, 49 Cal. 76. It follows that the decree of distribution should be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to modify its decree in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its decree in accordance with this opinion.

(79 Cal. 74)

DONNELLY v. HUFSCHMIDT et al. (No. 11,948.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1889.)

NEGLIGENCE—DAMAGES.

1. Defendants, who had been repairing a house, by permission of a person in charge, left a box on the premises in a pathway leading from the door of the house to a slop-hopper. Held, that they were responsible to a tenant living in the house, who, in going along the pathway to the hopper, after dark, in the performance of household duties, fell over the box, and was injured.

2. Expenses incurred for medicine, nurse hire, and doctor's bills may be recovered in an action for personal injuries, though the bills have not been paid at the time of the trial.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Donnelly against Louis Hufschmidt and others. Judgment was given for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

A. P. Needles, (T. M McEntee, of counsel,) for appellants. M. Cooney and Henry H. Reid, for respondent.

THORNTON J. This is an action to recover damages for a personal injury alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff in consequence of the negligent conduct of the defendants. The defendants were engaged to repair a range in a building in which the plaintiff lodged, as tenant and occupant of a room. The defendants completed the work late in the afternoon, and by permission of a person in charge left on the premises a box of tools and a box of cement, the contents of which they had been using in repairing the range. They placed the box of tools in a passageway of the house, and the box of cement in the yard. The plaintiff had occasion to make a pot of tea, and for that purpose she went from the room where she lodged to the kitchen, as she had a right to do, to procure a teapot. She found some tea leaves in the pot which she wished to get rid of, and for that purpose went out into the yard to empty them into a slop-hopper. Night had come on and when she went into the yard it was dark. There was a pathway to the hopper from the door of her exit from the house, and she was going, as she testified, straight from this door to the hopper, when she came in contact with the box of cement, over which she fell and received the injury for which this action is brought. Verdict and judgment passed in plaintiff's favor, and this appeal is prosecuted by defendants from the judgment, and an order denying their motion for a new trial.

It is urged that defendants were guilty of no negligence for which they were responsible to the plaintiff. If the defendants left the box in the pathway to the hopper, along which plaintiff had to go to reach the hopper, and she fell over it, we are of opinion that they were guilty of negligence for which they were responsible. There is some conflict in the evidence on the point whether defendants put the cement box in this pathway or not, but the jury in finding against defendants must have affirmed that they did place it in the way mentioned, and we cannot on that ground interfere with their verdict. Nor can it be held that the defendants owed no duty to the plaintiff. The defendants were bound so to exercise their rights as not to interfere with the rights of others. Needham v. Railroad Co., 37 Cal. 417. They owed the duty to the plaintiff to do her no injury in the employment of their own legal rights. We have examined the charge of the court and the request to charge asked by defendants and refused, and find no error in the rulings of the court. The court properly directed the jury that the plaintiff had the right to recover the amount, if any, expended by her for medicine and nurse hire, and did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that "nothing should be allowed plaintiff by way of damages for expenses incurred for nurse hire, medicines, and doctor's bills, unles actually paid" by her The object of damages is to give compensation for loss for the injury sustained. The medical man was employed as a direct consequence of the injury. The obligation to pay the surgeon for his services still rests on the plaintiff, and compensation for the detriment she has suffered could not be complete unless she was placed in a position to discharge herself from this obligation. Her failure to pay may have resulted from the hurt occasioned by defendants. The law allows such recovery by plaintiff for the reason that the acts of defendants superinduced the incurring of the obligation, and the duty to discharge it is imposed by law on defendants. We find no error in the record. Judgment and order affirmed.

I concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.

MCFARLAND, J. I concur. The only doubt which I had in the case was as to the point whether plaintiff could recover for her doctor's bill without having first paid it, upon which point counsel throw no light. The law is, I think, that a plaintiff, in such a case, cannot prove he has incurred a physician's bill under an allegation that he had paid it. Ward v. Haws, 5 Minn. 440, (Gil. 359;) Pritchet v. Boevey, 1 Cromp. & M. 775; Jones v. Lewis, 9 Dowl. 143; 1 Sedgw. Dam. (7th Ed.) p. 197, note a. But I do not find the rule to be established that he cannot recover for such a bill, though only incurred where that fact is averred in the complaint. And I think that the better reason is with the position taken in the opinion of Mr. Justice THORNTON. The complaint in this case has a sufficient averment that the expense was incurred.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 83

MARTIN v. SPLIVALO et al. (No. 11,938.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 3, 1889.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where none of the pleadings or proceedings in the court below prior to judgment appear in the transcript, and the evidence is not brought up, the judgment must be presumed to be right.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

A. D. Splivalo, for appellants. Houghton & Reynolds, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal from a money judgment recovered by the respondent against the appellants. The record shows no errors. None of the pleadings or proceedings in the court below, prior to the judgment, appear in the transcript, and the evidence is not brought up. In this condition of the record we must presume that the judgment appealed from was right. Judgment affirmed, with 10 per cent. damages.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 83

HAAS v. WHITTIER et al. (No. 12,927.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 6, 1889.)

NEW TRIAL—OBJECTIONS TO VERDICT.

An order granting a new trial, applied for on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, will not be reversed unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. P. GARDINER, Judge.

Action by Abe Haas, assignee in insolvency, against W. F Whittier and others. Judgment was rendered for defendants, and the plaintiff obtained an order for a new trial.

Barclay, Wilson & Carpenter, for appellants. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland and Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal from an order granting the respondent a new trial. One of the grounds of the motion was that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. Without attempting to review the evidence, or to determine what weight should be given to it, which will be within the province of the lower court on a second trial, it is sufficient to say that the evidence was such that this court will not set aside the order granting a new trial. Such an order will not be reversed unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears. Gerold v. Brunswick, 67 Cal. 124, 7 Pac. Rep. 306. No such abuse of discretion appears in this case. Order affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

79 Cal. 159

MORAN et al. v. ROSS. (No. 12,658.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 6, 1889.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—RAILROADS.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1238, providing that real estate may be condemned for railway and other purposes, and Civil Code, § 1001, authorizing any person without further legislation to acquire private property for any purpose specified in said section 1238 by consent of the owner or by condemnation proceedings, a private individual may cause land to be condemned for railway purposes.

2. Const. Cal. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, and that no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any private corporation until compensation shall have been made, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, does not restrict the condemnation of land to railways under the control of corporations.

3. Const. Cal. art. 12, § 22, providing for a railroad commission having power to establish rates of charges for "railroad and other transportation companies," and imposing penalties on any "railroad corporation or transportation company" refusing to conform to the regulations of such commission, applies to all persons engaged in transportation, whether as corporations or individuals.

4. If said constitutional provision applied to corporations alone it would not limit the power to construct and operate railroads to corporations alone.

5. The fact that the right to construct and operate railways and to condemn land for right of way is conferred on corporations by statute does not prevent an individual from exercising similar powers.

6. In proceedings by private individuals to condemn land for railway purposes it is not error to refuse to permit defendant to prove that the general line of plaintiffs' projected road was first located by a railroad corporation, and that some of it on a different portion of the line was actually built.

7. In such proceedings, there being no allegation in the answer that fences and cattle-guards would be necessary to be constructed in case the railway should be built, it is not error to fail to find upon that question.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; M. MARSTELLER, Judge.

Action by Charles Moran and others, partners under the firm name of Moran Bros., to condemn land of A. E. Ross for railway purposes. Judgment for plaintiffs, assessing the compensation to be paid at $260, and defendant appeals. Const. Cal. art. 12, § 22, provides for the appointment of a railroad commission having power to regulate the charges of "railroad or other transportation companies." It further provides that any railroad corporation or transportation company refusing to comply with the rules shall be fined as therein stated.

Goodwin & Davis, for appellant. Spencer & Raker, for respondents.

WORKS, J. Action to condemn lands for the right of way of a railroad, brought by the respondents as partners. Judgment for the plaintiff. Motion for a new trial denied. Defendant appeals.

The main contention of the appellant is that the right to condemn real estate for railroad purposes can only be exercised by corporations, and that proceedings for that purpose cannot be maintained by private individuals. The right of eminent domain is inherent in the state, and not conferred by the constitution. 1 Wood, Ry. Law, § 223; Cooley, Const. Lim. 647; Mills, Em. Dom. § 1. But the power of the state to condemn land for public uses must, in the main, be exercised by agents; and for that reason this power may be delegated by the legislature of the state either to corporations or individuals who act as such agents, and under legislative control. Mahoney v. Water-Works, 52 Cal. 161; 1 Wood, Ry. Law, § 223; Cooley, Const. Lim. 653, 666; In re Kerr, 42 Barb. 119; Canal Co. v. Archer, 9 Gill & J. 479; Beekman v. Railroad Co., 3 Paige, 44; Whiteman v. Railroad Co., 2 Har. (Del.) 514; Mills, Em. Dom. § 13. Whether an improvement is of sufficient importance to justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain is a question for the legislature to determine, subject only to the requirement that such improvement shall be for the public benefit, and not for private purposes. Mahoney v. Water-Works, 52 Cal. 161; Cooley, Const. Lim. 657; 1 Wood, Ry. Law, § 224; Beekman v. Railroad Co., 3 Paige, 44; Mills, Em. Dom. §§ 10, 22. Railways are a species of public highways, and as such have uniformly been held to be public improvements to which the right of eminent domain attaches, although they may be constructed by private corporations or individuals, and operated for the emoluments to be derived therefrom by the operators. Mills, Em. Dom. § 14; 1 Wood. Ry. Law, § 226; Railroad Co. v. Caldwell, 31 Cal. 368. This right of eminent domain need not be specially granted in every instance, but may be delegated by general laws to every person who shall comply with the terms upon which the right is given. 1 Wood, Ry. Law, § 224.

The question presented in this case, therefore, is whether the privilege of exercising this right has been delegated, in this state, to individuals as well as to corporations. The Code of Civil Procedure provides for what purposes real estate may be condemned, among which is that of railroads. Code Civil Proc. § 1238. And the terms upon which the right may be enforced, and the manner in which it shall be exercised, are provided for in the following sections. Id. §§ 1241, 1263. The Civil Code provides: "Any person may, without further legislative action, acquire private property for any use specified in section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, either by consent of the owner or by proceedings had under the provisions of title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and any person seeking to acquire property for any of the uses mentioned in such title is 'an agent of the state,' or a 'person in charge of such use,' within the meaning of those terms, as used in such title. This section shall be in force from and after the 4th day of April, 1872." Civil Code, § 1001. These provisions of the Codes, taken together, confer upon private individuals the right of eminent domain in this class of cases, in plain and unequivocal terms.

But counsel for appellant contend that under section 14, art. 1, of the constitution of this state the right can only be exercised by two classes of persons, viz., municipal and private corporations. The section of the constitution referred to provides: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner, and no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived, as in other civil cases in a court of record, as shall be prescribed by law." Their position, as we understand it, is that this is a "disabling provision," and contemplates the taking of rights of way by the two classes of persons named and those only. The first clause of the section: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner," applies to all persons, and is in entire harmony with the provisions of the Codes above cited. The latter clause applies to private corporations, and imposes upon them an additional requirement. The argument of counsel amounts to simply this: The constitution provides that a right cannot be exercised by a corporation except upon certain conditions; therefore it cannot be exercised by a private individual at all. This seems to us to be entirely illogical and without force. The constitution does not assume to provide for what uses or purposes private property may be condemned, nor by whom. These matters are left entirely to the legislature, to be determined and regulated by statute, and the Codes contain ample provision therefor.

But it is said that section 22, art. 12, of the constitution, providing for a railroad commission, is only applicable to corporations, and therefore private individuals cannot construct and operate such roads. If the section referred to were confined to corporations, the conclusion contended for would not follow; but in our judgment the control of the railroad commission, as provided for, is not confined to corporations. It extends, by its terms, to railroad corporations and "transportation companies." This should be construed to extend the supervision of the commission to all persons engaged in the business of transportation, whether as corporations, joint-stock companies, partnerships, or individuals; and so it has been construed by legislative enactment. The act organizing and defining the powers of the board of railroad commissioners provides: "The term 'transportation companies' shall be deemed to mean and include: First, all companies owning and operating railroads (other than street railroads) within this state; second, all companies owning and operating steamships engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers from and to ports within this state; third, all companies owning and operating steam-boats used in transporting freight or passengers upon the rivers or inland waters of this state. The word 'company,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to mean and include corporations, associations, partnerships, trustees, agents, assignees, and individuals." St. 1880, pp. 45, 48, § 14. Thus the power and supervision of the railroad commission has been extended to all persons owning and operating railroads, whether the section of the constitution referred to has that effect or not.

The fact that the right to construct and operate railroads is given by statute to railroad corporations, and the right of way therefor is granted to them by statute, is relied upon as supporting the appellant's position. This argument is much like the other. The claim is that because the right is expressly given by statute to corporations it cannot be exercised by any one else, unless the right is conferred in the same way. But this does not follow. A corporation is a creature of legislation. Its rights, powers, and duties are conferred and defined by statute. Without such statutory authority it could not exist, or transact any business. This is not so of a private individual. He may construct and operate a railroad on his own land, or on the land of another, without statutory license. If the necessity of condemning the lands of another arises, in order to construct the road, he must have constitutional or statutory authority to entitle him to proceed. This authority is given him, in express terms, as we have seen, by the Codes. The cases of Mahoney v. Water-Works, 52 Cal. 161, and Railroad Co. v. Raymond, 53 Cal. 223, are relied upon by the appellant as sustaining his position. There is language in the former of these cases to the effect that a proceeding to condemn lands for the purposes of water-works could only be commenced and continued by a corporation, but a decision of that question was not necessary to a decision of the case, and it is quite clear that it was not carefully considered, if considered at all, and no authority is cited, or reason advanced, in support of such a doctrine. The latter case does not bear upon the question presented here. The point made there was that work-shops for repairing and safely keeping the cars and locomotives of a railroad were not part of such railroad, or a public use, and therefore section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not authorize the condemnation of land upon which to erect such buildings. This court held that the use for which the land was sought to be condemned was within section 1238, and as a reason for so holding it was stated that railroad companies were authorized by other sections of the Code to construct such buildings as a necessary part of their roads.

The defendant offered to prove that the general line of the road described in the complaint was first located by a certain railroad corporation, and that a part of it had been built by said company. The evidence was excluded, and this is urged as error. There was no error in this ruling. The mere fact that some one had at some time in the past located the line of the road, and had actually built on such line on a different part thereof from that for which the respondents were seeking to condemn, was immaterial.

It is also claimed that the court failed to find upon the issue as to the necessity for fences and cattle-guards along and upon defendant's lands. The court did find the cost of good and sufficient fences on each side of the road, and of cattle-guards, but not whether the same were necessary or not. In this respect the findings are like the answer, which failed to allege that such fences and cattle-guards were necessary. As no such issue was made by the answer, the failure to find upon it was not error. Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

MORAN et al v. FARLEY. (No. 12,657.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 6, 1889.)

WORKS, J. The facts and points made in this case are the same as Moran v. Ross, (No. 12,658, ante, 547,) this day filed, and for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case the judgment and order appealed from herein are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

---

79 Cal. 82

CARTER v. HOPKINS et al. (No. 12,967.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1889.)

RESULTING TRUSTS—NONSUIT.

1. Plaintiff sued to establish a resulting trust in defendant in certain land alleged to have been purchased by plaintiff's intestate and conveyed to the defendant by deed absolute on its face, but under the agreement to hold the same in trust for said intestate. Defendant answered, admitting such purchase, but averring that he had purchased intestate's interest in his life-time, and had paid him therefor by conveying to him certain other lands. The only evidence on the question was defendant's admissions, which agreed substantially with the allegations of his answer, and were coupled with the claim of absolute ownership under purchase from intestate; payment being made by means of the conveyance of the land mentioned in the answer. The deed conveying the latter tract recited a pecuniary consideration. Held, that a nonsuit was properly granted, the evidence showing the trust to have been extinguished by the conveyance last mentioned.

2. A motion for a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff "has failed to prove a single allegation of his complaint" is sufficiently definite as to the reasons thereof.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by John W. Carter, special administrator, etc., of Thomas T. Bouldin, deceased, against Rufus C. Hopkins, Margaret A. Hopkins, his wife, and the San Francisco Savings Union, to declare the defendant Rufus C. Hopkins to hold a certain lot in the city of San Francisco in trust for plaintiff, and to require him to convey the same to him. The substantial allegations of the complaint are that on March 27, 1862, Bouldin, on the eve of departure from this state to the state of Virginia, purchased the land described in the complaint from John P. and Hannah Holden; but, instead of taking the legal title in his own name, the deed was made out to defendant Rufus C. Hopkins, who thereupon held the legal title as trustee of a resulting trust in behalf of Bouldin, who had furnished the entire purchase money. It is also alleged that before leaving California Bouldin constituted Hopkins his agent in other matters. That Bouldin returned to San Francisco in 1868, and that Hopkins never disputed the trust relation, nor Bouldin's right to the property, until shortly prior to the latter's death, in April, 1873. It is also claimed that Hopkins had, in violation of his trust, sold a portion of the land to Jeremiah and Daniel Callaghan, and had mortgaged a portion to the defendant San Francisco Savings Union. That the rents, issues, and profits, and the value of the use and occupation for which Hopkins should be made accountable, is $250 per month from the date of purchase; and, finally, that John W. Carter, the plaintiff, at the commencement of this action, was appointed the special administrator of the estate of said Thomas T. Bouldin, deceased. The complaint was filed April 15, 1874. By the amended answer of Rufus C., and his wife, Margaret Ann, Hopkins, it is admitted that Bouldin furnished the entire purchase price ($2,000) for this land at the time of its purchase from the Holdens. Defendants also admit the conveyance of part of the land to the Callaghans, and the execution of the mortgage to the San Francisco Savings Union, but aver such conveyance and mortgage to have been for the sole use and benefit of Bouldin, prior to the alleged purchase by R. C. Hopkins of Bouldin's equitable estate in the land. It is also admitted that R. C. Hopkins has been in the possession of the greater part of the land, but it is claimed that he was compelled to expend large sums of money for street assessments, and in defending against adverse claimants; and it is averred that on September 2, 1869, Bouldin and Hopkins had a full settlement of all money transactions up to that date. And, finally, it is alleged that on the 3d of September, 1872, Bouldin and R. C. Hopkins had a full settlement of their mutual claims and interests in the land, and that at that time Hopkins purchased from Bouldin all the latter's equitable interest in the land, paying him therefor by a conveyance of certain land in San Bernardino county, in this state.

The evidence introduced by plaintiff, besides certain proof as to the rental value of the premises sued for, and the authority of plaintiff to sue, consisted of the deed by Holden and wife to Hopkins, conveying the land in controversy, and the deed set up in defendant's answer conveying to Bouldin the land in San Bernardino county. The latter deed recited a consideration of $1,500. The plaintiff himself testified to certain conversations with defendant Hopkins concerning the premises. Part of his testimony was as follows: "I have had some talk with the defendant Rufus C. Hopkins. * * * I have heard him make statements in regard to what he claimed to be his rights in the property in controversy. He said that Thomas T. Bouldin purchased this property, and put the title in his, Hopkins', name, because he, Bouldin, was about to leave the state at the time, and that there had been various transactions between them; and that finally it culminated in his buying Bouldin's interest in 1873, and in his giving Bouldin, among other things, this piece of land in San Bernardino county, described in the answer; that, prior to 1873, he, Hopkins, had deeded this San Bernardino land to Bouldin, but that there had never been any deed of conveyance from Bouldin to Hopkins of Bouldin's interest in the land in this city in controversy here; but that he, Hopkins, claimed that Bouldin's interest in the land in this city, in controversy, was a part of the consideration though not therein mentioned, for his deed to Bouldin of the San Bernardino land; and through these transactions Hopkins claimed to be sole owner, and entitled to the possession, of the property in controversy, and that Bouldin had no further interest in it. He, Hopkins, never at any time offered to reconvey the property in controversy. He declined to do so, saying the property was his; that he did not owe Bouldin anything. He, Hopkins, never claimed to have, nor did he ever show me, any deed or conveyance whereby Bouldin's equitable or other interest in the property in controversy was conveyed to him, Hopkins. In addition to being Bouldin's agent in the management of the property in controversy during Bouldin's absence, Hopkins was Bouldin's general agent while the latter was away. Hopkins collected moneys for Bouldin, and sent moneys to him. Bouldin had an agent named Hubbard, with whom he did more or less business in San Joaquin county. Hubbard would send Bouldin's money to Hopkins, and the latter would forward this money to Bouldin. I don't know about Hopkins receiving money for Bouldin from others than Hubbard; but I may say that Hopkins was Bouldin's general agent here, and looked after all his affairs." No other testimony bearing upon the trust relations was introduced, and defendants moved for a nonsuit because plaintiff "had not proved a single allegation of his complaint." A nonsuit was granted accordingly, and plaintiff appeals.

J. P. Langhorne, for appellant. Mhoon & Flournoy and J. F. & Wm. A. Stuart, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The grounds on which the nonsuit was asked were sufficiently stated. They are equivalent to the statement that the plaintiff had failed to prove a single allegation of his complaint. The plaintiff's attorney no doubt understood what was meant by the statement made by the attorney for the defendants, viz., that the plaintiff had not proved a single material allegation of the complaint. We cannot say that the nonsuit was erroneously granted for the reason that the grounds on which it was asked were not stated with the precision and definiteness that the law required. Conceding that a resulting trust was established as to the lot in the city and county of San Francisco, the court is of opinion that this trust was extinguished by the conveyance by Hopkins to Bouldin of the land in the county of San Bernardino, and that the statute of frauds does not require a conveyance by Bouldin to Hopkins of his equitable interest in the San Francisco lot. Judgment affirmed.

(79 Cal. 69)

FIRST NAT. BANK OF OAKLAND v. WOLFF.

(No. 11,965.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1889.)

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS — MATERIALITY OF ALTERATION.

1. After the signing of an accommodation note, dated at "Oakland," and payable to the "First National Bank of this city," and after its delivery to B., the one for whose accommodation the note was made, the words "of Oak'd" were inserted after the words "First National Bank." The rate of interest, which was left blank by the maker, was filled in, and the words "Receipt No. 124" were written at the end of the note; the purport of such words being that the receipt was a security for the payment of the money for which the note was executed. Held that, if the insertion of the rate of interest was unauthorized, the note would bear interest at the legal rate; that the other insertions did not affect the meaning of the note; and, the insertions being innocently made, the note was not avoided.[1]

2. In an action on the note by a bank, which had discounted it for B., against W., as the maker, the latter denied the execution of the note, and B. was charged with forgery. Held, that it was proper to examine B. with reference to the ownership, acquisition, and disposition of certain grain, which it appeared from the note had been pledged as security for its payment.

3. It was proper to ask the president of the plaintiff as to whether he had ever made any inquiry with reference to what had become of the grain pledged as security for the note.

4. But it was error to allow evidence of a conversation between B. and the defendant with reference to the note, after it had been acquired by the plaintiff, in the absence of any representative of the bank.

5. One may testify as to the reputation of a witness for truth and honesty, although he may never have heard such reputation discussed.

6. The allowing a witness to be called by the defendant to testify as to the signature to the note after plaintiff had put in his rebutting testimony was a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and will not be interfered with.

7. The failure of the clerk to enter judgment on the verdict within 24 hours after it was rendered, as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 664, does not affect the validity of the judgment afterwards entered, the injunction of the statute being merely directory.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; E. M. GIBSON, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Oakland against A. Wolff on a promissory note, purporting to be signed by the defendant. The latter denied the genuineness of the signature. Questions asked of one Bennett, for whose accommodation the note was alleged to have been executed, with reference to the ownership, acquisition, and disposal of certain grain which it appeared had been pledged as security for the payment of the note, were objected to by plaintiff. The testimony of one D. Stuart, with reference to the reputation of Bennett for truth and honesty, was struck out, on the ground that he had never heard such reputation discussed. The allowing one Gumpel to testify, as an expert for defendant, with reference to the genuineness of the signature of the note after defendant had rested and plaintiff had introduced his rebutting testimony, was objected to.

Wm. R. Davis and Wm. Lair Hill, for appellant. Metcalf & Metcalf, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Action by plaintiff against defendant on a promissory note. Verdict and judgment passed for defendant. The appeal is prosecuted by plaintiff from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The execution of the note was denied by the defendant, and the main issue was whether or not the note sued on was or was not a forgery. The note, as offered in evidence, was in these words: "$2,000. Oakland, Cal., Oct. 27, 1882. One day after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to the First National Bank in this city, to First National Bank of Oak'd, or order, two thousand dollars, payable in gold coin, with interest thereon in like gold coin from date until paid, at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, payable monthly in advance. Secured by grain in Hayward's warehouse. No. Receipt No. 124. A. WOLFF." The plaintiff's contention is that the note was signed by Wolff as an accommodation to R. H. Bennett, who received the money on it on the 28th of October, 1882, from the plaintiff. When signed by Wolff the words "of Oak'd" were not in it, and the rate of interest was left blank. Bennett testified that the note was signed and handed to him by defendant with rate of interest left blank, for the reason that they did not know what rate the bank would charge, and that he was empowered by Wolff to fill up the blank with the rate agreed on. He so informed the bank, and after some conversation with one of the officers of the bank the rate of 9 per cent. per annum was agreed on, and the blank was so filled in by Bennett or at his instance. At the end of the note was written by Bennett "Receipt No. 124." The insertion of the words "of Oak'd" was immaterial. The form of the note used showed that the bank was the First National Bank of Oakland. The note was dated at "Oakland" and the form used contained the words, "at the First National Bank of this city." This could mean no other bank than the First National Bank of Oakland, and therefore the insertion "of Oak'd" added nothing to the note that it did not mean before and was immaterial. The words "Receipt No. 124" were no part of the note, and did not affect its meaning in any way. The purport of these words was that the receipt No. 124 was a security for the payment of the money for which the note was executed. We cannot see that they were material, or affected the note in any way. If Bennett had authority from defendant to fill up the blank with the rate of interest, the insertion of the rate was not at all improper, and would bind defendant. If he had not such authority, and Wolff signed the note, and delivered it to Bennett to raise money on it, it bore interest at the legal rate, and the insertion of it would not render the note void. We are of opinion that the insertions were innocently made and that the note was not avoided by them, for the reason above stated.

---

[1] On the general subject of the effect of unauthorized alterations of written instruments, see Burrows v. Klunk, (Md.) 17 Atl. Rep. 378; Croswell v. Labree, (Me.) 16 Atl. Rep. 331; Evans v. Lawton, 34 Fed. Rep. 233, and note; Hill v. Nelms, (Ala.) 5 South. Rep. 796.

From the note itself it appears that it was secured by grain in Hayward's warehouse as collateral. The receipt, the number of which was appended to the note, called for 1,198 sacks of wheat stored in the warehouse above stated. It is averred in the complaint that the security above mentioned had, without any act or default of plaintiff, become valueless; that the grain of which the security consisted had since the delivery of the note to plaintiff been, without the act or fault or consent of plaintiff, removed from the warehouse to places unknown to plaintiff; that this grain was at the time of the commencement of this action the subject of litigation between persons not parties to this action, and it was there claimed to be owned by persons unknown to the plaintiff, other than those who had asserted their claims by such claims or actions. On the trial Bennett was asked several questions in relation to this grain, which were objected to. The objections were overruled, and the plaintiff, by its counsel, reserved exceptions. We can see no good reason why the questions or the answers to them were not properly admitted in evidence. All of them had relation to the transaction, and were relevant to the issues joined in the cause.

We find no error in the ruling as to the question put to Moody, the president of the plaintiff bank, as to making inquiry about the grain which purported to have been pledged to secure payment of the note. But in our judgment the court erred in allowing the introduction of Wolff's conversation with Bennett about the note in suit, which took place after the bank had acquired the note sued on, and when no one representing the bank was present. The court also erred in striking out the testimony of D. Stuart. The witness was competent, and his testimony admissible. The allowing Gumpel to be called at the stage of the trial at which he was introduced as a witness, was a matter within the discretion of the court below, with which this court is not authorized to interfere. Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 15 Pac. Rep. 307. The failure of the clerk to enter judgment on the verdict within 24 hours after it was rendered was not error. The injunction of the statute (section 664, Code Civil Proc.) in that regard is directory only, and does not affect the legality or validity of the judgment afterwards entered. Further, if the plaintiff felt aggrieved by the failure of the clerk to enter the judgment within the time designated by the statute, he might have moved the court for an order directing him to do so, which no doubt would have been granted. Moreover, we cannot see how the plaintiff was in any manner injured by the delay of the clerk in entering the judgment. We find no other errors than those above pointed out, but for those the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded, that a new trial may be had in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion. So ordered.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

---

3 Cal. Unrep. 81

MAIR v. FORBES et al. (No. 11,431.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS — ACTIONS ON — COMPLAINT.

An answer in an action by one claiming to be a bona fide indorsee for value before maturity of a bill of exchange drawn on and accepted by defendants' testator, denying on information and belief that the drawer of the bill ever transferred it to plaintiff by indorsement or otherwise, as alleged in the complaint, that it was ever delivered to plaintiff, that he paid any value therefor, or that he was ever the bona fide holder or owner thereof, puts in issue plaintiff's title to the bill, and it is error to render judgment in his favor without proof of title.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Action by Hugh Mair against Charles Forbes and Mary A. Forbes, executor and executrix of the will of Alexander Forbes, deceased, upon a bill of exchange alleged to have been drawn by Robert Knox on said Alexander Forbes, for £500, and accepted by the latter. The complaint alleged that said Knox, for value, and before maturity, indorsed and delivered the same to respondent, who was the holder and owner thereof, and that the defendants refused to pay it when due. Defendants answered, denying that the said Knox transferred the bill to plaintiff by indorsing the same as alleged in the complaint, or in any other manner. They denied that the bill was ever delivered to plaintiff, that he paid any value therefor, or that he was ever its bona fide holder or owner. These denials were made upon information and belief. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Henry E. Highton, for appellants. Rosenbaum & Sheeline, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J Action upon bill of exchange against executors of deceased acceptor. The pleadings are verified. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff on the pleadings; defendants excepting. We think the answer was sufficient to raise an issue as to the ownership of the bill, and consequently that the rendition of the judgment without any proof of plaintiff's title was error. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: WORKS, J.; PATERSON, J.

(79 Cal. 95)

Ex parte LEWIS. (No. 20,522.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1889.)

EXTRADITION—INTERSTATE.

A warrant issued by the governor of a state for the apprehension of a fugitive from another state recited that the demand of the governor of the latter state was accompanied by the necessary complaint, information, affidavits, and warrants, showing that the person demanded stood charged with the crime as represented by the demanding governor; that he had fled from justice, and taken refuge in the former state; and that said papers were certified by the demanding governor to be authentic. Held, that the warrant sufficiently appeared to have been issued on proper evidence.

Petition by Peter R. Lewis for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain his release from an alleged illegal imprisonment.

Charles F. Hanlon, for petitioner. George A. Rankin, contra.

WORKS, J. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The ground upon which it is claimed that the petitioner is illegally imprisoned is that he is held under a warrant of the governor on an alleged requisition of the governor of the state of Colorado, and that the warrant and such requisition are each and both illegal, in that no copy of any indictment found, nor any copy of any affidavit made before a magistrate of any state or territory, charging the petitioner with having committed treason, felony, or any other crime, either certified as authentic by the governor of the state of Colorado, or at all, has ever been produced to the governor of the state of California. The officer having the petitioner in charge makes return that he holds the petitioner by virtue of a warrant issued by the governor of this state, which warrant is made part of his return, and recites, among other things: "Whereas, it has been represented to me by the governor of the state of Colorado that Peter R. Lewis stands charged with the crime of fraudulent conveyance, committed in the county of Arapahoe, in said state, and that he fled from the justice of that state, and has taken refuge in the state of California; and the said governor of Colorado having, in pursuance of the constitution and laws of the United States, demanded of me that I shall cause the said Peter R. Lewis to be arrested and delivered to Charles A. Hawley, who is authorized to receive him into his custody, and convey him back to the said state of Colorado; and whereas, the said representation and demand is accompanied by a complaint and information, affidavits and warrant of arrest, whereby the said Peter R. Lewis stands charged with said crime, and with having fled from said state, and taken refuge in the state of California, which are certified by the governor of the state of Colorado to be authentic," etc. The facts thus recited are not disputed, and we think they show a sufficient foundation for the warrant. Writ denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; THORNTON, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 84)

DALMAZZO v. DRYSDALE et al. (No. 12,956.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1889.)

APPEAL—ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

Where an appellant fails to point out any error in the order or judgment appealed from, within the time allowed him to file briefs, the supreme court will not examine the record, but will affirm the decision of the trial court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. PARKER, Judge.

John M. Lucas, for appellants. John D. Works and Harry L. Titus, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This case was submitted without oral argument on briefs to be filed, the appellants to file the first brief. The time allowed appellants to file their brief has elapsed, no brief has been filed by appellants, no extension of time has been asked, and respondent moves for affirmance of the judgment and order appealed from. Where appellant fails to point out any error in the judgment or order appealed from, the court will not look into the record for the purpose of discovering error. Judgment and order affirmed. Remittitur forthwith.

(79 Cal. 84)

People v. Van Ness et al. (No. 11,621.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1889.)

Conversion by Public Officer.

1. Where a public officer has in his custody money belonging to the state, and in a letter to the state comptroller denies that he ever had any such money, and refuses to pay any to the state, such denial and refusal are sufficient evidence of a conversion of the money as of the respective dates of its receipt.

2. The statute of limitations of four years, (Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 337,) applicable to an action on an official bond to recover moneys received belonging to the state, does not begin to run until the end of the officer's term.

3. Fees collected without legal authority by the commissioner of immigration, in his official capacity and under color of law, belong to the state, and not to him.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. Sullivan, Judge.

Van Ness & Roche, for appellants. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and Langhorne & Miller, for respondent.

Thornton, J. Action on the official bond of the defendant Van Ness as commissioner of immigration of the port of San Francisco. The bond on which this action was brought bears date the 11th of January, 1876, on which day it was signed by Van Ness as principal, and Henry Barroilhet and Leland Stanford as sureties, was approved by the governor on the next day, and filed and recorded on the next day in the office of the secretary of state. Van Ness held the office of commissioner of immigration from the 7th day of January, 1876, to the 21st of January, 1880. During the incumbency of Van Ness his official bond was by an act of the legislature approved March 25, 1876, reduced from $25,000 to $2,500. Van Ness, subsequently to this amendment, filed an official bond in the sum of $2,500, which was approved by the governor, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 8th day of May, 1876. This last bond was signed by Van Ness and Barroilhet and one Moulder as sureties on the 12th day of April, 1876. During Van Ness' incumbency, from March 25, 1876, to the end of his term, he collected and received in his official capacity under the statute, as "the 70 cents" or capitation tax allowed by it, the sum of $28,353.64, and of this amount he collected:

From March 25, 1876, to April 12, 1876....	$1,284 50
From April 12, 1876, to May 8, 1876........	2,648 10
Total from March 25, 1876, to May 8, 1876....................................	$3,932 60

Van Ness was entitled to a salary of $4,000 per annum during his incumbency of office, which amounted in the whole to $15,277.78. Of this amount his salary from March 25, 1876, to May 8, 1876, amounted to $477.18. The remainder of salary was received during the subsequent period of his term of office.

The action, as will be observed, is brought on the bond first executed in January, 1876, and it is contended that there never has been any breach of that bond. The court held that during the period extending from the 25th of March, 1876, to the 8th of May, 1876, Van Ness received of the capitation tax above mentioned the sum of $3,932.60; that the salary of Van Ness during the period above mentioned amounted to the sum of $477.18, and that his office expenses during the same period of time amounted to $336.30; that Van Ness was entitled to retain those last two mentioned sums out of the amount $3,932.60 collected by him; that the amount remaining after deducting the sum above mentioned for salary and office expenses, amounting to $3,118.32, was prior to the 8th of May, 1876, and to the filing of the bond filed on that day, appropriated and converted to his own use by Van Ness, and that none of said last-named sum was held by Van Ness on the said 8th of May, 1876. The condition of the bond was that Van Ness in his official capacity should well, truly, and faithfully execute the duties of the trust, and perform all the official duties required of him by law. That one of the duties assumed by Van Ness, as commissioner, was to keep the moneys collected by him, after making the deductions above mentioned, as the moneys of the state, to be paid over to the proper officer of the state at the proper time, we think there can be no doubt, and that a conversion of such moneys by him was a breach of his bond we entertain as little doubt.

It is urged that there is no evidence of any such conversion. We think there is. On the 21st of February, 1883, John P. Dunn, the comptroller of state, in his capacity of comptroller, wrote to Van Ness requiring him to render immediately to the comptroller's office a statement of his account as commissioner of immigration, giving in detail the receipts from all sources during his (Van Ness') incumbency in office. In the same letter Van Ness was required to pay at once into the state treasury all moneys held by him belonging to the state. To this letter Van Ness wrote in reply on the 10th of March, 1883, that he had no property or moneys of the state in his possession, and had had none during his term of office or incumbency. Here was a denial that he had ever had any moneys in his hands collected by him for the state during his term of office, and a refusal to pay any sum into the state treasury. The admitted facts show the collections by Van Ness as above stated. The evidence shows a denial by Van Ness of any right of the state to the moneys collected by him as the trusted officer of the state. This is a conversion, within the rules of law on that subject. His declaration in his letter to Dunn was a denial of any right in the state, and a plain manifestation of the exercise by him of dominion over this money in defiance of the right of the state. We are of opinion that the court was fully sustained by the evidence in finding as a fact that there was a conversion of this money by Van Ness. See Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 420; Liptrot v.

Holmes, 1 Ga. 381; Cobb v. Dows, 9 Barb. 242.

But it is argued that there was no conversion prior to 8th May, 1876. We think the court below was justified in holding that the money was converted by Van Ness as fast as received. He says in his letter above quoted that he has never collected or had in his possession any money as belonging to the state, and it is manifest that he all along regarded that the money collected by law belonged to him. We are of the opinion that the evidence justified the court below in finding that a conversion by Van Ness of the moneys for which judgment herein was rendered was made prior to the 8th day of May, 1876. There was no delivery of the second official bond executed by Van Ness and sureties until the day on which it was approved by the governor. Sacramento Co. v. Bird, 31 Cal. 74. We cannot see how there could have been any delivery until that date. The bond was not in a condition to be delivered until that date. Prior to that time it was inchoate and imperfect as a bond. Like every other deed, that bond was not operative until delivery. It follows that the parties to the second bond were not liable for any breach until after its delivery. There could have been no breach of this bond until after it was delivered on the 8th of May, 1876, but there was a breach of the bond sued on.

This action was not barred by the statute of limitations. Taking the view most favorable to defendants, the statute did not commence running until the close of Van Ness' term of office on January 21, 1880. This action was commenced on the 23d of April, 1883. As this action was on a bond, the period required to effect a bar was four years. Code Civil Proc. § 337. The action, it will be perceived, was brought in less than four years from the date of its accrual in January, 1880. Van Ness, during his term of office, paid into the state treasury the sum of $1,135. This sum was a part of the moneys collected by him in pursuance of the provisions of section 2965, Pol. Code, as construed by him, for administering oaths to masters of vessels when making the reports required by section 2949, Pol. Code. It was collected prior to the 8th of May, 1876. This sum ($1,135) was collected by Van Ness in his official capacity and under color of office. There was no authority of law for collecting any such moneys of the ship-masters. It is now contended by Van Ness that as this money was collected by him without legal sanction he had a right to retain it as his own, and as he did not retain it, but paid it into the treasury, he should have been credited with it by the court below, and that the amount should be deducted by this court from the amount of the judgment. We cannot give our sanction to this contention. The money, having been collected under color of office, should have been paid into the state treasury, and did not belong, in any view, to Van Ness, and he had no right to retain it. He only did his duty in paying it over to the state. It belonged really to the ship-masters of whom it was collected; but the state, in whose and by whose authority it was pretended to have been collected, was the proper custodian of such moneys. The record is free from error. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

(79 Cal. 77)

READ v. BUFFUM. (No. 11,913.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1889.)

ASSIGNMENT—RATIFICATION—PLEADING.

1. An assignment of an account for goods manufactured and sold by a corporation, made in its name by its secretary, who has general charge of its letters and orders for goods, is invalid, in the absence of other proof of his authority to make it.

2. A ratification of such assignment by the directors, pending action on the account by the assignee, will not avail the plaintiff, as he must recover, if at all, on a cause of action accruing before its commencement.

3. A denial of the allegation of such assignment, made upon information and belief, is sufficient to raise the issue as to the validity of the assignment mentioned.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Action by John H. Read against W. M. Buffum on an account alleged to have been assigned by the California Powder Works to plaintiff. Defendant denied, on information and belief, that the account was in fact assigned. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals, as does also Solomon Lewis, an intervenor.

Franklin P. Bull, for appellant. George Lezinsky, (Eisner & Platschek, of counsel,) for intervenor and appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The plaintiff sues as the assignee of the California Powder Works, a corporation, for money alleged to be due for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by said corporation to the defendant. The defendant in his answer denies the allegation of his indebtedness to said coporation, and denies the assignment of said alleged indebtedness to the plaintiff. And as a further and separate answer, and as a defense to said action, alleges: "That at all the times stated in said amended complaint the defendant was, and is now, a resident of the territory of Arizona, and has not at any of said times been within the state of California; that defendant purchased between the 7th day of April, 1882, and the 20th day of May, 1883, at the territory of Arizona, certain goods, wares, and merchandise which are alleged in the said amended complaint to have been purchased by said defendant from the said California Powder Works at the city and county of San Francisco." He further alleges that the action is barred by certain provisions of the laws of the territory of Arizona, and by the provisions of sections 339 and 361 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state. One Solomon Lewis filed a complaint in intervention, to which the plaintiff filed an answer. Upon the issues raised by the pleadings the parties proceeded to trial, and John F. Lohse was called and sworn as a witness for plaintiff. He testified that he was secretary and treasurer of the California Powder Works, and had been secretary since 1865, the commencement of the company. Counsel for plaintiff then offered in evidence the following document: "Board of Trade of San Francisco. In the matter of W. M. Buffum & Co., Jerome, A. T. Dated San Francisco, May 29, 1885. In consideration of $1, and other good and valuable consideration to us severally paid by the assignee next hereinafter mentioned, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, we hereby sell, assign, and transfer to John H. Read our claims and demands against the first above-named, in the amounts hereinafter set forth, and we severally authorize said assignee to enforce the payment of the same by legal remedies or otherwise, for his use and benefit. Witness our hands, with the several amounts of said claims and demands placed opposite thereto: THE CALIFORNIA POWDER WORKS, per JOHN F. LOHSE, Secretary, $2,379.53." This was shown to the witness, who testified that the signature was his. The defendant objected to the said evidence, on the ground that the said document purports to convey an account against W. M. Buffum & Co., whereas this action is an action against W. M. Buffum, and therefore does not prove the assignment of any amount against the defendant in this suit. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. Plaintiff's counsel then asked the witness if there was any action of the board of directors approving that assignment. Witness answered there was. He was requested to read it, and read as follows: "Mr. Payton introduced the following resolution, namely: 'Resolved, that the assignment of this company on May 29, 1885, by the secretary, under the direction of the president, to John H. Read, of the claims and demands of the company against William M. Buffum, doing business under the name of "William M. Buffum & Co.," be, and the same is hereby, approved, ratified, and confirmed.' Said resolution, being seconded by Mr. Luning, was unanimously carried." Witness testified that he read from the records of the corporation, and that the claim referred to was the one in suit. Plaintiff then offered in evidence the said document and resolution, to which the defendant objected, on the ground that said document purports to convey an account against W. M. Buffum & Co., whereas this is an action against W. M. Buffum, and therefore does not prove the assignment of any account against the defendant in this suit. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. Witness then testified that the goods were sold in Arizona, or in San Francisco, and shipped from the latter place; that they were sold and shipped to defendant by order. Witness produced one of the orders, which he said was a sample of the others; that payments were made by checks sent from Arizona to the company here. On cross-examination witness stated that he had charge of all the letters and orders of the company, and that everything was under his control. He further testified that all the goods were shipped direct from San Francisco by order of defendant. Plaintiff here rested, and defendant moved for a nonsuit on the grounds—First, that there had been no assignment to him proven by the plaintiff in this action of the claim of the California Powder Works, alleged in the complaint; second, that it had not been proven by the plaintiff that the goods sued on in the complaint were sold to the defendant at the city of San Francisco. The motion was denied, and the defendant excepted. Defendant then moved for a continuance of the trial, on the ground that he had not had an opportunity to prepare for the trial, and was therefore unable to produce any testimony. The motion was denied, and the defendant excepted. Defendant offered no testimony, whereupon the court rendered its decision and ordered judgment for plaintiff, and against defendant, as prayed in plaintiff's complaint. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and the appeal is from the judgments and the order denying the motion for a new trial.

In order to maintain his action, it was necessary for the plaintiff to allege an assignment to him by the California Powder Works of the claim sued on. And the denial of that allegation by the defendant cast the burden of proving it upon the plaintiff. This he attempted, and failed to do. The secretary of the company who executed the assignment on which plaintiff relies is not shown to have had any power to make it. The ratification of the board of directors was not given until after the commencement of the action,—too late to avail the plaintiff anything, as he could not recover for a cause of action accruing after he commenced his action.

We think the form of denial sufficient to raise an issue upon the allegation of the complaint as to the fact of assignment. It is a form authorized by the Code, and we think this a case in which it might properly be employed. This, in our opinion, constitutes the only error disclosed by the record. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

---

79 Cal. 130

CARR v. QUIGLEY. (No. 9,531.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

PUBLIC LANDS—MEXICAN GRANTS.

Act Cong. July 2, 1864, § 4, (13 U. S. St. at Large 358,) amended act July 1, 1862, by providing that the grant of land therein made to a railway company should not impair any homestead or other lawful claim, "nor include any government reservation" within such donation. Plaintiff acquired title under the patent issued pursuant to said act, and sued defendant for the possession of a part of the land. At the date of the act a Mexican grant included in the limits of such donation was sub judice, having been confirmed successively by the land commissioners and the supreme court of the United States, but its limits were not fixed by official survey until afterwards, and the land sued for was not within the boundaries as so fixed. Held, that the whole tract included within the exterior boundaries of the Mexican grant was a "government reservation," within the meaning of said act, and that the patent passed no title to the land in controversy. Following 57 Cal. 394, 16 Pac. Rep. 9, and Doolan v. Carr, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228. PATERSON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; A. M. CRANE, Judge.

On rehearing. Former opinion 16 Pac. Rep. 9. Action by W. B. Carr against John Quigley, for the recovery of certain land. The United States government, by acts Cong. July 1, 1862, (12 U. S. St. at Large, 489,) and July 2, 1864, (13 U. S. St. at Large, 358,) granted to the Western Pacific Railroad Company certain lands, of which that sued for is claimed to be part. The latter act provided specially, in section 4, that neither it, nor the former act to which it was an amendment, should impair any homestead or other lawful claim, or "include any government reservation," within the limits of the grant. The Western Pacific Railroad Company became consolidated with the Central Pacific, which obtained a patent for the land in question, February 28, 1874; the patent recited the exception of reserved lands from the operation of the acts. The Central Pacific Railroad Company conveyed to the plaintiff. A trial was had, and judgment rendered for plaintiff. The defendant offered to prove that the land sued for was included in the Mexican grant Las Pocitas at the time the land included in the railroad grant was withdrawn from entry, etc.; that the Las Pocitas tract was then sub judice, and that the limits were not definitely fixed at that time; and that hence the patent was unauthorized and void as to any land included therein. This evidence was rejected, but on appeal the supreme court reversed the judgment, holding that the land sued for, if within the limits of said grant, was "a government reservation," within the meaning of the act of July 2, 1864, and hence did not pass by the patent. 57 Cal. 394. A new trial was granted, at which it appeared that the land in controversy was included in the exterior limits of said grant as confirmed by the land commissioners, as provided by the various acts of congress, and that their decision was affirmed by the district and supreme courts of the United States. It also appeared that no final survey was made and approved, so as to definitely fix the rights of the claimants of the grant until 1871, and that the land sued for was not embraced in the tract as finally surveyed. Judgment was rendered for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Shafter, Parker & Waterman, for appellant. Michael Mullany, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. We regard the contention of appellant, Carr, in this case as settled by the decision of the supreme court of the United States in Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 618, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228, and by the decisions of this court made prior to the judgment in Doolan v. Carr, viz. Carr v. Quigley, 57 Cal. 394, and McLaughlin v. Head, 63 Cal. 208. The same points were presented in Doolan v. Carr that are presented in this case and with reference to the same Mexican grant of Las Pocitas. The only difference is that in Doolan v. Carr the points arose and were presented on an offer of testimony, and here they arise on the proof of the facts which Doolan offered to prove in his suit against Carr. In our judgment there is no error in the record, and the judgment and order must be affirmed. So ordered.

We concur. SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; WORKS, J.

BEATTY, C. J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment of affirmance upon the sole ground that what is here decided has become, by virtue of the decision on the former appeal, (57 Cal. 394,) so far as this court is concerned, the law of the case.

PATERSON, J., (dissenting.) Doolan v. Carr, cited by Mr. Justice THORNTON, seems upon its face to be decisive of this case, and, were it not for other and more recent decisions of the national courts, I should entertain no doubt that the contention of appellant herein had been settled by the decision in the first case above named. In U. S. v. McLaughlin, 127 U. S. 428, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1177, the supreme court of the United States considered the different kinds of Mexican grants, and reviewed at length the case of Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, and Railroad Co. v. U. S., Id. 733, upon which Doolan v. Carr was largely based. The court there held that "grants of quantity, as of one or more leagues within a larger tract, described by what are called 'outside boundaries,' are 'floats,' to be located by the consent of the government before they can attach to any specific land, like the land-warrants of the United States, and that in the case of floating grants it was only 'the quantity actually granted which was reserved during the examination of the validity of the grant;' the remainder was at the disposal of the government as a part of the public domain. If within the boundaries of a land-grant made in aid of a railroad, such land grant would take effect, except as to the quantity of land or float actually granted in the Mexican grant. If that quantity lying together was left to satisfy the grant, the railroad company would be entitled to patents for the odd sections of the remainder. * * * The government (Mexican) retained the right of locating the quantity granted in such part of the larger tract described as was fit, and the government of the United States succeeded to the same right; hence the government might dispose of any specific tracts within the exterior limits of the grant, leaving a sufficient quantity to satisfy the float. * * * There is really nothing in the decision of Newhall v. Sanger in conflict with the views here expressed, because the court did not have before it the case of a floating grant."

It seems to me that Las Pocitas must be regarded as a "float," within the meaning of that term as used in the decisions. The grant by the Mexican government to Livermore was of a certain tract of land known by the name of "Las Pocitas," designated and described as follows: "Bounded on the north by the Lomas de las Cuevas; on the east by the Sierra de Buenos Ayres; on the south by the dividing line of the establishment of San José; and on the west by the rancho of Don José Dolores Pacheco,—containing in all two square leagues, a little more or less, provided that the quantity be contained within the said boundaries; and, if less than that quantity be found to be contained therein, then that less quantity and all of said described tract of land." In an official letter to the register and receiver of the San Francisco land-office, dated May 3, 1873, Hon. Willis Drummond, commissioner of the United States land-office, referring to the description of land in the grant, says: "This grant recites that 'whereas, Don José Noriega and Robert Livermore have petitioned for their own benefit, and that of their families, the place known by the name of "Las Pocitas," which is in the Willow Grove de la Agua, so far as the mountain range of Buenos Ayres and the hills of Las Cuevas,' I have thought proper to grant them said place. The land of which donation is made is of two leagues, a little more or less, as the diseno, annexed to the proceedings with its respective limits, explains. The judge who shall give possession will give the same to be measured agreeably to ordinance in marking the boundaries, leaving the excess which might result to the nation for such uses as may be deemed convenient." "The grant, being a part of the Mexican archives, is a public document," of which we take notice. Byrne v. Alas, 74 Cal. 637, 16 Pac. Rep. 523.

The grant has always been treated as a float. It was so considered by Livermore himself, the donee. It has been so treated by the land-officers, by the courts, and by all persons interested in a determination of its location and boundaries. It has never been contended by any one, as I understand it, that the grant was for all the land contained within the natural "outside boundaries" of the diseno mentioned in the grant. The land in controversy is within the outside boundaries, but is not included in the tract finally set off, patented to, and accepted by the donees named in the grant. It is therefore the same in character as that which was under consideration in U. S. v. McLaughlin, supra. Counsel for respondent contends that the only question before the court in U. S. v. McLaughlin was as to the eastern boundary line of the grant. In this I think he is mistaken. After finding that the grant did not extend east of the Jack Tone road, or the edge of the hills commencing near the same, the court said: "This result would dispose of the present case with regard to nearly all the land in question therein, but as some of it lies west of said road in range 7, and as the railroad land grant extends to the west of said road, it will be necessary to examine the other question referred to, namely: If the lands in controversy did lie within the exterior limits of the Moquelamos grant, and if the title of the railroad company did accrue while that grant was under consideration in the courts, did those facts prevent the railroad land grant from taking effect?" And the court there decided that in the case of floating grants "it was only the quantity actually granted which was reserved during the examination of the validity of the grant; the remainder was at the disposal of the government as part of the public domain;" that, if there was left sufficient to satisfy the grant, "the railroad company would be entitled to patents for the odd sections of the remainder;" that, "if the government has the right to say where it (the grant) shall be located, it certainly has the right to say where it shall not be located, and, if it sells land to a third person at a place within the general territory of the original grant, it is equivalent to saying that the quantity due to the original grantee is not to be located there. In other words, if the territory comprehended in the outside limits and bounds of a Mexican grant contains eighty leagues, and the quantity granted is only ten leagues, the government may dispose of seventy leagues without doing any wrong to the original grantee."

The case before us is one which may, and probably will, go to the supreme court of the United States. Therefore the decision of that court is binding and conclusive upon us on the questions which have been decided by it. I am led to the conclusion that the supreme court of the United States, when this case is presented to it as fully as it is presented here,—that is, upon the evidence, and not upon a broad and sweeping offer, as was the case of Doolan v. Carr,—will hold that the Las Pocitas is a "float," by a decision of the circuit court of the United States for the Northern district of California, in U. S. v. Curtner, 38 Fed. Rep. 1, (decided February 4, 1889.) In that case it was held that the Las Pocitas was a "float;" that "the railroad company, by the acts of 1862 and 1864, had a valid grant to every odd section of land within twenty miles on each side of the road, and within the exterior bounds of the Las Pocitas grant, not embraced within the two leagues, as it was finally located," and not reserved, etc.; that the decision in Newhall v. Sanger has been materially limited in its operation by the recent decision in U. S. v. McLaughlin. In this decision of the circuit court Mr. Justice FIELD, who participated and acquiesced in the decisions in Doolan v. Carr and U. S. v. McLaughlin, concurred. It seems to me quite clear either that the record in Doolan v. Carr was not such as to indicate the true character of the Las Pocitas grant,—that the offer of proof made therein was too broad to present the question whether the grant was in fact a float,—or that that question was overlooked, or not presented for the consideration of the court therein. In view of the decisions of the national courts in U. S. v. McLaughlin and U. S. v. Curtner, supra, I do not think that the decision of this cause on the former appeal can be regarded as the "law of the case." It is useless to apply a rule of decision which will not be regarded by the higher tribunal. Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635. I think therefore that the judgment and order should be reversed.

---

79 Cal. 103

PACIFIC COAST RY. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN LUIS OBISPO CO. (No. 13,226.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

APPEAL—NOTICE—SERVICE.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 974, providing that a notice of appeal from a justice to a superior court shall be served on the adverse party, is complied with by service on the manager of a corporation, for the corporation itself, as such notice is analogous to a summons which, under section 411, may be served on the managing agent of a corporation, the terms "manager" and "managing agent" being synonymous.

In bank. Petition for writ of certiorari.
E. P. Cole, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. The only question presented by the petition herein is whether the superior court had jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's court to hear and determine a case in which petitioner was defendant and respondent; and this depends upon the question whether in that case the notice of appeal was served on the petitioner. The petitioner is a corporation, and in the action referred to was represented in the justice's court by an attorney at law, a resident f the county-seat of San Luis Obispo, but the plaintiffs, instead of serving their notice of appeal on said attorney, served it on the "manager" of petitioner. The statute provides (Code Civil Proc. § 940) in case of appeals to this court that the notice of appeal shall be served by the party appealing on the adverse party or his attorney. In case of appeals from justices' courts to the superior court it is provided (Id. § 974) that the notice of appeal shall be served on the adverse party, no mention being made of an attorney. It might be contended, on a very strict construction of the law, that service on an attorney would not give jurisdiction, and it may be that in this case the plaintiffs served their notice on the party, rather than on the attorney, in order to be on the safe side. Certainly, we think, a safe course was pursued. Service on the adverse party is unquestionably sufficient in any case, and there can be no doubt that the superior court had jurisdiction of the appeal here, unless it should be argued that in case of a corporation there can be no service except upon its attorney. But the statute providing for service of summons upon corporations allows the service to be made on "the president or other head of the corporation, secretary, cashier or managing agent thereof." Id. § 411, subd. 1. Notice of appeal is strictly analogous to summons, and performs the same function. It is the process for bringing the adverse party before the court; and it must be held that service of such notice on a corporation can be made in the same manner as a summons is served. If it be claimed that, though the statute allows service on a "managing agent," it does not authorize service on the manager of a corporation, we answer that "manager" means "managing agent," and can mean nothing else. Writ denied.

We concur· MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J

79 Cal. 115

RANDALL v. DUFF et al. (No. 11,343.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1889.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—REDEMPTION.

1. An innocent mortgagee of land fraudulently conveyed to his mortgagor by an attorney in fact of the owner, must take notice of a suit brought by the latter's heirs against the fraudulent grantee to declare the latter a trustee for their benefit, a lis pendens notice having been filed pursuant to Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 409, before the commencement of an action to foreclose. Following 19 Pac. Rep. 532.

2. Under Civil Code Cal. § 2903, providing that any one having an interest in property subject to a lien may redeem before his right to do so is foreclosed, and Code Civil Proc. § 379, allowing any one to be made a party defendant to an action, who claims an interest in the controversy adverse to that of plaintiff, or who is necessary to a complete determination of the question therein involved, said heirs are not barred from redeeming by a foreclosure sale in an action to which they were not parties, brought by such mortgagee after the filing of the lis pendens. Following 19 Pac. Rep. 532.

In bank. On rehearing. Former opinion, 19 Pac. Rep. 532.

Wilson & Wilson and J. D. H. Chamberlain, for appellants. Horace L. Smith, E. W. McKinstry, and S. M. Buck, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. A rehearing was granted in this case after a decision by the court in bank reversing the judgment and order of the superior court. The opinion of Mr. Commissioner HAYNE, upon which our decision was based, is reported in 19 Pac. Rep. 532. With the exception that it does not show distinctly the fact that the action of Duff v. Duff was commenced and notice thereof filed prior to the commencement of either of the foreclosure suits, under which respondent is a purchaser, that opinion contains a full and accurate statement of the facts out of which the controversy arises, and we refer to it for a statement of the case presented by the record before us.

For the purpose of such further discussion of the propositions advanced in the petition for, and argument upon, the rehearing, as we deem necessary, the matter may be simplified by stating the case in its essential form; that is to say, divested of the complicated and confusing details arising out of changes of interest among the parties to the transaction and their successors, the different parcels of land, mortgages, etc. So stated, the case is this: William Duff gives his father a power of attorney to sell and convey his land, which is recorded. His father fraudulently and without any consideration conveys the land by deed, reciting a valuable consideration, to Robert Duff. Robert records his deed, and thereupon mortgages the land to Ritchie to secure money advanced by him in good faith under the belief that the title is, as it appears to be, in Robert. William Duff thereupon commences an action against Robert to have him declared a trustee, and to compel a reconveyance, and at the same time files notice of lis pendens. After the commencement of this action, and after notice of lis pendens filed, Ritchie commences his action to foreclose his mortgage, making Robert alone a party, and entirely ignoring William, the real owner of the estate mortgaged. Decree of foreclosure follows, and sale and conveyance of the mortgaged premises to Randall, who (the action of William against Robert still pending) commences this action against William to quiet his title. William, by cross-bill, sets up all the facts, as here stated, and prays affirmative relief. The question is whether, upon findings showing this state of facts, Randall is entitled to a decree cutting off the right of William Duff to redeem the land. We held in our former opinion, and we still think, after the fullest consideration of the arguments advanced on the rehearing, that such decree was erroneous. In substance, our decision was that, as between William and Robert Duff, the title to the land remained in William, but that as to Richie, the innocent mortgagee, he acquired, by estoppel, and not otherwise, a valid lien upon William Duff's estate in the land, and thereby became entitled to the same protection as if the land had been in fact, as it was in appearance, the property of Robert Duff. But we held that the suit of William against Robert to establish and enforce the trust, and the filing of notice of lis pendens therein before foreclosure by Ritchie, entitled William Duff to be made a party to the foreclosure suit, and that his right to redeem could not otherwise be barred. Upon rehearing, counsel for respondent very earnestly combated these propositions, contending that they are not only contrary to law, but to natural justice and equity; that they work a grave hardship and injustice to the respondent here, and establish a rule which will seriously impair the value of mortgage securities. We think that no part of this contention is sustained.

Nothing that we have said implies that a bona fide mortgagee is not as fully entitled as a bona fide purchaser to the protection of the principle upon which our recording acts are based, but we do not think anything is gained to the argument by calling a "mortgagee" a "purchaser." Admitting that he is a purchaser, he is a purchaser pro tanto only. What he bargains for and pays for he gets, and that is a lien merely,—a right to subject the mortgaged premises to sale in order that he may be paid his debt out of the proceeds. But this right he has upon condition that he shall proceed by action to foreclose against all parties having an interest in the mortgaged estate subject to the lien whose right of redemption he wishes to cut off. No one thinks of denying that a subsequent grantee or incumbrancer of the mortgaged premises, whose conveyance is recorded, must be made a party to the foreclosure suit in order to bar his right of redemption. Nor does any one at this day assail the justice or the expediency of the law which secures to him the opportunity of contesting the validity and extent of the prior lien, and of having his right established in the surplus proceeds of the sale. But the mortgagee is in just as full a sense a purchaser as to subsequent grantees and incumbrancers as he is with respect to a person having a prior, undisclosed interest in the estate mortgaged; and it would be just as fair to argue that it is unjust to require a bona fide mortgagee to make a subsequent purchaser, by recorded conveyance, a party defendant to his foreclosure suit, as it is to say that it is unjust to compel him, after notice of the true state of the title, to make a party of the real owner of the estate upon which he has secured a lien by estoppel, merely because such owner has for a time, without any fault or intended wrong, allowed the property to stand in the name of the fraudulent mortgagor. There is no greater hardship, no heavier burden, cast upon the mortgagees in one case than in the other. And how it can be claimed that the security of the mortgagee is impaired in one case, and not in the other, by giving the known owner of the mortgaged estate an opportunity to be heard in the action and to redeem from the sale, or to receive the surplus of the proceeds, is something that we have utterly failed to comprehend. On the other hand we can see very clearly how the grossest injustice may be done in many cases, and must be done in this case, if the law were as respondent contends it is. Suppose a case by way of example: A. has an estate worth $10,000. He borrows of B. $1,000, and to secure the debt gives B. a conveyance in form absolute, receiving back a separate defeasance. B. records his deed. A. fails to record his defeasance. B. thereupon borrows $5,000 from C., who bona fide receives and records a mortgage of the estate. A. subsequently records his defeasance, and gives C. actual notice of the true nature of the transaction between him and B. before the debt to C. becomes due. Upon the reasoning of counsel for respondent, such notice to C., actual and constructive, does A. no manner of good. C. is a bona fide purchaser. He has got a lien on A.'s estate, but A. has no right to be made a defendant in foreclosure, no right to redeem, no right to the surplus proceeds of the sale, or what is the same thing, no means of enforcing such right. B., of course, has no interest in questioning the amount of C.'s claim, or the extent of his lien, no interest in redeeming from sale an estate which confessedly he must yield up to A.; and, if he receives any surplus from the sale, A. has no means of enforcing a claim to it. Certainly such a result is neither equitable nor reasonable, but, on the contrary, is absurd and gratuitously unjust. No principle of equity, no consideration of public policy, sanctions such a result; and if it be the best that the courts of California can attain in view of the positive provisions of the Codes, it must be admitted to be a serious reproach upon our legislation. Happily, in our opinion, our laws are subject to no such imputation. By section 2903 of the Civil Code it is provided that "every person having an interest in property subject to a lien has a right to redeem it from the lien at any time after the claim is due, and before his right of redemption is foreclosed." By section 379 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that "any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question involved therein."

Now, can it be denied that in the case before us William Duff, or, in the case supposed, A., has an interest in the property, (and in the identical title and estate) subject to the lien? And, if not, how can it be denied that he has a right to redeem up to the time such right is foreclosed? And how can it be foreclosed except by an action to which he is a party? It seems clear to us that in these provisions of the Codes the "innocent mortgagee" is plainly told that the true owner of the estate subject to his mortgage may be made a party to his action to foreclose, and that, in order to bar his right to redeem, he must be made a party Of course the literal effect of these provisions is, to some extent, limited and controlled by other sections of the Codes, and by other legal principles. By a clause of section 726, Code Civil Proc., the claims of subsequent grantees, etc., may be disregarded if they fail to record their conveyances; but this exception does not apply to William Duff, because he is not of the class defined. He does not hold any conveyance under the mortgagor; it is his estate that is mortgaged by the fraud of another. If this were the only exception to the rule preserving to all parties interested in the estate mortgaged a right to redeem until the right is foreclosed, it would seem to follow that the right of William Duff to redeem his estate would have been kept alive notwithstanding a foreclosure by Ritchie, without notice, actual or constructive, of his right. But there is another exception to the rule, or, rather, the rule is subject to the operation of the principle of estoppel; and, if Ritchie had foreclosed without notice of William Duff's interest in the mortgaged estate, the foreclosure would have cut off his right of redemption for precisely the same reason that the mortgage subjected his estate to a lien,—for the reason, that is to say, that no man can be allowed to mislead another to his injury. But Ritchie did have notice of William Duff's rights before he commenced his action to foreclose. The action of Duff v. Duff had been commenced, and notice of lis pendens filed. This was constructive and sufficient notice to Ritchie and to the respondent of his rights in the property affected. Code Civil Proc. 409. Ritchie was an incumbrancer, and Randall was a subsequent purchaser of the estate or property affected; and Ritchie, in commencing his action to foreclose, was taking a step towards the purchase of the estate then remaining in William Duff, and he was therefore bound to make him a party if he desired to cut off his right of redemption.

After all that has been said here and in the opinion of Commissioner HAYNE, it seems almost superfluous to refer explicitly to the point urged by respondent originally and upon the rehearing: that William Duff could not be a party to Ritchie's suit to foreclose, because he claims the mortgaged estate by a title paramount and hostile to the title of the mortgagor. The doctrine upon which this objection is based is stated in section 1440 of Jones on Mortgages, and it applies, as will be seen, only where the title of the defendant is paramount to the claim of both mortgagor and mortgagee. Here the title of William Duff, although in a certain sense paramount and adverse to that of Robert Duff, the nominal mortgagor, is not paramount to the claim of the mortgagee, but, on the contrary, is clearly subject to the lien of the mortgage. Instead of having no interest in the suit, (which is the only reason the holder of an adverse title is held to be not a proper party to an action to foreclose,) he is as directly and vitally interested as if he himself had with his own hand, and in his own name, executed the mortgage to Ritchie; for, as the case is, it is just as true as it would have been in the case supposed that it is his estate and title that is mortgaged.

In closing we call attention again to the fact that for convenience and brevity, we have omitted mentioning some of the actual parties to the transactions herein referred to, and that what we have said of William Duff is to be understood as applying to his successors, the plaintiffs in Duff v. Duff, and the appellants here; and that what is said of Ritchie applies also to Fiebig, the other mortgagee. We adhere to the conclusion reached in our former opinion, and, upon the grounds therein and here stated it is ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; WORKS, J.

(79 Cal. 200)

LORING v. STUART. (No. 12,881.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1889.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—SEPARATE ESTATE.

1. Where a husband leaves his wife on account of domestic infelicity, and during his absence determines never to resume marital relations with her, but to provide for his family when necessary, and the wife and children live together, supported by her exertions, this is a separate living, within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 169, providing that the wife's earnings, "while she is living separate from her husband," are her separate property.

2. Real property, purchased by a married woman in her own name, partly with her separate funds, and partly with money borrowed by her for that purpose, becomes in part her separate estate, and in part community property; and where she gives a mortgage on the whole tract, whatever separate interest she has may be foreclosed, and it is not for her to object that the decree directs the sale of the whole tract.

3. When a motion for a nonsuit states no grounds therefor, it is not error to overrule it.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. Myres, Judge.

J. M. Fulweiler, for appellant. Wallace & Prewitt and Grove L. Johnson, for respondent.

Belcher, C. C. Action to foreclose a mortgage. Defense, that the defendant was a married woman when she executed the mortgage, and that the mortgaged property was community property, and the mortgage therefore void. The court found that at the date of the mortgage, and for more than ten years prior thereto, defendant was the wife of one Robert Stuart, but that she and her husband had lived separate and apart from each other for nearly two years, and that the mortgaged premises were the earnings of defendant while so living separate from her husband, and were her separate property. Judgment was entered foreclosing the mortgage, and from that judgment and an order denying her a new trial defendant appealed. The only points made for a reversal are that the court erred in not granting a nonsuit, and that the findings as to the defendant's living separate from her husband, and as to the mortgaged property being the earnings of defendant while so living, were not justified by the evidence.

1. It does not appear from the record that any grounds for the nonsuit were stated, and for that reason the first point cannot be sustained. It has long been settled that when a motion is made for a nonsuit, without stating the grounds upon which it is made, it is not error to overrule the motion. Kiler v. Kimbal, 10 Cal. 268; People v. Banvard, 27 Cal. 470; Sanchez v. Neary, 41 Cal. 485.

2. There was testimony tending to show that the defendant had been living separate from her husband for nearly five years when the case was tried. It appeared that the parties were living together in Rocklin, Placer county, in April, 1883; that in that month he went away to Forest City, in Sierra county, and had ever since resided there; that she continued to live in Rocklin, and had kept boarders, and done other work to support herself and children; that she had never visited him nor he her, though he had twice passed through Rocklin; that he had written several letters to her and the children, and had three or four times sent small sums of money to the children. He testified: "The immediate cause of my leaving Rocklin was domestic infelicity, and such infelicity has not been healed by reconciliation. I do not intend to resume intimate marital relations with my wife, but my intentions in that regard did not exist on the 1st of January, 1885. It is only within the past six months that I fully determined in my own mind not to resume intimate marital relations with my wife again, but I have never ceased, nor do I intend to cease, performing my obligations to my family, while I have strength to do so. I left my wife, and did not inform her when, if ever, I would return, and did not acquaint my wife about my future intentions as to living with her." We think this shows a "separate" living within the meaning of section 169 of the Civil Code,[1] and that the judgment cannot be reversed on this ground.

3. The defendant testified that in September, 1884, she made a contract to purchase the mortgaged premises for $300, and that she paid the purchase price, and took a deed for the property in her own name on the 9th of January, 1885; that she borrowed $225 of the purchase money, and made the balance by keeping boarders; that she executed the note and mortgage in suit to secure payment of the $225 borrowed and other money owing by her to the mortgagee. Now, conceding that the borrowed money was community property, still it appears that a part of the purchase money was the defendant's earnings, and her separate estate. In Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. Rep. 719, it was held that real property purchased by a married woman in her own name, partly with money belonging to her separate funds, and partly with money borrowed by her for that purpose, becomes in part the separate property of the wife, and in part community property. In such a case, it was said, the wife becomes a tenant in common of the land with her husband in the proportion that the separate funds paid by her bear to the whole purchase price. Under this rule defendant owned at least a part of the mortgaged premises and had a right to execute the mortgage. This being so, whatever separate interest defendant has in the property may be sold under the decree of foreclosure, and it does not lie in her mouth to object that the decree directs the sale of the whole property, and is therefore too broad. We find no errors in the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: Foote, C.; Hayne, C.

Per Curiam. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

79 Cal. 173

Brooks v. Fischer. (No. 13,134.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1889.)

Municipal Corporations—Charters.

1. Const. Cal. art. 11, § 8, relating to the adoption of city charters, provides that the charter shall "be submitted to the legislature for its approval or rejection as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment, and, if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, it shall become the charter of such city." Held, that it is not necessary that the resolution of approval be in the form of a bill passed in the ordinary manner, and approved by the governor. The constitution (article 4, § 1) does not make the governor a part of the legislature.

---

[1] Sec. 169. The earnings and accumulations of the wife, and of her minor children living with her or in her custody, while she is living separate from her husband, are the separate property of the wife.

2. Under the constitutional provision that city charters must be "consistent with and subject to the constitution and laws of this state," a charter will not be held invalid in toto because a few of its provisions may conflict with general statutes.

In bank. Petition for writ of prohibition.

W. T. Baggett and J. Marion Brooks, pro se, for petitioner. Chas. McFarland, Chapman & Hendrick, and Haynes & Mitchell, for respondent. S. D. Woods, amicus curiæ.

WORKS, J. This is a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent the defendant from proceeding to act as assessor of the city of Los Angeles. The petition alleges, among other things: "(1) That on the 20th day of October, 1888, the qualified electors of said city ratified a charter for the government of said city, framed as provided by section 8, art. 11, of the constitution of the state of California, and thereafter, to-wit, on the —— day of ——, 1889, a resolution was introduced in the senate of the state of California (the legislature being then in session) entitled 'Senate Joint Resolution No. 2,' purporting to be a resolution approving the aforesaid charter; that a majority of the members elected to the senate, and a majority of the members elected to the assembly, voted in favor of said resolution on the 23d day of January, 1889. (2) Said charter was never submitted to the legislature of the state of California for its approval or rejection, as provided by section 8, art. 11, of the constitution; that neither the said resolution nor the said charter was ever read on three several days in each house, nor was either declared a case of urgency; that neither said resolution nor said charter was ever presented to the governor of the state of California for his approval or rejection, nor were they or either of them signed or approved by said governor. (3) That the powers and duties of the city assessor, in relation to the assessment of property prescribed by the laws existing prior to the framing of the aforesaid charter, were other than, and essentially different from, the powers and duties provided in said aforesaid charter. (4) That notwithstanding that said charter has never been submitted to the legislature for its approval or rejection, and never presented to, and signed and approved by, the governor, the said defendant, as city assessor, without, and in excess of, the duties and powers conferred by prior laws, threatens, and is now proceeding, to assess all taxable property in said city, according to and by virtue of the provisions of said charter, and not otherwise, and particularly the property of your petitioner, notwithstanding his attention has been called to excess of jurisdiction." The prayer of the petition "is for an alternative writ of prohibition, commanding the defendant to refrain from further proceedings in the matter specified herein until the further order of the court, and to show cause before this court, at a time and place specified in the writ, why he should not be absolutely restrained from any further proceedings in said matter."

It will be seen by the allegations of the petition that the sole question presented is as to the validity of the charter of the city of Los Angeles. Two objections are made to the charter: (1) That it was not legally adopted; (2) that it is inconsistent with the general laws.

1. It is conceded that the charter was adopted by the legislature by a joint resolution passed by a majority of the members elected to both houses of the legislature, and it is claimed on the part of the petitioner that this is not sufficient, but that it must have been adopted by a bill, passed after the necessary readings provided for in the enactment of a law, and approved by the governor. The constitution, so far as it relates to the action of the legislature, provides that the charter shall "be submitted to the legislature for its approval or rejection as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment, and, if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, it shall become the charter of such city." Const. art. 11, § 8. It is contended by the petitioner that the term "legislature," as here used, means the law-making power, and includes the governor; and incidentally it is contended that, so far as the enactment of laws is concerned, the governor is a part of the legislature. The language of the constitution referred to is peculiar. It provides—First, for submission to the legislature for its approval or rejection; second, that if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, it shall become the charter of said city. This does not, in terms, require any action on the part of the governor, but expressly provides that immediately upon its being approved by a majority of the members of the two houses of the legislature, it shall become the charter of the city. The governor is not, in fact, a part of the legislature. The constitution provides: "The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a senate and assembly, which shall be designated 'the legislature of the state of California.'" Id. art 4, § 1. It will be seen, therefore, that the legislature is one thing, and the law-making power of the state another. It does not follow that because in other parts of the constitution, as contended by counsel for the petitioner, the term "legislature," so far as it applies to the enactment of laws, includes the governor as a part of the law-making power; that such is the effect of the language above quoted with reference to the adoption of city charters. The language of the section itself clearly shows a different intention. It provides for the submission to the legislature, which does not necessarily include the governor, and provides in express terms that the proposed charter shall become effective upon its being approved by the members of that body. It seems to us that this language is so plain and unequivocal that it cannot call for a construction by this court. It is enough that the constitution has so provided. This being the effect of the constitution, it seems to us to be wholly immaterial whether the charter was approved by the legislature by a bill in the regular form, or by way of a joint resolution. Its approval was clearly indicated, as is conceded by the petitioner, and this, it seems to us, was enough.

2. The further objection is that the charter, if properly adopted, must be held to be invalid for the reason that it is in conflict with the general laws of the state. Under the provisions of the constitution the charter to be framed for a city government must be "consistent with and subject to the constitution and laws of this state." It is contended by the petitioner that certain provisions of the charter are inconsistent with existing general laws, and particularly that it is in conflict with the general law with reference to the improvement of streets. It may be that certain of its provisions are inconsistent with present laws, and that so far it cannot be effective as against such laws, but this is a matter that it is unnecessary for us to determine. It is enough to say that the whole charter cannot be held to be invalid because of the fact that a few of its provisions may conflict with general statutes now in force. For these reasons we are of the opinion that the petition should be denied, and it is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

In re STRAND. (No. 20,539.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1889.)

In bank.

W. T. Baggett and J. Marion Brooks, for petitioner. Charles McFarland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus, and presents the same questions decided in Brooks v. Fischer, ante, 652, (opinion filed May 17, 1889.) On the authority of that case the writ is denied.

BARRY v. MURPHY et al. (No. 11,754.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1889.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

W. H. Webb and Jas. A. Wall, for appellant. N. A. Dorn and W M. R. Parker, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. The determination of this suit turns on the proper location of the point called the "Bolsita," mentioned in the deed executed by Juan B. Castro to the plaintiff. The court below in its findings fixed it a point 61.50 chains west of the end of the first course in the deed above mentioned, with a course north 72 deg. west. Upon an examination of the testimony we are convinced that the court found the point correctly, and properly rendered judgment for defendant. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

(79 Cal. 178)

PEOPLE v. OREILEUS. (No. 20,499.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1889.)

FORMER JEOPARDY—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Pen. Code Cal. § 1021, provides that, if the defendant was formerly acquitted on the ground of variance between the indictment or information and the proof, it is not an acquittal of the same offense. Section 1165 provides that, if there be an acquittal for such variance as may be obviated by a new information, the court may detain the prisoner till such information is preferred. Defendant was charged with felonious assault, and the proof showed an assault on a person having an entirely different name from the one alleged in the indictment, and who had never been known by the alleged name, and a verdict of not guilty was ordered, and a new information preferred. Held, that defendant has not been once in jeopardy, notwithstanding section 956, providing that, where an offense involving the commission of a private injury is in other respects sufficiently described to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured is not material.

2. Sections 1021 and 1165 are not in violation of the constitutional provision that "no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

J. E. Jarrett, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The information charges the defendant with, and he was convicted of, an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one Trinidad Sanchez. He appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying him a new trial. In addition to the plea of "not guilty" appellant also pleaded a "former acquittal" and "once in jeopardy," and upon these two last-named pleas the jury, under the instructions of the court, found "for the people." Upon these pleas, and the verdict thereon, the only point made by appellant arises. It appears that a former information had been filed against appellant, charging him with an assault with a deadly weapon upon one Fernida Lunies at the time and place alleged in the second information. Upon his trial on the first information it appeared that the assault was committed on Trinidad Sanchez, and it did not appear that the latter was ever known or called by the name of Fernida Lunies, or by any other name than Trinidad Sanchez. When the prosecution rested, "upon motion of defendant's counsel, and under instructions of the court, the jury rendered the appended verdict: 'We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty by reason of a variance between the information and the proof.'" Thereupon the court ordered that the defendant be detained in custody, to the end that a new information or indictment might be preferred against him. Under this state of facts appellant contends that the verdict at the second trial, on the special pleas, should have been "for the defendant." Section 1021 of the Penal Code provides that "if the defendant was formerly acquitted on the ground of variance between the indictment or information and the proof, * * * it is not an acquittal of the same offense." And section 1165 provides that if there be an acquittal for such variance, which may be obviated by a new information, the court may order the detention of the defendant in order that such new information may be preferred. The main argument of appellant is that the variance which subjects a defendant to a second trial must be material, and that in the case at bar it was not material. But waiving the question whether appellant, after having procured a verdict of not guilty by reason of a variance, can be heard to say that the variance was not material, the point must be decided against him upon authority. Where there is a slight mistake in the spelling of the name of the injured person, or where such person is known by two or more names, or, perhaps, where the name in the indictment and the name proved are so similar in sound that the rule of idem sonans would apply, in such cases the variance would not probably be held to be fatal to the conviction. People v. Leong Quong, 60 Cal. 107; People v. Leong Sing, 19 Pac. Rep. 254; People v. Cummings, 57 Cal. 88. But we have not been referred to any case where a defendant charged in an indictment with having committed a felonious assault upon a certain named person has been held to have been properly convicted upon proof showing an assault on a person having an entirely different name from the one stated in the indictment, and where he had never been known by the alleged name, or had any association with it whatever. And the question was definitely settled by this court in People v. McNealy, 17 Cal. 333, and People v. Allen, 61 Cal. 140, against the contention of appellant. We are aware of the provision of section 956, Pen. Code, to the effect that where an offense, involving the commission of a private injury, is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation "as to the person injured" is not material. But that provision was specially called to the attention of this court, and commented on, in People v. McNealy, supra. It is, perhaps, not impossible to describe an assault with sufficient certainty, although the name of the person assaulted be not given; but in the case at bar, as in the McNealy Case, there was no such "sufficient certainty." Really, the most important underlying question in the case (not discussed by counsel) is whether the provisions of sections 1021 and 1165, above referred to, are in violation of the provision of the constitution that "no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." But they were held in People v. McNealy, supra, not to be in conflict with the constitution. Judgment and order affirmed

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J

(3 Cal. Unrep. 85)

BRYAN v. TORMEY. (No. 11,873.)[1]

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1889.)

QUIETING TITLE—PRESUMPTIONS—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

1. A complaint to quiet title alleged that plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the property. The findings were that plaintiff was the owner, but that defendant was in possession, and judgment was rendered that plaintiff's title be quieted, and that defendant be removed from possession. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 380, the action may be maintained by one not in possession. Held that, though the judgment was in direct contradiction to the complaint, it would be modified on appeal so as to omit the part relating to possession, and would be thus affirmed, without costs to either party.

2. M. took possession of land in 1861, claimed it as his own, cultivated it regularly, and paid all the taxes. After 11 years he sold to his brother, who took possession, improved the property, and paid the taxes. After five years he conveyed to plaintiff's testator, who took possession, exercised acts of ownership, and held possession till 1881. M. knew of his brother's possession, and knew that he sold to plaintiff's testator, and that the latter was in possession and improving the property, and made no claim to the land, or any protest, till about 1880, when he discovered there was no deed on record of the original conveyance by himself. He then gave a deed of the land to defendant. Held, that there was a presumption of title in M.'s brother, which was not rebutted by the fact that he originally entered under an oral contract of purchase, or by the fact that there was no deed on record conveying to him.

3. In view of such presumption, it is immaterial that declarations of M. that he had conveyed to his brother were erroneously admitted in evidence.

4. Defendant knew that M. was not in possession when he conveyed to him, and there was no evidence, except the presumption arising from the deed, that defendant gave any consideration for the land. He knew that M.'s brother had conveyed the land as if it was his own. He did not make inquiries of the occupants of the land, and, although he heard that there was a deed from M. to his brother, there was no evidence that he made any inquiries of M. about it, but he made inquiries of the widow of M.'s brother, and searched the records. Held, that defendant was not a bona fide purchaser.

5. The pleadings having alleged that plaintiff was the owner in fee of the property, a finding that he was the owner in fee is sufficient to show that fact, though there are probative facts stated tending to show the contrary, but which are not necessarily inconsistent with the fact of plaintiff's ownership; especially where the findings further state that defendant never had any title or interest in or to said land.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for appellant. W. H. L. Hart and Aylett & Cotton, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to quiet title to certain land in the town of Berkeley. Both parties claim through one John Mathews, in whom the title stood of record until August

---

[1] Reversed in banc. See 24 Pac. 319, 84 Cal. 126.

13, 1880, when he conveyed to the defendant, who was his son-in-law. The plaintiff's position is that, prior to the conveyance to the defendant, John Mathews had conveyed to his brother, Peter Mathews, through whom she claims. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. Several points are made by the learned counsel for the appellant, but we deem it sufficient to notice the following:

1. It is contended that the complaint does not support the judgment. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the property, while the findings are that the plaintiff was the owner, but that the defendant was in possession; and the judgment is that the plaintiff's title be quieted, and that the defendant be removed from possession. The findings and judgment, therefore, so far as the possession is concerned, are in direct contradiction of the complaint. It is obvious that the plaintiff cannot have a judgment in direct contradiction of her complaint. Von Drachenfels v. Doolittle, 19 Pac. Rep. 518. But the right to have the title quieted does not, under our statute, depend upon the plaintiff's possession. The action may be maintained by one out of possession. Code Civil Proc. § 380; Hyde v. Redding, 74 Cal. 493, 16 Pac. Rep. 380. And its character is not changed by the circumstance that the defendant is or is not in possession. Polack v. Gurnee, 66 Cal. 266, 5 Pac. Rep. 229, 610. The judgment may therefore be modified by leaving out the part relating to the possession; and, inasmuch as this was "an apparent error which the counsel for appellant might have corrected below by specific motion for that purpose, we think it not equitable to tax the costs to the respondent." Cassin v. Marshall, 18 Cal. 692; Noonan v. Hood, 49 Cal. 293.

2. It is argued that the findings do not show that the legal title was in plaintiff's testator. It was alleged, however, that the plaintiff is "the owner in fee" of the property, and the finding is in the same language. The allegation that the plaintiff is the owner of the property is of an ultimate fact. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 242; Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 217; Ferrer v. Insurance Co., 47 Cal. 431; Miller v. Brigham, 50 Cal. 615; Rough v. Simmons, 65 Cal. 227, 3 Pac. Rep. 804; Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 534, 14 Pac. Rep. 182; Heeser v. Miller, 19 Pac. Rep. 375; Souter v. Maguire, ante, 183. The findings are sufficient if they follow the language of the pleadings, (Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 286,) or if they make a definite reference to the pleadings, as has been held in numerous cases. Hence the finding as to the ownership in fee is sufficient, and shows that the legal title was in the plaintiff. Murphy v. Bennett, 68 Cal. 528, 9 Pac. Rep. 738; McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 344, 14 Pac. Rep. 879. And its force is not destroyed by the finding of certain probative facts tending to show that the legal title is in the defendant. It may be conceded that where the probative facts found are necessarily inconsistent with the finding of the ultimate fact, the latter may be treated as a mere conclusion. But where the ultimate fact inferred does not necessarily result from the probative facts found, these latter are not sufficient as a finding, taken by themselves, (Emmal v. Webb, 36 Cal. 204; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 381, 382; Knight v. Roche, Id. 18; Packard v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 183, 184; Younger v. Pagles 60 Cal. 520,) and are controlled by a finding of the ultimate fact, (Barrante v. Garratt, 50 Cal. 114; Edwards v. Bank, 59 Cal. 148.) This must necessarily be so; for the function of findings is to establish the facts with certainty, and not to deal in probabilities. In the case before us the finding of the defendant's chain of title is not necessarily inconsistent with the plaintiff's ownership; for it may be that John Mathews conveyed to his brother Peter before he "made a deed" to the defendant, (Smith v. Acker, 52 Cal. 219,) which, as stated below, is what must be taken to be true upon the evidence. This conclusion is strengthened by the finding that the defendant "never had any estate, right, title, or interest in or to said land, or any part thereof."

3. It is urged that there is no evidence that John Mathews ever conveyed the property to his brother Peter, except certain declarations of John to the general effect that he had done so; and that the admission of such declarations against defendant's objections was erroneous. There was no direct evidence of the conveyance in question, and we think it possible that the admission of said declarations was error. See Thompson v. Lynch, 29 Cal. 191; Tompkins v. Crane, 50 Cal. 480. But, assuming this to be so, we think that the error was immaterial, because, upon the undisputed facts of the case, it must be presumed that such a conveyance was made. A presumption may supply the place of direct evidence; and, if not controverted, a court or jury is bound to find in accordance therewith. Code Civil Proc. § 1961; Leviston v. Ryan, 75 Cal. 294, 17 Pac. Rep. 239; Speegle v Leese, 51 Cal. 415. The question, then, is whether upon the facts shown by the record a presumption arises of a conveyance from John to Peter Mathews; and we think that it does arise from the long continued possession of the plaintiff's predecessors in interest, and their open and notorious acts of ownership over the property. "Possession," says Angell in his work on Limitation, "by the law of England and of this country, or quasi possession, as the case may be, is prima facie evidence of property and of a seisin in fee. The longer the continuance of the possession, and the absence of the disturbance of it, the greater is the length to which courts of justice will go in supporting the conclusion that there was a legal origin for it; and, in order to render the title of the possessor complete, they will presume collateral facts, as livery of seisin, execution of deeds, etc., agreeably to the maxim, ex diuturnitate temporis, omnia præsumuntur solemnitur esse acta." 5th Ed. § 4; and see Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 12.

The doctrine as to presumption of grants is usually applied in cases of easements. But it is not confined to such cases. In the language of STORY, J., delivering the opinion in Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 109: "A grant of land may as well be presumed as a grant of a fishery, or of common, or of a way. Presumptions of this nature are adopted from the general infirmity of human nature, the difficulty of preserving muniments of title, and the public policy of supporting long and uninterrupted possessions. They are founded upon the consideration that the facts are such as could not, according to the ordinary course of human affairs, occur, unless there was a transmutation of title to, or an admission of an existing title in, the party in possession." And the doctrine was applied as to the land itself in a recent and well-considered case in the supreme court of the United States, in which it was distinctly held that the presumption was not a mere inference of fact,—in other words, that it was not necessary for the court or jury to believe that a conveyance was in fact executed,—the court, per FIELD, J., saying: "It is sufficient if the evidence leads to the conclusion that the conveyance might have been executed, and that its existence would be a solution of the difficulties arising from its non-execution," (Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 547, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 667,) and the authorities fully sustain this proposition.

What period, then, is sufficient to raise the presumption? From the nature of the case, there ought to be no fixed and absolute period. See 120 U. S. 550, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 675. Each case is to be governed largely by its own circumstances. But there are certain analogies which may aid in arriving at a conclusion. In the case of easements, the period usually adopted in the older states is 20 years, which was in analogy to the statute of limitations. In this regard BRONSON, J., delivering the opinion of the court of errors, said: "The modern doctrine of presuming a right by grant or otherwise to easements and incorporeal hereditaments, after twenty years of uninterrupted adverse enjoyment, exerts a much wider influence in quieting possession than the old doctrine of title by prescription, which depended on immemorial usage. The period of twenty years has been adopted by the courts in analogy to the statute limiting an entry into lands; but, as the statute does not apply to incorporeal rights, the adverse user is not regarded as a legal bar, but only as a ground for presuming a right either by grant or in some other form." Parker v. Foote, 19 Wend. *312; and see Edson v. Munsell, 10 Allen, 568.

In California the general statute of limitations for actions concerning real property is five years. We are not at present prepared to say that the presumption of a grant would usually be raised after so short a period in cases where the statute did not apply. It is not necessary to express an opinion upon that point, and we express none. But the fact that the period of the statute of limitations has been shortened is not ground for lengthening the period usually accepted in other states as sufficient to raise the presumption of a grant; nor is the fact that the country is comparatively new, and titles correspondingly unstable, a reason for dispensing with safeguards preserved in older communities. We think, therefore, that uninterrupted possession of land for 20 years or thereabouts, under proper conditions, is sufficient to raise a presumption of a grant, where that is required to make out the occupant's title.

The undisputed facts bring the case within this principle. Peter Mathews took possession of the property in 1861, and he and his successors in interest continued in the open and notorious possession, exercising acts of ownership and control, until the ouster by the defendant in 1881, a period of about 20 years. During the time of his possession Peter Mathews claimed the property as his own. He regularly and annually cultivated it, raising the usual crops for his own use and benefit, and paid all the taxes. See, in this regard, 120 U. S. 553–555, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677, 678. After 11 years he sold and conveyed to others, who in turn took and kept possession, improved the property by laying it out in lots, opening streets, planting trees, etc., and paid all the taxes. After five years they conveyed the property to the plaintiff's testator, who continued in possession, exercising acts of ownership and control, until he was ousted by the defendant, in 1881. During all this time John Mathews knew of the condition of affairs. He knew of Peter's possession. He knew that Peter had sold and conveyed the land to others. And he knew that the grantees were in possession, and improving the property. But he made no claim to it. He saw what was going on without one word of protest, or any sign of dissent, until about the time that he ascertained that there was no deed of record. These circumstances seem to us to be sufficient to raise the presumption of title in Peter; and in addition it is to be remembered that at the time of the trial the mouths of both brothers were closed by death.

It is quite true that the presumption is rebuttable. But we see nothing in the record which rebuts it. The fact that Peter originally entered under a verbal agreement of purchase from John does not make against it. See 120 U. S. 545, 546, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673. In view of the other facts, it increases the probability that a deed was subsequently made. Nor does the fact that there was no record of such a deed overcome the presumption. Aside from other reasons, it was in evidence that at the time in question "it was a very common thing to find some deed, in a deraignment of title, not recorded. People were very careless, and they had been prior to that, about recording their deeds." Nor do we see anything in the circumstances adverted to by the appellant's counsel which overcome the presumption.

4. The defendant was not a bona fide purchaser for value. Counsel do not lay stress upon this aspect of the case; and we deem it sufficient to say in the first place that the defense is not set up in the answer. Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 167, 3 Pac. Rep. 641. The answer denies notice, but it does not assert, either affirmatively or negatively, that the defendant was a purchaser for value. Nor is there any evidence (other than the presumption of consideration from the writing) that he paid anything for the deed. In the next place, he admits that he knew that his grantor was not in possession, and that he knew that Peter had conveyed the property as if it was his own. These circumstance were sufficient to put him on inquiry. Yet he says in his evidence: "I did not go to see the people who were occupying the ground before the deed was made to me by John Mathews, nor did I ask them any questions;" and further on he says: "I didn't go and ask Mrs. Mathews before I took my deed, because I was not in that locality." And, what is more remarkable, he does not say that he inquired about the existence of the deed from the only person then living who must have known about the fact, viz., his own father-in-law, John Mathews himself. Even after the execution of the deed, and when, according to his own account, "it was dinned into my ears that there was a deed, —that John Mathews had made a deed to Peter Mathews,"—although he went to Peter's widow about it, and had the records carefully searched, he does not say that he asked the only man who could give him the information he wanted. The other points made do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment be modified by striking out the part relating to the recovery of possession by the plaintiff, and that, as modified, it and the order denying a new trial stand affirmed, without costs of appeal to either party.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is modified by striking out the part relating to the recovery of the possession by the plaintiff, and that as modified it and the order denying a new trial stand affirmed, without costs of appeal to either party.

---

79 Cal. 188

HILL v. CITY CAB & TRANSFER CO. et al.

(No. 11,676.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1889.)

JUDGMENT—ACTION ON.

Where it is proved in an action on a judgment that there was no service of summons on, or authorized appearance by, defendant, when the judgment was recovered, plaintiff cannot recover on the ground that defendant does not show a meritorious defense to the original action.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action on a judgment by William Hill against the City Cab & Transfer Company and several others. Judgment for plaintiff, and C. G. Jones, one of the defendants, appeals.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Thompson & Thompson, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This was an action upon the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction. The defendant pleaded in defense that said judgment had been obtained without service upon him, or any authorized appearance on his behalf. The court below found these facts to be true, but rendered judgment against defendant upon the ground that he did not show that he had a meritorious defense to the original action. We think that this was error.

It is true that a court of equity will not give relief against a judgment unless it be shown that the complainant had a defense upon the merits. Equity, in such case, will simply hold its hand, and leave the parties to their rights at law. It is also true that at law a defendant cannot collaterally assail a judgment unless it be void on its face. This was held after careful consideration in Carpentier v. Oakland, 30 Cal. 439, and the general doctrine of that case has recently been approved. Hodgdon v. Railroad Co., 75 Cal. 648, 17 Pac. Rep. 928. And it is in accordance with the preponderance of authority elsewhere. See Freem. Judgm. (3d Ed.) § 116. In New York, where a contrary doctrine seems to prevail, it is admitted that the rule there rests upon the local law of that state, and "finds no support in adjudications elsewhere." Ferguson v. Crawford, 70 N. Y. 267. And we do not understand that our statute has changed the rule. Section 1916 of the Code of Civil Procedure simply means that evidence is admissible to impeach the judgment in the cases allowed by law,—not in all cases whatsoever. But this rule is not that a judgment which is void will be enforced as if it were valid, but that it cannot be shown to be void except in certain ways. If the party, however, should admit the facts which show the judgment to be void, or if he should allow them to be established without opposition, then, as a question of law, upon such facts, we do not see why the case is not like that where a judgment is void upon its face. In the present case the findings establish the fact that there was no service of summons upon or authorized appearance by the defendant. And none of the evidence is brought up, nor does the question appear to have been raised by exception or demurrer, or in any other way The facts, therefore, must be taken to be established by the record beyond all controversy. And upon such facts the law is that the judgment is void. Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. 371, 372, 4 Pac. Rep. 232. Merced Co. v. Hicks, 67 Cal. 10J, 7 Pac. Rep. 179. The judgment sued on, being shown to be absolutely void, cannot be held to be valid, or to be a cause of action. We advise that the judgment appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment for the defendant Jones.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with direction to the court below to enter judgment for the defendant Jones.

---

79 Cal. 183

PORTER v. IMUS. (No. 11,926.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1889.)

INSOLVENCY LAWS.

1. The California insolvent act of 1880 discharges debts contracted in 1878, and is not thus unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of contracts. Following Pomeroy v. Gregory, 66 Cal. 574, 6 Pac. Rep. 493.

2. Under section 53 of the act, providing that the discharge shall be a complete bar to all debts which were or might have been proved, (with certain exceptions,) and may be pleaded by a simple averment that on the day of its date such discharge was granted, setting forth the same, and making the certificate prima facie evidence of such facts and of the regularity of the discharge, etc., the burden is on one suing the insolvent to show that he was not a citizen or resident of the state, and therefore not affected by the discharge.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. MCCANN, Judge.

Joseph H. Skirm, for appellant. Geil & Morehouse, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action upon a promissory note made and payable in this state, and dated in 1878. Defense, a discharge in insolvency obtained in 1881. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

The first point is that the insolvency act of 1880 impairs the validity of the contract; in other words, that under that act a discharge could not be granted which would bar a debt contracted in 1878. This precise question, however, has been decided against the appellant. Pomeroy v. Gregory, 66 Cal. 574, 6 Pac. Rep. 493; Hundley v. Chaney, 65 Cal. 363, 4 Pac. Rep. 238.

The only other point made is that it is not pleaded or found that the plaintiff was a citizen or resident of the state. The insolvency act provides, however, that the discharge shall be a bar to all the debts which were or might have been proved, with certain specified exceptions, (of which this is not one,) and "may be pleaded by a simple averment that on the day of its date such discharge was granted to him, setting forth the same in full, and the same shall be a complete bar to all suits brought on any such debts, claims and liabilities or demands, and the certificate shall be prima facie evidence in favor of such facts, and of the regularity of such discharge." Section 53. Under this provision, if the plaintiff was not a citizen or resident of the state, and consequently not affected by the discharge, he should have proved the fact. We therefore advise that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

---

79 Cal. 181

ANGELL v. HOPKINS. (No. 11,953.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1889.)

TROVER AND CONVERSION—PLEADING—EVIDENCE—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. In an action for taking property under an attachment, defendant demurred for misjoinder of the causes of action (1) to recover possession of property or its value, if a delivery could not be had; (2) for damages for the destruction of certain property; and (3) for damages for the use of the property while detained from plaintiff. Held, that error in overruling the demurrer, if any, resulted in no injury to defendant, where the findings showed that the value of the property was the only basis of the judgment given.

2. Though the measure of damages was the value of the property at the time of the conversion, (Civil Code Cal. § 3336,) yet it was proper to admit on the question of value evidence of what the property cost.

3. The property was a printing outfit, which was in the rear of plaintiff's drug-store, and was levied on under a writ against a third person, who conducted the printing business. Defendant alleged that when the debtor began business plaintiff had a press and some material, and told the debtor to buy material instead of paying rent; that the debtor did job-printing on his own account, and purported to do so, and there was nothing to indicate that he was not the proprietor; that he afterwards made a secret writing, recognizing plaintiff as owner of the property, and would not show it to the creditor's agent, and did not inform the latter that he was the owner; that plaintiff knew that the debtor insured the property in his own name, and made no objection. But it was not alleged that credit was given on the debtor's supposed ownership, induced by any act or omission of plaintiff, or that the creditor made any investigation as to title before credit was given. Held, that such circumstances did not estop plaintiff from showing his ownership.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by J. W. Angell against Peter Hopkins, for the conversion of a printing-press and appurtenances, taken by defendant as sheriff under an attachment in an action by George L. Spinney, assignee of a claim of H. S. Crocker & Co., against S. G. Spencer. Defendant demurred to the complaint, because several causes of action were improperly united, viz.: (1) An action to recover possession of goods and chattels, or for $1,463.65, their value, in case a delivery could not be had; (2) an action for damages in the sum of $20 for destruction of shelving, frames which held type-cases, and one window; (3) an action for consequential damages to the amount of six dollars per day for the use of goods and chattels for every day's detention from plaintiff. Demurrer overruled, and defendant answered. The circumstances relied on in defendant's brief as showing an estoppel of plaintiff to take the property from defendant are that plaintiff was a druggist at a corner store, having an entrance on two streets. That in 1879, when Spencer went to his place of business, which was in the rear of plaintiff's store, and opened on the side street, plaintiff had a printing-press and some other material. Plaintiff told Spencer to buy material instead of paying rent. The sign "Printing Office" was over the side door, and beside this door was a show-case containing cards of Spencer, as job-printer. That from 1879 to the date of the attachment, (1885,) Spencer had been doing job-printing in this place on his own account, and in his own name, and using his own bill-heads. There was nothing, as plaintiff testified, in the manner in which Spencer did business, to indicate that he was not the proprietor. In September, 1883, Spencer, by a secret writing, undertook to recognize the respondent as the owner, and make him the owner, of all the property in the office; and plaintiff would not show the writing to Spinney, who represented Crocker & Co. Plaintiff did not tell Spinney that he owned the property. Plaintiff, however, testified that he thought that Spinney asked if there was any such writing, and plaintiff said there was. This was after Crocker & Co.'s debt was contracted. Plaintiff knew that Spencer had insured the property in his own name, and stood by while it was done, and made no objection. But defendant did not in his brief allege that Crocker & Co. gave credit to Spencer on the faith of his supposed ownership of the property, induced by some act or omission of plaintiff, or that Crocker & Co., before giving credit, made any investigation as to Spencer's title. The judgment was for the possession of the property or its value, if a delivery could not be had, and for damages for detention. Defendant appeals.

J. H. Dickinson, for appellant. Gray & Haven, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action for the conversion of personal property. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Several points are made.

1. It is said that the demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action should have been sustained. But assuming, for the purposes of the case, that this is so, no injury resulted to the appellant, for the reason that the findings show that the value of the property was the only basis for the judgment given. Error in overruling a demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action is immaterial, if it does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 185, 9 Pac. Rep. 176, and 12 Pac. Rep. 449.

2. It is contended that there was error in admitting evidence as to what the property cost the plaintiff. It is quite true that the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with certain additions in certain cases. Civil Code, § 3336. But in arriving at such value it was proper to take into consideration what the property cost as a circumstance to aid in arriving at its value at the time in question. Luse v. Jones, 39 N. J. Law, 708; Jones v. Morgan, 90 N. Y. 10; Norton v. Willis, 73 Me. 580; Small v. Pool, 8 Ired. 47; Boggan v. Horne, 97 N. C. 268, 2 S. E. Rep. 224; Rawson v. Prior, 57 Vt. 615; Ford v. Smith, 27 Wis. 267; Roberts v. Dunn, 71 Ill. 50.

3. The circumstances claimed to show that the attaching creditor had reason to believe that the property belonged to his debtor instead of the plaintiff do not estop the plaintiff from showing that he was the owner. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

79 Cal. 185

BEETS et al. v. CHART et al. (No. 11,879.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1889.)

APPEAL—PRACTICE.

1. A "statement on appeal to the supreme court," made after a motion for new trial has been determined, is not provided for in Code Civil Proc. Cal., and, where it does not appear to have been settled, certified, or signed by the trial court, it cannot be considered either as a statement on motion for a new trial, or as a bill of exceptions.

2. Where there is nothing before the court to show that a notice of appeal has been filed or served, the appeal will be dismissed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JACKSON TEMPLE, Judge.

Action by Louisa Beets and others against Obed Chart and others. Plaintiffs appeal.

George Pearce, for appellants. William D. Bliss and Thompson & Thompson, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. The appeal in this case was attempted to be taken without having attached to the transcript any certificate of the clerk identifying the papers contained in it as having constituted a part of the record of the court below. The settlement of what is called "a statement on appeal to the supreme court," made after a motion for a new trial had been heard and determined, is not provided for in the Code. People v. Crane, 60 Cal. 279. It does not appear to have been certified, settled, or signed by the judge of the trial court, and cannot, therefore, be considered here either as a statement on motion for a new trial or as a bill of exceptions. Adams v. Dohrmann, 63 Cal. 418, and cases cited. There is no identification in any lawful way of any of the papers showing that they were ever used in the proceedings, or constituted any part of the record in the court below. There is nothing in the so-called transcript to indicate that any notice of appeal was ever filed or served. The judgment roll which the appellate court permitted to be filed when this condition of what is denominated the "transcript" was called to its attention contains nothing, nor does the certificate of the clerk, or anything else attached thereto or before the court, which shows that a notice of appeal has been filed or served. For aught that appears, none has been. The attempted appeal cannot, therefore, be entertained or heard, and we advise that it be dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal is dismissed.

(79 Cal. 187)

RODRIGUEZ v. LAMBERT. (No. 11,875.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1889.)

APPEAL.

Where the record clearly shows that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence, the judgment will not be reversed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for appellant. N. A. Dorn and W. M. R. Parker, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff and defendant owned adjacent lots of land in the city of Monterey, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of a strip about eight and seven-tenths feet wide, along her northern line. The defendant asserted title to the disputed strip under the statute of limitations and by estoppel. The court found against the defendant upon all the issues presented, and rendered judgment for the plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. It is contended for appellant that the findings were not justified by the evidence, and that the judgment should be reversed for that reason. This contention is based upon the theory that it appears from the evidence that nearly or quite 30 years ago a fence was erected along the line now claimed by appellant to mark the boundary line between the lots; that this fence was recognized and acquiesced in by the owners of the lots for many years longer than was necessary, under the statute of limitations, to bar a right of entry; and that during all of those years the grantors of appellant held and claimed the disputed strip adversely to the grantors of respondent, and thus acquired a title thereto. We cannot concur in this view of the case. The record clearly shows that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence as to where the old fence was located, and as to whether the appellant's grantors ever held any of the disputed ground adversely to respondent's grantors. This being so, the well-settled rule in such cases must control in this court. No other points are made, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 92)

HIMMELMAN v. HENRY et al. (No. 11,659.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1889.)

APPEAL.

A judgment will not be reversed for the want of a finding on an issue with respect to which there was no evidence; and on appeal on the judgment roll alone it will not be presumed, against the correctness of the judgment, that there was evidence on a point as to which there was no finding.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Ejectment by Catherine Himmelman against Bridget Henry and others. Defendants appeal.

Langhorne & Miller, for appellants. J. M. Seawell and J. B. Reinstein, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action of ejectment. The answers, in addition to general denials, set up certain alleged special defenses. The court, trying the case without a jury, found that the plaintiff was the owner and seised in fee, and entitled to the possession, of the premises in suit, and that defendants ousted plaintiff therefrom, and wrongfully and unlawfully withhold possession thereof; but there is no finding as to the alleged special defenses. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

Appellants' main contention is that the judgment should be reversed because there is no finding on all the issues raised or alleged to have been raised by the pleadings. But a judgment will not be reversed for want of a finding on an issue with respect to which there is no evidence. In Wise v. Burton, 73 Cal. 175, 14 Pac. Rep. 683, this court say: "This court will not reverse for want of a finding on an issue where there is no evidence in relation to such issue." In the case at bar—which is brought here upon the judgment roll alone—we will not presume, against the correctness of the judgment, that there was evidence upon a point with respect to which there is no finding. This view of the case makes it unnecessary to consider the question whether or not the alleged special issues were material. We think the findings support the judgment. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J

79 Cal. 192

SALINAS CITY BANK v. GRAVES, Sheriff.
(No. 11,708.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1889.)

PLEDGE—POSSESSION.

1. A mill company arranged with plaintiff, a bank, to cash its drafts for grain purchased by it, the grain to be transferred to plaintiff, and held as "collateral security" for the repayment of the advances. Upon the purchase of a quantity of grain, a warehouse receipt would be made out and given to the seller, with a check for the sum due, and the latter would deliver the receipt to plaintiff when he presented the check. Afterwards plaintiff would indorse warehouse receipts to the mill company to enable it to withdraw grain from the warehouses for grinding. It was agreed between them that when the grain was in the mill company's mill or warehouse it should remain plaintiff's property, "as before." After the grain was so withdrawn, it was on the premises of the mill company, and apparently under the control of its agents. When ground, the flour was sold by the mill company's employés, and the proceeds turned over to plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff's only interest in the grain and flour was a lien thereon for the advances made, and that, after allowing it to be withdrawn from the warehouse, and taken into the mill company's possession, the lien was ended, as against an attaching creditor of the latter.

2. The attaching creditor derived his claim by assignment from L., who was one of the directors of the mill company. After assigning the debt, L. notified the presidents, both of the plaintiff bank and of the mill company thereof. During the time plaintiff was advancing funds to the mill company the latter leased one of its warehouses to J., as trustee for plaintiff, in order to give plaintiff possession of the grain therein, L. voting for the lease. Afterwards the agent of the mill company took possession of the warehouse and contents. The court found that the agent took such possession under the direction of the president of the company, and "with the tacit consent of some of the directors, of whom L. was one." Held that, assuming the finding to mean that L. had tacitly consented that the agent should manage the business, such consent would not estop the attaching creditor from denying the plaintiff's ownership of the property, the assignment having been made before the agent took possession.

3. The fact that the assigned indebtedness was not a negotiable instrument would not be material to an action against the sheriff making the levy.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Morehouse & Geil and Wm. Matthews, for appellant. Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. Plaintiff is a banking corporation. Defendant was sheriff of the county of Monterey. There was also another corporation in said county known as the "Salinas Flouring-Mill Company," having a mill and appurtenances, and being engaged in buying grain, and manufacturing it into flour, bran, and other products. On September 6, 1884, one George Grant commenced an action against this last-named corporation (which we will call for convenience the "Mill Company") to recover about $75,000, and sued out a writ of attachment, which defendant, as sheriff, levied upon a large quantity of grain, flour, etc., as the property of said mill company. On October 10, 1884, in pursuance of an order of court duly made, he sold said property for $17,640, which he holds subject to the further order of the court. Plaintiff brings this action to recover said money, upon the claim that said grain, flour, etc., so sold, was the property of plaintiff. Defendant justifies under the writ of attachment, and upon the ground that the property attached and sold was the property of the mill company. The case was tried without a jury, and the court rendered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from an order denying a new trial.

It is clear from the findings and evidence that at the time of the attachment the property in controversy was in the actual possession of the mill compay. Part of it was in the mill of that company in which it was carrying on its business, and the balance was in a warehouse owned and occupied by said company, and connected with the mill by a railroad about 100 feet long. Plaintiff contends, however, that the property belonged to it, and was only temporarily in the possession of the mill company for a special purpose. But defendant contends that the only interest which plaintiff had in the property was that of a pledgee, having a lien as security for the payment of money advanced for the mill company; and that, as the pledged property was allowed to go into the possession of the pledgor, it was subject to attachment for the latter's debts. If this last contention is true, then the judgment was correct, and the order denying the new trial should be affirmed.

The main facts, found by the court upon sufficient evidence, are as follows: On the 1st of June, 1883, the mill company being desirous of purchasing grain for its business, passed the following resolutions: "Resolved, that the president of this corporation be, and he is hereby authorized and directed, on behalf of this corporation, to enter into an agreement with Mr. H. S. Ball, to engage the said H. S. Ball to purchase grain for this corporation; that such agreement be made on the best terms obtainable: provided, that the commission to be paid the said H. S. Ball does not exceed 25 cents per ton. "Resolved, that the Salinas City Bank, at Salinas, Calif., be, and is hereby, requested to cash all drafts drawn upon this corporation by Mr. H. S. Ball, of Monterey county, for the price of grain purchased by him for the account of this corporation, and said H. S. Ball do transfer to said Salinas City Bank the grain so purchased upon his said drafts being cashed; and this corporation agrees to repay said Salinas City Bank the amount of said drafts, with interest, on demand; and that the grain so purchased shall be held by said Salinas City Bank as collateral security therefor; and said Salinas City Bank to keep said grain fully insured, at the cost of this corporation."

The plaintiff had a certified copy of these resolutions, which were Ball's authority to draw on the bank. The court also found that "under these resolutions said Ball was employed by said mill company to purchase for it from the farmers of Monterey county wheat for the use of said mill company, and plaintiff agreed with the said company to advance the necessary funds to enable said company to make said purchases of wheat." Ball proceeded to purchase grain from farmers for the mill company. Upon the delivery of wheat so purchased at certain warehouses, Ball would give his check to the farmer on the bank (plaintiff) for the amount due, and would at the same time take a warehouse receipt in the name of the plaintiff, which the farmer would take to the bank, together with the check. This manner of doing business continued until December, 1883, when James Baumberger became secretary and general manager of the mill company. After that Ball drew his checks on the mill company, and Baumberger, as secretary, drew its checks on plaintiff in favor of the farmer, for the price of the grain purchased; plaintiff still receiving and holding the warehouse receipts as collateral security for the advances made on account of the mill company. There were also other advances made by the bank for the mill company. After March, 1884, by agreement between the bank and the mill company, with intent to "increase plaintiff's security and value of said grain," grain was taken from time to time from the said warehouses by the mill company to its mill, and after having been ground into flour, etc., was (that not sold) placed in the said warehouse of said mill company near its mill. To accomplish that purpose, whenever Baumberger, manager of the mill company, wanted grain from the warehouse, the plaintiff indorsed to him warehouse receipts for the amount required. It was agreed between the bank and the mill company that while the grain was in the mill and warehouse of the mill company "possession thereof should be retained by plaintiff until the purchase money of said wheat, and any other advances made to said mill company and interest on the same should be fully paid to plaintiff," and that it "should remain the property of plaintiff as before." With this view, on March 22, 1884, the mill company made a lease of its warehouse to W. S. Johnson, as trustee of the bank, for the term of 90 days. Thereupon Baumberger gave the keys of the warehouse to Johnson, who a short time afterwards put one Peterson in charge, and gave him the keys. Until the latter part of June, 1884, Peterson opened the warehouse in the morning, and at night took an account of wheat that had been put in and taken out and reported to Johnson. During the day Baumberger, as manager of the mill, had control of the warehouse and the employés of the mill company had access to it as usual. Peterson was the employé of Baumberger at a warehouse which the latter had about 600 yards distant from the mill. In the latter part of June, 1884, Peterson quit Baumberger's employ, and Johnson "put said Baumberger in possession of said mill, warehouse, and the grain, flour, etc., therein, and gave him the keys thereof;" and things remained in that condition until September 8, 1884, when the attachment was levied. "All of said grain, flour, etc., attached by defendant, was a portion of the grain, and the produce thereof, purchased by H. S. Ball for said mill company, and for which the plaintiff had received the warehouse receipts, as aforesaid, and subsequently delivered to Baumberger for the purpose aforesaid." From December, 1883, to the time of the levy of the attachment, Baumberger, "apparently as the employé of the mill company, had the full possession, control, and management of the business, employed men, discharged them, paid them off by checks of said mill company, signed by him as secretary on said bank, which were paid by the bank, and charged to the mill company, as were all other advances." When the grain was converted into flour, the flour was put into sacks, and branded "Salinas Flouring-Mills," and was taken by the employés of the mill company to its warehouse. Such of it as could be sold to the local trade of Salinas City, and at points between that city and San Francisco, was so sold by Baumberger as manager of said mill company, and the proceeds were paid by him to plaintiff, and credited by plaintiff to the mill company. "When a surplus of flour accumulated in said mill warehouse, said Baumberger was directed by plaintiff to 'ship the same for and on its account to said warehouses'" (certain named warehouses) "in San Francisco; and he shipped the same by rail and took 'shipping receipts therefor,' which read thus: 'Received of the Salinas Flouring-Mill Company,' etc.; and wrote letters to said warehousemen in San Francisco, instructing them to issue receipts for said flour to the plaintiff, and return the same to plaintiff, which was done; and said letters of instruction were signed, 'SALINAS FLOURING-MILL CO., by BAUMBERGER, Secretary.' Said flour was sold and the proceeds thereof were credited by said plaintiff to said mill company account." All of the grain was taken from the original warehouses to the mill, ground into flour, and taken to the mill warehouse, and out of it by the employés of the mill company, under the direction of its manager, Baumberger.

From these facts it is apparent that during the whole transaction the relation of the bank (plaintiff) to the grain and flour was merely that of one who has a lien on personal property as security for the payment of a debt; the validity of the lien being dependent on the possession of the property. The bank was not engaged in the purchase of grain, and did not purchase the grain in controversy. It was purchased by Ball for the mill company. When delivered at the ware-house it was the property of the mill company. By the direction of Ball, acting for the mill company, the receipts were issued in the name of the bank, because, by a previous arrangement, security to the bank was to be effected in that way. In the resolutions passed, and in the testimony of appellant's witness, we find the words "security" and "collateral security" expressly used; so that there can Subsequently, in accordance with an order of the superior court, an amended complaint was filed, in which the appellant, Brown, was joined with Steffan as a defendant. In this amended complaint it is alleged, in substance, that at the time of the sale the sheep were in charge of the brother of the plaintiff, as his servant and employé merely, and without any interest in, or ownership of, any of the sheep; that the plaintiff, acting by and through his said servant and employé, sold and delivered the sheep to Steffan, who thereupon paid to plaintiff a portion of the purchase price, leaving the sum of $527.20 still due; that subsequently, and with full knowledge of plaintiff's ownership on the part of both Brown and Steffan, Brown induced plaintiff's brother and servant (who was indebted to him and insolvent) to pretend that he had been the owner of the sheep, and upon that pretense, known to Steffan to be false, he, (Steffan,) at the request of Brown and plaintiff's brother, gave Brown his promissory note for said balance; that plaintiff afterwards demanded payment of said balance from Steffan, and of Brown that said note be canceled; both of which demands were refused. Whereupon he prays judgment against Brown and Steffan for $527.20, costs, and interest. The appellant Brown demurred to this amended complaint upon the ground, among others, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. His demurrer was overruled, and upon trial of the cause judgment was rendered against him alone for said balance of $527.20, with interest and costs; from which judgment, and an order overruling his motion for a new trial, he prosecutes this appeal.

The superior court erred in overruling the demurrer. On the facts stated Steffan alone is liable to plaintiff for the balance of the contract price of the sheep. Brown is in no wise liable on the contract, and he is guilty of no conversion of the property, or any part of it. Whatever claim he may have against Steffan on the note is no concern of the plaintiff. Steffan is none the less answerable to plaintiff because he may, by his own fault, have incurred an additional obligation to Brown or his assignees. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and cause remanded.

---

79 Cal. 213

NORTH PAC. C. R. CO. v. GARDNER. (No. 12,966.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

MANDAMUS—JURISDICTION.

The superior court may issue a writ of mandate to a sheriff requiring him to execute a writ of restitution issued by a justice of the peace, upon his refusal to do so.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

The North Pacific Coast Railroad Company recovered a judgment before a justice for the possession of certain lands from Manuel Mancebo and another. A writ of restitution was issued, directed to the sheriff, Jacob Gardner, who returned it without executing it. A pluries execution issued with like result, and a petition was presented by said company to the superior court, asking that the sheriff be required to execute it. It was contended that the justice himself had power by motion to compel its execution, and to punish the sheriff as for contempt for failure to obey, and that therefore the superior court had no jurisdiction. The superior court decided in favor of its jurisdiction in the matter, and awarded the writ. Defendant appeals.

J. B. Southard and Edward P. Cole, for appellant. F. William Reade, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. We do not feel clear that a court of a justice of the peace can compel, on motion, a sheriff to execute a judgment rendered in such court, and punish him for contempt on his failure to obey its order. In such case, the party seeking the enforcement of his judgment can apply to the superior court for a writ of mandate on the refusal of the sheriff to execute the writ of execution to compel him to execute it. We find no error in the record. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

---

79 Cal. 208

BUELL v. DODGE et al. (No. 11,751.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

PLEADING—PARTIES.

1. Plaintiff alleged an agreement by which he was to convey land on which defendant M. held a mortgage, to defendant D., to whom he was also indebted, and by which M. was to release his mortgage and D. was to give a credit of a certain amount on the debt owing him; that defendants refused to carry out the agreement; that M. foreclosed his mortgage, by which plaintiff was damaged; and that he was also damaged by the attachment by D. of his personal property. Held a misjoinder of causes of action and parties defendant.

2. Plaintiff having merely alleged that he would have performed the agreement on his part if the defendants had not notified him that they would not perform it, and having simply averred that he was damaged by said attachment and foreclosure, the complaint was demurrable on the ground that it did not show a performance by plaintiff nor in what manner he was damaged.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WILLIAM T. WALLACE, Judge.

Plaintiff alleged a cause of action growing out of the refusal of the defendants to perform a certain agreement. With reference to performance on his own part he simply alleged that he would have performed the agreement if defendants had not notified him that they would not perform it.

R. H. Taylor, A. Craig, and W. C. Stratton, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondents.

McFarland, J. Each of the defendants demurred separately to the complaint. The court below sustained the demurrers; and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment went for defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment. There was some oral argument of the case at the January term; but there are no points and authorities, or briefs, on file, and we thus lack the benefit of that permanent and satisfactory method of presenting the views of counsel.

Upon an examination of the complaint we think that the demurrers were properly sustained. It appears that the defendant Moss held (individually) a mortgage upon certain lands of plaintiff in the counties of Monterey, Santa Cruz, and San Benito; and that plaintiff was also indebted to defendant Dodge (individually) upon a promissory note. On February 10, 1879, a written agreement was made between the plaintiff and defendants, by which plaintiff was to remove all incumbrances upon said lands except said mortgage of Moss, and convey said lands to Dodge for $12,000. Moss was to "release his said mortgage from and upon said property so to be conveyed," and Dodge was to credit said $12,000 upon the note which he held against plaintiff. There was also to be some change in the matter of interest on the note. Three days after the agreement was signed the defendants notified plaintiff that they would not perform it. On the 6th day of March following, Dodge commenced an action against plaintiff on his said note, and attached a large amount of personal property in the county of Santa Barbara, consisting of live-stock and farming utensils used by plaintiff in his business of dairying and farming. (It does not appear whether or not the attached property was sold, or what became of it.) Afterwards defendant Moss foreclosed his mortgage on the said lands in the counties of Monterey, Santa Cruz, and San Benito. The lands "did not sell for more than sufficient to satisfy said mortgage and the costs of foreclosure." Plaintiff avers that he was damaged by said attachment by Dodge in the sum of $50,000, and by said foreclosure by Moss in the sum of $12,000, making in the aggregate $62,000, for which last-named sum he prays judgment against both defendants. The demurrers raise a great many points; but it is sufficient to say that there is no sufficient statement of the manner in which plaintiff was damaged, or that he had performed his part of the contract, and that there is a misjoinder of causes of action and of parties defendant. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: Sharpstein, J.; Thornton, J.

---

79 Cal. 234

Hanscom v. Drullard. (No. 12,878.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

Sale—False Representations.

1. In an action for damages for alleged fraudulent representations made on the sale of a newspaper to plaintiff, evidence as to the number of subscribers to the newspaper some time before the sale, though immaterial, cannot harm defendant, where he does not claim that the number so shown is too small.

2. Property was sufficiently identified as that sold to plaintiff so that a witness could testify concerning its value, where it was pointed out to witness by one who knew it.

3. An estimate of value was competent, though not made at the very time of the sale.

4. The modification of an instruction asked by defendant, so as to make it read that fraud must be established by a "preponderance" of evidence, instead of by "clear and convincing evidence," is not error, where the court elsewhere instructs the jury that, in order for plaintiff to recover, the different elements making up his cause of action must be established by evidence so clear and convincing as to satisfy their minds by a preponderance of the evidence.

5. An instruction that if the subject of purchase was alike open to the inspection of both parties, and plaintiff did not avail himself of his means of knowledge, he will not be heard to say he has been deceived, is properly modified by adding, "unless he was induced by the trick or misrepresentations of defendant not to make such inspection."

6. Defendant was liable, although he professed to rely on the representations of others, and gave the source of his information, if he knew, or had reason to believe, that they were untrue.

7. An instruction that the jury cannot find for the plaintiff in any sum greater than the actual damage proved by a preponderance of the evidence is correct.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

Action for fraudulent representations alleged to have been made on the sale of a newspaper. Defendant objected to certain evidence as to the number of subscribers to the paper, but he did not claim that the number was understated.

P. J. Hazen and Hatton & Fulkerth, for appellant. Schell, Bond & Eastin, for respondent.

Foote, C. This is an action for damages alleged to have resulted from the practice by the defendant towards the plaintiff of false and fraudulent representations in the sale to the latter of the appurtenances, stock, and business of a newspaper. The plaintiff recovered a judgment, from which and an order refusing a new trial the defendant appeals. The errors relied on for a reversal of the judgment and order are that the court should not have admitted certain evidence for the plaintiff, and that it improperly gave certain instructions, modified some, and refused others. The ground of objection to Maddrill's testimony was that it was not shown that the property about which he attempted to fix the value was identified as that sold to plaintiff, and that his estimate was made about the time of the trial, and not at the time of sale, and was therefore immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. The property was pointed out to the witness by Porter, who knew it. That was a sufficient identification. While the estimate of value was not made at the very time of the sale, it was made at a time not remote from it, and, although not conclusive as to the value, it was not immaterial, incompetent, or irrelevant, since it tended to throw some light upon the question of value, one of the matters in issue. One of the questions put to Wagstaff, another witness, was not answered, the court sustaining the objection made. The other question asked him sought to elicit information as to the number of paying subscribers of the newspaper when the witness sold it to the defendant, in 1887, some time before the sale to the plaintiff.

Conceding, without deciding, that the evidence was immaterial, yet it could not have harmed the defendant. He only claims in his answer, upon information and belief, that he had more than 333 paying subscribers,—how many more is not stated. In his testimony upon the subject he does not fix the number of such subscribers, or claim there were more than 333. Neither does he attempt to do so by his witness Medley, who, he says, knew more about the business than he did. While Hanscom, whose statement, which is not now claimed as immaterial, is derived from the defendant's book, and is not controverted, states that there were 338 paying subscribers in May, June, and July, 1887, a short time after the sale by Wagstaff to Drullard. The court modified instruction 1, first asked by defendant, by making it read that fraud must be established by "a preponderance" of evidence, instead of by "clear and convincing evidence," but elsewhere, at folio 192, at the request of the defendant, the jury was instructed: "Before the plaintiff can recover in this action, the evidence must be clear and convincing, so as to satisfy your minds, by a preponderance of evidence, (1) that the alleged fraudulent representations, or a substantial part of them, were made by the defendant: (2) that such representations were false; (3) that they were made with the intent to deceive the plaintiff, and induce him to enter into the contract; (4) that they did so deceive him, and induce him to enter into the contract; (5) that the plaintiff was damaged thereby. Unless each of these facts is shown to your satisfaction by a preponderance of evidence, you should find for the defendant."

The third instruction, first asked by the defendant, is: "Plaintiff cannot recover in this action unless he was deceived by the alleged representations, and if the means of knowledge are at hand, equally available to both parties, and the subject of purchase is alike open to their inspection, if the purchaser does not avail himself of these means and opportunities, he will not be heard to say that he has been deceived." The court added, "unless he was induced by the trick or misrepresentations of defendant not to make such inspection." A man may perhaps be able to discover for himself what he ought to know if left to his own devices, but where he is induced by the artifice of another not to use his opportunities it would seem hardly fair that the one using the trick or misrepresentation should remain protected. The court below evidently thought the evidence warranted the modification, and we cannot say that it was wrong in its conclusion. Instruction No. 2 for defendant was modified by inserting the words, "unless the defendant knew or had reason to believe they were untrue." The language was added to an instruction which told the jury that if the representations made to the plaintiff, as to the value of the property sold, were untrue, yet defendant would not be liable if the defendant professed to rely on the knowledge of others, and gave the source of his information, which plaintiff consulted, and found to be true. If the defendant had any reason to know that such representations were untrue, the fact that he gave the sources of information, and did not profess to be informed himself, would not absolve him. His conduct would simply mislead the plaintiff to his prejudice, and must have been willful, if the defendant had reason to know that the information which the plaintiff should obtain would be untrue. The modification is in accordance with the provisions of section 1710 of the Civil Code and of the rule laid down in Davidson v. Jordan, 47 Cal. 353, where it is said, with reference to a similar affair: "Representations made in that manner cannot be said to be false or fraudulent, unless Frank knew, or had reason to believe, them to be untrue." Instruction No. 5, given for the defendant, where it reads that the jury "cannot find for the plaintiff in any sum greater than the actual damage proved by a preponderance of the evidence in the case to have been sustained by the plaintiff," states the correct rule as to damages, and the jury cannot have been misled as to that matter. The appellant in his brief declares that he refrains from pointing out specifically the imperfections claimed to exist in the instructions, but says that the whole effect of them as given was to mislead the jury, and cause it to decide the case on erroneous views of the law, and that the principles of law denied to the defendant are too well known to require citation of authorities. We have examined the instructions as given, and have become satisfied that, taken as a whole, they could not have misled the jury, and that the law was properly given under the pleadings, facts, and circumstances as shown in the record. This is sufficient, as held in many cases. People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 347, 5 Pac. Rep. 509. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

---

79 Cal. 203

FARLEY et al. v. HOPKINS, Sheriff, et al.

(No. 11,964.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

HOMESTEAD—DECLARATION BY WIFE.

1. In California a declaration of homestead by a wife is not invalid because not filed for record on the day of its acknowledgment, nor because it is not filed by her in person.

2. Civil Code Cal. § 1262, provides for the filing of a declaration of homestead by the wife where the husband has not made the selection. Section 1263 provides that where the declaration is made by the wife it shall show that her husband has not made the declaration, and that she therefore makes it for their joint benefit. Held, that a declaration stating that the wife filed it for herself and husband, and that the husband had not made it, is not insufficient because it does not expressly aver the reason for her so doing.

3. On a motion for temporary injunction to restrain the levy of an execution upon premises claimed as a homestead, it is not error for the court to refuse to determine on affidavits the correctness of an allegation that a portion of the premises in question is not exempt.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

A. P. Needles and Wm. Grant, for appellants. Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction restraining the defendants, among whom was Hopkins, the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, from selling under execution certain premises claimed by the plaintiffs as their homestead. The prayer of the complaint is that it may be decreed that the judgment under which the sheriff is about to sell the homestead is not, and never was, a lien upon the premises in dispute; that they are not subject to levy and sale under execution issued upon the judgment; and that the sheriff be enjoined from selling or offering for sale the premises, etc.; and for such other equitable relief as may seem proper, etc. The record shows that Margaret Farley and her husband, Thomas Farley, who are the plaintiffs here, were the defendants in the judgment above referred to, and that she, as the wife of Thomas Farley, made and acknowledged a declaration of homestead on the premises in question on the 17th day of October, 1884, and filed it for record on the next day, through "Tobin & Tobin," presumably her attorneys or agents. This declaration contains among other things this statement: "I make this declaration for the joint benefit of myself and husband, and I declare that my husband has not made a declaration of homestead." It was claimed in the affidavits filed for the execution creditor, on the hearing of the motion to show cause why the temporary injunction should not be granted, that the upper story of a building on the premises was not a part of the homestead. The affidavit filed on the other side tended, to some extent, to dispute this alleged fact. The defendants claim that the declaration of homestead is invalid, and that the homestead claim does not extend to the upper story of the building; that the injunction, if granted at all, should not have included it. The objections are—First, that the declaration of homestead was not filed until the day after it was acknowledged; second, that it was not filed by the declarant in person, but by some one for her; third, that she does not assign any reason whatever why she made it for the joint benefit of herself and her husband; fourth, that a portion of the building upon the premises was not used by the family. We perceive no error upon the part of the trial court in refusing to anticipate the final judgment, and to determine, on the motion and by the affidavits, whether or not the upper story of the building is a part of the homestead.

With reference to the first point, it may be disposed of by saying that there is nothing in the statute which declares that the filing for record must take place on the day of the declaration and its acknowledgment, and to give such a construction to the law would be, in many instances, practically to defeat it. Civil Code, § 1265. The same thing may be said as to the point made that the declarant did not file the declaration in person, but obtained some one to do it for her. The declaration states that the wife filed it for herself and husband, and that her husband had not made any declaration of a homestead. Section 1262 of the Civil Code reads as follows: "In order to select a homestead, the husband or other head of a family, or, in case the husband has not made such selection, the wife, must execute and acknowledge in the same manner as a grant of real property is acknowledged, a declaration of homestead, and file the same for record." Section 1263 prescribes that "the declaration of homestead must contain (1) a statement showing that the person making it is the head of a family; or, when the declaration is made by the wife, showing that her husband has not made such declaration, and that she therefore makes the declaration for their joint benefit." It is said by appellants that the wife has not stated as a reason for her declaration of homestead that her husband has not made any, and therefore the declaration is void. She states the fact that he has not done so, and that she has. The statute only authorizes her to declare a homestead when her husband has not. She is not required under the subdivision, supra, in her declaration to show anything but the existence of the fact, which alone authorizes her and makes her competent to make the declaration, and that she does make it. When she declares that her husband has made no declaration of a homestead, thus showing a state of facts under which she can make a declaration, and then explicitly makes it, it would seem that the reason of her doing so, if any was needed to be shown, is apparent. The statute does not require her, in addition to showing her competency to make it and that she does make the declaration, to go further, and state that the reason she makes it is that she is competent to do it because her husband has not made it. We perceive no merit in this appeal, and advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

(79 Cal. 232)

PEREIRA v. SMITH. (No. 12,859.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

APPEAL—DAMAGES—TRIAL BY COURT.

1. Where all the evidence as to the damages suffered by plaintiff was given by his witnesses, and defendant made no effort to controvert it, and plaintiff, after giving an estimate of particular items of damage, stated that he suffered twice as much damage as he claimed in the complaint, which was $500, a judgment for $325 will not be reversed because the damages found were excessive, or not in accordance with the evidence.

2. Where the findings made are sufficient, the refusal to make certain findings as requested is not erroneous.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

F. D. & G. W. Nichol and E. A. Rodgers, for appellant. F. W. Street and I. M. Kalloch, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought this action to enjoin the defendant from interfering with the former's use of certain natural waters of a stream claimed by the plaintiff as a prior appropriator, and for damages for injury already done in obstructing the flow of that water. The plaintiff obtained a judgment as prayed for. From that and an order denying a new trial the defendant has appealed.

The main contention of the appellant appears to be that the court erred in making its fourth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth findings of fact, and a long and vigorous argument, of many pages in extent, is devoted to the discussion of the evidence, or at least parts of it, as going to show that there was no evidence to support these findings. A painstaking examination of all the evidence in the record has satisfied us that the findings are supported by it.

All the evidence as to damages suffered by the plaintiff was given by witnesses brought forward by him, the defendant making no effort to controvert it. The plaintiff, after giving an estimate of particular items of damage, states that he suffered twice as much damage as he claimed in his complaint, and it is not denied by anything brought forward in the evidence by the defendant that such is not the fact. The complaint claims $500 to be the damage suffered, and the judgment is for $325. We perceive no reason, therefore, for saying that the amount of damages found is excessive, or not in accordance with the evidence.

It is further maintained by the defendant that the court refused to make certain findings upon points requested on his part. It appears that the findings asked for were written out, and the court was asked to adopt them as its own. This species of dictation as to findings is not allowable. Under the present system of findings requests for findings are unnecessary. The court is bound to find on all the issues without any request to do so. If it does so find, whatever requests may be made may be disregarded. The question in all such cases must be whether the findings are sufficient, and the presence or absence of a request is utterly immaterial. In this case the findings are sufficient. The refusal, therefore, of the court to make the findings as presented to it as facts in the case is not erroneous. Upon the whole record, perceiving no prejudicial error, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(79 Cal. 207)

AVERETT et al. v. SOBRUNES et al. (No. 11,414.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES—UNLAWFUL SEIZURE—FINDINGS.

In an action against a constable and his official sureties, for the seizure of plaintiffs' property under execution against a third person, though a finding that the constable, "against plaintiffs' will and consent, wrongfully and unlawfully took all of the personal property mentioned and described in plaintiffs' complaint from said plaintiffs' possession," is not a finding that the title to the property was then in plaintiffs, such defect does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and must be disregarded on appeal, under Code Civil Proc. § 475, where the trial court has also found that plaintiffs had title at the commencement of the action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Action by Averett and others against Sobrunes, a constable, and others, sureties on his official bond. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

W. H. Webb, for appellants. S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an action against the defendant Sobrunes, a constable, and the sureties on his official bond, for his alleged levy on, and seizure and sale of, the personal property of plaintiffs on an execution against one Tillman. The title of plaintiffs to the property was in issue, and their right to recover depended upon their establishing their ownership of it at the time of the seizure of it. The evidence is not before us, and the contention of appellants here is that the fact of plaintiffs' ownership at the time of the seizure is not found. We must confess that it is not found as directly as it should be. But the court has found that at the time of the commencement of this action the plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of all of said property. If this had been preceded by a finding that at the date of the seizure the plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of it, the case probably would never have reached this court. There is a finding "that on the said 10th day of October, 1884, the said defendant, L. G. Sobrunes, in his official capacity as constable of San Antonio township, against plaintiffs' will and consent, wrongfully and unlawfully took all of the personal property mentioned and described in plaintiffs' complaint from said plaintiffs' possession, and converted the same to his own use." Possession is prima facia evidence of title, but it is not title, and the ultimate fact, and not the evidence of it, should in all cases be found. But this error or defect is one which, in our opinion, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and therefore must be disregarded. Code Civil Proc. § 475. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Thornton, J

---

79 Cal. 239

Yuba County v. Cloke. (No. 12,298.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

Injunction—Pleading.

1. A complaint alleged the carrying on of hydraulic mining on a certain river, which filled the bed of the river and destroyed the channel, and rendered plaintiff's (a county's) bridge and highways unsafe; that defendant was selling water, knowing that it was to be used in hydraulic mining on such river, and was thereby assisting in conducting such hydraulic mining, and filling the channel of the river, to the injury of plaintiff's property, etc.; and prayed for an injunction. Held, that the hydraulic mining was not of itself unlawful or necessarily injurious to others; that the neglect to properly care for the débris resulting therefrom, only was unlawful; that the sale of the water was not unlawful; and that, as the complaint did not show that it was sold with knowledge that it was to be used in such manner as to injure plaintiff, it stated no cause of action.

2. Where the complaint alleges the facts giving the right to an injunction on information and belief, and such alleged facts are positively denied under oath in the answer, a temporary injunction must be dissolved.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; Philip W. Keyser, Judge.

Byrne & Cross, (J. H. Boalt, of counsel,) for appellant. E. A. Forbes and E. A. Davis, (A. L. Hart, of counsel,) for respondent.

Works, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction. The motion to dissolve was made upon the pleadings and the minutes of the court. After alleging the corporate capacity of the plaintiff, and the representative capacity of the defendant, as administrator of the estate of Hickey, the complaint contains, in substance, the following allegations: (1) That the plaintiff is the owner of a one-half interest in a bridge on Bear river, in this state. (2) That hydraulic mining has been carried on by numerous persons upon said river for 20 years, the immediate effects of which have been to fill up the bed of said river, and destroy the channel thereof, and render said bridge and the highways of plaintiff, adjacent to said river, insecure and unfit for public travel. (3) That many persons and corporations have been and are engaged in said business of hydraulic mining, and discharge gravel and bowlders into said river, with the effects aforesaid, and threaten to, and will, continue to do so. (4) That, if continued, the same will fill up the channel of the river, and destroy said bridge. (5) That the deceased had been for many years the owner and in control of water-rights, reservoirs, and ditches in this state, acquired for the purpose of selling such water to others to be used in mining by the hydraulic process, and that the defendant, as the administrator of said estate, has continued to sell and furnish water for said purpose, and is now engaged in selling and furnishing the same in large quantities, with the knowledge and understanding that the same is used by the parties to whom it is furnished for the purpose of conducting mining by the hydraulic process upon and on said river, and that the said water is being used in said mining by said process, along the banks of said river and its tributaries, with the knowledge, consent, and by the assistance of the said defendant. (6) That by so selling and furnishing said water the defendant is aiding and assisting the said persons and corporations in conducting said hydraulic mining, and thereby filling up the channel of said river, and holding over the plaintiff a constant menace of the destruction of its said property. (7) If continued said mining will fill up the channel of said river, and destroy plaintiff's property. (8) That the acts of said persons and corporations are of a constantly recurring nature, and the damage and threatened injury to the plaintiff's property is being produced by the repeated wrongful acts of the defendant, and of the said persons and corporations to whom he furnishes water for the purposes aforesaid. (9) That the defendant threatens to continue to sell said water to the parties aforesaid, who will continue to use it for the purposes mentioned, unless enjoined. (10) That if said mining is stopped the river will clear its channels, and plaintiff's property will not be injured, but, if continued, will destroy and render useless plaintiff's said property. The prayer of the complaint is, in substance, that the defendant be enjoined and restrained from selling or furnishing to said persons, companies, or corporations, or to any or either of them, and from suffering or permitting them, or any of them, to use said water supply, or any part or portion thereof, for the purpose of mining by said hydraulic process, or by any other hydraulic process by which there will be or may be dumped or washed into said Bear river, or any of its forks, or tributaries, or gulches, or ravines, any tailings, bowlders, cobble-stones, gravel, sand, clay, débris, or refuse matter whatever. There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. The defendant answered, admitting his representative capacity, and the ownership and control of the water, as alleged in the complaint, and that he had been engaged in selling the waters; but denying the allegations of the complaint, so far as it alleges knowledge on his part that said waters were to be used, or were actually being used, for the purpose of hydraulic mining, or for any other unlawful purpose, or that the same had resulted, or would result, in any injury to the property of the defendant. Upon the filing of the complaint a temporary injunction was issued, as prayed for in the complaint, and upon the coming in of the answer the motion to dissolve the same was made and denied.

It will be seen that in this complaint it is not averred in direct terms, nor can it be inferred from any of the facts stated, that the defendant sold the water with a knowledge that the same was to be used in such manner as to work injury to the property of the plaintiff. The complaint presents the sole question whether a party can be enjoined from selling water to a person engaged in the business of hydraulic mining, without reference to the question whether such mining is to be carried on in such way as to work injury to others or not. It seems to us it must be conceded that the business of hydraulic mining is not within itself unlawful or necessarily injurious to others. The unlawful nature of the business results from the manner in which it is carried on, and the neglect of parties engaged therein to properly care for the débris resulting therefrom, whereby it is allowed to follow the stream, and eventually cause injury to property situated below. If this be true, giving full effect to all of the allegations of the complaint, it does not show that the appellant was engaged in an unlawful business, or one injurious to the public or the respondent. The sale of the water was lawful and cannot be enjoined. The business of hydraulic mining, properly conducted, is lawful, and therefore the sale of water for that purpose cannot be enjoined. It would be a remarkable doctrine, it seems to us, that a party furnishing material to another, to be used in conducting a lawful business, could be held for damages if said business be improperly conducted, or be enjoined on the ground that such business will be so conducted as to work injury to others.

Counsel for respondent rely upon Woodruff v. Mining Co., 9 Sawy. 441, 18 Fed. Rep. 753. We do not question the correctness of the case cited, but it does not meet the point presented here. There the defendant was himself engaged in the business of hydraulic mining, and in supplying the water therefor for himself, and it appeared that the business of said parties, including the defendant, was being conducted in such way as to amount to a public and private nuisance. The marked difference between that case and the one before us is that there the defendant was shown to be directly connected with the wrongful and injurious act complained of. Here he is not. If the parties to whom the water was sold have brought themselves within the rule, as laid down in the opinion of the learned judge in the case of Woodruff v. Mining Co., the remedy of the respondent is against them, and not against the appellant. We see no good reason for holding that an injured party may pass by those who work the injury complained of, and attack one who has, in a lawful way, sold them a part of the material to carry on their work, and that, too, where the business for which the material is sold is in itself lawful. Numerous cases are cited to the effect that one who demises his property for the purpose of having it used in such a way as to prove offensive to others may himself be treated as the author of the mischief, but these cases bear no analogy to the one at bar. This is not a case of permitting one's property to be used for an improper purpose, injurious to others, but a sale of property which is put to an improper use after it passes from the seller's control. For the reasons stated, the complaint did not state a cause of action, and the order refusing to dissolve the injunction was erroneous for that reason.

Besides, so far as the complaint alleged that the appellant had knowledge that the water sold by him was to be used in hydraulic mining, it was made upon information and belief, and these allegations were positively denied under oath in the answer; and upon that ground the injunction should have been dissolved, conceding that mere knowledge that such use was to be made of the water would so connect the appellant with the wrong complained of, as to subject him to an injunction. Hiller v. Collins, 63 Cal. 236; High, Inj. § 1523. The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Thornton, J.; Paterson, J.; Sharpstein, J.

Beatty, C. J. I dissent. The opinion and judgment of the court are based upon the propositions that "the business of hydraulic mining, properly conducted, is lawful;" that "the business of hydraulic mining is not within itself unlawful or necessarily injurious to others; that the unlawful nature of the business results from the manner in which it is carried on, and the neglect of parties engaged therein to properly care for the débris resulting therefrom, whereby it is allowed to follow the stream, and eventually cause injury to property situated below," etc. It may be that there is a lawful and harmless method of mining by the hydraulic process, one in which the miners do properly care for the débris resulting therefrom, so as to prevent it from following the stream and damaging property below, but nothing of the sort appears from, or is consistent with, the allegations of the complaint in this case. The plaintiff describes the hydraulic process as one that is plainly, distinctly, and inevitably injurious and unlawful; one by which immense quantities of débris are deposited in and carried down the natural beds of the streams on or near the banks of which it is conducted; one in which the miners take no care of the débris, but allow it to be carried down the stream to and upon the lands below. The complaint does not describe or suggest the possibility of any other process of hydraulic mining. It charges that the miners along Bear river are mining in the manner described, and that the defendant is selling water to be used as aforesaid. It does, in my opinion, clearly show that the defendant is delivering water to the miners to be used for an unlawful purpose injurious to the plaintiff, and with full knowledge, understanding, and intent that it shall be so used. The order appealed from was proper, and should be affirmed.

---

79 Cal. 211

Dashaway Ass'n v. Rogers et al. (No. 11,838.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1889.)

False Representations—Actions to Recover Money Deposited—Parties—Pleading.

1. Where one acts for himself and a third person in making a contract to convey land to plaintiff, and represents that he owns such land, and plaintiff, in reliance on such representation, deposits money with him, to be applied on the purchase price, and he divides such money between himself and the third person, neither of them having any title to the land, and not conveying it to plaintiff within the time specified, they are jointly liable for the amount deposited, though plaintiff did not know of the third person's connection with the transaction at the time of the contract.

2. A common-law count for money had and received is proper in the complaint in an action for the deposit.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Dashaway Association against R. C. Rogers and Daniel Rogers. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment sustaining demurrers to the complaint.

Tilden & Tilden, for appellant. Daniel Rogers, for respondents.

McFarland, J. 1. Each of the two defendants demurred separately to the complaint. Both demurrers were sustained, and judgment rendered for defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment. We think that the court erred in sustaining the demurrers. The facts alleged in the first count of the complaint are substantially these: The defendant R. C. Rogers represented to plaintiff that he (R. C.) was the owner of a certain piece of land. Plaintiff, relying on his representation, and believing that he was acting for himself alone, entered into a written contract with him, by which he agreed to sell said land to plaintiff for $11,500, and make a good title, etc., within two weeks. In pursuance of this contract plaintiff deposited with him $1,150, to be applied on said purchase price if he complied with the contract, and, if not, to be returned, and paid back to plaintiff. As a fact, however, (so it is averred,) said R. C. Rogers, in entering into said contract, and securing said deposit of money, was acting for himself and for the other defendant, Daniel Rogers, on their joint behalf and for their joint benefit. R. C. was the agent of Daniel, and they were both joint principals in the transaction. R. C received said $1,150 for the joint benefit of himself and said Daniel, and it was divided between them. Neither of them had any title to the land, and they were entirely unable to convey, and did not convey, a title thereto. Plaintiff demanded the $1,150 deposited as aforesaid from both the defendants, and they refused to pay the same or any part thereof.

The case here is not confused by those subtleties by which the question whether a principal or agent should be sued is often embarrassed. The defendants were both principals. R. C. Rogers was himself a principal, and was also the hand by which the other principal, Daniel, acted. It makes no difference that plaintiff did not know of Daniel's connection with the transaction at the time the contract was made. In this respect the case cannot be distinguished from Thomas v. Moody, 57 Cal. 215. The money deposited by plaintiff was received for the joint benefit of both defendants, and it is averred that they divided it between them; and that, under the circumstances, they can retain it, (as said in Thomas v. Moody,) "is a proposition which can be no more sustained in law than in morals." See, also, Kreutz v. Livingston, 15 Cal. 345. There was no misjoinder of causes of action or of parties defendant. There was only one cause of action, viz., money of plaintiff which defendants had, and which they wrongfully refused to pay; and defendants were jointly liable to pay said money.

2. The second cause of action stated in the complaint is in the form of a common-law count for money had and received, and we cannot see why it is in any way defective. Stanwood v. Sage, 22 Cal. 517.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrers to the complaint.

We concur: Thornton, J.; Sharpstein, J.

---

79 Cal. 215

Spencer v. Lawler, Judge. (No. 13,061.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1889.)

Mandamus.

Plaintiff was on December 27, 1888, adjudged guilty of contempt in failing to pay alimony under a decree of court, and committed to jail. On the following day he applied for a discharge under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1143 et seq., relating to the discharge of persons imprisoned on civil process. The judge refused to hear it. On February 2, 1889, plaintiff asked for a mandate commanding the judge to hear the case. Respondent admitted the application as alleged, but did not think it necessary to grant it, as he had examined the question of plaintiff's pecuniary ability the day before, and alleged his willingness at all times after 10 days from December 27th to examine the case. Held, that the application as originally made was properly refused, and, in view of the facts alleged in the answer, the mandate will be denied, at plaintiff's costs.

Department 1.

Application for writ of mandate against F. W. Lawler, judge of the superior court.

Jordon & Bull, for petitioner. Dorn & Dorn, for respondent.

